Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Another question which I asked, earlier in the session, was in exactly the same words, and the cost of the rails was brought down. I have used the same form of words in both inquiries, and in the first instance it was interpreted properly to include the rails. Now it does not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those contracts do not include the rails.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Do they include the ties ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know ; I do not think it.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The government insist upon furnishing the rails.

PROVINCIAL RIGHTS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DAVID moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House all papers and correspondence between the federal and the provincial governments concerning legislation affecting provincial rights.

He said : In view of the resolutions that I shall move to-morrow, I am reserving the remarks which I intended to make on this subject until then.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would suggest to my hon. friend that he should limit the extent of his resolution, because we have had in the past an immense quantity of correspondence brought down in both Houses on this subject. It would be better if my hon. friend would not ask to have it brought down again.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no objection to the motion being carried, but I do not know that there is any correspondence.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We want all the correspondence.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Since the last provincial conference, because the previous correspondence appears in the blue-book.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I think it should stand. There is a lot of correspondence with the Ontario government which would be useful in this discussion.

The SPEAKER—As amended, the motion will read :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House all papers and correspondence which has taken place within the last three years, between the federal and the provincial governments concerning legislation affecting provincial rights.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON.

CONGESTION OF TRANSPORTATION IN WESTERN CANADA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY inquired of the government :

If they have had any communication with the railway companies operating railways west of Lake Superior in western Canada in regard to the congested state of transportaton on these railways, and if so, what has been the result, if not, what does the government propose to do regarding the matter ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am sorry I have no information on that subject. None of my colleagues have sent me any answer to the question. I presume the hon. gentleman alludes to the recent snowstorms in the west?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No, my question covers a condition that has existed the last six or seven months.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will inquire further about it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—We will let the inquiry stand until Friday.

The inquiry was allowed to stand until Friday.

APPOINTMENT OF INTERPRETER AT NORH SYDNEY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.) inquired of the government :

If Abraham Astafeen has been appointed interpreter at North Sydney ? What is his salary, if so appointed ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Abraham Astafeen was employed temporarily during part of January as interpreter at North Sydney at $2 per day, but he is not on the regular staff.

APPOINTMENT OF AN IMMIGRATION AGENT AT NORTH SYDNEY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.) inquired of the government :

If Richard Hickey has been appointed immigration agent at North Sydney, and if so, at what salary ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, at $1,000 per year.

SYDNEY MINES BRANCH OF THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.) inquired of the government :

1. What length of road was built for the Intercolonial Railway from North Sydney to Sydney Mines, known as the Sydney Mines Branch ?
2. When was the said road commenced, and when finished ?
3. What amount has already been paid out for the construction of said line ?
4. How much is still due on the said line ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers to the hon. gentleman's questions are as follows :

1. 2 7-10 miles.

2. Work was commenced in October, 1904 ; opened for business 24th June, 1906. Terminal facilities at Sydney Mines not completed.

3. $89,701.62.

4. $34,546.11. Estimated cost to complete work includes land and grading for terminal facilities ; station building and freight shed at Sydney Mines now under contract.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (CCC) An Act for the relief of Victor Harold Lyon.—(Hon. Mr. Davis.)

THIRD READING.

Bill (27) An Act respecting La Banque Nationale, as amended.—(Hon. Mr. Landry.)

INSPECTION OF CANNED FOODS ACT.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (33) An Act respecting the inspection of Meats and Canned Foods, as amended.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—In regard to Bills of this character, one difficulty is that the hon. gentleman who has charge of it in this House is not the hon. minister who framed the Bill. If it could be so arranged that the hon. gentleman in whose department the Bill was framed could have a seat in this House, I think it would be much better and would lead to more satisfactory explanations by the ministers to hon. senators. I do not think this Bill amounts to much. It is only for some special purpose, and what that purpose may be I do not know. As far as the general purposes of inspection of foods is concerned, it is utterly useless. I did not give notice of any amendment to this measure ; but I think some of the definitions are wrong, and I will suggest a change to the hon. minister, whether he likes to have it done or not. The clause says :

No animal affected or suspected of being affected with contagious or other diseases shall be slaughtered.

I think we should add the words : 'Or any animal that has died from any other causes them slaughter.' Animals die from different causes, and it is a well known fact that they may sometimes contain a deadly poison germ, which is called ptomaine, in canned goods, and it can only be detected and examined by a microscope. Of course that is out of the question in such cases, because it is only the veterinary surgeons who examine them. We have no idea what the examination is, and no idea how many inspectors there will be or what their duties will be or anything concerning them. All the points that ought to be in this Bill are left out of it. I merely make the suggestion. If the hon. gentleman likes to adopt it he may do so. I think it is very essential, and that it was an oversight that it was not inserted. No Bill of this character should be passed without some such provision in it. That is the only clause which suggested itself to me as susceptible of amendment. Other suggestions might be made, but at this stage there is no use in presenting them to the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think there is a great deal of force in the objection. It accords with my views, and as Sir Richard Cartwright is not here, I move that the Order of the Day be discharged and that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for Thursday.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There are many Bills printed, but are not so marked on the order paper. There is no reason why the business should be suspended because of a clerical error. This Bill has been printed, distributed and is on our files.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not printed in French.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—It has surely been long enough on our order paper, because it received its first reading on the 23rd of January.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is from the Commons, and should come to us translated. It is not the fault of any of our officers; it is the fault of the Commons. They should send this Bill translated, and I shall persist in my objection.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is well known that it is printed in English, although it is not so marked on the order paper.

The SPEAKER—I understand the Bill was distributed after the Order of the Day was printed.

The Order of the Day was discharged and placed on the orders for to-morrow.

WESTERN BOUNDARY OF RAILWAY BELT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (102) An Act to ratify an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia respecting the Western Boundary of the Railway Belt.

He said: This is purely a formal matter. I may say that the western boundary of the railway belt, has already been approved by the legislature of British Columbia. I took the trouble myself to compare section three with the British Columbia statute, and I found it was the same, word for word. As hon. gentlemen know, when the Canadian Pacific Railway was first being constructed, British Columbia gave twenty miles on each side of the line of railway, and also certain other grants within the province. This is the western face of it, and it is described under clause 3 of this Bill. The British Columbia legislature have already approved of it by an Act last session, and the Dominion parliament, by this Act, proposes to accept that explanation of it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my hon. friend say in what way difficulty has arisen? Was there not a delimitation of the boundary at the time of the contract between the two governments?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no, there was none. If the hon. gentleman will read clause 3, he will find it was most complex.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am fully aware of that fact, yet this must have been determined at that time in some way or another.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was a 20 mile belt on each side of the line.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But there must have been some delimitation of the belt at the time of building the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was presumed to be to the coast, but it would be unreasonable to ask for it to go to the coast, because it would include villages, towns and cities not then dreamed of.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I call attention to the fact that this is another Bill, coming from the House of Commons, which is not translated yet.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We will have it ready when the House goes into committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am not going to object to it, but I call the hon. gentleman's attention to it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite aware of it; but I do not control the translators.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me extremely unfortunate that these objections should be interposed from time to time. Of course my hon. friend is quite within his rights, and it is not with a view to induce him in any way to refrain from exercising that right, but surely it should be within the power of the government to enforce that well-established practice, that legislation shall be printed in both languages.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not the government at all. It is entirely in the control of the House.

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU (de la Vallière)—The Bill is printed in French. I have it here.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has taken the Bill of the House of Commons. He does not know the difference between the House of Commons Bill and the form which is sent up to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was about to say that this Chamber loses very considerable time indeed in dealing with the business of the country by reason of Bills not being printed in French. Now, for my hon. friend the leader of the House to say that the difficulty is an insuperable one, seems to my mind idle. Surely the parliament of Canada is not so helpless that its business must be obstructed from day to day by reason of Bills not being printed in French. It seems to me to be entirely within the power of my hon. friend the leader of the government, to provide a remedy whereby those Bills may come down concurrently, printed in both English and French, so, that the time of the Chamber may not be further wasted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have never heard that question raised in the House of Commons. Bills which are not printed in French constantly pass that House from time to time. The appointment of translators rests entirely with the two Chambers. It is not a matter with the government at all. The government are in no way responsible for it.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—It seems to me that everybody agrees that this Bill should be printed in French and English. The hon. Secretary of State says you cannot control the House of Commons. Certainly that is right, but we can control our own business here, and reject all Bills coming from the House of Commons which are not printed in French and English, and then they will see the necessity of doing what they should be compelled to do.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It may be quite true that this is a matter which is controlled by the House of Commons, but we have it very strongly in evidence that the government controls the House of Commons and this House as well; therefore we must come back and place the responsibility squarely where it belongs, and that is with the government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would go further, and say that my hon. friend being the leader of the government in this House, certainly should set the proper machinery in motion whereby this difficulty would be obviated. It is idle to say that there are officials of this Senate who are so remiss in their duty as not to furnish the French translation in time for the business of the Chamber, yet we are helpless to deal with that difficulty. It is a confession which certainly should not be made, and my hon. friend as leader of the government in this House and as leader of the House should at once set the machinery of the Chamber in motion to remedy this evil.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—To have the translations done simultaneously would cost probably ten times the amount that it costs today.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that that Bill has been translated in the House of Commons. The proof that it has been translated is that my hon. friend from de la Vallière has the French translation in his hands. The only thing to do, after the third reading, when the Bill is sent to us in the Senate form, is to send the French translation at the same time. The translation is there. They do not do their work.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall be glad if my hon. friend will trace it through all its intricacies. I have tried it and have been balked at it. One translator will not take the translation of another, and there is jealousy between these officials.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest to my hon. friend if there is any further trouble in this connection, a resolution should be moved in this House condemning the officials who are responsible for this trouble from which we are daily suffering. Certainly some initiative must be taken, and there is no one so responsible for this as the hon. leader of the House. I am not blaming him at the present moment, but it has been pointed out that the House has within itself the power to remedy this trouble, and my hon. friend as leader of the House, should certainly move a resolution that if the translators are remiss in their duty they shall be dismissed and new officials appointed who will keep the business of the House going.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—And the French translators say that if they are asked to give an explanation, they will show that it is not their fault. I observe from a report of what took place in the Quebec legislature that they complain that the English version is not published at the same time as the French.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is this difference, however ; that the printing bureau in Quebec, where the English journals were printed, was burned.

Hon. Mr. POWER—My hon. friend the leader of the opposition is slightly in error as to this particular Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not dealing with any particular Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Well, generally. A difficulty arises in connection with Bills which come from the House of Commons. As the hon. gentleman from Stadacona has pointed out, the persons responsible for the non-translation of the Commons Bills are not our own officers, but officers of the other House. I am not sure that we have had it brought home, during the present session, to our own officers that they have been unduly slow in translation.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Second reading Bill (SS) An Act to amend an Act respecting the Canadian Assessment Policyholders in the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE moved that the order be postponed until the 4th of April.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We have nothing to do to-day except to transact business, but this rule about the translation and printing of Bills in the two languages has hindered our dealing with several items, and now the hon. gentleman from Rothesay disappoints us. We thought we were going to do business and have perhaps some little amusement over this Bill. Perhaps the hon. gentleman's life is insured, but the lives of other senators are not insured, and we may not be here to discuss this Bill on the 4th of April. I should prefer he would go on with it now.

Hon. Mr. DAVID.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I did not know that we were here in the Senate for fun ; I thought we were here for business. If there is any enjoyment to be had from tickling up somebody else, that is not my view of the case. My reason for asking for the postponement of this order is that an hon. gentleman who is absent through sickness or some other cause, would like to have it postponed until he can be here ; but if my hon. friend has any reason for going on now, and wishes to tickle up the public, I am ready to proceed.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

The Order of the Day being called :

Second reading Bill (3) An Act in amendment of the Railway Act, 1903.—(Hon. Mr. Perley.)

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I understand this is a government Bill, and I think the hon. Secretary of State had better take charge of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have had no intimation that this is a government Bill. I never heard a word of this Bill from any member of the government, and no member of the government had charge of it in the other House.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Then perhaps the order should be discharged.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Explain.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I believe it is a government Bill. I understand there is no objection to it, and I therefore move that it be read a second time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I assume that there will be full explanation given in Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Yes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

RAILWAY ACT FURTHER AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY moved the second reading of Bill (4) An Act in further amendment of the Railway Act, 1903.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—This Bill, unlike the one that preceded it, involves a very important principle. It deals or affects to deal with a matter which comes within the jurisdiction and control of the Railway Commission, and for that reason I submit to the House that it ought not to be entertained. A Bill in precisely the same terms was before parliament last session, and was rejected by the Senate. The only question in my mind is whether it should be thrown out on the ground that it involves a principle to which the Senate ought not to give its adhesion, or whether it should be referred to a Committee of the Whole House in order that a further discussion upon the principle of the Bill should be had. If that is understood, there might be no objection to the second reading of the Bill to-day.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—When this Bill was before the Senate last year, it was thrown out on a motion of mine on the very ground that my hon. friend has just taken. I thought it was something that the railway commission should take up. However, twelve months have passed since then, and nothing has been done. The House of Commons has seen fit, in its wisdom, to send this Bill to us a second time and I have no desire to throw it out under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I find this Bill has been many times before the House of Commons, though not always in the same form as it is now. It was finally referred to a special committee of the House, consisting of four members from the government side and three from the opposition, and the outcome of that investigation was that a Bill was passed in the House of Commons last year and sent to the Senate, very near the end of the session, when the work was congested, and it was not possible to give it that consideration which it deserved. It was introduced in the House of Commons again this year very early in the session and passed without opposition. The Minister of Railways, who had given the matter a great deal of consideration, and to whom the Bill in its first form had been unacceptable, made this observation :

> No one can fail to recognize that there are very many accidents all over Canada, yearly, monthly, weekly almost, in connection with these rail level crossings and it was considered that some provision should be made to obviate that danger. The committee, therefore, made this proposal which was accepted by the House of Commons unanimously, in fact while the Bill was promoted by a private member it was adopted by the government and made part of the government Bill in amendment of the Railway Act. But when it went to the Senate in the very last hours of the session the Senate declined to accept it. It is not for me to question the judgment of the Senate, but it seems to me that in the public interest there should be legislation of this character. I am heartily in sympathy with the object which my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) has in view, and while I would not wish to place undue burdens upon the railways of the country, yet, having regard to the time they have to provide for the requirements of this legislation, I think they should be asked to conform to it and do justice to the public at large.

This Bill came from a prominent member of the opposition, and I have quoted the expression of the Minister of Railways. The Bill passed the House of Commons without opposition, and I think we have a good case for it here.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There is just one thing in this connection to which I should like to call the attention of the House. The Bill provides that no train shall pass over any highway at rail level in cities, towns or populous villages, at a speed greater than ten miles an hour. Now a train at that speed would kill just as fast as a train running at sixty miles an hour.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—But you could get out of the way.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—A provision should be inserted, making the clause apply unless such crossing is properly protected. Living in the city of Montreal I know that many of the crossings are properly protected, and, at such crossings, there is no necessity for diminishing the speed of the train. If all level crossings were properly protected, there would be no necessity for reducing speed. I understand it is a hardship for railway companies to have to slow down, but it is for them to protect their crossings, and, when that is done, they should be allowed to run as fast as they want to. In the long run, it would pay every railway company to properly protect its level crossings. I am in favour of this Bill because its object is to protect human life. In the city of Montreal a good many lives have been lost on our level crossings between Bonaventure station and St. Henri, and it is time parliament took steps to protect the public. Proper protection is not secured so much by reducing the speed of the trains as in having a crossing properly protected.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I do not think those who are in favour of this Bill have made out a case which would justify the Senate in giving its sanction to the Bill. It has been said a Bill similar to this was before the Senate last year and was rejected. I have taken pains to look over the debates which took place in the other House when this Bill was passed, and I do not find any good reason given for the adoption of this measure. What may have taken place in the committee of the House of Commons, which has been referred to, I do not know. Possibly something was said there, or facts brought forth which were sufficient to convince the Minister of Railways that the Bill was a proper one ; but I do not think that should influence the judgment of the Senate, when there seem to be such strong reasons why this Bill should not be adopted. In the first place it merely refers to the speed of trains passing through cities, towns and thickly settled villages. As the hon. senator from Victoria has said, I do not think the fact of reducing the speed of trains to ten miles an hour, would have much effect in protecting life at street crossings in such cases. In any case, no general rule can apply so far as such crossings are concerned. It would be difficult to say with any very great positiveness what was a thickly settled village or town, or what is a speed of ten miles an hour ; but even if you admit that certain villages, towns and cities are thickly settled, you will find in all of them certain crossings which are dangerous and others which are not. This, to my mind, shows the undesirability of fixing any speed limit with regard to crossings. The policy adopted by the government in passing the Railway Act of 1903 would seem to be the correct policy, where it places it within the discretion of the Railway Commission to say what safeguards should be furnished to insure the safety of the public at level crossings. Under the Act of 1903, any city, town or municipality has a very simple remedy, if there is any unnecessary danger at any of these public crossings. All they have to do, under this Act, is to make application to the Railway Commission and have such safeguards at that particular crossing as may be necessary. They can adapt the order or regulation to suit the circumstances of each particular case, and it must be evident to any one who considers this question at all that that is the proper system to adopt, and the way that these matters should be remedied. It seems to me to be altogether unwise to pass any fixed or general law regulating merely the speed of trains at crossings. Sometimes it may be desirable to have a speed of ten miles an hour at some crossings, while at other crossings that speed might be altogether insufficent. You may require to have gates or persons stationed at such crossings for the protection of the public. In my opinion, the law is much better as it stands. This is unwise and unnecessary legislation, and I should regret to see it adopted.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman from Westmoreland, like myself, is getting to be an old man, and perhaps he considers that his life is of little value. I do not agree with him at all. The intention of the Bill is to protect human life. In our own province we have the unfortunate case of Norton : Many people have been killed there, and why have they been killed ? Because there has been no protection for the public. My hon. friend will not tell me that a train approaching a station at a rate of forty or fifty miles an hour is not more dangerous than a train travelling at ten miles an hour. So many feet are travelled per second, and the less the rate of speed, the better the chance for people to get out of the way.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—This would not apply to Norton, because Norton is on the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Then it should apply to Norton, and to the Intercolonial Railway. Does my hon. friend say that life is not as valuable in King's county as in other places ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Railway Act does not apply to government roads.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I know it does not ; but that does not prevent one from expressing the opinion that the Railway Act should protect human life at all level crossings. Life should be as valuable in Norton, where the people are all Liberals, and vote for the Liberal candidates, as anywhere else. I do not see why there should be any extended debate over this Bill. Why do not the railway companies protect their crossings ? This Bill requires them either to do so or to reduce their speed at level crossings. If human life cannot be protected from a train running at ten miles an hour reduce it to two miles. If the Act does not apply to the Intercolonial Railway, it is unfortunate ; I think it should be extended to all railways. I know the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland is a humanitarian and a good Christian like myself, and I am sure that if he would study the question better he would support the Bill.

Hon. Mr. JONES—The Senate of course desires to pass such legislation as will protect the lives of the citizens of Canada. The hon. gentleman from Rothesay says that if the speed of a train is reduced to ten miles an hour, it will give persons who may happen to be in the way a chance to escape. The answer to that is, that perhaps if a train were going at a high speed it might pass the place before the people got in the way. The first clause of the Bill is not very clear. It says :

> No train shall pass over any highway crossing at train level in any thickly settled portion of any city, town or village at a greater speed than ten miles an hour.

And then it proceeds to say : ' Unless such crossing is properly protected.' Does not that imply that if an accident occurred at such a crossing when the train was not running at a speed of about ten miles an hour, the railway company would be within its rights, and that the effect of this Bill is, practically, to legalize the railways to run at speed over dangerous crossings, whatever the results may be, provided they do not run faster than ten miles an hour ? It appears to me that that is implied, if it is not stated in so many words in the Bill. I should like to hear from legal gentlemen what their opinions are on that point.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I would point out to the hon. gentleman, that all the clauses up to the word ' unless ' is the wording of the law as it stands now. There is no change in the Act until you reach that point.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The point is well taken.

Hon. Mr. JONES—If that has been the law up to the present time, and we are adding these words, we are legalizing trains running not faster than ten miles an hour over dangerous crossings. I would suggest that those words should be eliminated. The Railway Commission can limit the speed after going into the question carefully, examining the crossings and considering the situation, seeing whether the crossing is at a curve where it is not easy to see an approaching train, or where it is out of view because it is between buildings which prevent people seeing any considerable distance, or trees intervene that prevent the engineer seeing the crossing—all these things are conditions necessary for the consideration of what speed a railway train should be allowed at a crossing. These are matters which the Railway Commission should deal with, because they can visit these dangerous places as they should do, and with the information and the evidence that would be before them, they would be capable of deciding upon what speed should be allowed at any particular point under the circumstances. There are many places where a speed of five miles an hour would be much more dangerous than a speed of twenty-five miles an hour at other crossings.

And we take away, to some extent at least, from the Railway Commission by stating first, and specifically, what the rate of speed shall be, without reference to the condition of the crossing, and then ending the clause by saying that the Railway Commission may make it what speed they please. The responsibility of such legislation in this House ought to rest with the Railway Commission, and I submit the first part of this clause is not in keeping with and is not intended to bring about the best results, and it is misleading rather than helpful to the condition which it is intended to help if not cure.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Of course we commit ourselves to the principle of this Bill if the resolution passes that it be referred to Committee of the Whole. While I, for one, do not object to the Bill going into committee, reserving to ourselves the right to discuss the principle of the Bill there, yet I regard it as desirable to state my objection to the principle before that motion passes. Hon. gentlemen will doubtless recall that this Bill was discussed at the last session of parliament. The Senate on the occasion rejected the Bill. Is there any stronger reason to be advanced during the present session than was advanced last session why this Bill should be passed ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes, more were killed last year.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not give serious consideration to what my hon. friend says.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman asked the question and I answer it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I see no stronger reason for the passage of the Bill this session than existed last session. I think the House would stultify itself by accepting the Bill now, after having rejected it before. If the Senate is to perform any important function in the way of revising legislation, it cannot attain that particular object by rejecting a Bill one session and passing it the following one. The next consideration, to my mind, is this : Why has parliament engaged itself for some years past in passing very important legislation constituing a Board of Railway Commissioners to, practically regulate the affairs of our railways throughout the Dominion ? Parliament has made provision for, and the government has appointed a Board of Railway Commissioners, surrounded by a staff of experts, whose duty it is—and who perform that duty so far as I have been able to learn most satisfactorily to the country—to inquire into every subject of this kind, and, as the result of expert investigation, to recommend to parliament the passage of such legislation as would be necessary to meet the requirements of the public from time to time. Now, one of the responsibilities placed upon this Board of Railway Commissioners is the very subject that parliament is assuming to itself, namely, to decide whether this legislation should pass instead of leaving it to the Board of Railway Commissioners, who have very much more accurate knowledge on the question than parliament itself. It, therefore, follows that because one private member of parliament may consider that an abuse exists the entire legislative machinery governing the railways of the country, must be amended because that particular member may possibly think he will receive public approval by moving an amendment to the Act. It is idle to place responsibility upon the Board of Railway Commissioners, and then take that responsibility away, because there possibly may be public clamour with reference to some particular detail. If the railways of this country are to be properly regulated within the contemplation of the Railway Act, it can only be done by placing that responsibility exclusively upon the Railway Commissioners. Immediately the Board of Railway Commissioners finds parliament is disposed to give serious attention to every proposition, which may be advanced, with reference to relieving them of their duties, in course of time they will lose that sense of responsibility which now devolves upon them, and will leave it to parliament to legislate from time to time with reference to details of that kind. We have already empowered the commission to legislate on this particular subject, and there is not a railway crossing from the Atlantic to the Pacific dealt with and within the contemplation of this regulation which we are discussing here, but can have its crossing upon making application to the Railway Commission. Therefore it rests with us to say whether parliament, which has no actual knowledge upon this subject, is a better judge as to where a railway crossing should be protected, than the Railway Commission surrounded, as I have said, with its force of experts. The next consideration is this ; parliament is bonusing fast steamship lines and fast means of transportation and communication. Have hon. gentleman considered what the effect of this legislation would be, where we have practically three thousand miles of railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and where there are villages practically five to ten miles apart ? Have they considered what it would mean with reference to through passenger traffic from the Atlantic to the Pacific, if a train has to slow down to ten miles an hour at every crossing ? We who live at a distance from Ottawa would not reach our homes for seven or eight days from the time we started from the capital.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The Bill says: 'unless properly protected.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not going to repeat what I have said, but I would, for the benefit of my hon. friend, point out that that responsibility is vested in the Railway Commission, and any municipality having an unprotecting crossing can make application to the commission and the commission can deal with it; therefore, it resolves itself simply into a question as to whether parliament can better deal with that subject than the Railway Commission, whose exclusive duty it is to consider such matters.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Will the passing of this legislation in any way interfere with the functions of the Railway Commission?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—How?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Because it takes from the Railway Commission the discretion which is at present vested in it, as to where a railway crossing should be protected.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is an arbitrary provision, making it absolutely incumbent on the railways to protect those crossings, notwithstanding the discretion of the Railway Commission.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—My hon. friend is a lawyer, will he tell me this? Under this Act, is it not a fact that if the railway companies expend a little of the large surplus they have to improve their crossings and protect the public, they can run as fast as they like? Practically all the Bill asks for is to make them spend their money and improve the crossings.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It seems to me that the Bill we are discussing now is practically the same Bill as the Bill that was before us last year, only in a little different form, and not quite so good. Under the Railway Act, we have ample provision. Section 227 of the Railway Act says:

> No train shall pass in or through a thickly peopled portion of the town or village at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is properly protected and fenced in the manner prescribed by this Act, or unless permission is given by regulation or order of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

It seems to me a better clause than the one in the Bill now before us, which appears to repeal that clause. It is more like common sense. I do not see any necessity to introduce a Bill referring to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, I understand that there is no such committee in existence now. The Railway Commission does the work which used to be performed by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. In the Act as it now stands, the same language is used as we find in the former part of this Bill; but later on it says:

> Unless permission is given by regulation or order of the board, a train cannot pass at a greater rate than ten miles an hour.

I made a reference to the fact last year that the automobile was to be allowed to run twenty miles an hour; there were no rules to guide it around the corners, and you would not know where you would meet one. But, on a railway, the only place you would meet danger is at a crossing. That is where you have to look out for danger. I fully agree with the hon. gentleman from Calgary when he says if this Bill were put in force and trains had to slow down at every crossing between Ottawa and his home, it would take two days longer for him to reach there. Everything is being done at the present time to facilitate the running of fast trains, and so long as the board have full control of the railway crossings, and a train is not allowed to cross a dangerous crossing at a faster rate than ten miles an hour without permission of the board, and also a provision that the board shall limit such speed in special cases to any rate it deems expedient, it seems to me there is sufficient protection. The board to-day can direct that a train shall not pass a crossing at a higher speed than one, two or five miles an hour. They have ample power already, and it does seem to me that that being the case we should not interfere with the Railway Act as it stands at present. As the hon. gentleman from Calgary has said, if from year to year the clauses of the Railway Act are to be amended by any person who has a fad, it would be a serious matter. There is no question that the hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill has a fad on railway guards. When he had a seat in the House of Commons he introduced a measure there to regulate certain guards, and we expect that every year he will direct attention to the Railway Act and the powers the board has. We should not interfere with the duties and responsibilities thrown on the Railway Commission. There is no doubt that the clause which this Bill seeks to repeal is a better clause than the one in the Bill before us.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Middlesex)—It is a well known fact to every member of this House that many lives are lost at railway crossings, and that is the substantial fact which confronts us in the consideration of this Bill. It is very pleasant to travel at high rate of speed when the track is clear, and when every hon. gentleman wants to get to his journey's end with as great rapidity and comfort as possible. I think it is due to the public who have other rights, as well as to the traveller, that these rights should be considered. Travellers by vehicle and on foot cross railways in many ways and in many places. Travellers on the public streets cross the railways, and their rights should be considered. If life were not so frequently lost, I do not know that that matter would be so urgent, but it is somewhat of a reproach to Canadian railways that they are so often the cause of loss of life, not only in accidents which, sometimes, might be prevented by a little more care on the part of the railway authorities, and particularly at railway crossings. Within the last twenty-six months, I saw it stated the other day in a paper, that over 400 lives were lost in railway accidents. That is a very serious thing. Whether the lives are valuable to the public or not, they are valuable to their own friends and relatives and it is a great hardship. It is evident that a fast moving train, is more dangerous than a slow moving train, and if we say to the public, or to the railway authorities that trains should not move at a faster rate than ten miles an hour, we put good engineers and drivers on their guard to that extent. Say a train is five minutes late and the engineer is anxious to get in on time. The authorities expect him to move his train quickly, to make connections, and so on. He is on the home stretch, and coming through a suburb of the city and anxious to be on time. The natural desire to be on time and make railway connections stimulate him, and with a thoughtlessness, for which he is, perhaps, not very much to blame, he rushes through the suburbs and lives are lost in that way. A few minutes behind time, and a few minutes earlier at your journey's end ought to be a small consideration compared with the loss of life. The gentlemen who have to travel across the continent to take a steamship at Halifax or somewhere else, are not the only persons deserving of our consideration; there are others who have rights and who have to be considered. I have heard it said that the Railway Commission can do this. We do not take it out of the hands of the Commission, because the Bill provides that that Board may limit the speed of trains at a crossing to any rate they deem expedient. We say, before the board can get at its work, that the trains cannot go faster than ten miles an hour. We all know that the work of the board is already congested, and if you think of the thousands of railway crossings between the Atlantic and the Pacific, you can see it would be the crack of doom before the Railway Commission could indicate the speed at each of these crossings. We are raising a finger of warning to the railway authorities, and they should be glad to accept the hint. In the meantime, trains should slow down to a moderate speed, and if that speed is dangerous, the board cannot deal with the matter too soon, and if not, this House cannot do it too soon, to adjust the use of the crossings by the railway companies. There are thousands of people who do not travel by railways, or who may not be travelling at that particular time. This Bill passed the Commons twice. That may or may not be a good reason why we should pass it, and still that reason has its weight. Two hundred members scattered all over the Dominion, have facilities for knowing the danger quite as well as we have, and if the matter is so important as to secure their support two sessions in succession, I think it is our duty, at all events, to let this Bill go to the committee and see what the objections in detail are, and see if the clause cannot be modified in the direction of safety always. In England, crossings are protected everywhere, and if we look at the statistics I think it is only one in several millions of peoples that are killed on railway crossings, and so in France and Germany. Public life is valued there higher than it is here. In the United States there is a notorious recklessness with regard to human life. Let us not follow bad example, but rather the better example of countries that appreciate the value of human life and protect the public at the crossings, because railway crossings are a menace to life, and we should reduce that menace to the least possible minimum.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think there is a good deal of misconception with regard to this Bill. The point that has been objected to most strongly, is in the first three lines up to the word 'unless' and the closing sentence. These words belong in common to the old Act and the new, the only difference lies in the words that follow the word 'unless.' It means that no train shall be allowed to run in thickly populated places at a speed of more than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced—that is one of the things—or properly protected in the manner prescribed in this Act. That is another—or unless permission is given by some regulation or order of the board. That is the way it stood. The Bill proposed to change it in this way: Just after the word 'unless,' insert 'unless such crossing is properly protected.' If it was fenced without providing that it be properly fenced, but just simply the fact that it was fenced, it would then give the railway power to run at any speed they like without any requirement or it being properly fenced. Three conditions would warrant the running of the train at more than ten miles an hour. One is that the road is fenced—not even properly fenced——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the road is fenced, it would not be a crossing.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Or if it is properly fenced. That is another condition, or unless provision is made by some regulation or order of the board. The weakness is that any fence, whether it is efficient or not, would give the railway power to run at greater speed. The amendment is in order to get over that weakness, 'unless such crossing is properly protected,' or unless such crossing is constructed and therefore duly maintained in accordance with the orders, regulations and direction of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council and of the Board of Railway Commissioners. There are two conditions under this Bill: one is that the crossing shall be properly protected, and the other is that it shall be maintained in accordance with the regulations of the Privy Council and the Board. It is just to get over the weakness of the old law wherein it might be claimed that if it were fenced, no matter whether the fence were efficient or not, it would enable the railway to run.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The old Railway Act provides that the fence shall be four feet six inches high.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not at the crossings.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Unless it is fenced according to the provisions of the Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Properly protected in the manner prescribed by the Act.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Fences of a minimum height of four feet six inches, section 199.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is possible that the Act is not as weak as it would appear by reading it without taking other clauses, but the hon. gentleman will observe that the only difference in the old Act and the new is with regard to these very words that the conditions called for under the new is that unless such crossing is properly protected or unless such crossing is properly constructed, and duly maintained in accordance with the orders, regulations and directions of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, &c. A gentleman very closely conversant with railway law may be better informed on this matter than I am, but the fact is that this Bill was, in the House of Commons, referred to a select committee of seven members, that the railway representatives were heard before that committee, and if I am correctly informed —I received the information and I think it is correct—the result was that this Bill was unanimously recommended, and that the representatives of the railway were satisfied with the Bill as it passed through the House of Commons. The provisions which are in this Bill were agreed to by the committee, subsequently endorsed by the Minister of Railways and accepted by the House. At any rate it seems to me that, coming to us after the great care that has been taken with respect to it, if we do not send the Bill to a Committee of the Whole we ought to send it to the Railway Committee where we could hear reasons pro and con. To my mind it is only apparently making the protection for the public a little better, and, having received the support it has, I think we should read the Bill a second time. Any other course would be a wrong course to pursue. If it is found that the proposed change in the Act is very drastic and unreasonable, then the railway men should be heard, and those who support the Bill should also be heard, and we would know more clearly what we are doing. But I do not think there is any necessity for that course. I feel like supporting the Bill right through. I see no necessity for that reference, but other hon. gentlemen do not see it as I do, and, therefore, we might allow it to go to committee.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—In the city of Moncton, we have about eight level crossings, two of which are protected by having a man at each crossing. There are six of them without any guards and I am satisfied if this amendment is passed it will be an excellent thing. Why we have not killed dozens of people at those crossings is something people cannot understand.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is a government railway—a slow coach.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—As the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island just remarked, the Minister of Railways is perfectly satisfied with this amendment, and I think we should pass it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think the fact that the Minister of Railways is perfectly satisfied with the measure is a sufficient reason why the Senate should pass it. No doubt that fact will carry a great deal of weight with members of this House; still it would not be a decisive argument. I hope the House will adopt the suggestion of the hon. gentleman form Marshfield, and, after this Bill has been read a second time, let it be referred to the Committee on Railways. There parties on both sides can be heard, which is not the case with the Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Yes; I am quite willing. I do not think the difference between this Bill and the law as it exists now is a very marked one. It may be that the Railway Committee can improve the Bill so that it can be more effective when it goes into operation than it would be if it became law in its present form.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—One fact seems to be lost sight of in the discussion between the learned lawyers. Of course, I place great confidence in the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie on general subjects, but I do not attach much importance to him in matters of law, and he has undertaken to give us the law on this question. This is not a matter of law at all; this is a matter of humanity. It diminishes the number of lives which are sacrificed to the railway monster every year, and why should not men fight for such an amendment? Why should a man hesitate? I would not have voted against that Bill last year had I understood it would save one life. Gentlemen talk about speed, and say that you can kill a man with a train going ten miles an hour as well as with one running twenty. That is all nonsense. If a railway is not going faster than you ride on horseback, the people passing these crossings are not in as much danger. What is the danger of the automobile? Why is it so destructive? It is on account of the speed at which it is run, and every effort has been made to limit the speed by legislation. Therefore, this limitation from twenty or thirty miles an hour down to ten will limit the destruction of life to a fraction of the number now killed at crossings. If twenty men are killed by a train going twenty miles an hour, there would not be more than ten killed if the rate were ten miles an hour. I do not think it makes any difference whether it takes the responsibility from the Railway Commission. Is this a measure in the interest of human life? What is the objection to it? I do not see that there is any particular objection, political or otherwise; therefore, I shall vote for it on the ground that it is in the direction of the protection of the lives of the people. There are a great many dangerous crossings around Kingston, and if they can be limited in that way, it will be a step in the right direction. I quite appreciate the arguments used by the hon. gentleman from Calgary; they are very strong. But this is like the bridge at Yonge Street, in Toronto; while they are fighting about it a great many lives will be lost, which would be saved by the passage of this Bill. While the Railway Commission and the government or this House are fighting about it, there will be no improvement made, and I strongly support anything which will tend to have a good effect in the direction of improvement. High speed in any instance is bad. I bound myself to a certain extent to vote for this Bill, because, relying on the honesty, honour and rectitude of the hon. senator from Wolseley, I consented to second the motion. If I had gone slowly and reflected, I might have been able to change my mind; but, having committed myself to the measure, I shall never regret this vote, because I do not care whether it is political or otherwise, it is intended for the good of the people and, if passed, will accomplish a great deal of good.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I am quite satisfied to let this Bill go before the Railway Committee, where all the parties concerned may be heard.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I have listened very patiently to the arguments of different speakers and have been very much impressed with the views expressed by the hon. senator from Middlesex (Hon. Mr. Ross). It is my desire that things should be so adjusted as to do as little harm as possible to any interest. There is constant reference to the danger to human life in the cities. My experience has been that there is greater danger to people in the rural sections. We want to secure the greatest good for every interest, if possible. The railroad must run at a sufficient speed to reach its destination in proper time. If we limit the speed at unprotected crossings to ten miles an hour, we shall be doing an injustice to the travelling public, and to the people generally. We are spending millions every year to increase the speed of transportation, and every facility should be offered to the travelling public to lose as little time as possible in travelling from one point to another. As I have already said, the greatest danger to human life from these level, unprotected crossings is not in the cities, towns and villages, but in the country where farmers driving from one point to another have to cross the tracks. In St. Thomas, we have rapid trains passing frequently through thickly populated localities—trains running between Chicago and New York—and we seldom hear of an accident in the city, while accidents are of frequent occurrence in the townships both east and west of St. Thomas. We ought to be careful not only to protect human life but to consider the interests of the railway companies and transportation. I therefore feel that it would not be well to send this Bill to the Railway Committee. Many senators are not members of that committee. If it is to go to any committee, let it go to a Committee of the Whole House where we will all have an opportunity to express our views on the subject. I shall vote against the Bill being sent to the Railway Committee, but am in favour of giving it the second reading and then let it be considered in a Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is the proper way.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—This Bill is of very great importance to the people of Canada, but, in my judgment, it does not go quite far enough. I have felt every time I have travelled on a railway train that trains pass through towns at too high a speed. All the accidents in our part of the country have been caused by trains running at high speed, running into other trains on sidings. Such an accident occurred at the town of Luther, while the Governor General and his party were there. A train ran into another train on the siding, and four persons were killed. I am not particularly interested in this Bill. It has been placed in my name because I asked to have it reinstated on the order paper when the senator in charge of it neglected to do so. I should like to refer it to the Railway Committee, where all parties can be heard, and then it can be reported to the House and dealt with.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY moved that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—This is a public Bill and should go to a Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—The Bill might be reported from the Committee on Railways and then referred to a Committee of the Whole House. That would meet the objection of the hon. member.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—With that understanding, it would be all right.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Unless there is notice, so that the rules may be suspended, it cannot go to the Railway Committee directly from the House except by unanimous consent.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There was an understanding before the second reading of the Bill that it would go to the Committee on Railways, and it would be only right and proper to keep faith with the House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Last year it went to the Railway Committee, and not to a Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I hope the Bill will be killed, whether it goes to the Railway Committee or a Committee of the Whole House. It would strike a very severe blow at the railway companies of this country, and also at the travelling public. In the province in which I live, we have a crossing every mile or two, and, if this regulation were in force, it would be impossible to run the trains at all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Bourinot says that it is becoming a very frequent practice to send very important Bills requiring inquiry to a select committee, before referring them to a Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

GOLD AND SILVER MARKING ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (UU) An Act to amend the Gold and Silver Marking Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before my hon. friend from Beamsville (Hon. Mr. Gibson) proceeds to make an explanation, I would ask if this is not practically the clause that was proposed to be inserted in the Act as it now stands on the statute-book when it was introduced by the promoters? I remember a clause somewhat of this character being discussed in committee, and I think that the committee rejected it.

Hon. Mr. de BOUCHERVILLE.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—These words were in the original Bill. It was sent to a special committee of the House in order that it might be intelligently dealt with and parties on both sides might be heard. Representations were made by a committee of two or three gentlemen from Toronto, who had charge of the Bill, and some opposition was offered; but they got very little consideration—I do not mean to say it disrespectfully—from the committee, because it was felt that those who supported the Bill furnished the best arguments. It was felt, at that time, that when the Bill was brought into the House it was wide enough in its scope to admit of the importation of British hall marked goods. The committee in their wisdom, however, decided that the standard should be 10 karat gold. Since that time, gentlemen interested in importing English made goods asked for the ruling of the Minister of Justice as to whether it was meant by the passing of this Act that British hall marked goods could be imported, and the Minister of Justice, through the member who made the application, said he thought it could be done. Those gentlemen who were interested in the importation of the goods wished to have the written opinion of the Minister of Justice, and, when he looked closely into the matter, he found that under the provisions of the present Act English 9k hall marked goods cannot be imported. I am sure none of us desire directly or indirectly to legislate for the benefit of the United States as against the United Kingdom. I am assured by those who are in the trade, that British hall marked goods are equal in standard to the 10 karat hall marked goods of the United States. In other words, the 9 karat standard of English hall mark, will stand 9½ karat test, while the 10 karat gold of the United States will only stand a 9½ karat test. The Act which is now in the Consolidated Statutes, will go into force on the 13th of July, and, if this amendment is not made, the result will be that not one dollar's worth of British hall marked goods will be admitted into Canada. No one wishes for such a condition of things. The member from Hamilton was waited upon by those who are largely interested in the importation and manufacture of jewellery, and they came before the government and proposed an amendment to the Act. I may say that when the matter was submitted to the Minister of Justice, he made the proposition which is embodied in the Bill before the House, so as to put it beyond the possibility of a doubt that English hall marked goods of 9 karat may be imported. We were told in the committee that only a very small proportion of English goods of 9 karat standard were imported into the country. I am assured by those in the trade, representing large concerns in Montreal, London and Hamilton, that that is not the case, and that 9 karat gold is the only low standard made in Great Britain. The next highest is 15 and 18 karat gold. Those who promoted the law as it stands were asking too much when they proposed to force the British manfacturers to change their standard to 10 karats. They have been making goods for generations at the present standard, and it would be singular if we should admit into this country 10 karat gold from the United States, which is of the same actual value as British 9 karat gold, which we are asked to prohibit. I have here a letter from the Minister of Justice with respect to this Bill, which I shall read to the House. It is as follows :

Ottawa, October 30, 1906.

My dear Mr. Zimmerman,—I have your letter of the 26th instant, inclosing Mr. Levy's letter to you of the previous day, and I have looked into the provisions of the Gold and Silver Marking Act, passed last session.

I think, as this statute is now worded, that the importation of English gold less than ten karats in fineness is prohibited. I do not think this could have been intended, and apparently the result has been caused by changes made in the language of the Act, while it was before parliament without the effect being noticed.

In the Bill as introduced in the Senate the intention was plainly expressed to exclude articles of a fineness less than ten karats, even though they might bear the hall mark of Great Britain or Ireland. It is evident that this intention was not approved. The introduction into section 8 of the Act, as it now stands, of the reference to articles of gold less than ten karats in fineness shows this ; but to admit such articles, section 8 ought to have read that the provisions of section 4 'and of section 6' of this Act should not apply to articles of gold less than ten karats in fineness.

The effect of the Act, as it now stands, is, under section 6, to prevent the importation into Canada, or the sale, of any article of gold less than ten karats in fineness, even though it is officially hall marked.

I presume this is a result which was not intended, and if I am right in this view, I think the only thing to be done is to amend the Act during the coming session. It is, however, a matter in regard to which I have no practical knowledge, and I shall therefore be glad if you would make careful inquiry, so that we may know exactly what, in the general interests, ought to be done in the matter.

I remain,
Yours faithfully,
A. B. AYLESWORTH.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that those who supported the measure last year are in favour of this measure ? Does Mr. McNaught favour it ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Mr. McNaught wrote a letter to Mr. Fielding, and I may say, though he is not in favour of the Bill, he states that so far as he is concerned he has no objection to the importation of English made goods, because they do not amount to more than 2 per cent of the whole importation. I have under my hand, and will read to the House later, the testimony of men who are in the trade. Mr. McNaught is not in the trade. They claim that it was distinctly understood at the time that the admission of 9 karet hall marked goods from Great Britain would not be prevented by the passage of the Bill of last year.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I only mention Mr. McNaught's name because it occurred to me. I do not mean his views.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I will read Mr. McNaught's letter to Mr. Fielding, and the House can judge of the merits of the change that the gentlemen engaged in the trade in London, Montreal, Hamilton and other places wish to have made. All they ask is that the embargo, which is to go into effect on the 13th of July next, against British hall marked goods shall be lifted. The letter is as follows :—

THE AMERICAN WATCH CASE COMPANY, OF TORONTO, LIMITED.

Toronto, January 29, 1907.

Honourable W. S. Fielding,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Fielding,—On my return to town this morning I found your esteemed favour of the 18th instant, on my desk, which will account for my not having replied sooner.

In regard to the representation made by Mr. Levy concerning 9 karat English hall marked goods, I may say that no arrangement was ever arrived at by the committee to recommend the manufacture or importation of gold goods less than 10 karat in quality. The matter was discussed several times in the committee and while there were some of the members in favour of admitting 9 karat English hall marked goods the great majority thought it only fair to make the minimum standard 10 karat.

This matter was threshed out thoroughly before the committee of the Senate and it was admitted there by the importers representing their side of the question that the importation of 9 karat English jewellery was a very small item indeed and would not exceed 2 per cent of the jewellery imported into the Dominion.

As representing the manufacturers I stated to the committee that from an expert's standpoint 9 karat gold was too low a quality to keep its colour in actual wear. Nearly all of the 9 karat hall marked jewellery manufactured in England is gilded with fine gold, which makes it look like 15 or 18 karat coloured gold. When worn, however, the gilding wears off and leaves the 9 karat gold showing through reddish brown or copper coloured.

I produced to the committee the testimony of the secretary of the Goldsmiths Company of England, in which he stated that when an attempt is made to have 9 karat goods hall marked it was strongly opposed by the London jewellers, but was finally admitted to suit the cheap trade of Birmingham and export trade. London jewellers do not use it, however, as they think that anything less than 10 karat is not fit for jewellery manufacturing. Our advice to the committee, therefore, as experts was that 10 karat gold was the lowest quality which would stand the test of actual wear, and for that reason it had been adopted throughout both Canada and the United States and had been the standard here for many years.

We explained, however, that if the committee thought it wise we had no objection from a commercial standpoint to allow the importation of 9 karat hall marked jewellery, as it did not cut any figure in the trade and its admission would not affect the manufacturers materially.

The committee discussed the matter at considerable length and by an almost unanimous vote decided that in the interest of the Canadian public it was advisable to leave the 10 karat minimum as recommended by our committee, and in this I think they acted wisely.

In summing up this whole matter I might say that personally I have no interest in this matter whatever, as 9 karat gold is not used in our business by any case makers in Canada or the United States. I do think, however, that in the public interest it would be a serious mistake to lower the standard to 9 karat. The injustice claimed to be done to the English manufacturer has but little foundation because if the Canadian trade is worth anything they can easily adapt themselves to the conditions, and manufacture 10 karat goods for this market, as the great bulk of the goods imported into Canada are made to order anyway.

From conversations I have had recently with leading members of the jewellery trade of the United States I find that they regard our Stamping Act as a model and so much superior to their own that they propose to try and have theirs amended to bring it into line with ours.

I think it would be wise also to allow the Act as it stands to operate for at least a year in order to find out any defects in its working, and then if amendments were necessary they could all be made at the one time.

Trusting this will find you well, believe me, with best wishes.

Yours sincerely,

(Sgd.) W. K. McNAUGHT.

Now here is the whole crux of this question : to give this matter a trial for another year, and during that time to strangle the importers of British goods. I think it is only fair, as I have read the letter of Mr. McNaught, that I should read the letter from those interested in the opposite direction. This is also addressed to Mr. Fielding, and was written within the last two weeks. It is a reply practically to Mr. McNaught's letter of January last. It is as follows :—

THE RUSSELL HOUSE.

Ottawa, Canada.

Hon. W. S. Fielding,

Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Through the kindness of Mr. A. Zimmerman, M.P., I have had placed in my hands a copy of letter written to you by Mr. W. K. McNaught, under date of January 29, 1907. In this letter there are several items which I believe can be enlarged upon and construed differently.

In the first place Mr. McNaught was I believe the chairman of a committee of three to frame a draft stamping Act, and present same to the jewellers section of the Canadian Manufacturers Association.

Several meetings of this section were held and after much discussion at different times a draft Act was agreed upon. It was I believe at the final meeting of this jewellers section that I prevailed upon the members of the association to recommend that 9 karat hall marked jewellery of English manufacture and bearing the English government stamp be specially mentioned, and be excepted from the Act, and admitted into Canada.

Our firm were particularly interested in this, as we have imported these goods for over a period of forty years, and have a clientele amongst the very best jewellers of this country for goods of this description.

When the writer left the meeting in question, he had no other idea but that the vote of the meeting would be carried out by the committee in charge of the draft Bill. Through some error or omission the Bill as we expected in all good faith it would be, was not passed in accordance to proviso we had stipulated for. Had we had the slightest idea of this we would have been personally represented at Ottawa, and laid our case before the government.

Even after the Bill had received the Royal assent we were under the impression that 9 karat hall marked jewellery was excepted especially under the Act.

On hearing of doubts whether the Act as drawn permitted this, we asked for an opinion from Mr. Aylesworth, and he at first expressed himself that these goods could be imported under the Act.

The writer was at this time in Europe on a purchasing trip, and on receipt of a cable giving Mr. Aylesworth's opinion, proceeded and ordered goods in question, for Christmas, 1907, and for delivery after the Act became law.

Later on going carefully into the Act Mr. Aylesworth came to the conclusion that 9 karat hall marked jewellery could not be imported as per his letter annexed dated October 30.

Before I was in receipt of this altered condition of affairs my arrangements for 1907 were all made, and could not be altered.

I believe you will agree with the hon. Sir, that if it had not been the intention to make especial provision for hall marked jewellery in the original draft Act, there never would have been any necesssity for mentioning same in the Act at all.

Mr. McNaught in his letter states plainly that there were members in favour of same but mixes up his committee of three, and the whole jewellers section.

In regard to matter in question being only 2 per cent of jewellery imported, I have not at my disposal the statistics but would say judging from figures supplied by Mr. P. B. Ball the Canadian commercial agent to Birmingham in a letter written October 17, 1906, to the Birmingham 'Daily Post' that it is about 10 per cent.

Now even taking Mr. McNaught's figures as being correct, which under the circumstances they do not appear to be, it is entirely unfair to take the whole imports of jewellery into consideration.

There are different classifications of jewellery as follows, gold jewellery of all qualities, gold filled jewellery, rolled plate jewellery, plated jewellery, silver jewellery and cheap jewellery of all kinds for millinery and dry goods trade.

Until recent years no gold-filled or rolled plate jewellery of any kind was manufactured in Canada and the entire importation of same came principally from the United States.

England, I wish to impress upon you here, does not manufacture rolled plate jewellery at all. The rolled plate jewellery imports into Canada are very large, and if same and sterling silver and electroplated ware were deducted from the totals of American imports of jewellery and the gold jewellery alone imported from the United States compared with the gold jewellery imported from England the discrepancy in the figures would not be so unfavourable to the mother country.

I might further state here that in the jewellery trade fashions change and that at present older styles are in demand, and this demand will make the English imports play more of a factor.

One line that England excels in is gold bracelets, and as bracelets latterly owing to short sleeves have become fashionable, the English article has become a necessity and in consequence of similar conditions will take in the future a new lease of life.

McNaught further states that from an expert's point of view, 9 karat gold is too low a standard to keep its colour. In this we take exception, and we are sure that if such were the case the English and colonial jewellers would not sell goods of this quality, nor would the English government countenance anything by their official government mark if it were not to the public's interests.

Mr. McNaught states that 9 karat gold gilded will not keep its colour. This we admit, but state in addition that the proposed standard of 10 karat or even 11, 12 and 13 karat gold gilded will not keep the gilding.

The lowest quality of gold that can be acid coloured and retain its colour is 14 karat.

However, 9 karat gold must not be gilded and a large percentage of importations are in bright polished instead of coloured.

In reply to the testimony of the secretary of the Goldsmiths Company of England, I have no knowledge of this position or relation to the English trade. In the west and London shops they naturally handle a better grade of goods, having a finer class of trade in the nobility and wealthy middle classes of England. In the provincial cities and towns of Great Britain it is different, as well as in Canada.

In our country our jewellers carry goods of all grades to satisfy a more varied demand.

Mr. McNaught states in his letter that if the committee thought it wise they had no objection from a commercial standpoint to allow the importation of 9 karat hall marked jewellery, as it did not cut any figure in the trade, and its admission would not affect the manufacturers materially.

Now this, however, cuts some figure to us, and also to other importers, both wholesale and retail. Both of the latter class made an effort in the fall to have 9 karat hall marked jewellery admitted.

Particularly might this be said of some cities like Halifax, Nova Scotia, and Victoria, and British Columbia, which are very English in their tastes and demand English goods and the English hall mark as a guarantee of quality.

Now to come to the technical question of gold. According to the Act as passed, 9½ karat gold in some cases can be stamped as 10 karat.

In England to have 9 karat stamped by the government it must be full 9 karat, and in consequence goods are made of a higher quality so as to be sure to assay 9 karat including solder.

So at the most the difference in quality between English 9 karat and Canadian 10 karat will in some cases be only one-quarter to one-half cent at most. A karat of gold on the quality basis is figured by the trade at four cents a karat per pennyweight. That is to say, one pennyweight of 18 karat gold is worth 72 cents; 10 karat, 40 cents, and 9 karat, 36 cents.

The majority of articles manufactured would not weight over 2 pennyweights, or a total difference in total value in the article considering that there would be a ½ karat difference in quality would be four cents in actual value to the purchaser on his purchase.

We might state here we are in full accord and always were with the general principles of the Bill and of making the standard of Canadian manufacturers 10 karat as they have hitherto professed to make.

The various recognized English standards are 9 karat, 15 karat and 18 karat.

The English manufacturers are not in a position to produce goods of a quality different to above and on inquiring of them to make for me goods of a special 10 karat quality they said it would be very difficult, and in fact almost impossible.

I wish to state here that the Act as at present is a hardship on the mother country under these circumstances, and unfair to her as regards the United States, and also a hardship to a portion of the trade, wholesale and retail, who will want and have been in the habit of using English goods.

In regards to Canada Stamp Act being considered in the United States as a model Act we might say that owing to the prohibitive tariff of 60 per cent on jewellery in force in the United States makes it impossible for England to export any jewellery at all to the United States and so this clause which we pray to have amended does not enter into the question of the American Act at all.

In regard to Mr. McNaught's suggestion that the government let the Act as it stands go into operation for a year and see any defects and then remedy them we do not think this suggestion is good.

The Act has not yet gone into force and no great inconvenience has been caused to any one but ourselves. If the Act goes into force as it is for a year it will be a great hardship to all importers, and mean a great loss of revenue to the government.

We suggest amending it before it goes into force and then see how it will work and then importers will know where they stand.

I trust I have not gone too deeply into this matter and wasted too much of your very valuable time, but I am certain by giving this your careful consideration you will see that we are asking nothing unreasonable and I am sure the Canadian trade will endorse, and appreciate your favourable action. If necessary and time would permit, I could get a large number of retailers and wholesalers to corroborate my statements.

If there is any further information you would wish I would be delighted to present same to you. Trusting to hear from you favourably which I assure you would be greatly appreciated.

Believe me, dear sir,
Sincerly yours,
THE LEVY BROS CO., Ltd.
ADOLPH S. LEVY.

I may say that, in addition to the Levy Brothers of Hamilton, there are other importers also who take the same ground. They are H. and A. Saunders, the Goldsmith Stock Company, Knox Gunther, T. H. Lee and Son Company, Limited, Thos. Marshall, William Allen of London, and Jas. Pitt of Montreal. These are the parties that are represented before the Banking Committee, and one of them said, 'If it had not been for Senator Gibson things would have been different.' Every member of the committee will admit that I believed in the sincerity of these men at the time. I fought for them as much as I could, believing, as I honestly did that we were improving the trade in Canada by raising the standard to a ten karat mark, that we were doing so in the best interest of Canada. Since I have had the information I now possess from the men who asked me to present this case before you for your favourable consideration, I have no hesitation in saying that I think it would be very unwise on our part to prohibit the importation of the hall marked ware, which is marked by the government—and every one who is familiar with the high character of the gentlemen who have the execution of the government trust in the way of hall marking the goods, will admit that we are making a great mistake in admitting from the United States ten karat goods that are not superior to nine karat English hall marked goods, in that way discriminating against the mother country in favour of the States.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know whether there are any hon. senators present who were on the committee who gave probably a month's attention to this Bill during last session. If there are, I think they will bear me out in saying that no Bill was more carefully or thoroughly considered than the Bill referring to gold and silver markings. We have had communications from Halifax in the east and Vancouver in the west. We had at the time a very considerable diversity of opinion, and this particular question which the hon. gentleman from Lincoln has brought before us about lowering the standard to the nine karat in Canada, was thoroughly discussed and I venture to say that nine-tenths of those present, representing the gold and silver trade were in favour of the higher standard. It was also discussed by the committee in the House of Commons. This Bill was only introduced on March 13. Now we propose to change a law that has the approval, I venture to say, of 90 per cent of the gold and silver trade of Canada; we propose to change it without giving those who are interested an opportunity of making any observations upon the amendments we are now considering, and I do not think that seems proper or right. This law was not to go into operation for a year. It is not in operation yet; but I think the true policy would be to allow the Act to go into operation for a year, and then ascertain its effect on the trade. In any case, it seems very extraordinary that persons who were consulted generally throughout Canada in regard to the law were not to be consulted with regard to this change, more particularly where there was such a direct expression of opinion with reference to this very point. In the committee room gold chains were produced, and I remember the parties saying, 'This is only nine karat and will not wear more than twelve or fifteen months,' and so on. We had an illustration between the nine karat and the higher standard, and it does seem to me rather inconsistent that when parliament gave such close attention to it, not only in this chamber but in the other that we should now be asked to reverse our decision. I have been taking a very prominent part in this matter. Having had charge of the Bill, I was invited down to the House of Commons when they had it in committee there, and the whole subject was threshed out in the House of Commons committee; yet we are now asked to make a material and important change in the Bill? It does not seem to me quite consistent with the policy that ought to prevail. There ought to be some finality about it. We ought to have some experience that evil consequences would flow from not keeping up the standard as far as English goods were concerned. I think the letter read from Mr. McNaught was very clear and decided against any such proposition as this amendment proposes. The evidence was that a very small proportion of nine karat jewellery came into Canada, either 2 per cent or 3 per cent. It did not seem to affect it very much, but the feeling amongst the trade was that a higher standard ought to be kept up. Gold was becoming more abundant every year, and that was another reason urged for keeping up the standard. Why should Canada not have as high a standard as any other country? It was admitted in the correspondence I have just listened to, that in England, nine karat gold was scarcely ever used, but was unloaded on other countries.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He said not more than two per cent.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—That is McNaught's statement, but the other statement was that it was ten per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill was only introduced on the 12th of March last, and certainly the trade have not had an opportunity of expressing an opinion on it. I was in the other chamber when the Bill was called, otherwise I should have asked to allow it to stand until I consulted my colleagues. Mr. Fielding had been out of town for several days and only returned to-day, and therefore I had no opportunity of discussing it with him, and he had no opportunity of considering it. The Bill certainly cannot receive my support.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is this Bill promoted at the instance of the association? My hon. friend will remember that the original Act was promoted by the association of dealers, and seemed to be the unanimous view of their various conferences. Or is it simply from isolated dealers?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I will give the answer as it was handed to me, that when these men met together for the purpose of discussing the Gold and Silver Hall Marking Act in the association—the Manufacturers' Association—they had different guilds and different branches of the several trades, and it was distinctly understood in the trade and by the trade that nine karat hall marked goods were to be in the Bill; and when McNaught and three or four others came down here they changed that in the original Bill to ten karat, and the committee accepted their statement as being in accord with the wishes of the whole trade of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Who applies for this Bill?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Those who applied were——

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is exceedingly irregular; I think we should have some order.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am trying to answer.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There will be another opportunity. There seems to be some misapprehension with respect to this measure. I think there was more done last year than the hon. Secretary of State or the hon. gentleman from Lincoln think. If hon. gentlemen will look at section 8 of chapter 90, they will find that section 8 provides that certain marks are allowed on gold and silverware. It says that it shall not be lawful to sell or import, or attempt to import, into Canada any article composed in whole or in part of gold or silver except the articles mentioned in so and so. There is the provision. Subsection 2 of that section says:

> The provision of this section shall not apply to any article in gold less than 10 karat in fineness, or of silver or of any alloy of gold or silver which is applied.

I direct attention to the fact that the words are exactly the same as in the Bill before us.

> (a) Any hall mark lawfully supplied according to the laws of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; or > (b) Any mark indicating the quality of the gold and applied by the government of any foreign country; and if with respect to such article all the other provisions of this Act have been complied with.

The language there is identical with the language in the Bill which the hon. gentleman has introduced. The policy of parliament has been laid down in section 8 of this Act, but in section 11 there are provisions with respect to penalties, and, owing to some oversight, this provision exempting the goods which I have just read to you from the penalties has not been inserted in section 11 of the Act, and the only object of the Bill which is now before us is to carry out the policy of that chapter of the revised statutes and to exempt these goods from the penalties. They are already exempted from the requirements of section 8. I hold that to refuse to pass this Bill would be a breach of faith on the part of parliament; and, further, I hold that inasmuch as the goods to be affected by our refusal would be goods which are imported from the mother country; that we are adopting a policy which is inconsistent with the general policy of this Dominion, and I trust the committee will see their way to doing what I regard as an act of justice, and atoning for an oversight which occurred last year.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is it the jewellery trade which is looking for this change?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Very few of the trade know anything about it. I do not suppose one per cent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The fact that a gentleman, of whom the Secretary of State speaks, having sent a long letter to the Minister of Finance, goes to show that he, at any rate, has been notified; but this Bill, as I take it, is simply carrying out the understanding which was arrived at last year.

It being six o'clock, the committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (UU) An Act to amend the Gold and Silver Marking Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I feel as the Hon. Secretary of State does with regard to this Bill. It was a subject to which we gave a great deal of earnest consideration last year, and we had representations made to us by all the interests involved, and very intelligent representatives they were. The parties were very reasonable and agreed on all the features of the Bill, excepting two, if my recollection serves me right. One was with regard to the 9 karat gold and the other turned on the very much more important point, the stamping of the quality on plated goods to show the proportion of precious metals they contained. This amendment does not touch that broad feature of the Bill at all, but if I understand it—and I confess I have not had time to look very closely into it—it is to give 9 karat gold the same standing as 10 karat or higher quality is given under the present Act. Now, I remember the arguments that were addressed to us last year on this subject, and I think there was an admission on the part of both those who were against and those who favoured this legislation, in regard to the quality of gold, that a 9 karat gold was not satisfactory, that it discoloured; but the contention was based entirely on the ground that in Great Britain the 9 karat gold was manufactured and largely traded in and that some difficulties might occur in our trade if orders could not be filled for 9 karat goods. On the other hand, it was said that if we made the standard 10 karat, as we ought to do, our trade with England would ultimately conform to that standard, and there would be no difficulty in future, and that last view seemed to be the one that prevailed with the committee and the Bill went through without any very serious difference of opinion. It may be right to make this change. My hon. friend in charge of this Bill was one of the warmest supporters of the Bill of last year, and it may be that many others who were strenuous supporters of the Act now on the statute-book would change their opinion now if they had an opportunity; although it is quite possible that they are strenuously of the same opinion they held last year. It would seem to me that in one year from the time we took this very grave action we should not change our views unless all parties came before us again. It may be that those most interested are very influential people and yet have not been even notified. This is not a private Bill and does not call for notification, and they may not be aware of the change that it is proposed to be made in the law. On this account, I think we should find some way of changing our mode of procedure with it, and in place of dealing with the Bill in this committtee, should send it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce where it was sent last year and serve notice on the parties involved, so that we could ascertain if the change meets with their approval, and whether we can satisfy ourselves that it is also in the interest of the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.—For the purpose of information, I should like to understand from the hon. senator from Lincoln what his explanation would be with reference to the absence of a minimum standard as is evidenced by the proposed amendment? My recollection of the clause dealing with English importations last year is this: It was then proposed that the minimum should be nine karats. My hon. friend will observe that in his Bill there is no such limitation. It may be very well to say that the minimum adopted by England should be nine karats, but it will be observed that the greatest latitude is practically allowed to foreign countries to adopt a lower hall mark. Consequently, section 11 of the Act, while imposing upon a Canadian manufacturer a minimum of ten karats, would permit the foreign manufacturer to export to this country an article of very much less fineness than is imposed upon the Canadian manufacturer. If my hon. friend will look at section 11 of chapter 90, of the Revised Statutes, he will observe the application of this amendment to the existing law. While I should be very loath indeed to be a party to the passage of any legislation which would prevent the English manufacturer from shipping his products to this country, yet the amendment goes very much farther and permits the widest latitude to foreign exporters to ship to this country gold products stamped less than nine karats. It seems to me, therefore, that the passage of this Bill without our having further expert knowledge on it, would be very dangerous, and, in fact would so emasculate the present Act as to render it valueless.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—When this Bill was before the committee, it was pointed out by the gentlemen who were in the trade that in France, Germany and elsewhere on the continent, there is no gold manufactured less than eighteen karats. In England the lowest grade of jewellery is nine karats, and for that very reason the nine karat gold of England was to be admitted under the first arrangement, and the standard of other countries was to be ten karats. It would be asking a little too much of the English manufacturers who have had their standards for ages, to change them for the sake of the people of the United States. Foreigners could not import gold manufactures in any form unless hall marked ten or more karats. The whole object of the Act, if I understood it aright, was to secure a standard of quality, and the English standard of nine karats of gold was the lowest made. With respect to the colouring of gold, as I pointed out, no quality under fifteen karats standard can be coloured successfully. You can colour nine karat gold, but the colouring will wear off. The people who are more largely interested in this matter point out that if this law goes into force on the 13th of July, you paralyze the whole import trade of Canada in this class of jewellery, and simply allow the American Watch Manufacturing Company to send into Canada watch cases of 10 karats. I have pointed out that the ten karat standard of the United States is really only nine and a half, while the English standard of nine karats must be over nine to receive the hall mark. We should not be very much concerned about what comes in from the United States, so long as we keep their standard up to ten karats gold, but if we are going to follow out the doctrines we have been inculcating for some years back; if we are to give any preference at all it ought to be to the mother country. It is not a question of duty; it is simply a question of prohibiting entirely the importation of nine karat gold.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is exceedingly difficult to get at the meaning of this matter. The revisers in going over the statute seem to have changed it materially. There is one very curious point about it. Section 4 of the Act, as it was originally passed, provides that it shall not be lawful to sell, import or attempt to import into Canada, any articles of gold of less than ten karats. Section 8 would lead one to think that an exception was made in favour of imports from Great Britain. To me it is rather mysterious. They have rather muddled it in the revised statutes by changing the paragraphs, and I really have not had an opportunity myself of consulting them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is quite manifest from the Act that the primary object of this legislation was to prevent not only the importation but the manufacture and sale in Canada of articles of gold of a spurious character, and the whole policy of the Act was to confine the minimum to 10 karats. That was the starting point. While it is stated that the practice of the English manufacturer is to make an article of 9 karats yet there is nothing to prevent a hall mark being adopted by foreign manufacturers of a much less finenes than 9 karats. If my hon. friend will look at his Bill he will find under paragraph 2 the following: 'Any mark indicating the quality of the gold and applied by the government of any foreign country.' Now is it logical, is it reasonable that we should throw upon the Canadian manufacturer the obligation of confining him to the manufacture of articles of gold of 10 karats in fineness, if we permit foreign traders to import into Canada hall marked goods of less fineness than 10 karats.

Hon. Mr. JONES—Does the hon. gentleman say that is the law?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is the law. If my hon. friend will look at the Act he will find that it is a contravention of the Act for any Canadian manufacturer to manufacture, import or sell any article in gold that is marked of less fineness than 10 karats.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Marked.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Is the hall mark attached to any article of gold lower than 9 karats?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We cannot tell that.

Hon. Mr. KERR—That is the law there.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Let me demonstrate what I mean. You impose upon the Canadian manufacturer the obligation of producing articles of gold of not less than 10 karats fineness. That is to say, he cannot stamp an article as gold except it contains at least 10 karats. This Bill proposes that foreign articles of gold, hall marked less than 10 karats, may be imported. My hon. friend from Toronto shakes his head; but if he will look at the Bill he will find that clause 1 and 2 provide as I say.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If my hon. friend will look at section 8 of chapter 90 of the revised statutes, he will find exactly the same language used there.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is a different matter. That is to say you shall mark it with the alloy.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is just the same thing.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If an article contains less than 10 karats, the amount of the alloy must be marked on the article. The section dealing with the subject is section 11, and it proposes to amend it so as to admit as gold any articles bearing the hall mark of a foreign country whatever that may be. There is no restraint or limitation, no minimum; consequently I say that any foreign country can for the purpose of increasing the exportation to Canada adopt a hall mark of less than 9 karats and export those articles to Canada and thus undersell the Canadian manufacturer who is bound to adopt a minimum fineness of 10 karats. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, that this Bill should not be passed without giving the representatives of the Canadian industries in the precious metals the opportunity of appearing before the committee and explaining the technical difficulties which must necessarily enter into manufactures such as we are now dealing with.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have received to-day a letter from Mr. McNaught in which he refers to that very point.

Toronto, March 18, 1907.

Hon. R. W. Scott,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Scott,—I have your esteemed favour of the 16th instant inclosing copy of the Bill to amend the Gold and Silver Marking Act.

From a hurried glance over the Bill I presume that the intention is to allow the importation of 9 karat gold goods if stamped with the hall mark of Great Britain or the government mark of any foreign country.

This I would consider eminently unfair inasmuch as it will allow the manufacturers of foreign countries to send in 9 karat gold jewellery into Canada while the Canadian manufacturer is prohibited from making anything less than 10 karat. It is evident that this discrimination will work to the disadvantage of the Canadian manufacturer, and is unfair upon the face of it.

In addition to this I think it is very much against the public interest to allow the manufacture or importation of gold jewellery of a lower quality than 10 karat for the reason advanced last year before the Senate committee. I understand from good authority that English manufacturers are now preparing to conform to the Canadian Stamping Act as it was passed last year, and manufacture 10 karat gold goods for this market. This they can readily do without much trouble to themselves and I am sure that it would be of great advantage to this country in the long run to have an honest standard of quality.

I inclose you herewith a copy of a letter I sent to the Hon. Mr. Fielding on January 26, which deals with this matter at some length and set forth my view fully in regard to it.

I might say in conclusion that I have several letters this morning from leading manufacturers of jewellery in the United States in which they say that they are endeavoring to get an amendment to the Vreeland Gold and Silver Stamping Act passed last session by the United States congress, to makes it conform with our Act, as they consider we have the best Stamping Act in the world at the present time.

Thanking you for your kindness in this matter believe me with best wishes.

Yours sincerely,

W. K. McNAUGHT.

P.S.—I forgot to say that I have requests from several manufacturers on the other side for copies of the Bill which was passed by the Canadian parliament last year. Could I impose upon your good nature by asking you to have your department send me ten copies of the Gold and Silver Marking Act, of 1906, at their convenience, for which please accept my thanks.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The impression left on my mind from the Act of last year was this: that the 9 karat gold of Great Britain deteriorated to such an extent that it was not advisable to import it, and that was the sole reason. The question was not about its value, but after a while the gold would wear off and the jewellery would become worthless. It was on that account it was thought desirable that it should be kept out of the country.

Hon. Mr. KERR—This Bill is only seeking to do what was intended to be done last session when the matter was before the committee of the House. One whole day was spent on this Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There were two meetings.

Hon. Mr. KERR—When the subject came up before the committee, a number of members appealed for time to consider it. They said that while the members of the trade might understand it, they did not. We were told that if we did not understand it others did, and they passed the Bill. The hon. Secretary of State said there was no harm in going on with the Bill because it would not go into force until twelve months after it was proclaimed, and in the meantime there would be another session of the House and any defects in the Bill could be remedied. The argument against that was that when the Act goes into force it stops trade, and that should only be done on lines it was intended to follow permanently. One of the lines that it was not intended to stop was in hall marked gold, and when that question was put to the committee it was answered at once that such importations were not prevented. We were referred to clause 8 of the Bill as it then stood, and which is now subsection 2 of section 8 of the revised Act. Look for a moment at what the legislation really is, and we will see that this Bill is absolutely necessary to make the law, as we passed it, consistent. Section 8 provides that it shall not be lawful to make, sell, import or attempt to import into Canada any article composed in whole or part of gold or silver or any alloy of gold or silver except the articles mentioned in section 10 of the Act, if to such article is applied any mark other than those specified. Now, that would have prevented English hall marked goods from coming in.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It would, if it stood by itself. Then came in section 8, which is now subsection 2 of the revised Act, which provides that the provision of the section shall not apply to any article of gold of less than 10 karats in fineness, to which is applied the hall mark of England; so that you see sections 4 and 8 of the Act, as it was passed, expressed the intention to exclude the importation into Canada of articles of gold under a certain standard, unless it was English hall marked. But the fault was this; if you turn to section 11 of the old Act, you will find there that no other mark shall be attached to such articles. Although by section 8 and subsection 2 of that section, it is lawful to import English hall marked goods of quality of less than 10 karats, yet when you come to section 11 the penalties were inflicted. Athough it is lawful to import it, there is a penalty if you do import, and that makes it necessary to amend section 11. Although section 11 permits the importation, section 10 makes it an indictable offence to import into Canada any articles marked less than 10 karats in fineness. This amendment to subsection (a) provides that the penalty shall not apply to English hall marked goods of less than 10 karats. All it proposes is, when the law says that every one is guilty of an indictable offence who makes, sells or imports into Canada any article partly composed of gold which has applied thereto any mark indicating the gold to be less than 10 karats in fineness, that if the article so imported, has applied to it the hall mark of England, it does not come under that section. It seems perfectly clear that what some of us anticipated in passing the Act of last session, hurriedly, under pressure, has occurred. We thought there would be some omission, and we find there was this omission which we want to correct. These same gentlemen who urged the passage of the Bill hurriedly last year, are now urging that anything, whether hall marked or not, of less than 10 karats fineness, should not be admitted; but that is not what was said in committee last year.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It seems to me there is a good deal of confusion from the fact that the revised statutes number the sections differently from the way they appear in the old Act. I was trying to fit the amendment in section 11 as we find it in the old Act, but we find section 11 in the Bill is section 12 in the Act as it was passed. But there is a point which my hon. friend does not seem to appreciate. Section 11 in the Act of 1903 deals with a very different subject from what is dealt with in sections 4 and 8. In 4 and 8 you are dealing with articles that are stamped of various degrees of fineness of gold and silver, and it is in regard to that that I understood the question of karat came in altogether. When you come to section 11 and, I think, section 12, they are dealing altogether with plated goods.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The old one?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And I think 12 in the new, which corresponds with 11 in the revised statutes also deals with that. It is false marks on electro and silver plated ware. Up to section 12 we are dealing with articles that are sold of gold of various qualities, but still of gold. Nine karat gold is sold as gold, and it is distinguished in quality by that character; but when you come to plated goods, it may be only a veneer of gold or silver, and the article is plated and section 11 is dealing with that and that alone. Subsection (a) in clause 11 speaks altogether of marks on plated goods, &c., indicating otherwise than truly and correctly the actual fineness, &c., showing proportions of alloy and silver. These two sections seem to me to deal entirely with plated goods, and why we should attach an amendment to one of these sections dealing with the character of gold, which is dealt with altogether in sections 8 and 4, is something I cannot understand.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Section 11 of chapter 90 of the revised statutes deals with penalties, and it is not at all the section the hon. gentleman is reading from the old law; and this Bill is to amend section 11 of the revised statutes.

Hon. Mr. KERR—If the hon. gentleman will look at section 11 of the revised statutes he will see that what I say is correct.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is a different arrangement of the sections.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Entirely.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I see my way out of the confusion when I come to understand that. But the main question still remains: Are we justified in making this change without giving an opportunity to those who presented the case before us last year, to be heard before the committee? This is not a private Bill otherwise proper notice would have been given. As it is a public Bill, it may be that those who hold the opposite opinion may not have been consulted. And the point has been clearly made by the hon. gentleman from Calgary, to my mind, that if we gave an opportunity to those interested to appear before us, we would then find out where the real merits lay; but it does seem to me that it would discriminate against manufacturers in our own country, that it would allow a lower standard of articles with the hall marks of foreign countries to be imported. I do not think there would be any danger that we would import anything less than nine karats from England. I understand there are only nine, fifteen and some other standard permitted under the laws of Great Britain; therefore, there would be no danger of anything lower than nine coming in from that country. We do not know what might come from other countries, but even to that extent it seems very strange that we should discriminate in favour of the manufacturers of Great Britain as against the manufacturers of Canada, and that if the amendment were made at all it should cover all articles made in Canada as well as those imported from other countries. It all goes to show that we should not legislate without a full and fair oportunity to every interest to be heard.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Notwithstanding the explanation of the hon. gentleman from Toronto, he might as well in my judgment repeal the whole Act as to pass this Bill with the broad and sweeping language in the sections to which I have already referred. As I said before—and I am reluctant to repeat it—section 8 of chapter 90 provides in general terms that you cannot stamp as gold any article of less than ten karats in fineness. That is the basic principle of this Act.

Hon. Mr. KERR—You cannot stamp it, but you can make it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You cannot stamp it as gold if it does not contain ten karats in fineness. You can make it as much less as you like, but you must mark the alloy which is contained in it. If the article is of ten karats, you can mark it as gold, notwithstanding the alloy that may be in it.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The hon. gentleman does not mean to say you cannot make the article of gold with an alloy if you do not mark it at all?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, but the English hall-mark as well as the foreign hall-mark is the guarantee of the article being gold, although it in no way signifies the proportion of alloy that enters into the metal. It is therefore put upon the market as pure gold, simply by the mention of its number of karats. When the English hall-mark or when the foreign hall-mark is placed upon any article, I care not whether it be less than nine karats, my hon. friend from Lincoln will observe that when you place any minimum upon the number of karats it goes forth into the market under this Act as gold, and you have not stamped upon it the proportion of alloy that enters into it. But under this Act, if you manufacture an article of less than ten karats you cannot stamp it as pure gold. You have to stamp it with the proportion of alloy which enters into the metal. That is the principle of the Act; the dividing line is that of ten karats. If you depart from that, cross the boundary and say that you can import into this country articles of less than ten karats fine, from foreign countries whatever their hall mark may determine to be the fineness or the minimum of their karats of gold, you wipe out the protection entirely that the Canadian manufacturer has and by which he is bound.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Section 8, chapter 90, does just that thing.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I beg pardon; section 8 provides that if it is less than ten karats the section does not apply to it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the point.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Consequently, if the hon. gentleman will read the section, he will find that articles under the earlier part of this section are gold; that it shall not be lawful to make, or sell, or import, or attempt to import, into Canada any article composed in whole or in part, etc., 'if to such articles there is applied any mark other than the true marks,' etc. The provisions of this Act cannot apply to any article in gold less than ten karats in fineness. That is to say, if an article is above ten karats of fineness it is admitted into this country and goes forth into this market as passable under this Act if there is any mark upon it which is the trade-mark or design of any country. That is to say, if the English hall-mark is placed upon an article or product into which there has entered ten karats of gold, it passes under this section.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Or not less than that. Read subsection 2.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The provisions of this Act shall not apply to any article less than ten karats, or to silver, or any alloy of gold or silver, to which is applied any hall-mark, and so on.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is just the point.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I say it does not apply. In round terms, we are confined to ten karats for Canadian products. If less than ten karats, the measure of the alloy has to be stamped upon the article.

Hon. Mr. KERR—There is nothing in this Act that prohibits the making of gold of a less quality or standard than ten karats. It is the marking that is regulated. Then it is provided that it shall not be lawful to sell any article of silver except as mentioned in section 10, 'if to such article is applied any mark,' and so on. From that provision the hon. gentleman omitted to read that is the provisions of subsection 2 of the revised statutes is excepted the hall-mark of England. That being so, the articles imported which have the hall-mark of England may be so imported; but when you turn to section 11 it is declared to be a penal offence to import goods so marked, because those words of exception are not given. That is all you are doing by this law.

Hon. Mr. JONES—It seems evident that some amendment ought to be made to this Bill, because we ourselves do not seem to understand what it means. We ought to make it so that he who reads ought to understand it. Certainly it was the expectation of the committee of the House last year that ten karat gold would be the minimum standard either imported into or made in Canada.

Hon. Mr. KERR—That is not this law.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, it is.

Hon. Mr. JONES—That may be. I did not say it was this law. I say that was in my opinion the intention of the committee and of the House, that ten karat gold stamped gold would be the minimum limit that would come into Canada or would be permitted to be made in Canada and stamped as gold. To my mind it is scarcely worth while discussing whether eight karat gold can come in under another mark or not, because I anticipate no one would put eight karats of gold into any alloy and bring it in, because he could not sell it and get his money. It would go without saying that it was cheap, and the value would not be in it. It is the hall mark that makes the value. I was one of those who felt last year that the House ought to have made the British standard the Canadian standard and I am of that opinion still. I cannot see for the life of me why this House a year ago decided that the United States standard should be the Canadian standard. Certain gentlemen appeared before the committee, who were seized of the knowledge in detail of of what we were discussing and understood what effect the proposed law would have on the business, and when hon. gentlemen endeavoured to point out that the English manufacturers would be at a disadvantage with the United States manufacturers, the answer came, especially from Mr. McNaught, if I remember, 'the British will adapt themselves to the condition for the sake of the business,' if they want the business. He thought it was a simple thing. I do not agree with that. I do not think it is a simple thing to change their standard. The letter read by the hon. leader of the House from Mr. McNaught indicates that also. In another letter Mr. McNaught indicates that only two per cent of this class of jewellery imported into Canada is sold to us by English makers. Can any one conceive that it would pay the English makers, having models prepared to make the standards, with all the processes, nine, fifteen and eighteen, and having no other, for the business they would get in Canada, to change the whole process of their factories in order to make certain specialties that they might be able to sell in Canada? I say that that fact alone means that the only chance the English manufacturers have of competing with foreign manufactures in this market with hall marked goods is that they must sell to our purchasers 15 karat hall marked goods against 10 karat hall marked goods from other countries. That, of course, is impracticable, and so the business from Great Britain with Canada must of necessity be practically lost. If through the long series of years that makers in Great Britain have been in this business, and admittedly they are past masters in the art in that class of goods—their standards are sufficient for Great Britain, they ought to be now sufficient for Canadians, and my humble opinion is that the majority of Canadians would rather pay their $25 for a similar article hall marked nine karat from England than to take the chances on ten karat goods from the United States or any other foreign country.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—No, they would not.

Hon. Mr. JONES—It would be their preference, and a long series of years in the purchase of this class of goods indicates that they would have better value for their money. The difference between the nine karat full and the ten karat scant that has been spoken of here can be no wide difference, and the colour should not enter into the consideration of it to any considerable extent, but the barrier that is put upon the trade of our country is, to my mind, an unnecessary barrier, and ought to be removed. If we are to give the British people an opportunity to compete with other countries, the law should be so changed, if need be, as to put Canadian makers on that basis also. In other words the change in this Bill should be such that the minimum standard made in Canada or imported into Canada should be nine instead of ten. I hope the House will see its way to making that change, and making a standard that will induce Canadians to buy from English manufacturers or from their own people rather than be forced into a foreign country to make their purchases. I do not know the rules of the House as intimately as many hon. gentlemen, but I do think it would be in the best interests of the people if this Bill were sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce in order to give the traders of Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, and London notice that we are going to consider it on such a date as would be convenient, giving them time to come here, so as to get all the information we can, and, upon that further information, let the House decide what ought to be done with this important matter.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The law of last year was effective. There is no flaw in it, yet some hon. gentlemen want to change the standard from ten to nine. Why not change the figure ten to nine if it is desirable, and the whole thing is accomplished. This legal disquisition is all Greek to me, and the more it is discussed the more we are befogged. I know very well, as the hon. gentleman has said, it was stated last year that the British nine karat fine would not wear, that when it was worn a little while it deteriorated to such an extent in appearance that it could not be sold. That is the reason why the standard was not lowered. There was no intention to discriminate against British goods—none whatever. It was simply that the trade put forward that theory, and it was put in to please them.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I must say that I am not sufficiently versed in the legal phraseology of the statute, and I appeal to the good judgment of this House. For fifty years nine karat hall mark English goods have been imported into Canada, but by an Act of parliament, assisted by the people of the United States, we have raised the standard to ten karats. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman from Kingston say that by one fell swoop we can make the ten karats into nine and thus get over the difficulty. I want to point out to the House that the individual maker of gold in England, Scotland or Ireland does not stamp the quality of the gold upon his goods at all. They are sent to England, to Goldsmiths' Hall, and there the standard of the gold is applied and stamped by law, and it is sent out lawfully to every country in the world. It represents exactly the standard as marked upon every link of every chain which every hon. gentleman in this House wears. For fifty or sixty years we have been importing these goods, yet people come here and say it is not in the interest of the Canadian jeweller and why? Neither the United States manufacturer nor the Canadian manufacturer is obliged to stamp his goods; at all events if he stamps his goods he is not obliged to submit them to Goldsmith's Hall to be tested as to whether they are such as he stamps them or not. Even the English papers and the Canadian representative in Great Britain took the part of the Canadian government in respect to this, and said that they did not believe that the Canadian government by this Act of parliament meant in any way to exclude English-made goods. The whole question now is simply down to this: Are we, the Senate of the Dominion of Canada, to raise the standard of England by one karat for the very purpose of destroying the trade between the mother country and ourselves? I have under my hand facts in connection with the trade which I could read to hon. gentlemen, but I do not want to weary the House. It is simply, as stated to-day, that what we are trying to force through this House this afternoon without amendment is legislation in the interest of the United States as against the interest of Canada. This Bill is not the only Bill that comes before this House that can be amended in committee, and I accept the proposition of my hon. friend from Kingston, to make the standard 9 karats instead of 10 karats, and that would remove all the trouble. We want to cultivate the trade with Great Britain. We sell our wheat to her and we want to buy all we can from her. We are not concerned about the United States. The people who came here as a committee of two or three were not sent directly by the trade, but they assumed the responsibility of changing this Bill which was originally for a standard of 9 karats in order that English manufactured goods might come in under it, and they had it changed to 10 not at the instance of Canadian manufacturers but to keep out British-made goods.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I hope the hon. gentleman will not carry out the intention which he has just expressed, because you have to go over the whole Act as it stands in the Revised Statutes and alter several sections to make the proposed change. There are several sections the wording in which will have to be changed from 10 to 9. The Bill before us is all right. It will carry out the intention.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have not objected to the 9 karats suggestion. I am willing to vote for the 9 karat minimum. But I am not willing to vote for the foreign hall mark to indicate what is the minimum fineness. But if the mover will adopt the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Kingston, I am willing to support it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In that case, there would require to be two changes, in section 8 and section 11.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I would ask my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, one question: Suposing we dropped the second section of the clause altogether and say, 'The hall mark shall apply according to the laws of Great Britain and Ireland' and then stop. I have no objection to striking out the other part.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I will support that.

Hon. Mr. JONES—If that change is made, what position will it put the Canadian maker in? Will that take care of him and reduce his standard to nine? If not I would not support that. I would like to see it made to suit the English standard, but we are not going to allow the Canadian maker to be placed at a disadvantage.

Hon. Mr. POWER—When this Act was passed last year, parliament knew the English minimum was nine, and we fixed our minimum at ten. Why should we change that figure here? Because there is a slight amendment?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The argument was advanced that we should not place the Canadian manufacturer at a disadvantage. I entirely agree with that. The argument advanced was that because you prevent the English hall mark being brought in at nine karat, they would have to compete with their fifteen karat, the only karat they can sell in this country against our number ten, surely you are not going to give the English manufactured goods an advantage over the Canadian manufactured goods? I have no doubt the Canadian manufacturers, when they came here a year ago and got this Act passed, did so believing it would keep out the English nine karat standard.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was quite the understanding.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Evidently that was their intention.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—But they gave their reason for it.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Let us get away from the idea that this is going to change the standard of manufacture here or elsewhere. It is not going to do anything of the kind. This Bill does not aim at manufacturing only up to a standard of 10 karat. What this law provides is, that we cannot mark gold or pure gold or warranted gold unless it be of a certain standard.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Certainly we are only dealing with marking.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The English manufacturer is at no disadvantage about the matter as compared with any one else. If the article is nine, or above nine, he need not mark it at all. He can sell it for what it will bring. But, if he marks it at all, it must be the true mark.

Hon. Mr. JONES—If the suggestion that has been made that the figure ten be changed to nine throughout the Act, be carried out, will Canadian makers be able to stamp their goods gold when they make them nine karats?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Not under this Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR—They will not be able to mark them gold, but they will be able to mark them nine karats?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. JONES—As the law stands today, if a Canadian manufacturer makes a piece of jewellery ten karats fine, he is entitled to mark that solid gold.

Hon. Mr. KERR—No. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to read the section. The foundation of the whole business :—

It shall not be lawful to make or sell or to import or attempt to import any article composed in any part of gold or silver.

Except plated goods, if to such article there is applied any mark other than the fine mark so that he cannot see if there is a mark other than such as are named here; but if there is no mark on it, he can sell it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But not as gold.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Yes, if he gets anybody to buy it.

Hon. Mr. KERR—He can sell it as gold. He can say here is gold. If he puts the true mark on it he can sell it as of the standard marked.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN— You are ripping up the present law. The idea of this Bill, as I understand it, is not to interfere with the Act as passed ; but to admit nine karat gold. You are making an amendment to the Act of last year, and why should we touch it? If you wish to lower the ten karats standard to nine, why not do it instead of fumbling around and ripping up the Act of last year. You will have confusion worse confounded.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—To test the feeling of the House, I will move the following as an amendment :—

Provided that it shall not be an offence under paragraph (a) of this section if the article made or sold or imported or attempted to be imported, being of gold less than nine karats in fineness, has applied to it——

Then strike out paragraph two.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That will not meet the case, because there are other sections which mention ten karats.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The word ten can be changed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is a Bill which proposes to amend one section, and if the hon. gentleman is going to recast his Bill and bring in something different, he had better move that the committee rise, and bring in a new Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I suggest to the hon. gentleman from Lincoln that he prepare an amendment to strike out the figure ten where it occurs in certain sections. and insert the figure nine. It was quite manifest that our object is to reduce the standard from ten to nine.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The lawyers of the House do not seem to agree amongst themselves. I was quite willing to adopt the suggestion of the leader of the opposition. I think the standard in Great Britain should be a good enough standard for Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move that we report progress.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I object to that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I thought the suggestion to refer this Bill to a committee for further consideration was a good one. It is quite evident that we cannot prepare an amendment to such an important Bill here. It is absurd.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I move the adoption of the clause. I withdraw my former motion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move that the committee rise and report progress.

The committee divided on the motion to adopt the first clause.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (72) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Jones.)

Bill (82) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Gibson.)

Bill (88) An Act to incorporate the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Young.)

Bill (91) An Act respecting the St. Maurice Valley Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Legris.)

FRENCH VERSIONS OF BILLS.

The SPEAKER—I want to draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that we have not received the French versions of some of these Bills. We had a discussion this afternoon on the delay in the translation of Bills into French. Here are three or four Bills that have come from the House without the French translation, and I am told that sometimes the French version does not come from the House of Commons until three or four days after we receive the English version, and that explains the difficulty we were in this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me that the officers of this Chamber should see when the Bills are sent to this House that they are accompanied by the French versions. It only necessitates my repeating what I said this afternoon, that to say for a moment that the business of this Chamber must be suspended on account of the absence of the French translation is to at once admit the absolute helplessness of parliament. It seems an insult to this House to say that between the two Houses, and the officers of the two Houses, we are not equal to having a French translation printed concurrently with the English translation——

Hon. Mr. POWER—It never has been done.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It should be done, and it only calls attention to an abuse of which we are all heartily sick. I again appeal to the leader of the House, and say that the officials either of this House or of the Commons should be made chargeable with bringing down the French translation in sufficient time to enable parliament to proceed with the public business.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware that in the other Chamber a single exception has been taken to a Bill not being printed in French. The French translators are under the control of the House of Commons and not of the government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The fact of a Bill being brought up to this Chamber is evidence that the French translation has been completed.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That Bill must have been translated in the House of Commons. What is there to prevent us using the same translation that has been used in the House of Commons, and which must necessarily be the translation adopted on the presentation of the Bill to this House?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman is complaining bitterly of a condition of things which has existed ever since the union of the colonies.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is a reason why the difficulty should be dealt with.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No doubt the hon. gentleman is very vigorous and energetic, but I doubt if he will succeed in affecting a change that none of his predecessors have been able to accomplish. Looking back over my own experience in the Senate, I must say that until very recently it was not the practice in this House to hold up an important measure simply because the Bill had not been printed in French. All the hon. members of this House can read the English language and understand it. It is very well once in a while, if you wish to assert the rights of the French language, to raise the question, but to do it continually, as it is done here now, is an indefensible practice, and a practice which never was indulged in until comparatively recent years.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—It is humiliating to an hon. member of this House when he asks for the second reading of a Bill to be told that it cannot be read because it has not been printed in the French language. I quite agree with the hon. leader of the opposition, that this House should be furnished with the French as well as with the English edition of every Bill, and then no member could be challenged when he rises in good faith to move the second reading, and have the business of the House postponed. If it were not that the objection is a valid one, we would never hear about it; but we have to submit to it. Why not have the Bills printed in both languages and brought here together? Let a Bill stand and not be brought before the House until both versions are ready.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I do not think the leader of this House has given a reasonable excuse when he says he is doing what his predecessors have done. We should have some good reason why the French version is not furnished in time.

The SPEAKER—There is perhaps a remedy: When a Bill is received from the Commons it might be delayed until the French version is supplied; but perhaps the remedy would be worse than the disease.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not think the remedy would be worse than the disease. In special cases, towards the close of the session the House could rescind any regulations of that kind, and we would be rid of this nagging to which we are subjected now every time a member rises to move the second reading of a Bill which is not printed in French. If a rule such as has been suggested were adopted, on very important occasions it could be dispensed with and we could proceed without the French; but, it would prevent this question coming up continually.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Occasionally Bills are passed in this House without being printed in French. The hon. member from Stadacona is not always in his seat.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at Three o'clock.

SENATE.

OTTAWA, Wednesday, March 20, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

TORONTO YONGE STREET BRIDGE BILL.

WITHDRAWN.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported that the promoters of Bill (RR) An Act respecting the city of Toronto Yonge Street Bridge, had asked leave to withdraw the Bill, and the committee reported recommending that the request be granted, and that the fees paid by the promoters of the Bill be refunded, less the cost of printing. He moved that the House concur in the report.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Would it not be more regular, after the report is adopted by the House, to give notice that a motion will be made following out the recommendation of the report? I think that is the proper way.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—There would have to be a motion to concur.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I now give notice that I will move——

Hon. Mr. POWER—How can the hon. gentleman do that? The House has already adopted the recommendations of the report.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When a report of a committee recommends the changing of the quorum, we make a motion for such a change. When the report asks that new members be placed upon the committee, the names are given and a motion is made to that effect. That is a subsequent action. The action of the committee, and of the House are altogether different, and although the House may adopt the report it is not what we may call a formal report, and for that reason its conclusions should not be unduly pressed upon us.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The House concurs in the recommendations, but there must be an order of the Senate authorizing the clerk to return the money.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Senate has just made that order. The committee had recommended that a certain course be adopted and the Senate has concurred in the report. That settles it; there is nothing more to be done. If the committee had stated certain facts in their report, and had not recommended a line of action, then it would be open to the House to take what action they saw fit; but having adopted a report which recommended a certain line of action, the House cannot do anything more.

The SPEAKER—My impression just now—and I would not like to give it as my opinion—is that there would be no need for a second motion on the report, but I will consider the question, and if a further motion is necessary I will so report to the House.

PER CAPITA ALLOWANCE TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency may cause to be laid on the Table of the House all correspondence between the government of Canada, or any department thereof, and the government of Prince Edward Island, in 1901 or 1902, respecting the per capita allowance payable to that province, as provided for in the British North America Act, and how the said allowance should be computed on the population of that province, as ascertained by the census of 1901.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no objection to the address.

The motion was agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION.

BILL INTRODUCED.

A message was read from the House of Commons with Bill (36) An Act to aid in the prevention and settlement of strikes and lockouts in mines and industries connected with public utilities.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From the expression of opinion across the floor to-day, I think it best to move the second reading for to-morrow. I therefore move the suspension of rule 23 for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is only four o'clock now, and I do not gather from the expressions we have heard that there is any strong feeling of hostility on the other side of the House to proceeding with the measure, and it is only necessary to suspend the rules and read it the second time to-day.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Surely not to-day. Hon. members cannot be expected to enter into the consideration of this Bill without having seen it up to this moment?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Two copies of the Bill as amended in the committee of the House of Commons have been distributed. I went to the distribution office myself and inquired if they were sure that two copies had been distributed. And they replied yes, in fact three copies have been distributed, one as the Bill appeared originally, and two as amended in committee. The changes made after that were only two or three small amendments, and the House is in possession of the Bill as amended. No amendments were made at the third reading.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Instructions may have been given to distribute the Bill, but I cannot find any one who has seen it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I find it is here; but we never proceed with the second reading of a Bill without having had time to study it.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (116) An Act to amend the Interpretation Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (69) An Act respecting the Quebec Oriental Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Tessier.)

GOLD AND SILVER MARKING ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON moved the third reading of Bill (UU) An Act to amend the Gold and Silver Marking Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before the third reading, I would again point out to my hon. friend that the Bill certainly does not effect the purposes which he has in view. I regard the passage of this Bill as practically emasculating the legislation of last session. It does away absolutely with the minimum of karats which should enter into gold products, and unquestionably handicaps the Canadian manufacturer. If this Bill goes through, he will be compelled to adopt the 10 karats standard, while the importer of foreign goods may place on our market any article covered by this legislation regardless of the number of karats that may be in it, so long as it has the hall mark of any foreign country stamped on it. I point out that fact as a protest against the passage of this legislation. The hon. gentleman could have effected his purpose by amending the present Act, simply striking out 10 and inserting 9. I am sorry he did not accept the suggestion made last night. I am positive had that been done it would have been satisfactory to all the Canadian manufacturers as well as to importers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not propose to offer any further opposition on the Bill. I expressed my views pretty strongly last night upon it; but I think it is just as well the information that I now desire to give the House should be generally known. I understood that the object of the Bill was to favour trade with Great Britain. I do not think it is going to have that effect at all, but just the reverse. At the time the tariff was altered, giving the preference to Great Britain of 33⅓ per cent, the jewellery imported into Canada from Great Britain was only $34,000 in value, while that from the United States was $279,000. With the advantage of jewellery from foreign countries being taxed at 35 per cent, and from Great Britain at 22½, the trade with the British manufacturers was small. In 1906 it had only risen from Great Britain to $92,000, while from the United States it had risen to $693,000. The total purchases from Great Britain of jewellery are less than one-tenth, with all the advantages of the preference rate. The total importations of jewellery were $952,000, of which $92,000 only came from England, a little less than one-tenth.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—What is the tariff on jewellery from Great Britain?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Twenty-two and one-half per cent, and other countries thirty-five. Notwithstanding the preference the trade has gone on increasing with the United States, and under this Bill will increase in greater ratio, because under this legislation which gives the advantage to all countries where a gold mark has been established, it will give to the United States just as great a benefit as to England, and as the purchases are in far greater ratio from the United States than from Great Britain, it is manifest that we are giving a preference to the United States. I have not looked at the mark they have in Germany, whether 9 or 10 karats, but we imported last year from Germany $62,000 worth of jewellery, in the face of all the obstacles to their trade. It is therefore quite clear that the amount of jewellery purchased in the British market is insignificant compared with the general trade of the country. Under those circumstances, as I said last night, it is extremely unfortunate that this Bill should have been forced through this Chamber——

Hon. Mr. POWER—It was not forced.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think there were only 26 senators present when it was discussed and passed through the committee.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I was quite willing to accept the suggestion of the hon. leader of the opposition last night, but hon. gentlemen on this side of the House urged that we should stand by the Bill as it was. I think I pointed out as clearly as I could, that the Bill was not prepared by myself. The gentleman who had previously promoted this matter appeared before the Finance Minister and was recommended to go and see the Minister of Justice with regard to it. The Minister of Finance felt that importers had made out a case sufficient to warrant his going to the Minister of Justice to get an amendment to the statute. I made that quite clear last night. I read the letter of the Minister of Justice, and there is no doubt we were all deceived in regard to the whole object of the Bill as it was drawn by the committee last session. Now if this Act remains on the statute-book without amendment, instead of the amount of gold imported as referred to by the hon. Secretary of State, from Great Britain, under this Act if it is not amended, there will never be another dollar's worth of 9 karat gold brought from Great Britain. Now with regard to the recommendation; after Great Britain has been using this 9 karat standard for 150 years the Canadian parliament on advice that was not borne out by the facts—although we all felt at the time that it was—raised the standard solely and wholly for the purpose of benefiting the importer from the United States. The Bill might well be called a Bill for the United States as against Great Britain and Ireland. We all know that in Scotland gold is manufactured into various articles for export. It is also the basis of many manufactures in England and Ireland, and what is done with it? The finished goods are sent to Goldsmith's Hall, and they are stamped by the government with the hall mark after the fineness of the quality being tested and decided upon. Do we expect to change the Goldsmith's Act of Great Britain, which has been in force for 150 years and which has worked so satisfactorily? Are we to ask the trade in Great Britain to change the standard at their factories, the Factory Act and all the laws connected therewith, simply to allow 10 karats gold hall marked watch cases to come in from the United States? Now, with respect to the Canadian manufacturers, if my hon. friend wants to draw a logical conclusion, I would put this question to him: all the Canadian manufacturer has to prove is simply this, that the English gold is only 9 karat, while the gold manufactured here is 10 karat and is worth more money, and it will then be for the purchaser to decide for himself whether he will buy the 10 karat Canadian made article, or the 9 karat English made article. It is no hardship to the Canadian manufacturer. The whole idea was to exclude Great Britain from the market, and I do not think the Senate, by its vote last night, would agree to any such proposition. I am quite satisfied that when this Bill goes before the House of Commons, if there is any amendment which can improve it it will be accepted by the gentleman who drafted it and the Finance Minister. It was was pointed out last night that I was willing to accept the recommendation of the hon. gentleman from Kingston, and make it 9 karat throughout. Legal gentlemen in the House have urged that it would destroy the whole affect of the Act as it stands on the statute-book. We had no desire to do that. All that I was anxious about was that no embargo would be placed upon the importation of British made goods, and I think, from the vote that was taken, I have the sympathy of the House. It cannot do any harm to let the Bill go to the House of Commons, and if they, in their wisdom, see fit to amend it, surely the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance who made the recommendation are quite competent to deal with it, and if it comes back in that shape I am sure the Senate will be willing to accept it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The statement which has been made so emphatically by the hon. gentleman from Calgary had a great deal of weight with me, whatever effect it may have on other members of the House, not alone because of his political position, but from his eminence and great experience as a lawyer. He has made this statement, no doubt, in the interest of the country, and I suggest that he and the hon. genlteman from Lincoln should be allowed to confer together and settle this matter and defer the third reading until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman's high opinion of the hon. leader of the opposition, and I can say for this side of the House that we all entertain the same opinion of the hon. member. We do not dispute his ability as a lawyer, but I doubt whether he knows as much about stamping gold as he knows about stamping cattle. I might be allowed to say in passing that this is not the only Bill that has originated in the Senate and passed through the House of Commons and been reviewed, revised and agreed upon; and if I were taking this course on my own responsibility I would hesitate very much to present this Bill in any form, but the Minister of Finance, as I said a moment ago, felt that an injustice was being done to a large number of importers on account of the embargo placed upon British goods, because after the 13th day of July next no man can bring in a dollar's worth of 9 karats hall marked British goods. Supposing the importers went over to England, as they did last year, and purchased their goods, it would be all right so long as they got them in by the 13th of July, but the trade has to stock up in advance of the requirements of the country and these dealers have to go over now, or very soon, to order the goods for their business. I am sure if they went over there in June or July with the uncertainity of what this Bill was to be, and after they made their purchases learned that they could not bring them into this country it would be a very serious matter. It is not a question of duty; it is a question of keeping the British made goods out. I am astonished at my hon. friend the Secretary of State making any comparison of the amount of gold that comes in from the United States as against the quantity that comes in from Great Britain, because he must surely have in mind the large amount and the great number of gold cased watches that come in from the United States. The people of Canada, for some reason or other, can buy a United States watch, either gold or silver, that seems to stand our climate better than the English-made watch. The 9 karats goods made in England are bracelets principally; such goods are not made in the United States. Now that the ladies are wearing short sleeves they like to have bracelets. While I was in Cleveland, within the last two weeks, I was in a jewellery store and I wished to purchase a bracelet. I was told that these goods were not made in the United States, that they were made in England. There are other classes of jewellery peculiar to England, made there and not in the United States. Are we to stop the importations from Great Britain simply because through a fluke parliament raised the standard by one karat, because the question of value is not material. It has no practical value whatever, but it simply got the ear of the committee. I have to say, as the hon. gentleman from Marshfield said, that no one took a greater interest or worked harder for the passage of the Bill as it was then presented than I did. From the information I have since received from gentlemen in the trade in Montreal, London, Hamilton and other places, I feel that we would make a great mistake if the action of the trade, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, and consented to by the Minister of Justice, is not carried into effect.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman should not quote the Minister of Justice as expressing an opinion on the principle of the Bill. The Minister of Justice was asked to draw a particular clause to meet particular results; that does not intimate that his judgment went with it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—As my hon. friend seems to be strenuously obstructing the third reading of this Bill himself, he will permit me to say a few words. I sympathize with the leader of the House in the treatment which he is receiving in regard to this Bill, and also with regard to another measure within a few days. We have here a Bill which was introduced into the House last year and referred to in the speech with which His Excellency the Governor General closed parliament. He particularly commended parliament for passing it. It was adopted by the government at its latest stage, and was the subject of special commendation in the Governor's speech. This session we find a private member of the House introducing a very serious amendment which affects the principle of the whole legislation, and we find the hon. member from Lincoln, and others on his side of the House putting forward their views strenuously and emphatically, and last evening we saw the leader of the House standing alone amongst his supporters, voting against the amendment and his supporters carrying it in spite of his protest. In all sincerity, I sympathize with the hon. gentleman in the treatment he is receiving from his supporters. It is extraordinary treatment. Agreeing with him as I do about this Bill, I think the House should pause at the third reading and reconsider the action taken and send the Bill back to the committee. If the change from ten karat to nine karat is to be made, let it be made as was suggested by the hon. senator from Kingston yesterday. That would not have emasculated the Act as this Bill as it now stands will. We should, even at this stage, reconsider the action that has been taken. However, the government does not appear to be led by any of its members in this House on these questions. Without any disrespect, it appears to me that the tail wags the dog on many occasions in the Senate. I presume it will be found to be otherwise in the lower branch of parliament. If that is the case the government may there assert itself and put the Bill in proper form. Of course we have done our duty here, and I leave my hon. friend to settle the matter with his supporters.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was not here last night when the Bill was discussed, and I therefore ask, in whose interest was the Bill introduced? Is it in the interest of the importers or in the interest of the manufacturers? I remember distinctly that last session, when the Bill was in committee, we had a long discussion on the point to which this Bill refers. Is it a fact that if this Bill becomes law, articles of gold hall marked nine karats may be imported, while all articles of gold manufactured in Canada must be hall marked ten karats? If that be so, it will give a decided advantage to the importer over the Canadian manufacturer. Is not this Bill introduced to meet the views of those who took the very strong position before the committee last year in favour of importations from foreign countries? If so, we ought to be very careful in passing a Bill which would have that effect. I was very glad to hear the hon. Secretary of State call attention to the bad effect which follows railroading Bills through this House as has happened in the past. It is proposed to railroad other very important Bills through without giving members of the Senate sufficient time even to read them, much less to compare them with the Acts now on the statute-book relating to the same subjects, in order that they may know what effect the proposed legislation would have. The sooner the Senate lays down the principle that it will not consider any Bills without having time to digest them and ascertain exactly what their effect would be if passed, the better for the public interest.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The gentlemen who have asked for these changes are not only importers, but very large manufacturers. I gave their names last night.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand that this Bill is introduced at the request of the Canadian manufacturers?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Yes, of some of them.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Will it have the effect of increasing or decreasing importations from England?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—It should have the effect of increasing the importation.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a third time and passed, on a division.

CONCILIATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Honourable Mr. McMullen for the second reading (Bill F) An Act to amend the Conciliation Act, 1900, and the motion of the Honourable Mr. Coffey in amendment thereto, that the said Bill be not now read a second time, but that it be read this day six months.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I have deferred putting my views on this subject before the House on several occasions at the request of members on both sides; but I think it has been long enough on the order paper, and I shall proceed to discuss it now. The object of the measure is to bring into existence an Act to prevent the importation of labour agitators from foreign countries to intervene in disputes between Canadian workingmen and their employers. Unfortunately, in the preparation of this Bill, my respected friend from Wellington made an error in one phrase ; if the words had been 'or British subject' instead of 'and British subject,' I think the matter would not have been criticised to the extent it has been. My hon. friend who represents the division of Victoria and the province of Quebec (Hon. Mr. Cloran) laid great stress on the wording of that clause of the Bill ; but, as I said on another occasion, no Bill that was ever submitted to parliament has been perfect in every particular, and it would be quite competent for this House to amend this Bill in committee. It might as well have been sent to a committee as any other Bill. Why it should be dealt with in the way suggested by the hon. senator from Victoria I do not know, and, perhaps, on a little reflection, he will see that he was mistaken. The position taken by the hon. junior senator from London (Hon. Mr. Coffee) was more drastic ; he moved that the Bill be given the six months' hoist. While the hon. gentleman was delivering his beautiful essay, he laid great stress on the trade to which he belongs, and at the very time he was speaking there was a resolution of the Canadian Typographical Union of Ottawa approving of the Bill. The report which I am about to read is taken from the Ottawa 'Citizen' of February 7th, which, if I remember correctly, was the very day that my hon. friend from London made his speech :

At the last regular meeting of Canadian Typographical Union No. 1, Ottawa, the McMullen Bill, which aims to prevent American labour organizers coming into Canada and taking part in strikes or negotiations with employers, now before the Senate, was under consideration, and the following resolution was unanimously carried :—

Resolved, that Canadian Typographical Union No. 1 Ottawa deplores the insult to Canadian intelligence, and the humiliating position in which the labour cause in Canada is placed by the autocratic laws and practice laid down by American international unionism, which makes it necessary to import an American to this country to direct or dictate the policy or action of Canadian unions in their negotiations with employers; that while the principle of the Bill is one to which we could ascribe we do not consider that legislation of this nature should adorn the statutes of a liberty-loving country such as Canada. We consider that the time is near when Canadian trades unionists will realize that their best interests lie in the direction of Canadian national unionism, and the concentration of all their efforts through that channel, to the betterment of their economic and industrial condition, thus leaving the American delegates with a little more time to solve the many problems which confront the American workman, with whom, if they render honest service, they can find more to do than is required of the Canadians.

Much favourable discussion took place on the Arbitration Bill of the Minister of Labour, but no official action was taken.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is the hon. gentleman aware of the fact that that particular lodge is in local rebellion against unionism, and is not in good standing with the trades unions of Canada?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am not, and I do not think it is, because it is called Typographical Union No. 1.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is in open rebellion against trade unionism in Canada.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I do not blame them. Some time ago there was a Bill brought in by the respected leader of the opposition very much on the lines of this Bill, and it was condemned—condemned by whom? Condemned by some members of the Senate, who said that every senator who has a word to say in criticism of trade unionism is an enemy of labour. I want to say to those who take this view of the case that the best friends that the labour interests in Canada have are members of this House, who have spent their money in keeping their factories running year after year in times of depression in order that their workingmen might be employed. May I say also that many manufacturers in this country have built up large stocks at times when they could ill afford to do so, running their establishments at a loss, in order that their workmen might not suffer. With respect to what the hon. gentleman from Victoria says, I assert that no good workman needs to belong to a union. I have always stood by the union, believing that for certain purposes it is beneficial to the trades. Who are the men who cause a strike? Not the good workmen who can always get employment and the highest wages going ; it is the indifferent workmen who can only find employment when labour is so scarce that any kind of workman has a chance of employment. He is the man who is most violent in the union. He is the man who does not work with his hands, but works with his mouth, and gets up an agitation and creates dissatisfaction among workers who would otherwise be quite satisfied with their position. If the union would exclude incompetent men, there would be some reason for the people of Canada respecting their organizations; but let me point out to my hon. friend that the bargain is all on one side. He is only speaking theoretically. The men who have the most sympathy with the workingmen are those who never employed workingmen in their lives.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I object to the statement which the hon. gentleman makes, if personal to myself. It is not correct,

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I was not making any reference to the hon. gentleman. I will repeat what I said for fear my hon. friend may misunderstand me; I said that people who had the most sympathy with the workingmen had least to do with them. It is only the men who employ them who know the difficulties encountered in keeping them at work and preventing irresponsible men from disturbing the harmony which usually prevails between the good workman and his employer. The bargain as I say, is entirely a one sided affair. An employer of labour may make an agreement with the union for a certain length of time, agreeing upon a certain scale of wages and hours of labour. The employer is bound to carry out his part of the bargain. If times are bad, the men will be at work every day and the employer must pay the wages that he has agreed to pay. On the other hand, if times improve, the workman may not strike but he moves to another place and the result is the employer finds that those with whom he made the bargain are leaving him because wages have risen. Is not that a one sided arrangement? In my opinion trade unions ought to be incorporated by Act of parliament. They are not bodies corporate now, and the conditions are all on one side. Who are the men that the hon. senator from Wellington wishes by this Bill to keep out of the country? The walking delegates. The walking delegate belongs to the class of men I have described. He is not a good workman; he is an agitator who finds it pays better to work with his mouth than with his hands. He has to do something for his money, and he raises an agitation among the working men who have no cause to be dissatisfied with their conditions, and causes the strike. These are the men that the hon. senator from Wellington wishes to keep out of the country. There is never an opportunity given to discuss the question between the employer and his employees. The walking delegate takes that out of their hands. We had many instances of it during the construction of the Welland canal. I have seen a walking delegate go from Port Dalhousie right up to the other end of the canal, and by holding up his hands stop work everywhere. Every stonecutter in my employ was stopped in that way without any cause being assigned. Perhaps the strike was down at Port Dalhousie. Some difficulty had arisen there between an employer and his employees. The walking delegate brought on a sympathetic strike, although the men in the employ of the other contractors on the Welland canal were satisfied and were willing to go on with their work. Instead of promoting peace, this walking delegate intervened and created a strike on every section along the Welland canal.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Was he from the United States?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Generally speaking these walking delegates are.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—You are speaking of one individual?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am not prepared to say whether he was or not; probably he was. I am speaking of my own experience on the Welland canal. I have demonstrated my sympathy with the workingman for the last thirty-five years, so the subject is not a new one to me. Let me give an illustration or two for the benefit of the hon. senator from Victoria division. An employer is carrying on his work amicably with his men. They demand certain pay and certain hours, and the demand is conceded. Perhaps you have a sub-contractor who is not responsible to you, but is entirely responsible to the government in case the work he is doing is for the government. Your men come to you and say this sub-contractor is paying his men once a fortnight. The employer replies that he is a responsible contractor with whom he has no right to interfere. The men reply 'very well, if you will not make him pay his men once a week we will go out on strike.' That has actually occurred in my experience. They went out and stayed out for three weeks. What happened ? The sub-contractor, who was the cause of the trouble, had not paid his men but they kept at work. At the end of three weeks I went to my men and said 'you have been fighting for a principle.' While you have been on strike these men you struck for have been working. If I were you I would go to the lodge and make a demand to be indemnified for the time and money you have spent in enforced idleness. They did so, but, as usual, there was no fund to draw from, and the strike was declared off that night at midnight. I have had a strike on my quarries at Beamsville from the 15th day of February, 1879, until the 25th of May. I gathered men in from all directions, and have had a pistol put to my head when I was bringing them into the village and driving them to my quarry. My hon. friend talks about kid gloves. I have never had any experience of that kind. A pistol put to a man's head is pretty strong evidence that there is ill-feeling between the men and the master, and not much consideration given to him. It is pretty near summary justice. I quite agree with every word that the hon. senator from St. Boniface (Hon. Mr. Bernier) has said, that this body is not the enemy of the working classes. In replying to the hon. senator from Victoria, he used the following language :

Objection is taken to the wording of the Bill. It may be that the language of the clauses could be improved, but when objection is taken to it on the ground that the president of a company could not interfere in a difficulty or between his company and its employers, I think the interpretation of my hon. friend is inaccurate. In that case, the manager would not be interfering with other people's business. It would be his own business and the consequence is he would be under the law within his right. The Bill does not contemplate anything of the kind suggested by the hon. gentleman.

My hon. friend from St. John has suggested that a feeling seems to exist in this body, unfavourable to labour. For my part I disclaim that imputation. I do not think any member of the Senate is opposed to the legitimate interests of labour. I for one, at the end of this discussion, may vote for the Bill and I do not want to be saddled with such an imputation. Such a feeling does not exist in this Senate and to my mind does not exist in the country. At the same time, we must admit that the question is very important. Different opinions in regard to the labour question may be expressed pro and con, and under the circumstances, it seems to me that the course proposed by the hon. gentleman from Wellington is worthy of careful consideration. Some of us may have ideas adverse to this Bill, but it seems to me the labouring men who have sent copies of resolutions to many of us should be given an opportunity to be heard. That is impossible before this House ; but they can be heard before the committee ; therefore let us refer the Bill to a committee where everybody will have an opportunity to express his views fully and furnish evidence in support of his contentions. Therefore, I would vote for the motion made by the hon. gentleman from Wellington.

Contrast that with the ideas of the hon. senator from London (Hon. Mr. Coffey) who wants to pander to United States sentiment. I hope the hon. members of this House are Canadians. What does the hon. gentleman say ?

There would be but a still louder and longer ringing of the tocsin of war in the industrial centres. Besides, there will not be wanting a very numerous class who will firmly hold the belief that such a step is retrogressive and ill-accords with that freedom of action, devoid of license, which is the legitimate pride of every Canadian. Furthermore, the passing of this legislation would undoubtedly ruffle the feathers of the American eagle and this were to be avoided save in cases where Canada's honour and Canada's rights are at stake. In this matter I do not think either one or the other is involved. It is of paramount importance to promote good neighbourhood between those who live on both sides of the boundary line. We have much in common—our aspirations and those of our American friends in the world's race for greatness run parallel.

All I can say to that is we want to be left alone. We have had troubles enough of our own. Every dispute in Canada should be settled by Canadians or British subjects. Canadians are as capable of settling their own trade disputes or labour troubles as people in any other country in the world. In all labour disputes in Canada, we have never had the spectacle of having to put union officials in prison for stealing the funds of the union. In the United States walking delegates have been under the pay of certain employers to keep their own men at work and create strikes for a rival industry in order to put money into their own pockets and help their greedy masters. The difficulty in the present condition of things is simply this, that if you allow the foreign delegate to interfere with our men and create strikes it would be easy for unprincipled men to send a walking delegate here to create a strike in some competing industry and thus help the industry in the United States. These men should not be allowed to come in here. Let us see what the hon. senator from London had to say with regard to this discussion. He said:

> Are we to meet the budding Rockfellers of the great republic with smiles and open arms, and the John Mitchells with the frown and the warrant and the officer of the law? I hope the time will never come when liberty-loving Canadians will be so minded. Shame on the few who would pay unseemly and undeserved court and hommage—I might almost say worship—to the winners of the furious race for wealth.

Where was John Mitchell when the Fernie strike took place? Did he cross the line to inquire into the troubles at the mines there? No. Canadian strikes were too small for this great man, though he is paid his salary by Canadians as well as by United States unions. He sent a substitute to Canada; that is good enough for us. Let us see what he did. Sherman was the head of the union in British Columbia. He was a citizen of the United States. Men in the mines at Fernie sent their money to the United States, and none of it ever came back to Canada. The dues were raised from $2 to $6. There was a complaint against the increase, and eight of the men refused to pay any more money into the international union.

Then Sherman objected and decided that the other men who had paid their dues were working with non-union men and he called all the men out on strike, notwithstanding his own agreement in writing with the coal company that the works at Fernie were to be an open camp. The strike lasted eight weeks, with a great loss to the company as well as to the men. The British Columbia Company telegraphed to Mitchell, who sent over a Mr. Burke to settle the strike. Sherman refused to recognize Burke. Afterwards Burke and Sherman went to Minneapolis to see Mitchell, to prove to the satisfaction of Sherman that Burke was the accredited representative of Mitchell. As soon as Burke was satisfied, the strike was called off. What do we learn from this? That even the foreign head of the coal miners union of British Columbia did not take the trouble to go over personally and settle the strike, but left an important matter of this kind to a subordinate, although Mr. Mitchell was in receipt of a large income for the very purpose of settling disputes of this nature. I have a large number of letters here, supporting the Bill of the hon. gentleman from Wellington, as well as a large number of letters from different unions protesting against the Bill. I think that the hon. members of this House who have the courage to point out the proper course to be taken by the working men, are the best friends of the working classes. Those holding opposite views should not try to create a wrong impression against those who differ from them. I think every hon. gentleman in this House has as good a right to express his opinion for the union as those on the other side have a right to express their opinion against the union. The question of conducting the affairs of this country between the working classes and their employers is of too great concern to be dealt with lightly, and we should avoid the introduction of a foreign element into Canada which will in any way irritate or increase the difficulties that may at present exist, or will exist in future, between the working men and their employers. While I believe that the Bill we shall have before us to-morrow may be successful in a very large measure, I do not think it would be prudent for us to deal with the measure now before us in the way proposed by the amendment, that the Bill be read this day six months. I do not think it is fair treatment to the hon. gentleman who introduced the measure to deal with it in that way. I think the best thing that could be done would be to appoint a special committee to deal with this matter, it need not be sent to a standing committee at all, but to a special committee where both sides could be heard. I have no wish on my part to avoid discussion or stop it in any way, and I think the same treatment should be given to the employee as is given to the employer. For that reason, instead of adopting the amendment which has been offered by the hon. gentleman from London, some consideration should be given to the Bill; some recommendation might be made to the committee, that if we are to be influenced by the views of walking delegates, steps should be taken with regard to the incorporation of trades unions, because, as the matter now stands, the employer has nothing to fall back upon. The protection is entirely a one sided one. It is a matter which does require a great deal of consideration, and, with all due respect for the amendment which has been offered to this House, I believe the Bill which my hon. friend has before us should be sent to a special committee to be dealt with upon its merits.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—I desire to say a word or two on this question, which I consider to be a very important one. Any proposal that undertakes to regulate the relations of labour to capital must be necessarily of very great importance to the people of this country. This Bill undertakes not only to fix the conditions of labour towards capital, but to some extent the conditions of capital towards labour. Therefore I say that it is one on which the best energies of this House should be combined in order to find a solution that would be fair to both. I was pleased with some of the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat. I cannot agree with him in all that he said, but when he says that those who are speaking for labour had a right to have their views respected, and he claimed the same right for those who do not believe in the same system of reaching that end, I fully agree with him. I say that every man who has honest and conscientious convictions on any question of that kind deserves to have them respected, no matter how much they may differ from mine. Now this is too large a question for me to undertake to deal with in the unprepared manner I feel that I would have to deal with it at present. There are many phases and many sides to this question. It is one which I think has puzzled some of the greatest political economists the world has ever seen. The question of the equitable distribution of the annual increment of capital to labour is, I think, one of the greatest problems ; perhaps in it is involved all the other great problems of political economy with which we have to deal. Therefore, this Chamber cannot give its time to a better cause than trying to reach a just solution of that question. As this Bill more particularly deals with what its promoters have been pleased to term the agitator or walking delegate, any remarks that I might have to make along the lines of the question dealing with capital and labour might be more relevant when the Labour Bill from the House of Commons comes before us. I shall, however, deal with the question of the agitator for a moment or two. The hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat is very much opposed to the idea of a foreigner being brought into this country to settle strikes, or to do anything that might bring about a strike, or interfere between capital or labour. I believe that the door should be wide open to the labour organizations of this country to select officers from wherever they wish, and to invite these men in when trouble arises, and ask of them, their counsel, to enable them to bring about a proper solution of the difficulty—a solution that might be perhaps in the best interests of labour, and at the same time in the best interests of capital; because any one who can bring about a peaceful settlement of a strike is a friend of both. The agitator is not necessarily an enemy of the public peace. An agitator may be one who comes with the very best of motives, and I say that for him the door should be wide open. If any man comes into this country to incite strife or rebellion, our laws are sufficiently wide now to reach him. It is only by agitation that the progress and prosperity of this world goes on. If you were to stop agitation to-day, you would soon have in this world nothing but stagnation; therefore, agitation is necessary to carry on the relations between labour and capital just as much as it is to regulate any other great problems which are presented for the development of this country. I have not studied out any particular line of action that I should take, but on behalf of the agitator, he may be a man of peace, and because he is a resident of the United States or of Germany, or, I care not where, I want to know the motive that brings him here before I close the door, and say he shall not come in. His motive may be a good one, and if it is we should welcome him to our shores. If it is a bad motive, he can be told that. I am not opposed to strikes, because a strike may be the only means labour has sometimes of dealing with capital. If the capitalist treats his fellow-citizen in a cruel or harsh way, that man should be made to feel our censure. On the other hand, if an employer is unjust or ungenerous to his employees he should be subject to censure; but individual cases such as the hon. gentleman from Lincoln has pointed out, only go to show that, on the whole, the rule is a good one, and that these officers have done their duty fairly well. I know myself that instead of coming here to incite strikes, delegates have endeavoured to bring about a settlement and peace. The very worst thing that an officer can report when he goes back to the head office of the international union is that he was unable to settle the strike. He is very apt to lose his position because the funds of that association have to go towards keeping up the association, and supporting the strikers, and the man who wishes to hold his place is the one who will use his best efforts to settle these difficulties. I am just as much in favour of seeing capital protected. I have no fear of aggregations of capital or of so-called syndicates or trusts. I think they are all necessary for the general development of the country; at the same time an aggregation of labour has just as little terror to me as has an aggregation of capital or a trust. Labourers have just as good a right to combine and take foreign elements into the organization, if they want to, as have the capitalists to take in foreign capital. In dealing with a question of this kind we should be fair. I condemn the labourer who would say to his fellow-man, 'you must not work.' It is the right of every man to work when he wants to, and the right of any man to refuse to work when the conditions surrounding him do not suit him; but I do say in individual cases where some men refuse to allow others to fill their places—it is unfortunate that they should do that, but it has been done—the labour organizations of the country suffer more than the people whose action it is directed against. I feel that every man should be protected in the right of working when he wants to. Property should be protected at all cost, and it is the duty of the state to see that it is protected; but I do not think you are going to benefit the conditions of labour or capital by shutting out what they call the agitator. The agitator may be, as I said before, a man of peace. The man who condemns agitation, simply because it is agitation, condemns the work of the missionary fathers. He goes even further than that, and condemns the very first principles of Christianity even, to condemn a foreign missionary or a foreign agitator. The unions should be allowed to select their officers from wherever they please and from amongst whom they please, and I have the names of several Canadians who are officers of the international union, and who are called upon from month to month and year to year to go over to the States to settle United States strikes and labour difficulties. Do we hear any outcry by the United States people that they are not going to let a British or Canadian subject go over there to settle their difficulties? Nothing of the kind. I say, be fair to labour; be fair to capital. Both of them are necessary. Instead of trying to set one up against the other, the greatest friendship should exist between them, because it is impossible for capital to increase without labour; on the other hand it is impossible for labour to exist without capital. Therefore, I say, calmness of mind and wisdom of counsel should be exercised to the fullest extent whenever questions of that kind come to be discussed. The man who will convince capitalists that they should denounce any man who treats his fellow beings in a cruel or harsh way, is doing capital a kindness, and the man who points out to labour elements of this country that they are doing an injustice when they interfere with the personal liberties of their fellow-citizens, is doing labour a kindness, and it is along those lines that we should counsel these men and try to govern them, instead of endeavouring to take the unions by the throat and say: 'You can only appoint such officers as we think you should have.' I am going to support the amendment of the hon. gentleman from London; but if that amendment should not be adopted, then I would be pleased to see the Bill referred to a committee. I think it should be a special committee, or perhaps the largest standing committee in the House, the Railway Committee. It should be fully discussed, because I know there is a great deal to be said on behalf of the labour organizations of this country. They have duties to perform and they perform them. They have a right to see that sanitary conditions are such as will not imperil the labour element of the country. They have a right to demand that those conditions be regulated and when some capitalists undertake to employ female labour in doing work that might be degrading to their sex, the unions should have a right to step in and say: 'You must not do that.' They come to parliament, therefore, and ask us to pass laws for them. Sometimes the avarice of a father, or the cupidity of a workman might tempt him to substitute child labour for a man's work, stunting the growth and intellect of the child. Unions are a benefit in such cases; they say that must not be done and they come to us and ask us for redress. I say they are an advantage to the country, and every labourer ought to be a member of the craft to which he belongs. Labour is very powerless, indeed, if it is not allowed to form a union for its own protection, just as well as capital is allowed, and I say the one is just as necessary as the other. Capital is nothing more or less than accumulated labour, and I say that the capitalist who has stored labour has a right to have it protected; and that the labourer who desires to have fair treatment ought not to be denied the privilege of obtaining the very best officer to regulate the conditions that it is possible to procure for him. For these reasons I am in favour of the amendment of the hon. gentleman from London.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I desire to make a few observations in closing the debate upon this question. I consider it a very important one. I believe the manufacturing interests in Canada at the present moment stand in very great danger if we are to continue to open the gate to foreign elements coming in here for the purpose of encouraging strikes, and taking an interest in strikes, being parties to the damages to, and destruction of property that have taken place in many instances where strikes have occurred. I have no personal animosity to united labour or organizations of labour. I wish them every success in Canada, but I believe there is the ability in the organizations in Canada to handle matters of importance such as strikes without bringing in the foreign element which in the past has proved destructive, and which has encouraged a condition of things that is a disgrace to any civilized country. The exhibitions we had for instance in the city of London, in the city of Hamilton, and in other cities, which could be traced with certainty to a foreign element coming in and encouraging the destruction of property and encouraging strikes, leaving with us the lamentable result that follow from these strikes because of the manner in which they have been conducted. If our labour organizations in Canada are to be subject to a condition of things which is growing year by year, whereby foreign agitators are permitted to come here, and disturb the minds of our labouring classes, encouraging strikes, it is going to result in a condition of things that will undoubtedly be disastrous to manufacturers. Any large manufacturer in Canada that is becoming a formidable competitor with a manufacturer of the same kind in the United States, producing largely and selling perhaps as cheaply or cheaper than the United States manufacturer, the United States manufacturer, to get equal with him can, by utilizing the organization of labour, eventually secure a strike, causing consternation amongst the Canadian employees and disturb his business to such an extent that it will tend to his ruin. Take the case that I referred to with regard to the shipbuilders of Victoria. There are no less than three of these firms. What was the result there? When the Canadian Pacific Railway advertised for tenders to make certain repairs to one of their steamers tenders were sent in from Seattle, and from several other places in the United States, and tenders also from Victoria. Fortunately a Canadian shipbuilder got the contract. After the contract was awarded an agitation was gotten up amongst the men for an eight hour day, they were then working nine hours. There was an agitation immediately gotten up for an eight hour day and pay for nine. The shipbuilders remonstrated with the men and said: 'We took the contract that we are asking you to assist us to carry out under a nine hour day with nine hours pay. You are asking us to reduce it to eight hours with still nine hours pay. We tendered closely for the work and cannot afford to consent to these terms.' The result was there was a strike. Immediately they made an effort to get men elsewhere to come in to complete the contract—to get them either in Canada or the United States. When they did that, the organization of labour there interfered with these men. They button-holed the men and threatened them. They did everything in their power to prevent these men going on with the work. The employers were under contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway to have the vessels fit for the ocean at a certain fixed date on which she was to sail. The labour organization did everything they could to prevent that contract from being carried out, because the contractors could not consent to give them nine hours' pay for eight hours' work. That is an incident that can be repeated all the way from the Atlantic to the Pacific. In every large manufacturing institution in this country the same trick can be played. All that I want is to guard our manufacturing institutions in all lines against that condition of things. This is a young country and we cannot afford to be looked upon and treated as the back door of the United States to be shackled and interfered with in our development by organizations that can be maintained and utilized for that purpose and Canada made to suffer. My esteemed friend in his address said: 'You should not shut the door against these men coming in. They ought to be allowed in and the door should be wide open.' Why is the door not wide open when men strike and an employer requires other men to take their place? Why is it that the labour organizations of this country has secured a law—and it is on the statute-book to-day—that declares that no manufacturer in Canada shall hire labour from outside to take the place of the striker?

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—The hon. gentleman says the labour organizations had a law passed forbidding manufacturers to bring in men. I make the statement now that it did nothing of the kind. The United States people had an alien labour law on their statute-book, and as a retaliatory measure the Canadian parliament reluctantly passed another law, almost word for word with theirs, but not at the instance of the labouring class of the country, and the labour unions protested against it at the time.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—My recollection is just as I have stated. I know perfectly well that whether it is a Grit or Tory government that is in power, the labour element in this country exercise a considerable influence. No doubt their votes are wanted by both parties and there is often a considerable amount of pandering to labour in order to get the votes. I contend that it was to please the labour element and it was at their request that the alien labour law was enacted in this country to prevent the importation of skilled labour. In this country when there is a strike of skilled labour employers are not allowed to import labourers from the United States. Now, if that is the case—and it is the law on the statute-book to-day as far as the employer is concerned—why should it not be the law as far as the labourers are concerned? If the manufacturer has the door closed against him from the United States or other countries, preventing the bringing in of men to take the place of strikers, it leaves him in a desperate condition to get men to complete a contract; the time is short, so that he cannot by legislation bring them in line, and why should the strikers be permitted to bring in agitators from the United States for the purpose of helping the unions to continue strikes and encourage and incite strikes? I say that the same law should apply to both. Let us abolish that law if we are not going to pass this Bill.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Does the hon. gentleman believe in protecting our skilled labourers in Canada?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have no objection whatever that skilled labour should receive fair and reasonable consideration. I want every skilled labourer in Canada to have a fair opportunity of making a living. Let me draw the attention of the House to a recent coal strike in this country. I appeal to every member of this House is it not desirable to avoid the condition of things that we had in the Northwest last winter, when a number of people were virtually frozen to death? We have had the most terrible condition of things that ever prevailed in Canada. Men burning their furniture and their outhouses to keep their children from freezing to death. Burning lumber that cost from $30 to $40 a thousand, burning their fence posts to keep themselves from freezing to death.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not think it is worthy of a member of this House to make exaggerated statements. These reports have been proved to be exaggeration. I venture to say there have not been two deaths in the whole of the Northwest during the past winter from want of fuel.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If I had known that the hon. gentleman would challenge my statement, I was prepared to furnish proof of it—proof that some were frozen to death, and that others suffered seriously from the effects of the frost. There has been very serious suffering owing to the condition of things in the Northwest. We do not want that condition of things repeated. We know that the strike of the coal miners was inaugurated, maintained and controlled by the coal miners organization of the United States and Canada.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman's argument would be first class if he could tell us who was responsible for the strike—the mine-owners or the miners. Put the blame on the proper parties for the want of coal in the Northwest. Was not the coal famine attributable to lack of railway facilities?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The miners struck at a time when nobody expected that the mine-owners would consent to the increase they demanded. The miners violated a contract they had made with the mine-owners, and went on strike.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What strike does the hon. gentleman refer to?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The strike at Fernie and Lethbridge for higher wages, and the sufferings of the people in the Northwest resulted from that strike.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Were the men right or wrong?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have no objection at all to allowing the Bill before the House to go either to a special committee or to one of the standing committees. I am glad that a measure for conciliation has been introduced by the Minister of Labour, and hope that it may have a beneficial effect. I shall rejoice if it prevents strikes, but I think this legislation is necessary also. Let the Bill be referred to a committee, and those who represent the labour element can appear before the committee and both sides can be heard. If it is considered wise by that committee to defer further consideration of the Bill until next year, and give time and opportunity to show what effect the Conciliation Bill will have in preventing strikes, I shall have no objection. Whatever is considered best in the interest of the country I am willing to accept, but we should do something to put a stop to interference by outsiders such as we have witnessed in past years. If we continue to tolerate such interference, we will have a condition of things in this country that will produce serious results. As far as my hon. friend's amendment is concerned, he has read us an essay. No doubt it was prepared for him, and it was a violation of the rules of the House to read from manuscript.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I do not think my hon. friend has a right to say that that address was prepared for the hon. senator from London. He has no right to make such an insinuation in the absence of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am giving my opinion. I make no reflection on the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think the hon. senator from Wellington has a right to express the opinion that the address which the hon. gentleman from London (Hon. Mr. Coffey) delivered had been prepared for him. That is unparliamentary.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I do not wish to make an unparliamentary statement, and I therefore withdraw it, though more than myself thought so. I want to say this, however, that while there is a rule of the House that prohibits a senator from reading his speech from beginning to end, if the Speaker's attention is drawn to it——

Hon. Mr. POWER—Now is not the time to refer to that.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I intend in future to draw the Speaker's attention to any violation of that rule. I leave the Bill in the hands of the House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The remarks of the hon. gentleman——

Hon. Mr. POWER—My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie overlooks the fact that the mover of the motion has the right to reply and close the debate

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—But he is not here. The motion before the House is the amendment. In fact the discussion should be closed by the hon. senator from London.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No. The mover of an amendment has no right to make a second speech.

The SPEAKER—Rule 37 provides that in all cases the reply of the mover of the original resolution closes the debate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not press the point.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If that rule is strictly adhered to the mover should refrain from introducing new matter into the debate when making his reply. I regret that the hon. gentleman has seen fit to repeat exaggerated reports circulated in the press about hardships endured in the Northwest on account of scarcity of fuel. I venture to say that no part of the Northwest suffered more from want of fuel last winter than the part of the country where the hon. gentleman lives did three years ago when coal was scarce. The strike at Fernie, to which the hon. gentleman refers, was caused by a local representative, not by a foreigner, and, as a matter of fact, Mr. Mitchell, the head of the coal miners organization, came to Fernie and called off that strike.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I venture to say I am right.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—One thing I do know Mitchell called off the strike at Lethbridge when it was shown that people were suffering for want of fuel. The Premier of Saskatchewan and a deputation went down to see Mitchell, and it was he who relieved the situation so far as that strike is concerned. So far as Fernie coal is concerned, it does not go into domestic use at all.

Hon. Mr. JAFFRAY—I regret that this discussion has taken place in view of the fact that the government Bill is coming up to-morrow. The gentleman who can bring conciliation and peace between capital and labour will be the greatest benefactor we will have in Canada, and I regret exceedingly that there should be anything bitter or of an embarrassing character spoken on either side of the House in regard to a question of this kind. I do not know that I should have risen to say anything about this Bill but I have reason to know, having been a party to the recent strike that has been referred to at Fernie, and I may also say I have had considerable experience both with the local agitator, as he may have been called, and with the foreign representative. The strike at Fernie arose in this way : The local president of the union had made an arrangement with the company for three years. Part of that arrangement was that the money payable to the union should be collected by the company so long as the men were agreeable that it should be done so ; but they could only collect that money with their consent. If they objected, the company had at once to cease the collecting. The local president of the union had run for parliament a couple of times, and it is said he had also a ranch, and he appeared to be getting well off, and I suppose some of the men concluded that their local president was getting too well off, and they were paying a considerable amount into the union. Some of them, therefore, refused to pay their dues. I do not think he had authority enough to influence a strike, but he wrote down to Mitchell at Pittsburg and Mitchell called the strike without giving the other side an opportunity to make a statement. That is the the only complaint we have to make about Mitchell. The strike went on and Mitchell was asked to interfere. He sent a representative, who at once condemned the action of the local men and ordered the strike to end, but without Mitchell's personal authority it could not very well be done, and they had to send to Minneapolis where Mitchell was then, before they were able to get the matter settled. When Mitchell had the statement put before him, he at once called off the strike and apologized and stated that there should never have been a strike. In that case, the only fault that could be found with Mitchell was that he called the strike without adhering to the agreement, which was that there should be an arbitration before a strike.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—At the request of the local representative?

Hon. Mr. JAFFRAY—At the request of the local representative who misrepresented the case. The one difficulty in British Columbia with regard to this matter is the conflict of interest between the one side of the border and the other. We have reason to know that strikes have been called there in the interests of the Coeur de Laine district, Montana, where the interest of British Columbia seemed to be going ahead of them, and where they thought it was to their advantage that we should have difficulties. That is where I think the principle difficulty is. I must say this as far as my experience goes, in different strikes that have occurred, the men coming from the other side of the line have rather been favourable to settlement than otherwise. That has been my personal experience. I have had it in Toronto, and we have had it in this case in British Columbia that the local agitator was more difficult to deal with than men from the other side. While I should like to see this state of things brought to an end, it is of the greatest importance that we should have as much liberty as possible, and I think that the getting of both sides together and coming to an understanding is by far the best way to secure it. I think further, that the independence and feeling of manhood in our own men on this side, if left to themselves, will correct this evil without legislation. They will be manly enough to see that we do not need anybody from outside to dictate to us about our difficulties. We are competent to settle them ourselves, and I believe if left to themselves that would be ultimately the result of this labour question. The senate divided on the amendment which was agreed to on the following division :

After Recess.

SECOND READING.

Bill (81) An Act to incorporate the Central Canada Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—(Hon. Mr. Gibson.)

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (BBB) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

He said: This Bill is only a matter of detail. The Postmaster General found very much difficulty in obtaining railway mail clerks. They are required to pass an examination which is purely technical and in no way connected with the duties they have to perform, and the object of that particular paragraph is to allow them to be examined on their duties of office and work which they have to perform. It seems much more sensible than to examine them on the history of Hayti and San Domingo, or some other distant country. As the Civil Service Act now stands the qualifying examination does not apply to the appointment of any class other than the third-class. The affect of the next amendment here is to create the junior second-class clerk, which is now the lowest grade.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that to reduce the qualification?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. The qualification for the office will be higher than at present, and junior second-class will take the place of the third-class.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When the hon. gentleman speaks of the difficulty of qualifying I suppose he means under the present law?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman with reference to the mail clerks and some other positions where the examination, instead of being of the ordinary character, should pertain more to the work to be performed. The only difficulty would be that it might open the door too wide in appointing third-class clerks who would of right be promoted afterwards to second or first-class positions where the duties are of a more technical character, requiring a better education than would be is not interfered with?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then he has to pass a qualifying examination.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not interfered with.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

RAILWAY BELT WESTERN BOUNDARY BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 102) An Act to ratify an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia respecting the western boundary of the railway belt.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—On the second reading I explained that this Bill is necessitated for the reason that the western boundary of the lands granted by British Columbia to the federal government for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway was never defined until the present time. As hon. gentlemen know, on each side of the railway through British Columbia there was what is called the railway belt donated, twenty miles on each side. The western end of it was never marked off. This Bill is for the purpose of accepting the boundary that British Columbia has already defined, and the legislature of the province has passed an Act corresponding with this. I took the statute of British Columbia of 1906 and compared paragraph 3, with clause 3 of this Bill, and they are identical.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then this is a mutual arrangement between the Dominion and British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. They passed their part of it, and we now pass ours, and close it up.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When you speak of the western boundary does that go to the coast?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it would not be reasonable to go to the coast, because that part of the province has been settled.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If it extended to the coast it would include the city of Vancouver.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Now that it has been read, I suppose it is clear to every one.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I must confess that I had not seen this Bill before, and that is why I asked to have it read, and while it may be very interesting to those who have never been there, I may say that I have seen this part of the country and the Bill is all right. I think it is a very good bargain for the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

PETROLEUM BOUNTY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved concurrence in the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill (G) An Act to amend the Petroleum Bounty Act, 1904.

He said: The House struck out three words, 'special or general,' which they considered as being too indefinite. Hon. gentlemen probably will know that in the sale of the oil lands in Petrolea, and in the neighbourhood, the usual practice is for a farmer to reserve an eighth barrel. When parliament removed the duty on the oil, it granted as an offset a small premium on the oil produced in western Ontario; and the farmer is entitled to the proportion on his eighth. That is the object of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the farmer's proportion of the bounty.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it gives whatever share he has reserved, usually one-eighth.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is another infringement of the principles laid down by the hon. gentleman when in opposition. I should like to congratulate him on his conversion. Every year we are having evidence of it.

The motion was agreed to.

STANDARD LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. JAFFRAY moved the second reading of Bill (ZZ) An Act respecting the Standard Life Insurance Company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is this the ordinary insurance Bill, for the organization of an insurance company ?

Hon. Mr. JAFFRAY—Yes.

Hon. Mr. KERR—There is an English company called the Standard Life Insurance Company, which is doing business in Canada at the present time. I think some consideration should be given to the name.

Hon. Mr. JAFFRAY—Is that not a matter to be considered in the committee?

Hon. Mr. KERR—Yes, but I call attention to it now.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

The Senate adjourned until Three p.m., tomorrow.

ABITIBI AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

AMENDMENTS OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (KK) An Act to incorporate the Abitibi and Hudson Bay Railway Company. He said : The amendments consist in striking out part of clause 10 which gave the company powers which the committee did not think it was expedient to grant, and in striking out the word 'fifty' in the amount of debentures permitted to be issued per mile, and substituting therefor the word 'forty.' I move concurrence in the amendments.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the hurry ?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—It is a Senate Bill, and has to go to the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understood there were other amendments to that Bill.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—This is not the Bill the hon. gentleman refers to.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The amendments made to this Bill by the committee are simply to reduce the powers of the company.

The motion was agreed to.

THE RULES OF THE SENATE.

MOTION.

The notice of motion being called :

1. That (i) of rule 25 be amended by inserting after the word 'amendments' the words 'to a public Bill.'

2. That the four rules following be inserted after rule 31, that is to say :

Any substantive motion which has been adopted by the Senate, other than a motion relating to a Bill, may be reconsidered at the next sitting of the Senate : Provided, that notice of the proposed reconsideration is given during the sitting of the Senate at which such motion is adopted. Such notice may be given at any time during such sitting.

The motion to reconsider must be moved after 'notices' and 'inquiries,' and before 'motions' on the next sitting day, unless postponed to some certain time by leave of the Senate.

When a motion for reconsideration is decided, that decision shall not be reconsidered ; and no question shall be twice reconsidered.

An order, resolution or other vote of the Senate, not being a motion for a stage of a Bill, may be rescinded ; but no such order, resolution or other vote shall be rescinded during the same session, unless seven days' notice be given and at least one-half of the whole number of senators vote in favour of its recession : Provided that, to correct irregularities or mistakes, one day's notice only shall be sufficient.

3. That the following be inserted after rule 102 : A public document quoted from by a minister of the Crown may be ordered by the Senate to be forthwith laid upon the Table ; unless it is stated by the minister to be of such a nature that its production would be inconsistent with the public interest.

4. That the changes in the numbering of certain rules, made appropriate by the foregoing additions, be duly made.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I dare say that some hon. members of the House may think it is a little mal-apropos just at this stage, considering that the House is approaching an adjournment, that I should move in this matter. I may briefly state to the House why I take it up now. The rules of the Senate, as hon. gentlemen are aware, were printed in this small pamphlet about a year ago, and a larger book, containing what is known as the Manual of Procedure and the British North America Act and some other enactments, is now in the printer's hands; and it is desirable that the rules should appear in their final form in that volume. Consequently, as it was possible that the House might adopt the same view which I hold about these rules, I thought it well to bring the matter up before the adjournment. Afterwards would be too late. The first amendment is a very simple, and not an important one. Rule 25 mentions the motions for which no notice is required, and (i) provides for the consideration of Commons amendments forthwith or on a future day. It has been suggested by one of the officers of the House that that really applies only to public Bills, and if hon. gentlemen will turn to rule 131 they will find that it reads this way:

> When any private Bill is returned from the House of Commons with amendments, the same not being merely verbal or unimportant, such amendments are, previous to their second reading, referred to a Committee of the Whole, or to the select committee to which such Bill was originally referred.

I do not think that paragraph (i) does any harm, but I adopt the suggestion made to me about the desirability of inserting 'a Public Bill.' I move the adoption of the paragraph marked first.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would call the attention of the Speaker to a point of order. This notice of motion is not in order. Rule 29 provides that:

> No motion for making a standing rule or order can be adopted unless two days' notice in writing has been given thereof and the senators in attendance on the session have been summoned to consider the same.

The senators have yet to be summoned.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is taking a more deliberate course and getting the sense of the Senate on the propriety of amending the rules. After the Senate have decided, then the notice that the hon. gentleman speaks of would be given and the senators would be summoned. It would be awkward if we gave notice to the senators and the amendments did not carry. We have a right to pass this resolution.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It will not be a standing order. It cannot be a standing order.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Our rules are standing orders.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I know that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And the hon. gentleman wants to add new rules that will not be standing orders. A new rule is a standing order. It is not for the session only. The hon. gentleman admits that it is late in the session; but he wants to bring it up now for future sessions. By its nature it is a standing order, and in that case the senators should be convened purposely to study those suggestions before adopting them, and I say this motion is not in order.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Did I understand the hon. gentleman from Halifax to say that the senators would be summoned afterwards? Then this would be only what we might call a preliminary canter which we are going through.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not think the hon. gentleman can be very serious about it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As a matter of fact, that is the course which was adopted with respect to the rules originally. They were considered and discussed, and after the House had made its mind up to adopt these rules there was a motion made to summon the senators, and the rules were made standing orders. Surely the hon. gentleman cannot complain that he will have two chances to oppose them instead of one? We have a right to resolve anything we please.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, if you do it in order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood the hon. gentleman from Halifax a few moments ago to say that the Senate should adopt these amendments and then summon the House to confirm them. It seems to me if we once adopt them there is an end to it. I would suggest that the propositions made by the hon. gentleman be fully discussed now, without adopting any of them, and then summon the House, under the 30th rule, to consider and deal with them. The suggestion made by the hon. gentleman that we should discuss them on their merits to-day, I think is a very good one, in order that they may be thought over, and that we may see what effect they will have upon the rules generally, and then summon the House to adopt them.

The SPEAKER—If I understand the hon. gentleman, he does not intend to press his motion; but has simply used this method to bring the matter before the Senate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—To get an expression of opinion from the Senate.

The SPEAKER—Because the motion cannot be carried——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it cannot be carried it should not be put.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have not moved a standing order. I have moved a resolution to express the opinion of the Senate, and as the hon. gentleman from Belleville has said, after senators have expressed their opinion upon the proposed changes, then I can give the formal notice for the other process.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We cannot be in order. This motion to change the rules of the House cannot be discussed without a proper notice and without the members being summoned. Therefore, any hon. gentleman can rise in his place and say that there is nothing before the House, the point of order having been taken that the necessary notice has not been given.

The SPEAKER—I can only be governed by rule 29 which says:

No motion for making a standing rule or order can be adopted, unless two days' notice in writing has been given thereof and the senators in attendance on the session have been summoned to consider the same.

The motion as made seems to be a formal motion, which is not simply an expression of opinion on the part of the Senate. I think the point is well taken.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Notice has not been given.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Notice has been given. I understand his honour the Speaker ruled that the senators must be summoned in order to consider this question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am asking his honour the Speaker. Do I understand his honour to say that this resolution of mine is out of order on the ground that it proposes to make a standing order—which it does not do?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Of course it does.

The SPEAKER—I can only take the motion in the form in which it is, and my opinion is based on rule 29 of the rules of the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I give notice that, on Monday next, I shall move this resolution, with the addition that the senators be summoned.

COST OF SECTIONS OF NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

MOTION POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called:

By the Hon. Mr. Ferguson:

That he will ask the government to supplement the answers given to all questions asked by him during the present session of parliament in regard to the cost per mile of all sections for which contracts have been let on both the eastern and western divisions of the National Transcontinental Railway, by giving the cost of ties and rails, and everything necessary to complete the track on said sections of said railway.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is the hon. gentleman prepared to give the answer I asked for yesterday?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. They say it is absolutely impossible to prepare the information within a reasonable time. The rails and the ties do not form any part of the contract; therefore their cost will depend altogether on the current rate at the time.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Are they not purchased ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We know the ties are bought.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer they gave me was that it would take some time to make up the return. I did not suppose they had any information on the subject. I did not know that the rails and ties were purchased, because some little time ago a discussion took place on the price of rails and the council was informed that it would be impossible——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend from Stadacona has had all the particulars with regard to the purchase of the ties already brought down, and it is possible the rails may be in the same position.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They promised to make it up for me.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Well, let the motion stand.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Very well.

The motion was allowed to stand.

OLD AGE PENSIONS IN CANADA.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of all correspondence in the hands of the government, or any department thereof, on the question of old age pensions to aged residents in Canada, or retiring allowance in any form.

He said : The House will remember, no doubt, that some weeks ago I placed a question on the notice paper inquiring whether it was the intention of the government to introduce a measure providing for old age pensions. At that time the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce made an extended statement to the House on that subject, and subsequently laid upon the Table of the House a draft Bill regarding the question of old age pensions. I am desirous of getting all the information there may be in any department with regard to this question in the way of correspondence or otherwise, and on that draft measure in the statement the Minister of Trade and Commerce made to the House, he invited a free expression of opinion upon the whole question. It was for the purpose of not only giving my own personal opinion upon the question, but allowing any member of this House that choose to speak upon it the opportunity of discussing generally the question of granting pensions to aged residents of this country that I placed this notice on the order paper. I know that old age pension systems had existed in some European countries for some years, but I contend that a different position of things exist there from the condition in Canada. The opportunity for providing for old age is not as good in Germany, France or England as it is in a new country like ours. I know that it is the intention that old age pensions should not be made a heavy drain upon the resources of the Dominion treasury. I presume that it is the intention, if it ever does become law, to make it largely self-sustaining ; but there is in the proposed draft Bill that has been submitted by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, a provision that after the money subscribed by those that wish to become members of that fund or draw old age pensions, when they reach the age of 60, the Dominion treasury may from time to time, under certain conditions, be called upon to contribute to the fund that is set aside for that purpose. I have in all my public life opposed everything in the way of superannuation, and I am opposed to old age pensions. Of course I express my opinion frankly. Perhaps those who have considered this question closely look upon it in a different light from what I do. The information in the hands of the Minister of Trade and Commerce may be such as to warrant him in taking the stand he does by that Bill.

That may be true, but, as far as I am personally concerned, I am not disposed to favour the establishment of a system of old age pensions in Canada at the present time. We have here every opportunity for every industrious man to make headway in life, and lay by a percentage of his earnings. Under such conditions, old age pensions are not necessary. No man in Canada has to live from hand to mouth, as is the case in other countries where the labourer is often unable to make provision twenty-four hours ahead for his family. It will be many years before anything of that kind is likely to be witnessed in Canada. Besides, if any man is so unfortunate as to become completely stranded financially in our country, he generally has the sympathy and assistance of his neighbours if he is landed in that position through no fault of his own, or can get relief from the charitable institutions of the country. We have in the county where I live a poor house which is well and creditably conducted, a good, safe, comfortable home for any man within the bounds of the county who is forced to seek shelter somewhere. These county institutions have been established from time to time for the purpose of taking care of aged people who, through misfortune, are obliged to seek relief, and they are well taken care of for the balance of their days. There is another feature of the Bill that has been presented to us that I do not like, and that is, the moneys contributed are not subject to seizure for any debt that the contributor may have contracted. I do not think it is well that we should encourage people in laying aside funds that cannot be reached for their legal debts voluntarily contracted. I do not believe in sheltering people against paying their honest debts, and if this Bill provides for that kind of thing I would feel more bitterly opposed to it, than if the pension was subject to seizure. That was one feature of our Civil Service Act that I never could endorse—that of making the wages of civil servants not subject to seizure for debt. Our civil servants should be required to pay their honest debts like other people. I do not like legislation which shelters any man from paying a debt which he has honestly contracted. It is too early in the day in Canada to introduce an old age pension Bill. Men who are industrious, and apply themselves honestly to the performance of their duty, in whatever sphere they labour, can earn a reasonable sum to support them and lay up something for a rainy day. Our post office savings bank furnishes evidence that such is being done. If you look up the returns, you will find that these deposits are increasing from year to year, and depositors are allowed a fair rate of interest upon the money they deposit. That money is under their control. They can draw it at any time. In case of sickness or disaster they withdraw any portion of it that they please. That was a prudent provision to make, because it encourages wage-earners to save. Under this Bill, however, the contributors have no control over their money. They receive nothing until they reach the age of sixty. If they die before reaching that age, their relations are entitled to draw the money with interest at a certain rate; but the contributors themselves cannot touch it until they reach the age of sixty. In that respect, it differs from the post office savings banks. In the third place the establishment of any system of the kind might possibly encourage indolence, and want of thrift. Some men would commence contributing a little to the pension fund and would look forward eagerly to reaching the age of sixty. They would say to themselves: 'When I get to the age of sixty, the government has to grant me a certain allowance for the balance of my life.' We should rather encourage people to provide for themselves. If they fail to make provision for their old age and cannot look to their friends for help, in nine out of every ten counties in the country there are poor houses. I may be told that it is rather humiliating to ask people who may have been brought up in comfort to spend their last days in a poor house, but they have had their chance of life. If they had made good use of their opportunities not one out of every hundred of them would find any necessity to go to the poor house. I consider it my duty therefore to take the earliest opportunity of expressing my opinion, that in view of the rapid development of our country and the opportunities afforded to every one to earn decent incomes and lay by something for themselves; in view of the encouragement afforded by our post office and other savings banks, to lay by something for a rainy day, I think we have not yet reached a period in the life of this country when we should establish a system of old age pensions. The post office savings banks are modern institutions. Before they were established, there were not the same facilities to put away savings. In the face of all the circumstances of the present time, in my humble judgment, a system of old age pensions is premature and unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Middlesex)—As I understand from the hon. Secretary of State that he is anxious to proceed with the Labour Bill to-day, I desire to expedite the business of the Senate, and as I have something to say on this question, I move that the debate be adjourned until Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

INSPECTION OF MEATS AND CANNED FOODS BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved the third reading of Bill (33) An Act respecting the Inspection of Meats and Canned Foods.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—It is not my intention to inflict on the patience of the Senate any lengthened remarks, but I consider it the duty of any one in this House who has special or technical knowledge on any subject to announce it for the benefit not of the Senate, but of the country. Therefore, knowing perhaps more of the matter considered by the Bill than the average senator, who is not engaged in the same occupation as I have been, is likely to know, I shall briefly suggest some amendments which should be made to the Bill. The measure, I think, is a crude affair. It is not in any way regular or complete. For instance, take the classification of poultry, You see I was right, because in the next subclause provision is made for the slaughter of turkeys, and you know turkeys, geese and other poultry are never killed in a slaughter house. If that were put in the other clause where fish and vegetables are referred to, it would appear in the proper place. There is another point about the clause with reference to the definition of food. It might be improved by adding the words 'confectionery and condiments used by man or other animal.' That would be a more concise and complete definition. Condiments are not food, but I include them because it would make the clause more complete. The 3rd subclause provides :

3. Every animal affected, or suspected of being affected, with contagious or other disease, shall be slaughtered under the supervision of the inspector and be disposed of as provided by the regulations.

That gives tremendous power to the inspector. Suppose on incomplete evidence, according to the opinions of others, the inspector slaughters an animal on mere suspicion. I hold that an examination should be made afterwards to verify whether the opinion of the inspector was correct or not, and if he was mistaken, either the inspector or the government should indemnify the owner of the animal for any loss he may incur. I do not see anything about the qualifications of an inspector. Now the inspections may vary in character. Some may be more minute and technical than others. Take for instance, canned foods ; an inspector for such products certainly requires more technical knowledge than this Bill calls for. Deadly poisons are generated in canned food, which go under the name of ptomaines ; an inspector in order to be able to detect them should have a knowledge of bacteriology, and the use of the microscope. Would you require every inspector to have that knowledge ? No, but you would require him to send samples of the suspected food to the department where it could be properly analysed. There is another matter which I shall mention, to show that I had sufficient cause for giving you all this trouble. The 9th clause provides :

9. Every carcase, or portion or product thereof, found, upon inspection or reinspection, to be unhealthy or unfit for food, or which contains such ingredients, or an animal dead otherwise that may render it unfit for food, shall be marked by the inspector in such manner as the minister directs, and shall thereupon be deemed to be condemned as unfit for food, and shall be disposed of as provided by the regulations.

That should be amended by inserting 'any carcase of an animal which has died otherwise than by slaughter.' That is a very necessary condition to put in there, because meat from animals that have died of disease could not be detected by the sense of taste or smell, yet such meat is considered as unfit for food. I think it ought to be mentioned that all animals that die otherwise than by slaughter should be considered unfit for food. I only mention these matters to give you an idea that I have carefully examined the Bill, and hon. gentlemen may attach what importance they choose to my views on the subject. The Bill should be amended in many respects. There are no proper provisions for the inspection of canned food. There should be a bureau of chemistry, and competent inspectors. Without these, examinations of canned food are, to a large extent, useless. I do not intend to move any amendments. I simply want to show that I was justified in asking that the third reading be postponed.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—If my hon. friend is not moving any amendment, I shall press the third reading. I shall, however, call the attention of the Department of Agriculture to his remarks. As to one or two points which he made I might say this, that the power of slaughtering animals on suspicion is already accorded to the officers of the Department of Agriculture notably in the case of glandered horses, and swine suspected of being infected with cholera and similar diseases. In all these cases, provision is made for compensation on reasonable terms to the owner if the animal turns out to be improperly slaughtered. This, of course, is a tentative measure, and probably next year, after it has been put into operation, the Department of Agriculture may see some reason to modify the propositions they have made. Of course I shall call their attention to the remarks of my hon. friend, who is entitled to speak with authority, not only as a member of this House, but also as an eminent member of the medical profession, and ask them to consider the amendments he has desired to see introduced. As to the question of inspecting canned foods, he is no doubt aware that the Department of Inland Revenue have analysts, and facilities for inspecting samples of food in all the principal cities of the country. They will be very largely availed of in case there appears to be any ground for believing that canned foods of improper character are being put on the market.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I had no idea that the Department of Inland Revenue would take charge of these matters.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The Department of Inland Revenue would be consulted, and their officers would be made use of in connection with this.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I endorse the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Kingston with regard to this Bill. It is bound now to become law, but I do not think that it has been very well considered, and in its present form it contains what I regard as a very bad principle. We enjoin marking upon all canned goods of all kinds, and then we provide that the Governor in Council may exempt almost any of them from the provisions of the Act. It is government by order in council, instead of by Act of parliament as it should be. We are giving further powers to the Governor in Council, and we have left a great deal too much discretion to the Governor in Council. To my mind there should be no provision at all with regard to the marking of the salmon of British Columbia and the lobsters of the east. The evidence we have is, that it would be detrimental to the trade; but I have no doubt an order in council will be made, duly setting aside the part of the Act that relates to them. The proper way would be to not include them in the Act at all, and not to go through all the form of making a law, and then giving the Governor in Council power to set that law aside. I wish, also to call attention to subsection 3, of section 3 of the Bill, which reads as follows:

3. Every animal affected, or suspected of being affected, with contagious or other disease, shall be slaughtered under the supervision of the inspector and be disposed of as provided by the regulations.

We have the Contagious Animals Diseases Act which deals with this subject. This may be administered by one department, and you will have the general law with the contagious diseases dealt with probably by another department, and it is difficult to know whose duty it will be to act in such a case as this. I think it is the Contagious Animals Diseases Act that should be invoked if any contagious disease is discovered, and that we should not endeavour to deal with it under the provisions of the Foods Act. The first part of section 3 reads:

3. All animals intended for slaughter in any establishment shall be inspected as provided by the regulations.

Subsection 2 says:

2. No animal shall be allowed to enter the parts of an establishment where slaughtering is carried on, unless it has undergone such inspection and been found to be healthy and fit for food.

I have no doubt what is meant by the wording of this clause; it is the animals described in the first section that are intended to be referred to in the second, but it does not say so. Consequently, a horse that would be driven in for the purpose of doing work in the slaughtering establishment would not be allowed to enter it unless it has undergone inspection and is fit for food. If a dog happened to get in there, and a butcher generally owns a dog, he would have to be treated in the same manner. This point might be got over by liberal interpretation, as the framer intended it, but we have to take the words as we find them. I have looked over many of these clauses, and they show that the Act has not been carefully prepared.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I wish to direct attention to a matter in this Bill which constitutes an infringement on the rights of the public. I for one—and I know there are others—wish to know what I am buying. If we purchase a can of goods we want to know when it was packed, and wish to know whether it is one, two, three or ten years old. Clause 12 governs this part of the packing business. It reads as follows:

12. All articles prepared for food in any establishment and packed in cans or similar receptacles, or in any package whatever, shall be subject to inspection during the whole course of preparation and packing; and all such packages shall be marked with:

(a) the initials of the Christian names, the full surname, and the address, or, in the case of a firm or corporation, the firm or corporate name and address, of the packer;

(b) a true and correct description of the contents of the package.

These are the provisions which protect, to a large extent, the rights of a consuming public who purchase the goods, but from what I have seen in the public press in this country, and from the remarks made by consumers of canned goods, they would be very much interested in knowing whether those goods were packed in 1905 or 1895. This is a matter which should appeal to the good sense of the House. I am not sure that the matter could be introduced just now, but it is well to point out the lack in this regard. The public right is not sufficiently safeguarded under clause 12, and I hold that to adequately safeguard the rights of the consuming public, the poor people who largely use these goods, the date of packing should be printed on each can, parcel and package. I do not wish to press the matter to-day, but if in a year or so I find that the consuming public are still anxious to have that done, I shall take an opportunity to move an amendment, but not to-day.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I might just remark to my hon. friend that I believe the very provision he speaks of was in the original Bill; but after a long discussion it was struck out in the Commons.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—On behalf of the consuming public or of the packers?

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (Z) An Act to incorporate the St. Leon Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Talbot.)

Bill (102) An Act to ratify an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia respecting the Western Boundary of the Railway Belt.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

INSPECTION AND SALE ACT.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved the second reading of Bill (AAA) An Act to amend the Inspection and Sale Act.

He said: The object of the Bill is twofold. The first paragraph contains certain emendations respecting the size of baskets of fruit, chiefly apples, I presume. The next portion refers to the selling of binder twine, and is intended to enable the complaints made of deficiency in binder twine to be dealt with summarily by one magistrate. Of course in such cases there would be an appeal, if the parties chose; but, at present, the jurisdiction appears to be confined to a comparatively small sum, and as very often considerable sums are involved, a great deal of delay and a great deal of trouble are caused to parties by being unable to dispose of the matter summarily. That I propose to amend, and I likewise propose that from this time forth no penalties whatever shall be paid to the inspector of binder twine, but shall go into a consolidated fund. I may state that the present inspector has never put in any claim whatever for this, but apparently the law would give it to him.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved the second reading of Bill (108) An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act. He said: This is a mere verbal change and a short one. If a seaman or apprentice lawfully engaged in any ship, commits an offence, he shall be liable on summary conviction to certain penalties. It repeals the first five lines of section 187.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—What is the effect of the change?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Under the law as it stood, the apprentice or seaman signed a regular agreement or an indenture. In many instances there was no written agreement, and it is to do away with the necessity for a written agreement, in order that whatever contract may be made, whether verbal or by exchange of letters, that the Act shall apply. It is found that, technically, men very often got off, because there was not what was described in the original Act as a duly signed agreement. The Bill removes those words.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SECOND READING.

Bill (72) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Jones.)

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY ACT.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON moved the second reading of Bill (82) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We should have some explanation as to what changes are proposed by this Bill.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—This Bill came to me from the attorney general in the House of Commons. I did not know it was standing in my name until I saw it on the order paper.

Clause 3 of the Bill reads as follows:

3. The company may purchase, lease or otherwise acquire or provide, hold, use and enjoy, as well in Canada as in such other places as are deemed expedient for the purposes of the company, and either in the name of the company or in the name of a trustee or trustees of the company, such lands, water lots, wharfs, docks, dock-yards, slips, warehouses, elevators, hotels, offices and other buildings as it may find necessary and convenient for its purposes, and enter into agreements respecting the use thereof, and sell or otherwise dispose thereof for the purposes of the company; and may carry on the business of warehousemen and wharfingers, and charge wharfage and other dues for the use of any such property; and may subscribe for, take, acquire, hold, guarantee, pledge and dispose of shares, bonds or other securities of any company having for one of its objects the exercise of any of the powers by this section conferred upon the company.

Then clause 5 states that the company may, for the purpose of making provision for the payment of allowances to employees after leaving the service, establish a fund to be known as the Grand Trunk Pension Fund, and may from time to time contribute thereto out of the gross earnings of the company, such amounts as the directors determine.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was just going to remark that, as is well known to hon. gentlemen, a very important question has arisen with reference to the right of the company to contract itself out of its obligation with regard to injury sustained by its employees. I refer to sections 5, 6, 7 and 8. Hon. gentlemen are aware that this is a matter which has gone to the courts, and a previous Bill, dealing with a fund for the same purpose as this one for the Grand Trunk Railway, contained a provision which prevented that company inserting a clause in their contracts which would enable them to avoid their obligations to employees in the matter of injuries and accidents. Clauses 5, 6 and 7 deal with a pension fund. I was pointing out that provision has been made in the law with reference to that subject, and I am told that under the operation of these amendments and these provisions that the Grand Trunk Railway Company will get back to their old position by which they can contract themselves out of their obligations to their employees. However, this is a matter that we can deal with in committee, and if there is any weakness in the Bill under which such a thing as that could happen, we will have to look carefully into it when we go into committee.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—If the hon. gentleman will allow it to go to committee, the solicitor of the company will probably be able to answer his objection.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Clause 5 of the Bill reads as follows :

5. The company may, for the purpose of making provision for the payment of allowances to employees after leaving the service, establish a fund to be known as 'Grand Trunk Pension Fund,' and may from time to time contribute thereto out of the gross earnings of the company such amounts as the directors determine.

The following clauses 6, 7 and 8 read as follows :

6. Any sums contributed to the said fund by the company shall be considered as, and from part of, the working expenses of the company as defined by the agreement set out in the schedule to the Grand Trunk Act, 1893.

7. The directors may make and adopt all such rules, by-laws and regulations not inconsistent with law as they deem proper and necessary for the due and efficient management, administration and disposition of the said fund.

8. Nothing in the preceding sections shall be construed as in any way limiting any powers now vested in the company, but the powers by this Act conferred shall be held to be in addition thereto.

They are given no power at all to make contracts with their employees, by which the employees would be deprived of their legal right to damages. There is a provision in another Act which forbids them contracting themselves out of liability. There is nothing in this Bill which repeals or interferes with the other Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When we go into committee on the matter, I shall be able to show my hon. friend there is something here worth considering, and I think the hon. gentleman will be able to appreciate it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think I usually do. The hon. gentleman very often does make a point, but we can consider it in committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (88) An Act to incorporate the Ontario and Quebec Railway Ferry Company.—(Hon. Mr. Young.)

Bill (91) An Act respecting the St. Maurice Valley Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Legris.)

THE INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (36) An Act to aid in the Prevention and Settlement of Strikes and Lockouts in Mines and Industries connected with Public Utilities.

He said : The title of this Bill gives a very clear indication as to the object that it is hoped will be attained by its passage into law. In the complex civilization we are at present enjoying, there are many industries in which the public are so deeply interested that the stoppage of them inflicts very serious loss and injury on the community. The existence of those industries, and the keeping of them up, are to the advantage of employer and employed alike, and depend on the patronage of the public. That patronage can only be given while the industries are in operation. If they suddenly stop, a very great injury is inflicted on the public, and it is to avert that injury that this Bill is submitted to parliament with a view to making it part of the law of Canada. It is not without precedent. In 1903 we passed a Bill having similar objects in view, but limited entirely to railways. Chapter 55, 3 Edward VII., intituled an Act to aid in the settlement of railway disputes is practically the progenitor of the present Bill. There are other industries that are quite as important, some of them more so than the keeping up of the railway system of the country. We have had an unfortunate illustration of that during the past winter, when, owing to a strike in the mines bordering between British Columbia and Alberta, for months together the strikers refused to continue working in the coal mines, and the result was that a very large number of people, many many thousands, suffered intensely from cold. The coal is there ; the workmen and their employers were there, but no coal was mined. It was a serious injury to both employers and employees, but the injury to the public was ten times greater. I do not know that I am warranted in referring to what has been stated in the papers, that many persons were frozen to death in consequence of the absence of fuel. We know that, during January and February, startling communications were sent from the Northwest, that people were absolutely without fuel with the thermometer about 30 and 35 degrees below zero, and that they were obliged to burn their furniture and outbuildings and lumber to keep themselves alive, and many suffered intense deprivation. It is with a view to preventing a recurrence of such troubles that this Bill is now submitted for consideration. It refers to public utilities, such as coal mines, steamships, telegraphs, and telephone lines, gas, electric light, water and power works. It is limited to those particular industries. The idea is that we have always had warning that a strike or lockout is on the eve of happening, because it becomes a matter of public notoriety, and either party may apply to the Minister of Railways for the formation of a Board to be known as a 'Board of Conciliation and Investigation.' Once the minister forms that board, the parties are not allowed either to strike or to lockout—they must continue on. Each of them is then called upon to name a person to act on this conciliation board. When those two persons are named, they first consider the grievances of the two parties and, if possible, settle them without calling in a third arbitrator. If they call on a third, the choice rests with the two and it is only in the event of their absolutely failing to agree among themselves as to the referee that the minister is invoked. When the third party is appointed, they meet together and the grievances on each side are fully gone into, and, during this period, the men must continue to work. The important clause, which is an executive one, provides that:

56. It shall be unlawful for any employer to declare or cause a lockout, or for any employee to go on strike, on account of any dispute prior to or during a reference of such dispute to a board of conciliation and investigation under the provisions of this Act, or prior to or during a reference under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the Conciliation and Labour Act: Provided that nothing in this Act shall prohibit the suspension or discontinuance of any industry or of the working of any persons therein for any cause not constituting a lockout or strike.

The relations of the parties then remain unchanged while there is a possibility of the dispute being settled. As a rule, as time goes on and public opinion is brought to bear on occasions of that kind, not only the employers but the men are willing always to make some compromise. They are still at work in the ordinary way; wages are being paid at the same rate, and that having continued for some time, and public opinion being invoked as it would be, an arrangement is almost certain to be arrived at. That has been the experience in the past. When passions cool and minds are in a calmer state, arrangements are usually made, compromises are offered on each side. If no settlement can be effected after a reasonable time, things go back to their original condition and then it may be a strike or lockout, so that the law is not carried to anything like what might be called an extreme. Clause 24 is another important part of the Bill. It provides:

24. If a settlement of the dispute is arrived at by the parties during the course of its reference to the board, a memorandum of the settlement shall be drawn up by the board and signed by the parties, and shall, if the parties so agree, be binding as if made a recommendation by the board under section 62 of this Act, and a copy thereof with a report upon the proceedings shall be forwarded to the minister.

Clause 25 is also important:

25. If a settlement of the dispute is not arrived at during the course of its reference to the board, the board shall make a full report thereon to the minister, which report shall set forth the various proceedings and steps taken by the board for the purpose of fully and carefully ascertaining all the facts and circumstances, and shall also set forth such facts and circumstances, and its findings therefrom, including the cause of the dispute and the board's recommendation for the settlement of the dispute according to the merits and substantial justice of the case.

Under the influence of these provisions it is felt that a settlement will certainly be arrived at. At all events, hon. gentlemen will, I am sure, appreciate this legislation and agree that it is in the proper direction, its object being to at least minimize some of the serious injuries which have been inflicted on society in consequence of strikes within the last few years. I shall be glad to give a fuller explanation of the clause, when the Bill is referred to a Committee of the Whole. I have called the attention of the House to the important parts of the Bill. All the other clauses simply relate to the machinery for carrying out the idea that is contained in the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When the hon. gentleman, on a former occasion, indicated a desire to pass this Bill through rapidly, I was one of those who took objection to the course suggested, and it was for the reason that I had not had an opportunity of looking through the measure and seeing what amendments had been made by the House of Commons to it as originally introduced. I have read with some little care and attention the comments of the press, and also of labour unions and corporations which may be affected by the passage of this Bill, and when I saw that neither party was satisfied with its provisions I came to the conclusion that on the whole the Bill must be pretty nearly right. After having examined it somewhat carefully during the time that has been at my disposal, I think that the amendments which have been made to it will make it less objectionable to both parties. I need scarcely say that I have always had, and still have very strong opinions upon the question of the action, rather than of the organization of trade unions. As originally organized, and if properly conducted at the present day, trade unions would enure to the great advantage of the labouring classes of the community. Those who, like myself, have objected to the excesses to which members of these unions have resorted, have been accused of being opposed to the labour element of the country. That I repudiate so far as I am concerned, and I think I speak for those also who have taken the same view on this question that I hold myself.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Men like myself, who have been earning their bread since their boyhood, can scarcely be accused of being opposed to those who labour for their living. What I have contended for, and what I think the country should well understand in placing legislation on the statute-book, is that we should avoid giving power to any organization whether being of labourers or of capitalists, which would enable them to terrorize over their fellow-men. It is well-known that some organizations have gone so far, when their demands have been refused by their employers, as to resort to excesses which would almost lead one to believe that we no longer live in a free country. The issues between labour and capital are becoming of so important a character that every man who desires the well-being of society, and to see his country prosper, should be exceedingly careful in legislating on questions of this kind. I notice that in this Bill the employer and those who are employed are placed upon an equal footing. That is only equitable and proper. We should have no legislation which places power in the hands of a mob to terrorize over others who happen to have the capital to establish an industry. That the question of dealing with capital and labour is a difficult one no body will dispute. Hence a moderate Bill—and I look upon this Bill as one of that character—is probably the best that could be done under the circumstances. In committee we can discuss the clauses of the Bill more fully, and suggestions may be offered to improve it as a whole. I admit frankly that the Bill is less objectionable than I thought it was, or as it was when originally introduced. It is quite evident that the minister who had this Bill in charge has accepted many of the suggestions offered by the opposition in the other House. It was a course which showed his desire to remove the whole question from the political arena, and it is with that view I am quite sure that the Senate will consider it when it goes into committee. There may be differences of opinion on minor points, but, on the principle, I think we are all agreed. The labour party may have been justified in striking on many occasions, and in protesting against the treatment they were receiving from their employers, but nothing can justify cruelty and outrages which have been resorted to in many cases when the labour party could not secure all that they demanded. I think the criminal law should be strong enough, when strikes similar to those which have occurred in recent years happen, to visit those who resort to outrage with condign punishment. I am not speaking on behalf of the capitalists or of the labourer. Both have rights, and if the employer thinks he cannot pay the wages demanded from him, it is his right to refuse the increase. It is equally the right of the labourer to refuse to work unless his demand is conceded. Those are general principles which should guide all our legislation, but no man or body of men should have a right to prevent others from working. That is the ground I take, and the principle upon which all legislation of this character should be based. I have no doubt the Senate will consider carefully every clause in this Bill, and I hope there will be no attempt to railroad it through the committee, as some very important Bills have been rushed through in the past.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have just one word to add to the remarks of the hon. senator from Belleville, and it is this: I consider this a very happy effort to put useful legislation on the statute-books. It augers well for the Bill, to have it received in such a manner by this honourable House, and I can assure the members of the Senate that the vast masses of the people of this country will feel that we have done right in accepting said Bill in the spirit which has been shown here to-day.

The labouring classes of this country have been under somewhat of a cloud, as can be assumed from the remarks passed by the hon. senator from Belleville, and no other hon. member of this House must run away with the idea, that because excesses took place, or extravagances are permitted by individual members of a trades union, that unionism is a poor thing in itself. On the contrary, it is the safeguard of our social relations, and our industrial relations. Trade unionism, no more than the medical fraternity, and no more than the legal fraternity, wish to infringe the rights of others. Medical men combine in a medical union to safeguard their rights; but, as I understand, it does not combine to trespass on the rights and privileges of other classes. So likewise do the members of the bar in every district in this country. And so do capitalists and bankers and manufacturers. Now, what we have so willingly accorded to these classes we should not grudgingly accord to the labouring classes, who are, in the long run, the essential element of this country. They are the makers and producers of wealth. I am glad to say that, owing to the keenness of the minister who framed this Bill in putting his own brain and heart into it, and not refusing the brain and heart of others, he has given us a Bill which appeals to the best sentiments of all classes in the community. The object of the Bill is to put elasticity into the relations that are strained between capital and labour. When relations become strained there is liable to be a break, and somebody has to suffer owing to that break. The object of this Bill is unique and simple. It is, when relations become strained, or are about to become strained, the government of the day or the minister of the day, shall have the power, under this Act, to introduce a feeling of good will in place of the animosity that may have sprung up owing to the strained relations; to introduce into the situation an elastic condition of things, so that there can be pourparlers between one side and the other to arrive at a common beneficial result. That is the sole object of the Bill. It is a very long Bill, quite a number of clauses in it, but they are only mechanical or material clauses. They are for the nomination of a board of conciliation, and the definition, in the first place of lockouts and strikes. That takes a page or two. And then there are three or four pages with reference to the organization of a board. These are material facts which ought not to take too much time in this honourable House in arriving at a decision, and I state, notwithstanding what the hon. senator from Belleville would say, that no effort would be made to railroad this Bill through the House. It is not necessary to railroad it through the House; but I may point out to this honourable House that since yesterday the country has been notified by the authorized leaders of labour in the Dominion parliament and by authorized leaders of labour outside, that this Bill should go into effect as soon as possible in view of contingencies that might arise in a very short time, so that if there is any effort made in this honourable House to put the Bill through as soon as possible, I say it would not be with the object of railroading it through, but rather that the labour elements demand that it shall be put on the statute-books as soon as possible. That shows a good condition of things on their part, and I have every confidence that the Bill as drafted will not require very many amendments. There may be a few verbal amendments necessary, but the object of the Bill cannot be interfered with. The means suggested to carry out that object are just as efficient as human intelligence and experience can devise at the present time. Probably in the working of it out we may come to other conclusions in regard to it. At the present moment, after reading the Bill and studying it and digesting it, I think it is just as fair a piece of legislation as can be put on the statute-books, in regard to the relations between capital and labour.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This is probably the most important Bill that we will have to consider during the present session. I am not blaming anybody, but I think it is very unfortunate that we should be forced to consider it under pressure, and that is what we are doing now. In place of having two days' notice after the Bill was read the first time, we are forced to give it a second reading on one day's notice, and without that opportunity of considering its provisions that we should have, considering the great importance of the interests that are involved. For my own part, I never find it of very much value to study the House of Commons Bill, because I do not know what I am dealing with. The very provisions I may be preparing to criticise may be changed when the Bill is finally submitted to us, and I think other hon. gentlemen have experienced the same difficulty. It is absolute folly indeed to commence the study of a Bill until you have it in the form in which it has passed the House of Commons. We were not in that position until to-day, and now we are reading the Bill a second time, and further, a rule is to be suspended to go into committee upon it. The remark of the hon. gentleman from Belleville is perfectly correct, that, after all, it is railroading this important measure through the House. We are driving it through under pressure of time, which we should not do, and I am very strong on that point, that no consideration of a desire for an adjournment, or anything of that kind should induce hon. members of this House to treat a Bill of this kind with less seriousness and less deliberation than it deserves. Many Bills have come before us since I have had the honour of a seat in this House, dealing with questions as between labour and capital, on which we have had various opportunities of placing our views on record. Some of these Bills, to my mind, seem to have had as their object the establishment of a boycott on the part of labourers to enable them to coerce their fellow employees into strikes, and forcing their employers with regard to the men whom they should employ in their establishments. My voice has always been found against any such Bills as that, and I have not changed my views in the slightest respect with regard to them. Great and important questions as between labour and capital are involved in the consideration of the Bill that is now before us, and with regard to that, I think it is a fair position to take that capital is generally quite able to take care of itself, and that the sympathy of parliament is due in a large measure to the labourers, who, notwithstanding any organizations that they may affect, will still be at a disadvantage in their contests with capital, which is always organized. Capitalists can say they put their capital in, and the question arises, what is the origin of this capital? The larger part of it originates in this way: the small earnings of the poor and middle classes are deposited in the banks at low rates of interests, and banks loan to capitalists, and capitalists give employment to labourers, and the money goes right around. I am not finding fault with the system, but that is the order of things. And when you come back to first principles, you find a great deal of the money that is called capital on the employers' side of the question, is the accumulations and earnings of middle classes and the poorer classes of the community. All that has to be considered in dealing with a measure such as this. The Bill as it comes before us only deals with labour troubles, disputes as they are called in the Bill, on certain classes of works. They are those that occur in mines and in industries connected with public utilities. I do not find any interpretation in the Bill of what 'public utilities' mean, but I presume it is a limited interpretation with regard to railways, and cognate undertakings of that kind, and the mentioning of mines would imply that the other industries of which the mines form a class are left out and not considered or provided for in the four corners of the Bill which is now before us; that the application of the Bill will only be to lockouts and strikes in mines, and to industries connected with public utilities. I am not sure that this is unwise as a tentative step. I am not going to take that ground, because after the experience of last year in reference to the disastrous, I might say, results that followed the strikes in the coal mines in the west, the matter has forced itself on the attention of all thoughtful men, and it became the duty of parliament to provide, in a cold country like this, where fuel is so essential to the very existence of the people, that strikes of coal miners should be brought under control and prevented if possible, in order that the people may not be compelled to endure the suffering which a great many poor people endured in the western country a portion of the present year. There is that limitation to the Bill, and there is another provision with regard to arbitrations that are going to be conducted under its operations. Wherever a dispute arises and a strike or a lockout is threatened, there is machinery in this Bill providing for an arbitration between the parties to the dispute; but the Bill does not go any further than providing that arbitration. No doubt a good arbitration appointed and brought into existence in that way will go a long way to bring about a settlement between reasonable men, and it must always be borne in mind that the great bulk of men are reasonable, if some dangerous man does not get into their councils; therefore I apprehend that a great deal of good will result from the operation of this Bill in preventing strikes and bringing about settlement. I think it might be safely taken for granted that we could hardly stop at that stage, that we ought to go further and make the settlements which are brought about with such great care under arbitration, which would be clothed with almost judicial functions final and conclusive, so that we would end strikes altogether. I am not going to urge an argument upon that view. I do not claim to be in possession of information upon the subject which would enable me to arrive at a positive conclusion. I do not come from a part of the Dominion where there are large utilities of this kind, or where there are large industries, and no doubt hon. gentlemen who belong to parts of the country where industries of this kind are largely carried on, are much more able to form opinions and give judgment upon them than I am. I am not going to impugn the wisdom of the Minister of Labour or of the government in stopping short of compulsory settlement. Probably one or two steps are enough to take at a time, and the latter and the final step may be taken after we have more experience. I have not had very much opportunity to look over the Bill, I confess. The House of Commons have had very ample opportunity. It was introduced in the Commons on the 17th December, and finally disposed of in that branch of parliament on the 19th March, giving the House of Commons over three months time to consider it, and we are given less than two days. I do not think we are doing ourselves justice in submitting to this treatment. However, there is no doubt the Bill comes to us in a very much better form than it was when introduced in the House of Commons. The time and careful consideration that has been bestowed upon it there has not been wasted or in vain, and it has produced a very well thought out Bill. But from my experience over many Bills which have had just as much consideration given them in the other Chamber, when we took a reasonable time and gave a fair and perfect consideration to such Bills, we are able to suggest improvements that were readily accepted by the House of Commons and proved to be of great value. I do not think it is at all unlikely therefore, if we had the time to discuss this Bill carefully, clause by clause, in a deliberative manner, that the same result would follow, and it is a pity that course is not being pursued. However, I think the House has made up its mind to dispose of the Bill as rapidly as it can. There is a strong desire for an adjournment, in which I do not at all coincide; nevertheless, that being the will of the House, we will have to do the very best we can, and with these observations I have no further remarks to make with regard to the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the Minister of Labour has reason to congratulate himself on the manner in which this Bill has been received. There has been really nothing said against it. The hon. gentleman from Belleville praised the Bill as a whole, and the hon. gentleman who has resumed his seat, as to whom I think one may truly say—and I do not say it in any offensive spirit—he is nothing if not critical—has to admit that the Bill in itself is good, and the criticisms which he has made are not criticisms of the Bill itself, but of the manner in which the Bill has been dealt with; and inasmuch as the Bill must be nearly perfect, the hon. gentleman will not expect me to say anything further in respect to it. Perhaps if I had permitted the hon. gentleman from Stadacona to precede me, he might have found some fault with it. I was somewhat surprised at the statement which the hon. gentleman from Marshfield made when he sat down. He expressed the fear—I took it as a fear—that the members of this House were actuated by the desire to adjourn at an early date for Easter, and that was a sentiment in which he did not concur. Hon. gentlemen are aware that at the present time the crossing of the Straits of Northumberland is very unsatisfactory; and the hon. gentleman from Marshfield probably feels that if we were to adjourn to-morrow he would not have a chance to get home. If we were to remain here for a week or so discussing the Bill, then the crossing might be easier, and the hon. gentleman could get home. I only throw out that suggestion. I do not mean to say that is the case, but that is the possible explanation of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I can always get across the straits when I want to—anybody can.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Crossing by the capes is not very satisfactory at this time of the year. The hon. gentleman was not very accurate I think when he attributed the haste, if one may say so, with which this measure has been considered, to a desire for adjournment on the part of the hon. members. That really is not the case. The members of this House are not influenced by any selfish motive such as that. The sentiment which influences members of this House has been already indicated by the hon. Secretary of State when he introduced the Bill. There are grave reasons why this measure should become law before the 1st of April. That is the reason why we are hurrying. It is now the 21st March.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why suspend the rule?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not saying it is absolutely necessary to suspend the rule; but that is the reason why it is important that no time should be lost; and the hon. gentleman, although he thought that we should have had three months to consider this measure as the Commons had, really answered that objection himself, before he sat down, because he pointed out that the whole subject had been very fully considered in the Commons. The Bill has been very much improved, as a result of consideration and discussion in that House; and I add this as a natural conclusion, that there are very few issues upon which this House can divide or upon which there can be very much difference of opinion. All that we can hope to do here is perhaps, in some places to improve the wording of the measure. I do not think that the hon. gentleman has suggested that any substantial change can be made. There were certain things which he said he hoped would come by and by, but I think both he and the hon. gentleman from Belleville recognize the fact, that as things now are the Bill goes about as far as it should go, and consequently we have nothing to do, I think, but consider in committee the details of the measure and improve its language if we can.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I desire to offer a few remarks. Permit me to say that I am very much pleased that the government have felt it their duty to bring in this Bill, and I am very glad to notice the spirit in which these provisions have been met in this House. I earnestly hope that its application to the conditions of our country will be most advantageous, and that we will not have the number of strikes and such an unfortunate condition of things in Canada as we have had in the past, after it becomes law. I do hope it will accomplish the anticipated results that have been outlined in its introduction. I have read over carefully the views that have been expressed, and I do hope it will prevent a repetition of things that have taken place. Permit me to add, that if it had not been for this Bill being introduced, I would have pressed more strongly and forcibly, if it were possible for me to do so, the consideration of the measure which received the six months hoist yesterday. I am willing to give the promoters of the Bill a full opportunity of seeing what can be accomplished under it, but I do say if we are to have a repetition of our experiences in past years, by strangers coming in and inciting strikes and taking part in them, I shall consider it my duty to introduce the Bill that was rejected yesterday, and press it with all the power I can bring in its favour, in order to prevent the continuation of a condition under which we have suffered in the past. I do hope that this Bill will prevent it, and in order that it may, I shall give every assistance in my power in giving it effect. I hope the effort of the government will meet with success in so far as the provisions of the Bill are concerned.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read a second time.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (3) An Act in amendment of the Railway Act, 1903.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. POWER—Turning to section 159 of the Railway Act, I am unable to quite understand what the object of the Bill is. The sections which precede 159 in the Railway Act deal with the taking of land by a railway company. Then the company have to give the owner notice, and if, within ten days after the serving of the notice, or within one month after the publication thereof, the owner does not give notice that he accepts the sum offered by the company, the judge shall, on the application of the company, notice of which shall be given to the opposite party, appoint an arbitrator to determine the compensation to be paid to the owner. This Bill now before us proposes to insert the words 'Or the opposite party,' but you see it is the opposite party who is in default. I do not know that it is going to do any particular harm. The hon. gentleman from Wolseley would do well to leave the section in the Railway Act as it is at present.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN, from the committee, reported that they made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (36) An Act to aid in the prevention and settlement of strikes and lockouts in mines and industries connected with public untilities.

(In the Committee.)

On subclause (2) and clause 4,

2. The office of registrar may be held either separately or in conjunction with any other office in the public service, and in the latter case the registrar may, if the Governor in Council thinks fit, be appointed, not by name, but by reference to such other office, whereupon the person who for the time being holds such office, or performs its duties, shall by virtue thereof be the registrar.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This clause leaves it optional with the Governor in Council to appoint a registrar and takes it out of the hands of the Minister of Labour.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He would be appointed by order in council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Labour.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it the intention to have an additional official ? This gives the government power to make the appointment, and, no doubt, it will be done.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You will notice that any official in the Labour Department may exercise the powers of registrar.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that, but it will be an additional officer and an additional salary.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not necessarily, unless it develops into an important office which must be kept up continuously. Otherwise, an extra clerk who has not very much to do might be appointed registrar.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We should have some explanation why that provision was made. I cannot see why a registrar should be named not by his own name, but by reference to some other office he holds.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hon. gentlemen will see that it is absolutely impossible to foreshadow what the duties of a registrar shall be. It is a new idea altogether. It is quite likely that a clerk who is now employed in the Labour Department may be registrar. If, however, the duties become considerable, it may be necessary to name some person outside altogether. Latitude is given, so that action may be taken according to the circumstances of the case.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It might be possible, under this clause, to appoint some person who is now an official of the Labour Department to act as registrar, under the name of the office that he now holds. Why should he not hold the title of registrar ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The objection is to the second part of the clause

And in the latter case the registrar may, if the Governor in Council thinks fit, be appointed not by name but by reference to such other office.

Why is this provision made ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand the clause means simply this : It gives power to the Governor in Council to appoint a registrar who holds no other position in the government ; but it also enables the Governor in Council to appoint a Deputy Minister of Labour or the Minister of Trade and Commerce by the name of the office he holds, instead of using his own name. Or they may say that a first-class clerk in some department shall act as registrar.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is correct. The language is perfectly plain, and I do not see how there can be a second opinion upon it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We know precisely what is to be done ; but I cannot see why, in appointing an officer, he should not be designated by his proper name ? Why should he, as it were, lose his identity, so far as his name is concerned ? There is no objection to combining two officers, but why should the second appointment be by reference to his other office ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I suppose there are various positions in the civil service where extra duties are imposed on the chief clerk or some other officer. It is not a matter that is likely to arise. It is rather unfortunate drafting—it is too full.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Here is another case ; suppose a man is appointed from outside the department, he is appointed by his name, but if an official in a department is given the position of registrar, you say we appoint a second-class clerk to act as registrar, but you do not give his name—Why ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is just an alternative proposition. The Governor in Council may name John Brown as registrar. If he does not do that, an officer in the Labour Department may be named, and it may be, say, the chief clerk shall act as registrar.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Assuming his name is Smith, why not call him Smith ?

Hon. Mr. JONES—The only object is, if he were superseded in his chief clerkship by Jones, it would necessitate a new order in council for his appointment. As it is now, they will require to make only one appointment, and so long as they kept the office filled, the person filling the office will be the officer under this clause. That is the only object there possibly can be in having the clause read as it does.

The subsection was adopted.

On clause 5,

5. Wherever any dispute exists between an employer and any of his employees, and the parties thereto are unable to adjust it, either of the parties to the dispute may make application to the minister for the appointment of a board of conciliation and investigation, to which board the dispute may be referred under the provisions of this Act : Provided, however, that, in the case of a dispute between a railway company and its employees, such dispute may be referred, for the purpose of conciliation and investigation, under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the Conciliation and Labour Act.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Does this clause mean that none but the parties to the dispute may make an application ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is limited to either the employer or the employees.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—So the municipality cannot make an application.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Well, what is the meaning of the proviso ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The railway employees have a union, and the Act passed in 1903 referred to that. They intimated their desire not to come under that Act in all particulars, but still to come under the Railway Labour Disputes Act. It was simply an expression of desire on their part to come under that particular clause.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will this be optional or imperative, that all disputes of this kind are to be taken out of the operation of this Act ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It arises in this way ; the railway employees have made a study of this question, and they said they preferred, if a dispute arose with the company, that they should come under that clause.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Suppose the railway employees should exercise their option to have this matter dealt with by the Railway Conciliation Act instead of under this Bill, and suppose the railway authorities should take the other view, would this clause be imperative in that case ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clearly.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is not an imperative provision—I would read it as an optional measure. If you make it optional you should say who may exercise the option ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The minister would have a right to say.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—In the Act of 1903, in the case of a dispute between the employees and the railway company, the municipality interested may make the application, so that that provision has reference to the fact that a third party may apply to the board as well as the parties who are named here as disputants.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think that answers the question at all. Who has the power to refer it and who has the power to refuse ? Is it the Governor in Council, or the railway employees, or the railway company ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I agree with the hon. member from Belleville, that it ought to be clearly stated.

Hon. Mr. JONES—If under this provision a dispute of this nature arises then such dispute may be referred——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—By whom?

Hon. Mr. JONES—If by any person, surely by the Minister of Labour, who will have the general administration of the Act. I should think that is the meaning of it. If not, it is extremely doubtful what the result would be.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 6 explains it all.

Hon. Mr. JONES—That does not meet the point at all.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The general principle of the Bill is that an application must come from one of the parties, and as soon as that application is received by the board then the minister proceeds to act. In that case, I do not see how the Minister of Labour has any power to refer it, unless there is some machinery provided in the Bill for reference to another board.

Hon. Mr. JONES—Is it desirable, if a railway company makes an application, that the Minister of Labour should have the right of deciding whether it should go under the Railway Act or under this measure? Because, as I understand it, that matter may be so decided. That seems to leave it optional to the administrator under this Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Under section 3 of the Railways Disputes Act it is evidently left to the minister.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The interpretation clause clearly includes railways. Clause 5 would seem to provide that railways should be left out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If they so desire.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Who is to exercise that desire?

Hon Mr. SCOTT—The parties themselves.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But if they do not agree ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The minister may.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Where is the provision that would enable the minister to act if an application comes from either party, because if the proviso in section 5 takes them out of the Railway Act—which I think it plainly must do—it must provide who shall have the right to decide whether one party to the dispute shall take it out of the operation of the Act, or whether the other shall. You must have machinery to settle that. I think the intention is to take them out absolutely. You find clause 6 provides how the minister shall proceed when the reference is not a railway dispute.

The CHAIRMAN—Does not clause 6 mean this : That if a railway dispute arises which has not already been referred under the Act of 1903, the minister may Act?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot see it. As I understand it, this proviso is that disputes may be taken out of the purview of this Bill, but who is to exercise that option? Will one party have the power ? It seems to me there ought to be an option given, or provision made, that both parties must concur.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It rests entirely with the minister on the application of the men.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is some little doubt as to the point here and we might as well set it at rest. As has been pointed out, one party might say they did not wish to come under the terms of the Conciliation and Labour Act, while the other did so wish. The better way would be to insert in line fifteen, after the word 'may' the words 'on the application of either party.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the third line it says : 'Either of the parties to the dispute may make application to the minister.'

It being six o'clock, the committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

The committee resumed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not really see any necessity for the change. I think the intention is absolutely clear. By this Bill there is a large amount of discretion given to the minister, and I am quite sure no party will interfere with the decision of the minister.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—May I ask the hon. gentleman whether, under the Railway Conciliation Act, the Minister of Labour is to be the minister there ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Or would it be the Minister of Railways ? The Act provides that any minister may be named.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it means the Minister of Labour. In the Act of 1903 the words are :

> The expression 'minister' means the Minister of Labour.

Then I refer hon. members to sections 64 and 65 of this Bill, which shows that the evident intention was to rest the sovereignty in the minister, and, therefore, I do not think we should be too exacting in the phraseology, because the various clauses have been very thoroughly considered. They have been three months at it in the Commons, and the clauses have been changed to suit the gentlemen who have taken an interest in the Bill. I should regret on that account any interference with the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The logical sequence of the view of the hon. Secretary of State is that we should not go into committee at all. The hon. gentleman says 'you are in committee, but you are not to amend the Bill.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have given you my explanation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have heard it given also with respect to other Bills. I think the Bill is here for the committee to deal with, and if we think we can improve it, it is our duty to do so. That is what the Senate is for, and we shall not waste time unnecessarily over it. I wish to say now, after further consideration that I do not think that the amendment to the 5th clause is necessary and I therefore do not press it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We have still had no explanation. I will venture to offer one of my own, which is somewhat different from that which has been given from the government side of the House. After having had a little time to look over these clauses, and looking at the interpretation clause, and the exception there made with reference to railways, the conclusion I have arrived at is that the proviso in section 6 allows these cases, as far as they relate to railways, to go to the Railway Conciliation Board, and to be operated under that Act, and that the 6th clause of this Bill gives the minister power, on receiving application to institute proceedings under this Act except where a reference has been taken under the Railway Conciliation Act with regard to railway matters, and where that has occurred he has no jurisdiction to institute an investigation under this Act at all. It would be made very much clearer by the introduction of a word or two; but, after considering the matter, I think it is fairly clear as it is. Although I have not followed the history of the Bill, I think these changes were made after the Bill was framed, at some subsequent stage in the House of Commons. As my hon. friend, the leader of the House has intimated, the railway people have expressed a preference to have their disputes dealt with under the conciliation and labour Act, otherwise known as the Railway Conciliation Board. That proviso, in section 5, was supplemented by what you might call a parenthetical clause in section 6 in order to make provision for that. Then the application having been made under the Railway Conciliation Act, and the same minister acting for both, and finding that action has been taken there, he has no power, even if he wants to, to institute any action under the present Bill; therefore, the jurisdiction in regard to railway matters, when the application had been made to the railway tribunal, would rest with that one and that one alone. That is the way I read it, and I think there is nothing incongruous about it, after I have had time to consider it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I did not hear the amendment that the hon. gentleman said he would make.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I suggested the introduction of one word that would make it so clear that it could not be misunderstood. It is in clause 6 that amendment would come. In the event of two different ministers administering, one the Railway and Conciliation Act and the other this Act, it would be hard to settle in point of time which moved first.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would be the same minister.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—In the interpretation clause, 'minister' means the Minister of Labour.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend is right; but, under the Railway Conciliation Act, the government could designate the minister to carry out the law; and if the application were made to two different ministers, it would be hard to determine which side acted first and which Act should be proceeded under.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The expression 'minister' means the Minister of Labour in the Railway Conciliation Act.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If one of the two parties chooses this board and the other chooses the other board, who will decide?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The minister.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The whole spirit of this Bill is to vest in the Minister of Labour very wide powers.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In the Revised Statutes, 1903, it is the Minister of Labour who is to act, but I find in the Act of 1903 it is the minister that may be designated by the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not see how the revisers made the change. I will call the attention of the Minister of Justice to it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I dare say this idea was in the minds of the revisers: At the present time the Postmaster General is Minister of Labour. The Department of Labour might be attached to the head of some other department. And I suppose that is the reason the change was made in the revised statutes.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 7,

7. Every board shall consist of three members who shall be appointed by the minister.
2. Of the three members of the board one shall be appointed on the recommendation of the employer and one on the recommendation of the employees (the parties to the dispute), and the third on the recommendation of the members so chosen.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I should like to have this clause amended to provide that the minister shall appoint a third one from each province who shall be a permanent chairman.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those boards are only to be appointed for the occasion. They are not to be permanent.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—But in order to give a standing to the board, and to save time, and get an experienced chairman, the chairman who is an appointee of the minister, ought to be appointed permanently. I am not wedded to the idea of having one in each province, but I think that it is better than to appoint one for the whole Dominion, because the territory would be too large. If hon. gentlemen will look at subclause 4 of clause 8, they will find that the appointment is left with the minister in case the two other members of the board do not name a third arbitrator within a certain time. I admit that he is only appointed for that occasion. If you look also at clause 51, you will find that an allowance of $5 a day is given to these two members of the board who are appointed by the parties to the dispute, and that they are allowed three days to make their choice of a third arbitrator. If money were an object, you would save money by having a permanent chairman ; but what is really to my mind, of greater importance is, that the standing of this board would be very effectively increased if a permanent chairman were appointed for the province, or any other division they may choose within the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—While I have no doubt my hon. friend means very well, the trouble would be that the government would practically have the appointment of two members of the board. What my hon. friend means is, that each party shall appoint a representative to settle the matter and the government to appoint a third one.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—What I said was, that in case of the two failing to name a third arbitrator, then it rests with the minister.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—But before the minister would act, the parties are given a certain time within which to name an arbitrator. If you take that away the government will have the appointment on their own hands, without any reference to the Conciliation Act. What the government wants to do is to let each party to the dispute select its own representative. If they fail to select a third arbitrator, power must be given to somebody to make the selection, and that power is given to the minister. But if the suggestion of the hon. senator from Glengarry were adopted, the government would at all times have a permanent officer as the third arbitrator. That would not be fair, because he might be objectionable to one party or the other. The whole object of the Conciliation Act is that the two parties should select an arbitrator to settle the dispute. To make the government responsible, and to say that they should in each or any province have a permanent third arbitrator would destroy the whole effect of the Conciliation Act. I have a dispute with my men, and name Smith as my arbitrator, and my men nominate Brown. If Smith and Brown fail to agree on a third arbitrator the government steps in for the purpose of preventing delay in settling the dispute, and it is only in the last resort that the minister interferes to name a third arbitrator.

Hon. Mr. FERRGUSON—The suggested amendment is a very good one which should be adopted by this House. There are several strong reasons for it. The first is that, by having a third arbitrator nominated by the government permanently, you would have a chance of getting a better man. Secondly. He would have experience. The experience in one dispute would be valuable in taking up the next one, and he would gain in experience from day to day and from year to year. It would also save a great deal of time. Under clause 51, an allowance of $5 a day is given to the two arbitrators for a period of three days while they are selecting a third man. You may always depend upon their taking the three days.

Hon. Mr. POWER—They are allowed $15 a day when they get to work.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They get $5 a day while they are selecting a third man, and from my experience as a member of the government, in dealing with arbitrators' remuneration, you may depend on it that it will take the three days to come to a settlement, and ultimately the minister might have to appoint a third arbitrator. It would be a loss of three days which might be of great importance in dealing with a dispute, and the amendment would save the payment of $30 which would go to these two men while they were arguing about the third man. In place of getting an inexperienced man, the government if they had the appointment, would be able to nominate a good man, because there would be employment for him for a good many days of the year. A good many days of the year strikes might be threatened and he might be called from this part of the province or another part of the province, and to my mind there are all these advantages to be gained from pursuing this course. First there is the time saved in getting the board in operation; secondly the money saved while the two men would be choosing the third arbitrator, and then the chances of getting a much more experienced man than you would otherwise have. The man who would be called from place to place to deal with these matters would gain by experience, and you might get a better man to take charge of the work if you offered him anything like a good position.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Supposing the government accepted the recommendation of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, to appoint a permanent arbitrator, where would he reside?

Hon. Mr. TESSIER—In Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—How could he get to Halifax? The hon. gentleman from Glengarry suggested one arbitrator in each province, but he withdrew that proposition. Very often disputes arise very suddenly, and if the arbitrator resided in Ottawa, he would have great difficulty in reaching the point of dispute in three days, in the eastern part of the Dominion or in the sparsely settled districts even of Ontario, and my hon. friend's argument that for the sake of getting three days extra work two arbitrators would delay the choosing of a third for the purpose of putting $30 in their pocket, is a poor compliment to the men selected by the employers and the employees. The men in the locality are always the best men to judge the merits of the disputes. People here might talk of a strike in British Columbia or in Nova Scotia, but we are not able to judge of the circumstances under which these strikes arise, and the only legitimate and practical way of settling a dispute of the kind is to refer it to people on the ground who know the facts.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The question my hon. friend asks me argues strongly in favour of the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Glengarry. After consuming the three days, as they would be certain to do, in arguing over the appointment of a third man, they might not agree, and then the minister would have to consider the matter and might lose some time before he could get a man to act. He might telegraph to one man, and might not get an answer until the next day, and perhaps he would not be able to get any one to act for a considerable time, whereas if he had a permanent man who would be right on the spot, he would be able to take the matter up at once.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—My hon. friend has not had the experience I have had with strikes. I have had a strike every week for a whole year on government works, and I know the difficulty. The easiest thing in the world is to create a strike, and the most difficult thing is to settle it, and the employer of labour must think not only for himself but for the employees and with all due respect to the integrity of my hon. friend, and the work he performs in this House, I must tell him that the difficulties he sets up can be very easily settled by the minister, who can easily telegraph to the mayor of the city or some prominent man in the locality to accept the position of third arbitrator.

Hon. Mr. COX—I think it is very important that the employer and the employee should, as far as possible, appoint the men who are going to settle the dispute, and you cannot do it more effectually than by this clause. Each side appoints one arbitrator, and those two appoint a third. Each party appoints one and a half arbitrator, if I may so put it. You get just as near to the parties who are in dispute as it is possible in this way. If a permanent arbitrator were appointed, you might have 800 men out on strike, as we have to-day at Sydney, and there is every possibility, every probability, of a strike at Fernie almost at any day now; and what would you do with one man appointed by the government, with two or three strikes in different parts of the country? Then, again, there is another difficulty: These positions become government appointments, permanent appointments, and fairly good appointments, and they would become political appointments, and it is very important to have that element eliminated from these arbitrations. Let the contending parties appoint their own men; and if they do not do right, their own appointees are the ones who have failed. I think the arguments are strongly in favour of the clause as it is.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The proposal made by the hon. gentleman from Alexandria would destroy the conciliatory principle that pervades the whole Bill. Does the hon. gentleman imagine that the labour unions would be willing to accept a permanent government official as third man? It would be preposterous. Besides, the same person would not be eligible. Here are a number of utilities. If there is a strike on a steamship, for instance, the man who would be selected to settle the difficulty would not be the same person who would be selected to settle trouble with the miners. The utilities are different, and the person selected should be a man conversant with the subject in dispute. It would be wholly inconsistent with the spirit of the Act if you were to appoint a permanent person who could not possibly be acceptable to all the parties working in the different utilities. They would say: 'What does Mr. So-and-so know about this matter? He knows nothing about miners.' Would they be satisfied with a man who knew nothing about miners? The underlying principle of the Bill is the will of those protected by it. They have their choice, and they try to agree among themselves to get a third man acceptable to both.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I venture to say that in a large number of cases, if not in the majority, the matter will have to go to the minister, and the appointment will have to be made in this way in the majority of cases.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps my view of this matter may differ from some gentlemen who have given their opinion as to the propriety of allowing the clause to remain as it is. As this is a Conciliatory Act, I think the arguments of the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Cox) are unanswerable. One reason why I would object to placing the power in the hands of the government is that I have so little confidence in them, and I think their appointments would be of such a character as to render the Bill entirely unworkable. That is one reason why I approve of the clause, and, in a great measure, of many other clauses, because that eliminates from it the power that is usually given to the government. If I had the implicit confidence in the government that my hon. friend from Lincoln (Hon. Mr. Gibson) has, I might not differ from him. I approve of the clause as it is. I think the least the government has to do with any of these appointments the better it will be for the successful carrying out of the object of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—If the government insist on this clause, I will vote for it; but it seems to me there is a better way, which I will suggest without wishing to make a motion. There is no doubt that if the government have to name the third arbitrator, the matter will become a party affair. If, instead of that, we provided that the Chief Justice would name the third arbitrator, I do not think either the employer or employees would object. If the government makes the appointment, it might be suggested that they would be more on the side of the employer than that of the employee.

The motion was declared lost.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 8,

8. For the purposes of appointment of the members of the board, the following provisions shall apply:

1. Each party to the dispute may, at the time of making application or within five days after being requested so to do by the minister, recommend the name of one person who is willing and ready to act as a member of the board, and the minister shall appoint such person a member of the board.

2. If either of the parties fails or neglects to duly make any recommendation within the said period, or such extension thereof as the minister, on cause shown, grants, the minister shall, as soon thereafter as possible, appoint a fit person to be a member of the board; and such member shall be deemed to be appointed on the recommendation of the said party.

3. The members chosen on the recommendation of the parties may, within five days after their appointment, recommend the name of one person who is willing and ready to act as a third member of the board, and the minister shall appoint such person a member of the board.

4. If the members chosen on the recommendation of the parties fail or neglect to duly make any recommendation within the said period, or such extension thereof as the minister, on cause shown, grants, the minister shall, as soon thereafter as possible, appoint a fit person to be a third member of the board, and such member shall be deemed to be appointed on the recommendation of the two other members of the board.

5. The third member shall be the chairman of the board.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Subclause 4 of this clause which states that the third arbitrator shall be deemed to be appointed on the recommendation of the other two members of the board, is a remarkable provision. When the two arbitrators cannot agree on the appointment of a third, the minister is called upon to make the appointment, but this sub-clause states that he shall be deemed to be appointed on the recommendation of the board.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can the hon. Secretary of State inform us why we should enact a falsehood?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not a falsehood.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The appointment by the government of a member of the board can only take place if the others do not appoint him, and they fail to recommend anybody; yet that appointment is declared to be on the recommendation of the other two members of the board—the recommendation that they have positively declined to make.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Go back to section 7, subsection 2:

2. Of the three members of the board one shall be appointed on the recommendation of the employer and one on the recommendation of the employees (the parties to the dispute), and the third on the recommendation of the members so chosen.

And it is on that assumption that he takes the place as if he were appointed by the two. He stands in that position.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He stands in the position as if he had been recommended, but he has not been recommended, and this clause declares he was.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Bill says that he shall be deemed, and dealt with and regarded in the same way as if he was so appointed.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause (3) of clause 15:

3. The application may mention the name of a person who is willing and ready and desires to act as a member of the board representing the party or parties making the application.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY moved to strike out 'and desires.' He said: It would show that the man was partial.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It means this: The men meet and name one of their number, who is asked if he is willing to act. He says, 'Yes, I am willing. I desire to act as your representative.' There is nothing wrong in that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There might be many men who would object to have it said about them that they desire to act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is for the men to act.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Do I understand from the hon. Secretary of State that a person who is to act on this board representing one of the parties in the dispute may be one of the interested parties?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Usually, in the case of a strike, one of the principal men of the union acts. For instance, when we had trouble here at the Bureau the man who came to act for the men was a man from Indianapolis, a member of the union. He took charge of the whole movement. He was called on and he said: 'Yes, I am prepared to act.'

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I cannot see any objection to selecting one of the strikers. The men naturally employ one of themselves who will be zealous to act for them.

In the same way the employers select a partisan.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to direct attention to the fact that clause 11 of this Bill provides that no person shall act as a member of the board who has any direct pecuniary interest in the issue of a dispute referred to such board. If it is a question about wages it would come under that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The meaning is perfectly clear A man whose wages would be affected by the result should not be a member of the board. While I do not undertake to move an amendment, the amendment proposed by the hon. senator for Wolseley is a proper one. Looking at the character of the duty which the arbitrator has to perform, the man who would be anxious for that position is not the right sort of a man to appoint.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—How are you going to select an impartial man?

Hon. Mr. POWER—A gentleman may be willing and ready to do an unpleasant thing for the sake of the body he belongs to, but to say that he desires to do it is a different matter altogether. The hon. gentleman, I have no doubt, has felt it his duty to leave his comfortable home between midnight and sunrise to attend a patient, but he did not desire to do it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I desire to do it, to make money out of it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Three things may be stated in this application—he is willing and ready and desires. Men may be found who are both willing and ready, and yet it would not be true to say that they desire to undertake such a duty. The words 'and desires' are not only superfluous but objectionable.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They were not in the original Bill, but were introduced after discussion, in the House of Commons, and the minister accepted them because he did not think they would be any harm.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Every one may not think as the minister or the House of Commons think; and the hon. gentleman's argument that we must not make even this change because the House of Commons put the words there, would be an excellent argument for abolishing the Senate; but it is not an argument to address to this House. I complained this afternoon that we were pressed to pass this Bill in a great hurry. Our dealing with the Bill is simply farcical, because there is a determination not to accept a single amendment. My hon. friend has told us that the House of Commons had given us a perfect Bill and therefore we had nothing to do but close our eyes, open our mouths and swallow it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When this Bill was introduced, it was understood that the House was to have a recess and some hon. gentlemen left here under the impression that the recess was to commence on Thursday; finally it was decided that that was not possible and that it would begin on Friday. The House has a perfect right to make changes in the Bill but that means that we will have to sit next week, and that would be unfair to those gentlemen who have gone away under the impression that the Bill would pass without amendment.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The amendments could be dealt with in the House of Commons in the morning.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The hon. member from Marshfield takes exception to the word 'desires.' If a man is willing to act, can you compel him unless he desires to act?

Hon. Mr. COX—I think the clause would read better with that word out, but it is not of sufficient importance to send the Bill back to the House of Commons if there is no other amendment to be made. If a man does not desire to do a thing, he will not do it. The word is entirely superfluous and means nothing one way or the other; it is simply a repetition of willing and ready.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not good drafting.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Some hon. gentlemen think it would delay the Bill in the House of Commons if we made an amendment. The House of Commons will only discuss the amendments and I am satisfied they would accept this amendment without hesitation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State has intimated that no amendments will be accepted by the government, and for the reason that if an amendment is made it will delay the sanctioning of the Bill by the Governor General, and therefore we cannot have an adjournment to-morrow. That is about the argument.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—To be frank that is it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If that is accepted by the Senate, what is the use of our considering the Bill at all? It is an extraordinary position for the government to take, to bring down a Bill of this great importance and say we must either pass it without amendment or have no adjournment. That is placing the Senate in a humiliating position. To my mind, the word 'desire' in the clause amounts to very little, but what I protest against is bringing down a Bill of this character and then telling us coolly that the government will accept no amendments, because it would prevent members going home for the adjournment.

Hon. Mr. COX—Supposing we pass this clause, and after we get through with the Bill find there are no amendments, but that one, I do not think any one will consider it sufficiently important to strike out those words; but if there are other amendments I think we ought to strike out the words to which exception has been taken.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—In case of a dispute arising in a city or town, a committee of the labour union may go to the mayor before arbitrators are appointed, and the mayor may express a desire to arbitrate. What harm would it be to express that desire, and what objection could there be to having the word in this Bill? The position of arbitrator it not a desirable one in a dispute of any kind. It always leads to a good deal of criticism, especially if the side he represents should lose. It often occurs that a man occupying the position of mayor is requested to act and may express a desire to help to settle differences between workmen and their employers, and I cannot see why the word should not remain in the clause.

The amendment was declared lost, and the subclause was adopted.

On subsection (1) of clause 16.

The application and the declaration accompanying it: (1) if made by an employer, an incorporated company or corporation, shall be signed by some one of its duly authorized managers or other principal executive officers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In the clause we have just passed, it is provided that the application should be in writing. Now supposing the dispute occurs in British Columbia, or some other part of the Dominion, would a telegram be considered an application in writing?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clearly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The clause we are now considering says the application must be signed. That would be worse than the resignation of Mr. Hyman.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A telegram would be signed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—By whom? By the operator who received it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The operator repeats a signed document.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand my hon. friend to say that if a strike occurs, say at Rossland, and a telegram is sent applying for the appointment of this board to settle it, and it is signed by a telegraphic operator in Ottawa, that that would be considered a request in writing signed by the applicants?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. I should like to ask my hon. friend who is to dispute it? There is no one to dispute it except the man who sent it, and who might send another telegram saying he did not want it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But suppose the man did dispute it, what would be the result?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would call attention to clause 65, which provides that no proceeding under this Act shall be deemed invalid by reason of any defect of form, or any technical irregularity.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Both clauses 17 and 18 require that the application may be transmitted by registered letter, and not by telegram.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The difficulty may not arise, but it is possible.

The subclause was adopted.

On clause 19,

19. Upon receipt by either party to a dispute of a copy of the application for the appointment of a board such party shall, without delay, prepare a statement in reply to the application and transmit it by registered letter, or by personal delivery, to the registrar and to the party making the application.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A difficulty might arise in British Columbia or some other distant part of the Dominion, and an application be sent, but it must be sent by registered letter. Would the Act take effect the moment that letter was mailed ? If not, six or seven days might elapse before the letter reached here, and all the damage might be done before the department received the letter.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—If that were the case, they would break the whole spirit of the Act by striking before asking for arbitration. No strike can take place until these documents reach the department. Nothing can be done until the arbitrators have decided one way or the other.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 56 provides that:

56. It shall be unlawful for any employer to declare or cause a lockout, or for any employee to go on strike on account of any dispute prior to or during a reference of such dispute to a board of conciliation and investigation under the provisions of this Act, or prior to or during a reference under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the Conciliation and Labour Act.

If a dispute arises, they have to go on working, otherwise they become liable for the penalty.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 50,

50. The board may, with the consent of the minister, employ competent experts or assessors to examine the books or official reports of either party, and to advise it upon any technical or other matter material to the investigation, but shall not disclose such reports or the results of such inspection or examination under this section without the consent of both the parties to the dispute.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why is the consent of the minister asked for ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the employment of experts or assessors. I presume the minister might have a voice. I do not know why he should not have; it is a question of expense, of course.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 51,

51. The members of a board while engaged in the adjustment of a dispute shall be remunerated for their services as follows :
(a) to members other than the chairman :
(i) an allowance of five dollars a day for a time not exceeding three days during which the members may be actually engaged in selecting a third member of the board ;
(ii) an allowance of fifteen dollars for each whole day's sittings of the board;
(iii) an allowance of seven dollars for each half-day's sittings of the board ;
(b) the chairman shall be allowed twenty dollars a day for each whole day's sittings of the board, and ten dollars a day for each half-day's sittings ;
(c) no allowance shall be made to any member of the board on account of any sitting of the board which does not extend over a half-day, unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the minister that such meeting of the board was necessary to the performance of its duties as speedy as possible, and that the causes which prevented a half-day's sitting of the board were beyond its control.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think a change might be made in that first subsection. If the parties cannot agree in one day, they probably will not agree at all. Allowing the three days they will almost surely consume the time in order to secure the pay.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They may have to communicate with a dozen parties.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—A day is not defined. What is it ? They might meet at noon, take their lunch at one o'clock, and have an hour after luncheon, and that would be a whole day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no harm in giving them latitude.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 56,

56. It shall be unlawful for any employer to declare or cause a lockout, or for any employee to go on strike, on account of any dispute prior to or during a reference of such dispute to a board of conciliation and investigation under the provisions of this Act, or prior to or during a reference under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the Conciliation and Labour Act : Provided that nothing in this Act shall prohibit the suspension or discontinuance of any industry or of the working of any persons therein for any cause not constituting a lockout or strike : Provided also that, except where the parties have entered into an agreement under section 62 of this Act, nothing in this Act shall be held to restrain any employer from declaring a lockout, or any employee from going on strike in respect of any dispute which has been duly referred to a board and which has been dealt with under section 24 or 25 of this Act, or in respect of any dispute which has been the subject of a reference under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the Conciliation and Labour Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This section makes it unlawful to go on strike or cause a lockout after the passage of this Act, until after the application has been made and a board of arbitration has been appointed, and that board ends its labours and fails to effect an agreement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We all know that strikes and lockouts do not occur suddenly; that there is discussion between the employers and employees during a considerable period, and it occurred to me that that word 'prior' had reference to the time the discussion began over a question of wages or time or whatever it might be. I do not regard it as so absolute as my hon. friend considers it to be, though, probably he is right.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The word 'prior' goes right back?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Does this apply to steam railways?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—They have the privilege of taking either the Act of 1903 or the present one?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understand that when parties have entered into an agreement, under this clause, there is nothing to be done. A strike would be unlawful, if under clause 24, a settlement has been affected, and a memorandum to that effect sent to the Minister of Labour?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is where the settlement comes in. If the settlement is made, that is the end of it. But under clause 25, if they fail to agree, they can have a strike or a lockout. If it is settled, the parties are bound by the agreement.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think it is a fair interpretation that it would prevent any lockout after the passing of this Bill until the arbitration is over.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think that is right.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 63,

63. In the event of a dispute arising in any industry or trade other than such as may be included under the provisions of this Act and such dispute threatens to result in a lockout or strike, or has actually resulted in a lockout or strike, either of the parties may agree in writing to allow such dispute to be referred to a board of conciliation and investigation, to be constituted under the provisions of this Act.

2. Every agreement to allow such reference shall be forwarded to the registrar, who shall communicate it to the other party, and if such other party agrees in like manner to allow the dispute to be referred to a board, the dispute may be so referred as if the industry or trade and the parties were included within the provisions of this Act.

3. From the time that the parties have been notified in writing by the registrar that in consequence of their mutual agreement to refer the dispute to a board under the provisions of this Act, the minister has decided to refer such dispute, the lockout or strike, if in existence, shall forthwith cease, and the provisions of this Act shall bind the parties.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think this clause will enable the board to go very far afield and dispose of difficulties in other lines of industries than that included in the title of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If both parties are willing, yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It may be widened so as to include all the industries in the country?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think it is a very good provision.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I think they are sure to avail themselves of it.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I intended to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to clause 16, subclause 4, which provides that an application for an arbitration if made by employees some or all of whom are not members of a trade union, shall be signed by two of their number duly authorized by a majority vote taken by ballot of the employees present at a meeting called on not less than three days' notice for the purpose of discussing the question.

Then section 20, subsection 4, subclause (b) requires that a statement in reply to such application should be served upon at least ten of the number where it is made by employees. It would appear to me that the application should be signed by ten, for I do not see otherwise how the registrar of the board could possibly have the names of ten employees. Section 1 requires that there shall be at least ten employees affected, otherwise the board is not authorized to consider the application. But there is no provision that I can see by which the registrar of the board will be placed in possession of the names of ten employees. The application does not necessarily give the names of the men where they are merely employees. It might merely say employees in a certain line, or in a certain factory, were a party to this dispute and that would be an application to the registrar, and then the statement in reply has to be served upon ten employees.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a matter of very little consequence; it is merely a matter of detail. They could be requested to furnish the names.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The law is clear upon the subject. No body of men can make application to the government for a board of conciliation unless there are ten in the factory; nine could not make application.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But there are only two names given.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—But these two cannot make application to the government unless there are ten employed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—How do they get the names of the ten?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is a matter of proof and no two men are going to make application to the Board of Conciliation unless there are ten men employed in the factory.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The ten refers to men who do not belong to the union.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman really consider it important in a matter of detail of that kind, where the statute says that irregularities of that kind are not to be counted? Before anything is done the parties could be called upon to furnish the names.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I may say to the hon. Secretary of State that I consider it of sufficient importance to bring it to the notice of the House. The Bill would be much improved, in my opinion, if this change was made.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would not regard it as affecting the Bill in any sense, because it can be remedied at any time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman consider it a mere irregularity where the law provides that ten must sign a document and there are only six or seven——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They can be called upon to do it; they may or they may not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Where you have a positive declaration you cannot call it an irregularity.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The explanation of the minister who has charge of this Bill is that the cases where the ten have to be notified is where there is a lockout and no organization—a non-union lockout, and ten of the men who are locked out will receive the notice. In the other case, of course, the organized labour union will be notified.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read a third time, and was passed under suspension of the rules.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (60) An Act to regulate the exportation of electric power and certain liquids and gases.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

The Senate then adjourned until Three o'clock to-morrow.

PRUDENTIAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY'S BILL.

MOTION FOR SUSPENSION OF RULES.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL moved :

That rule 23f be suspended in so far as it relates to the Bill (DD) intituled: An Act to incorporate the Prudential Life Insurance Company of Canada.

The SPEAKER—What position is this Bill in ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The motion is to enable the hon. gentlemen to read the Bill the second time without the two days' notice. It is a Bill which is of a non-contentious nature, for the incorporation of an insurance company and it originates in the Senate. It has been delayed one way and another, and it is necessary now to suspend the rules to permit the second reading and the hon. gentleman gave notice yesterday. If the House adopt this motion, during the recess the eight days posting would occur, and its passage through the other House would not be jeopardized. Hon. gentlemen will therefore see that it would be an advantage to take the second reading to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it a Bill of the usual character of life insurance companies, or are there any new principles involved in it ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No, I understand it is the model Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I judge from the name of it, that it will deal with life insurance of children. I think Prudential companies always do that.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I am merely giving the information that we gleaned before the committee.

The SPEAKER—Has the Bill been reported from committee ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It stands for adoption to-day.

The SPEAKER—It seems to me that it would be better to wait until the report is adopted.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is a separate motion. The same kind of motion was made the other day by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, with respect to a certain measure. If the Bill does not come before the House, the motion drops and no harm is done.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The motion made by me the other day was in regard to a Bill which was already on the paper.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—If the Bill never appears in the House, the motion will have no force ; but it is in its proper order now. The Standing Orders Committee delayed the report until they considered that a fair and reasonable notice had been given. The House is not in a false position, and it is the duty of the Speaker to put the motion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No harm can be done by allowing it to stand.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think we realize every year that at the close of the session advantage is taken of the power to suspend the rules to introduce new Bills which might just as well have been dealt with two months previously. We have suspended more rules this year to facilitate the passage of Bills than we have for years past, and if this practice is continued the rules of the House will be really of no value.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I am just informed by the law clerk of the Senate that the Bill embodies all the latest suggestions of the Insurance Commission, and I ask to have this rule suspended to permit the first and second readings in order that the Bill may be passed this session.

The SPEAKER—I may state that I have not examined the point which is raised, but it would seem to me to be more logical that the motion be put after the report of the committee is adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I object to it being dealt with until the report is before us.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The report of the committee has been before the House for two days.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—As there is no Bill of this kind before the House, I do not know how we can put the motion. I think it would be better to wait until the report is before us.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I can not see how we can deal with a principle which is not before us.

The SPEAKER—I will ask the hon. gentleman from Drummondville to suspend his motion until the report of the committee is made, so that it shall not establish a precedent, until I have examined the question more thoroughly.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That would make a much worse precedent than the other.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The Speaker has raised the point of order for himself the second time. He does not desire the motion to be put, and the House does not wish him to be placed in a false position, neither does the hon. gentleman from Drummondville. If the Speaker prefers that this motion should be deferred until the report is before us for consideration, I am sure none of us would more readily meet his wishes than the hon. gentleman from Drummondville and myself. I think we might accept the Speaker's suggestion, and let the matter stand in abeyance until the order is reached.

The motion was allowed to stand.

THIRD READING.

Bill (KK) An Act to incorporate the Abitibi and Hudson Bay Railway Company. —(Hon. Mr. Power.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (CCC) An Act for the relief of Victor Harold Lyon.—(Hon. Mr. Davis.)

Bill (69) An Act respecting the Quebec Oriental Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Tessier.)

Bill (YY) An Act respecting the Erie Ontario Power Company.—(Hon. Mr. Power.)

INTERPRETATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (116) An Act to amend the Interpretation Act. He said: In preparing the recent Revised Statutes an error occurred in leaving out the Court of Appeal of Manitoba. The Bill is to correct the error and to insert the words 'The Court of Appeal for Manitoba.'

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second and third time and passed, under a suspension of the rules.

PRUDENTIAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY'S BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG moved the adoption of the twenty-seventh report of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL introduced Bill (DDD) An Act to incorporate the Prudential Life Insurance Company of Canada.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL moved that rule 23f be suspended in so far as it relates to this Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL moved the second reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (3) An Act in amendment of the Railway Act, 1903.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. POWER—When the committee had this Bill before them, it was pointed out to the hon. gentleman from Wolseley that he had better have the language altered so as to refer to the Revised Statutes instead of the Act of 1903. Has that been done?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Yes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the House adjourn during pleasure.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The committee stage on the Bill to amend the Civil Service Act has been postponed till after the adjournment. I may say that if the hon. Secretary of State issues the same mandate with reference to amendments to the Civil Service Act as he enforced last night when the Labour Bill was under discussion, there is no use in hon. members taking any interest in the matter or studying the question of how the amendments will affect the Act as it stands upon the statute-book. If my hon. friend proposes to pursue the same course with reference to this Bill as he followed last night, I do not propose to pay any attention to the amendments. If, however, we are allowed to consider the measure, and the ministerial majority will permit the minority to discuss the questions without having it said that we are not to propose amendments, some of us would inquire into the facts, and, perhaps, make suggestions.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hon. gentlemen have the greatest liberty to propose any amendments they think proper. If any substantial amendment had been proposed last night, and carried, it would have become part of the Bill; but the proposed amendments were simply redundancy, in one case in reference to the word 'desire,' and in the other case changing simply the phraseology, and the minister was extremely anxious, on account of a strike existing and the liability of another strike taking place at any moment, to have the Bill approved at the earliest possible period, and if we had made changes of course it would have thrown it over until next week. I am quite prepared to apologize to the House if they think the measure was unduly pressed. It was not from any desire to push the matter through, but because the Bill had received so many compliments, I thought it was considered a better Bill than the government usually submitted to this Chamber, and on that account I may have pressed it unduly. If so, I will apologize to my hon. colleagues. But certainly my observations had reference only to my desire that mere verbal changes should not retard the passage of the Bill. The House knows very well they are in possession of the Bill, to make any changes they wish, if the majority approves of it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. Secretary of State was so willing and anxious that the Bill should be fully discussed he succeeded in concealing his feelings remarkably well.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—For once I agree with the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate adjourned during pleasure.

After some time the House resumed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

SENATE.

OTTAWA, Thursday, April 4, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE COMPANY'S POLICIES ISSUED IN CANADA.

MOTION DROPPED.

The Order of the Day being called :

By the Hon. Mr. Domville:

That an order of the Senate do issue for a return by the New York Mutual Reserve Life Company to this House :

1. The number of policies issued, the names and addresses of the insured.
2. The names and addresses of the beneficiaries.
3. The amount stated in the policies.
4. The amount paid to beneficiaries.
5. The reasons why the full amount called for under the policy was not paid.

This return to cover the years 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904 and 1905.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not wish to put this question in a shape that will cause any trouble ; but if the hon. Secretary of State could furnish us with some information I would be satisfied and would withdraw the motion. The words 'In Canada' should appear in the motion, because as it reads now it would include the company's business all over the world.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In reference to No. 1, of course, the company outside of Canada is independent.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It should be in Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is contrary to the policy of the department to furnish information regarding the policies issued in Canada. It would be very improper, because it would give all the insurance companies throughout the country an insight into the business done by one particular company. So that the questions are considered contrary to public policy and could not be answered by an order.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Then as to question No. 2 ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My observations were general. All the information asked for by the hon. gentleman is information of a private nature, which cannot be given to the public.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Does my hon. friend find any objection to Nos. 3 and 4.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are all the same.

The SPEAKER—Is the question put?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No, after the explanation made by the hon. Secretary of State I shall not proceed.

The motion was dropped.

COST OF NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON inquired of the government:

1. Which of the two routes back from the St. John river proposed for the National Transcontinental Railway through the province of New Brunswick, has been approved by the government or the National Transcontinental Railway Commission?

2. What is the length, respectively, of the two routes aforesaid, between Grand Falls and Moncton?

3. What length, stated in miles, of the route, approved as aforesaid, has a grade exceeding four-tenths of one per cent per mile, and what is the maximum grade of the railway between the aforementioned places?

4. What length, stated in miles, of the approved route of the said railway, between the east end of the Quebec bridge and Grand Falls, N.B., has a grade exceeding four-tenths of one per cent per mile, and what is the maximum grade of the railway between the said places?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The matter is now under consideration by the government, and until such time as the route is approved there is no information in the department. It has not been approved yet. The public have assumed that a certain route would be taken, because I have noticed it in the newspapers; but, strange to say, it was up before council to-day and I cannot say whether it was adopted or not. The moment the order is passed, I shall be very glad to furnish the information.

The notice was allowed to stand until Monday next.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY CONTRACTS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON rose to:

Ask the government to supplement the answers given to all questions asked by him during the present session of parliament in regard to the cost per mile of all sections for which contracts have been let on both eastern and western divisions of the National Transcontinental Railway, by giving the cost of ties and rails, and everything necessary to complete the track on said sections of said railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer is as follows:

| Section No. | District. | Description. | Per Mile. |
|---|---|---|---|
| | | | $ cts. |
| 1 | 'A' | Moncton towards Chipman, 50 miles | 10,312 08 |
| 2 | 'A' | Grand Falls to Quebec Boundary, 62 miles. | 12,162 12 |
| 3 | 'B' | East of Quebec bridge, 150 miles | 8,347 03 |
| 4 | 'B' | West of Quebec bridge—150 M. to 195 M., 45 miles. | 7,110 59 |
| 5 | 'C&D' | From 5½ miles east of Huricanaw River to West end District "C" = 42 M. | |
| | | From East Boundary of District 'D' westward = 150 miles | 10,396 66 |
| | 'B' | From Quebec bridge westward, 150 miles | 9,435 00 |
| | 'F' | From Peninsula Crossing to near Winnipeg, 245 miles | 9,211 00 |

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (EEE) An Act for the relief of Arthur Leon McPherson.—(Hon. Mr. Perley.)

THE INSURANCE COMMISSION REPORT.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. COX—Before the orders of the day are called I desire, on a question of privilege, to direct the attention of this honourable House to certain statements in the report of the Royal Commission on insurance, recently laid upon the table. With your permission I will read an extract from the report in which reference is made to the Canada Life Assurance Company and to myself, personally, as president of the company. On page 14 it reads as follows:

The absolute control, real and potential, residing in the president and general manager, and in which his stock holding and offices secure him, have to a marked extent influenced the investments of the company, which have been made to serve not only the interests of the Canada Life Assurance Company, but also his own interests and the interests of other institutions in which he was largely concerned. He says, he has always made the interests of the Canada Life Assurance Company his first and chief concern, but many of the investments made by or on behalf of that company have been made to serve other interests as well, &c.

I have no disposition to criticise this statement so far as it goes, but the report would certainly have been tempered with a greater degree of justice if it had gone on to say that while the transactions were advantageous to the other institutions referred to, they were still more advantageous to the Canada Life Assurance Company. The impression is conveyed that these transactions were made because of my presidency or influence in the councils of the Canada Life. It would have been only fair to have said plainly that these securities are all of the highest class, securities that could be disposed of to-day at a price in advance of what was paid for them, securities that could have been disposed of to other clients of the Dominion Securities Corporation at the time at a slightly better profit, and securities quite within the company's powers of investment. I wish also to say that every security purchased and every loan made by the company is submitted to an honourable and capable board of directors composed of, amongst others, the following gentlemen : Mr. John Hoskin, K.C., LL.D., President of the Toronto General Trusts Corporation ; the Honourable Senator Gibson, President of the Bank of Hamilton, Mr. Byron E. Walker, LL.D., President of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and Mr. J. W. Flavelle, LL.D., President of the National Trust Company, (four of our most successful financial institutions), Mr. Z. A. Lash, K.C., General Counsel of the Canadian Northern Railway, and Mr. Alexander Bruce, K.C., who has been for many years closely associated with all the investments of the company and who is chairman of the investment committee, together with eight other gentlemen of the highest standing in their respective communities. Every investment has first to carry the recommendation of the treasurer and to meet with the entire approval of the full board, and since I became president of the company, in 1899, the rule has been invariably adhered to that upon an objection being raised to any investment, by even one member of the board, it is not accepted.

With the advantage, the assistance and the co-operation of a directorate of fourteen gentlemen of this class, chosen from the leading business men of this country, whose ability, integrity and independence are beyond question, it does seem difficult to understand how the commissioners can justify the conclusion they arrived at, of practically writing these men down as mere tools in my hands to vote at my dictation and thus enable me to manipulate or control the investments of the company.

It will be observed by a perusal of the report of the commission that the burden of the criticism of the company's investments is based upon the fact that a considerable proportion of the securities were purchased from the Dominion Securities Corporation, in which I am largely interested as a shareholder. There has never been any attempt whatever to withhold this information from the public or from the commission, there has never been any suggestion, nor could there be any, that it was illegal for two corporations having the same president and in which some of the same shareholders were interested in both companies, to deal with each other, and it has never until recently, so far as I am aware, been suggested that it was improper to do so. Now that this question has been raised, the only proper way to meet it is to invite the most rigid scrutiny of every transaction that has taken place between the Canada Life and every other corporation in which I am either directly or indirectly interested. From an examination of this kind it will be found in every case, without exception, that the interests of the Canada Life have been fully protected. The commission had the fullest opportunity to, and did, make a most exhaustive examination. They had access, through their expert accountants, not only to the records of the Canada Life Assurance Company, the Dominion Securities Corporation and the Central Canada Loan and Savings Company, but to my own personal books as well, and the fact that none of the securities purchased by the Canada Life from either of these companies has been criticised is an evidence that they have found both the quality of the securities and the price paid for them, satisfactory, and it would have been only just for the commissioners to have said so.

Some criticism has been made of the amount of securities purchased by the Canada Life Assurance Company from the Dominion Securities Corporation, but when it is remembered that the Canada Life is the largest purchaser in Canada of investment securities, and the Dominion Securities Corporation are the largest bond dealers in Canada having agencies throughout Canada, representatives in the United States and a branch in Great Britain, it will be readily seen that there is no ground whatever for such criticism. As an indication of the volume of business handled by the Dominion Securities Corporation during the period 1900 to 1905, of the class of corporation bonds in which life insurance companies are authorized to invest, the corporation purchased entire issues to the amount of $9,301,000, and participated in purchase of, and had the selling rights on the Canadian market for $38,767,000 or a total of $48,077,000 while corporation issues in Canada handled by other dealers, amounted to only $9,588,000 during the same period. These figures exclude all industrial issues as well as those of Canadian companies with undertakings in foreign countries. It will thus be readily seen that had the Canada Life Assurance Company been restricted from purchasing securities from the Dominion Securities Corporation they would have experienced great difficulty in finding a satisfactory amount of similar investments. I might say further, that the purchases from the Dominion Securities Corporation by the Canada Life during the period mentioned only amounted to slightly over 10 per cent of the total sales of the former corporation, the other 90 per cent having been disposed of to other insurance companies, financial institutions and private investors throughout Canada, the United States and Great Britain.

I am having placed in the hands of every member of this honourable House a detailed list of every security held by the company, representing its $32,280,542.49 of assets, as at the 31st December, 1906, from which it will be at once seen by any person who will take the trouble to read it through, that the investments of the company are of the highest class, and the position of the company, in every respect, most satisfactory.

The following statement has been made in the newspapers and in another place :—

That Senator Cox, being president of the Canada Life Assurance Company, helped his son-in-law, the head of the firm of A. E. Ames & Co., to make false entries in the books of the Canada Life Assurance Company in order that the insurance inspector could not detect that the Canada Life Assurance Company, under the guidance of Senator Cox, was lending the money, the trust funds of the people interested in that insurance, on securities which had been questioned by the department of insurance.

This statement is untrue and misleading to the last degree. It has reference to a loan of $389,500 to A. E. Ames and Company upon security of 1,800 shares of Metropolitan Bank stock, worth $360,000, and 1,040 shares of Sao Paulo stock worth $98,800, showing a margin of $69,300. It is not correct that these securities had, at that time, been questioned by the insurance department. The bank stock is admitted to be an authorized investment, and the company's solicitor advises that Sao Paulo stock is also legal under the company's charter, and the company has never been informed that the solicitor's advice has been controverted by the Department of Justice.

It was a loan on which the company had at no time a chance of losing a dollar. A few months after the loan was made, it was paid in full. This was something that occured in the interval, and it seems to me the commission travelled a long way out of their jurisdiction to do this institution harm by raking up a transaction of that kind, a loan which had long since been paid, and in which there was never a dollar risked.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It was not the first time the commission travelled out of their way.

Hon. Mr. COX—No it was not. They have travelled out of their way a long way to do a great deal of injury to Canadian institutions. In that report of several hundred pages there is not one solitary word of commendation with regard to the 30 or 40 different Canadian companies that are doing business in this country, and all over the world, practically. Everything that could be said, and everything that could be done, and everything that could be withheld to injure our Canadian companies in the eyes not only of Canadians, but in the eyes of the public outside of Canada, where neither the commissioners themselves nor the officers of the company are known, was resorted to.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—An advertisement for outside companies as against Canadian companies.

Hon. Mr. COX—Yes, an advertisement for outside companies—doing everything they could in that way. Our Canadian companies are in competition with several United States and English companies and nothing has been said derogatory to these companies whatever. No examination of them has been made to show whether they could have the same kind of charges brought against them. They have been left untouched, and the Canadian companies have been weakened, injured and prejudiced in every possible way. I think the report of the Royal Commission on Insurance does no credit whatever to that body.

I will only ask your indulgence while I refer to one additional subject. On page 13 of the report I read as follows :

It was stated in evidence at page 1060, that at the time this loan was made, in October, 1902, it was agreed that it would be repaid before the end of the year as the company would probably require the funds. I also quote from the evidence at page 1061, as follows :

> It was not for the sake of getting rid of the securities, because we were quite content to carry those securities at any time. We had other securities of the same kind on our books. It was not with the object of not showing these securities in the government report at all, because we had others of the same kind.

The transaction could not possibly be concealed from the department, because it clearly appeared in the cash book and ledger of the company, which are regularly inspected by the officers of the department. The commissioners very seriously erred in finding that the question of the company's right to invest in or loan upon Sao Paulo securities had at this time been raised by the department. A more careful review of the correspondence made a part of the record, by the commissioners, would have prevented this inaccuracy. It is true, that the superintendent of insurance had on the 10th of September, 1902, asked the Department of Justice whether these securities had been legally and properly purchased by insurance companies under the provisions of the Insurance Act, but the decision was not given until January, 1905, over two years after this transaction occurred. The statement, that this loan was called in for the purpose of deceiving the department is therefore quite erroneous. No notice of any kind whatever, had been given the company as to the question having been raised, and three loans on Sao Paulo securities were reported in our 1902 returns to the department, so for that reason apart from the others, how can the motive alleged be attributed to the company ? No false entries were made and no deceit was possible.

I will only ask your indulgence while I refer to one additional subject. On page 13 of the report, I read as follows :

> With the standing and reputation which the company undoubtedly possessed in 1900, it is difficult to arrive at any sound economic reason from the standpoint of the policy-holders for calling up the $875,000 capital. It is manifest if the inherent earning power of the additional capital is only 4·67 per cent, its engagement in the concerns of the Canada Life without any real need is a simple method of raising that earning power to 8 per cent, the difference, under whatever name, being unnecessarily taken away from the policy-holders whose accumulations have earned it.

This statement is inaccurate, entirely misleading and inconsistent with the actual facts of the case, which are as follows : In the early history of the company the Act of incorporation provided that the profits derived from the business should be divided in the proportion of 25 per cent to the shareholders, and 75 per cent to the policy-holders. It remained in that way until the year 1879, when the shareholders made application for legislation providing that not more than 10 per cent of the profits should be allotted to the shareholders, and not less than 90 per cent to the policy-holders. In order to get this change made, each individual shareholder had to give his consent before parliament would interfere with his vested rights. The shareholders thus of their own accord voluntarily surrendered to the policy-holders three-fifths of the profits to which they were entitled. The ten per cent to which they are still entitled is not increased, decreased, or in any way affected by the amount of paid-up capital, whether it be $125,000 as it was, or $1,000,000 as it now is. In either case, under agreement, ratified by Act of parliament in 1879, the shareholders are entitled to one-tenth of the profits.

A shareholder's account has been kept to which has been credited not only the average rate of interest earned for the year on the capital, but also one-tenth of the profits distributed, and it is out of this account that the dividend of 8 per cent is paid.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The gentleman claims the right to bring this matter before the Senate as a question of privilege. There is no breach of privilege for which the hon. gentleman seeks a remedy with the intention of winding up by making a motion. Who has been guilty of a breach of privilege ? Who is to be cited before the bar of the House? I find in May, page 69, the following :

Breaches of privilege may be divided into : 1. Disobedience to general orders or rules of either House ; 2. Disobedience to particular orders; 3. Indignities offered to the character or proceedings of parliament; 4. Assaults or insults upon members or reflections upon their character and conduct in parliament, or interference with officers of the House in discharge of their duty.

Those are breaches of privilege that may be brought to the cognizance of the House and a remedy had by a motion, but here the hon. gentleman is complaining of a report of the Royal Commission. We are not prepared to discuss it, either to support the finding of the commission or to sustain the hon. gentleman in his position. We are taken by surprise. He complains in his further remarks, that the papers of the country have reflected on his character, but he has not brought any copy of a newspaper containing such criticism. Rule 42 of this House provides :

Any senator complaining to the Senate of a statement in a newspaper or as a breach of privilege shall produce a copy of the paper containing the statement in question.

The hon. gentleman has not done so. Then again, rule 41 provides :

Whenever a matter or question directly concerning the privileges of the Senate, or of any committee or member thereof, has arisen a motion calling upon the Senate to take action thereon may be moved, without notice, and shall, until decided, unless the debate be adjourned, suspend the consideration of other motions as well as Orders of the Day.

The only thing the hon. gentleman could say, if he wants to bring this up as a question of privilege, is to deny flatly the conclusion of the report. I do not see how a question of privilege can be brought up on this question.

Hon. Mr. COX—I have only a few words more to say. If the hon. gentleman persists in his objection, I shall not proceed; but having been referred to in another place as being guilty of doing things that would make me quite unworthy of occupying a seat in this House, I want to vindicate myself.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then I suppose it is true that Senator Cox cannot wait. The hon. gentleman should at least move the adjournment of the House to put himself in order.

Hon. Mr. COX—I shall proceed in my own way. How then can it be said, that anything has been taken away from the policyholders ?

In view of the foregoing, is it reasonable to ask or expect that the shareholders, after surrendering three-fifths of the profits to which they were entitled, should now surrender the one-tenth of the profits to which they are still entitled? It would be as reasonable for the depositors of the bank of Montreal to say to the shareholders : 'With our $165,000,000 of assets we could get along without your $14,000,000 of capital, and in place of getting a fair return as originally agreed upon for our deposits, we will make this a mutual bank and take the whole of the earnings.'

Shareholders of the Canada Life have for sixty years had their capital, or credit, at the risk of business, and for many years of that time received no dividends whatever. At times in the history of the company, those who were unable to hold their stock sold it at seventy and seventy-five cents on the dollar, and now, owing to the careful management and honourable dealings of the company, that they have created an earning power for their capital one-quarter of which they were originally entitled to and one-tenth of which they are still entitled to, it is not at all likely that they will be so generous as to give that up, nor is it at all likely that the parliament of this country would confiscate their right to it.

There are insurance companies who only do non-participating business and whose profits go exclusively to the shareholders. There are other companies, purely mutual, whose profits go exclusively to the policyholders. I am insured in some of these companies myself, on both this and the other side of the Atlantic, but I have yet to find one whose profits have been larger than those of the Canada Life, while the latter's Act of incorporation makes it compulsory upon the directors to give ninety per cent of the profits to the policy-holders. Many English and Scotch companies, so strongly recommended by the commissioners, and whose plans were adopted and policy followed by the Canada Life at its organization, divide their profits upon the basis of ninety per cent to the policy-holders and ten per cent to the shareholders, while others retain the forty per cent allowed by their charters.

The increased and increasing share of public confidence enjoyed by the Canada Life is evidence that the majority of our policy-holders prefer the additional security and the continuity of management provided by a company with one million dollars capital in preference to that of a mutual company, particularly when it is demonstrated by actual experience that they do not get any better results from mutual companies.

There are other inaccuracies in the report of the commission from which erroneous inferences have been and may be drawn, but they are of a less important nature, and I will not ask the indulgence of this honourable House to refer to them now. An opportunity will be afforded to do that when the full report and the legislation which it recommends is under discussion. In the meantime what I more particularly wish to controvert is the impression that the Royal Commission has sent broadcast throughout this country, that because of my majority holding of the stock of the Canada Life Assurance Company its funds are improperly used by me for my own purpose or for the purpose of other institutions in which I am interested. I want to give this a positive and unqualified denial, in the strongest possible words that I can command, and to reiterate the statement I have already made, that every investment of the company is made with the approval and concurrence of the full board of directors.

I think I owe it to members of this honourable House to make this correction. These charges are of a most serious nature. When I knew that the report was not to be discussed this session, and the legislation arising from it is not to be taken up this session, then I felt I owed it to members of this honourable House and to myself and to the large number of persons interested in the insurance companies throughout the country to give the explanations and denials which I have given. I should be very sorry indeed to have the members of this House feel that I had been guilty of the charges which if not directly made have been insinuated that I have been improperly using the trust funds committed to my care, and I want to say here and now to everybody present and to every man in the country that there is nothing in my public or private life which would not stand the closest and most thorough scrutiny and I do not want to underlie charges of such a serious nature until next session, when the Insurance Act will be taken up and I would have a right to discuss the subject. I thank the House for the privilege given me, and I beg to move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was declared lost.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (FFF) An Act respecting juvenile delinquents.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (93) An Act to incorporate the Eastern Canadian Manufacturers Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—(Hon. Mr. Gibson.)

Bill (135) An Act to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act.—(Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright.)

Bill (144) An Act to amend the Militia Pension Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY—I rise to a question of privilege. In a speech delivered on the 20th March by the hon. gentleman from Wellington, when he introduced his Bill with reference to the Conciliation Act, he said, to use his own words :

> As far as my hon. friend's amendment is concerned, he has read us an essay. No doubt it was prepared for him.

Upon being called to order, he gave that as his opinion. I was astonished when I read the statement of the hon. gentleman. I now wish to say to him that every line, every word, every thought in that speech was my own. I wish furthermore to state that newspaper editors are not in the habit of levying on the brain work of others, and parading in borrowed plumes. The remarks of the hon. gentleman are, I consider, not only unjust and uncalled for, but highly insulting, and, moreover, I think it very unbecoming in a member of this House, without any evidence whatever, to accuse a fellow member of doing something which is not held in honour by gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am very glad to receive from the hon. gentleman from London the statement which he has presented to the House. In the course of the discussion, I gave expression to an opinion which I am glad to find now from his statement was incorrect. I might say that there were many other members in the House who formed the same opinion as myself. It was only an opinion. I am glad to know that the hon. gentleman has made the statement to the House. Had he done me the courtesy of notifying me that he intended to refer to the matter, I might possibly have been able to say something more. He did not do that. As a young member of the House, he is unaccustomed to parliamentary procedure I presume; therefore I accept the course he has taken.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (141) An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1908.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time on Monday next.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Are these the final estimates?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is the proportion that is usually brought in, a fourth or a fifth.

The motion was agreed to.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill (90) An Act respecting the Atlantic Quebec and Western Company.—(Hon. Mr. Fiset.)

EXCHANGE OF LANDS BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (114) An Act to authorize the exchange of certain lands.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read a second time on Monday next.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would the hon. gentleman explain what it means?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot really explain it very well without referring to the Dominion Lands Act. The Bill reads as follows:

1. Notwithstanding anything in the Dominion Lands Act, chapter 55 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, or in any other Act relating to Dominion lands, the Minister of the Interior may include in the lands to be sold to the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company in connection with and for the purposes of the company's power development on the Winnipeg river, the following school lands, namely: sections 11 and 29, township 14, range 12, east of the principal meridian.

2. Such sale shall not be made until the Minister of the Interior has, by notice in the 'Canada Gazette,' set apart as school lands other Dominion lands of equal area and value, as nearly as may be, in lieu of the lands mentioned in section 1 hereof.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend ascertain if a stated price has been agreed upon between the railway company and the government?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall inquire.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And also whether the lands which are to be exchanged are to be of the same value as the lands to be given to the railway?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is provided that the value must be the same.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (89) An Act respecting the Crawford Bay and St. Mary's Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. DeVeber.)

Bill (92) An Act respecting the Grand Valley Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Coffey.)

Bill (OO) An Act to incorporate the Collingwood Southern Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. McMullen.)

Bill (CCC) An Act for the relief of Victor Harold Lyon.—(Hon. Mr. Davis.)

Bill (73) An Act respecting patents of the International Paper Company, as amended.—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READINGS.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE moved the second reading of (Bill SS) An Act to amend an Act respecting the Canadian Assessment Policy-holders in the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company.

He said: The few lines I purpose adding to the Act will, I am satisfied, commend themselves to the good sense of the House and of the community generally. It is not a contentious Bill. I found, when I was in London, that this same company had deposited a certain amount with the Board of Trade and, somehow, the company were able to get that money back. They have a deposit in Canada to-day of about $200,000 or $300,000, and the object of this Bill is to prevent them under any circumstances from getting back that money until they have discharged all their obligations to their policy-holders in Canada. It may be said that the Act, as passed, goes far enough. We all thought so when it was passed; but men rise and pass away, and to-morrow we might have another official who would not take the same view of the Act that is taken to-day, and might consider there was nothing rendering it obligatory on him to retain this deposit. In London, where this company had an office, it was open and business was in full swing on Wednesday. On Thursday morning when the clerks and officials returned to their work they found the doors of the office closed and all the books taken away from England. There was nobody there to represent the company or to give the policy-holders a chance of taking such legal proceedings as they might deem necessary to protect their rights. That is why I introduce this Bill, so that there may be no misconception as to what parliament intended with regard to the deposit held in Ottawa. I am advised that the Act as it stands on the statute-book is not perfectly clear, and I want to make it certain that this company shall not withdraw its deposit until all policies have been redeemed and all matured policies have been paid. It will give protection to the policy-holders and perhaps reassure some people who have been unfortunate enough to insure with this company. The President of this Insurance company has been sent to Sing Sing, and Mr. Eldridge, who was up here at the time of the investigation, and who seemed to have gained the confidence of some members of this House, magnetizing or hypnotizing them to believe that he was right, and those of us who wanted the investigation were wrong, is now before the courts on a charge which may have the effect of sending him to keep the president company at Sing Sing, and probably these leading officials will be followed by others. It is, therefore, well to take every precaution to protect the Canadian policy-holders of the company.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

WITHDRAWN.

On the Order of the Day being called :

Second reading Bill (M) An Act to amend the Railway Act of 1903 so as to provide for meals for travellers.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS said : I do not suppose at this late stage of the session, with prorogation in sight, that I am likely to get this Bill through ; because I understand it will be opposed. I brought it before the Senate for the purpose of ventilating a grievance that I consider the people in the Northwest, in my part of the country at all events, have against the railway companies. Latterly, those companies have been placing buffet cars on all their branch lines. In our country branch lines are very long, some of them 250 or 300 miles in length, and at the rate of speed of trains on those branches it takes nearly a whole day to travel from one end of the branch to the other. You start from a given point at seven in the morning, and you travel until six o'clock at night before there is a stop, and as the companies put on buffet cars they feel that their conscience is clear as regards the convenience of passengers. About twenty passengers on the train enter the buffet cars, while probably 150 passengers are unable to get anything to eat until they reach their destination. Only a small proportion of the people who travel on a railway can afford to pay $1 or $1.50 for a meal in the buffet car. It means to a farmer three bushels of wheat. If the railway companies wish to force the people to use buffet cars, they should reduce the prices to reasonable figures. Two or three years ago, the average price for a meal on a dining car on the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was 75 cents, and for that sum the company provided a good meal ; but the prices have been rising, and the portion of food supplied has been steadily reduced, so that the average farmer, under the present system, could not get enough to eat for less than $2.50. It is not unreasonable to ask that the train shall stop somewhere about noon, for say twenty minutes, to give the passengers a chance to get a meal at a cost of about fifty cents. I know there is a great deal of dissatisfaction on the subject, and that is why I have brought this matter up. I have been speaking to some of the parties interested, and they have shown a tendency to do something to remove the grievance. I therefore move that the Order of the Day be discharged ; but if the grievance is not remedied before next session, I shall introduce this Bill and press it through the House if possible.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was withdrawn.

INSPECTION AND SALE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (AAA) An Act to amend the Inspection and Sale Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my right hon. friend state the difference between the proposed inspection and the existing law ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It makes some small alteration in the size of the baskets in which fruit is packed. I am advised by the department that this alteration will affect almost exclusively the fruit which is grown in the Niagara district, and that, as far as the department can learn, all the fruit-growers associations, and the individual fruit-growers are in favour of the changes. Also, as a matter of fact, they are now packing their fruit in baskets of this size. It makes the package a trifle shorter and a trifle smaller than the package provided for in the existing Act.

Hon. Mr. POWER—While that kind of legislation may be in the interest of the fruit-growers of the Niagara district, it is clearly not in the interest of the consumer, because I do not suppose these gentlemen would charge any less for a small basket than they do for the larger ones, and I for one will vote against that provision.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I cannot say as to that, but I think the consumer ought to be able to take care of himself, and if he gets less from the producer, he should pay a smaller price for it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think the hon. gentleman has always taken that view when such questions came up.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes, when the consumer was not compelled by law to pay more for an article than he should give for it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will this introduce uniformity between the United States and Canadian baskets, or is there any unity of action ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That I am not able to state. I think that in the United States these matters are regulated by the several states and not by the central authority at all. Each state regulates these things according to its own pleasure, and I think the Californian baskets or the Californian measures of fruit or whatever you call them, differ somewhat from those used in the other states, but I may say to the hon. leader of the opposition, this Bill appears to have obtained, without dissent, the approval of the fruit-growers in the district which it is specially designed to serve, and it has been before them for some considerable time. That is to say the Niagara district.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me it would be highly desirable that uniformity should be secured as much as possible with reference to packages which in trade are simply mentioned as baskets of fruit, and so on. We know that in our western country a very great deal of the California fruit comes in and is sold at so much a basket, and it seems to me there is no reason why we should not adopt a uniform standard where there is traffic in similar commodities. It would in that way prevent many mistakes arising, not only with the consumers, but with the parties who deal in articles of this kind.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does the hon. gentleman suggest that we should adopt the United States standard ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not make that statement, but I say that as far as possible there should be a uniform standard. Let me instance a case where a Canadian dealer will get quotations from a Californian producer for so many hundred baskets of fruit. He may likewise get quotations from Canadian dealers, and the assumption will be that those baskets are practically the same. It may be that there will be a substantial difference and there is going to be a disappointment and loss at some point or other, and the consumer usually has to suffer for it.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I will call the attention of the department to the point made by my hon. friend, and let him know on the third reading if it is thought desirable to amend it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I know that fruits from Niagara and from California do come into competition all through the Northwest.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I see the point; but there is this little difficulty about it: If our measures and the measures of the California growers materially differ, we could hardly be expected to conform ours to theirs. If the previous measure was the same as theirs that would be a reason for not disturbing it. But if, as I suspect, there has been no similarity between them heretofore, you could hardly direct our Canadian producer to take the United States measure as his model, unless there were strong reasons for it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Has my hon. friend considered what effect this would have on the importation of Canadian fruits into the American market as to the packages?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No, I am not in a position to answer that question. As a rule, there is not much of that kind of fruit comes in in the eastern portion of our country. It chiefly comes in, I think, in the western region.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I might say to my hon. friend, that there are train loads of fruit that come in from the Pacific, and it is circulated all through Northwestern Canada.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I know that in reference to the condition of things in the Northwest it is very desirable that no impediment should be thrown in the way. I will take a note of my hon. friend's point and communicate at once with the Department of Agriculture. He is not sure himself whether there is any difference.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not know. I am a seeker after information, if I may so express it.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The point does not appear to have been taken in the debates in the lower House where this Bill was put through; but I quite agree that the point deserves consideration, and I will make it my special business to inquire into it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think it is very important that we should know whether this legislation is applicable to foreign fruit.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No it is not applicable to foreign fruit.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I desire to see how this legislation fits in with our old law; but if it has no bearing upon foreign fruit, and if as the hon. gentleman from Calgary says, carloads of that fruit are coming in, I do not think the legislation is of very much value.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—As I understand from the department, the object is merely to alter the size of the baskets which were provided for in Chap. 85 of the Revised Statutes. He will observe that it repeals such and such an Act, and that it introduces another measure.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does this clause provide for anything further than to define what an eleven quart measure and a six quart measure are? It seems to me the two paragraphs are simply confined to that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend will permit the matter to stand till to-morrow, it will give us an opportunity to look into the matter and find its bearing on the general inspection of fruit.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On clause 2,

2. Section 352 of the said Act is hereby repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

352. Every dealer who sells, offers for sale, or has in his possession for sale in Canada, any ball of binder twine not properly and correctly labelled with the number of feet of twine per pound in the ball as required by this part, shall be liable, on conviction before one magistrate, who shall have jurisdiction irrespective of any provision in section 44 of this Act, to a penalty of not less than one dollar and not more than five dollars for each ball of such binder twine: Provided that no deficiency in the number of feet of twine contained in any ball shall be deemed to be a contravention of this section unless the deficiency exceeds five per centum of the length indicated by the label.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—This is simply intended to enable one magistrate to deal with the questions that are brought up without reference to the amount involved. Heretofore he could only deal with it when a very small amount was involved. His decision can be appealed from if the parties are agreed in the ordinary course. We desire to make the processes as inexpensive as possible. The percentage is the same.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 4,

4. The following section is hereby added to the said Act as section 354a thereof :

354a. Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in section 46 of this Act, all moneys derived from penalties imposed for any contravention of any provision of this Act respecting binder twine, or derived from the confiscation of binder twine under this Act, shall be paid into and form part of the consolidated revenue fund, and no inspector or other person shall be entitled to any portion thereof.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The object of the change is to prevent the inspector from deriving any personal profit for seizing goods. Under the present law, the question has arisen whether the inspector, in addition to his salary, might claim a share of the penalty. I am bound to say that the inspector never has, but the question was raised whether he was not entitled to do so, and I think it better that there should be no doubt on the subject. I greatly prefer that in these cases the man should be paid a salary and not be tempted to seize without due cause, for the sake of obtaining a portion of the penalty. I presume my hon. friend will have no objection to that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is very good in theory.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. JONES, from the Committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on Bill (108) An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I will call the attention of the leader of the opposition to the present law. The section of the Act reads :

Any seaman who has been lawfully engaged or bound to any ship registered in any of the provinces under a duly signed agreement, as required by this Act, and any apprentice who has executed indentures to sea service in any province shall be liable on summary conviction.

This Bill renders it unnecessary to have quite as formal agreements and quite as formal provisions as were heretofore held desirable in these cases. However, a few have taken out these indentures.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. OWENS, from the committee reported the Bill without amendment.

REGULATION OF EXPORTATION OF ELECTRICITY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (60) An Act to regulate the exportation of electric power and certain liquids and gases.

He said : Hon. gentlemen are aware that in the province of Ontario particularly there has been a good deal of agitation on the subject of cheaper electrical energy, and also an agitation that hereafter the natural gas that is to be found in several parts of Ontario should not be exported if the people are prepared to use it. In the county of Essex there are very valuable gas wells, and for many years they were used entirely to supply Detroit with heat and light. In the county of Welland there are gas wells supplying Buffalo, and I noticed a few days ago that the county council of Welland adopted a resolution calling attention to the export of the gas as being a very serious injury to the people of that county and an injury to the local manufacturers. At Niagara, two charters have been issued by the parliament of Canada and one by the province of Ontario, and the privileges of exporting electrical energy was given. Two of the companies were monopolized entirely by Americans. The demand for electrical energy was first to be found on the American side of the Niagara Falls, and as a natural consequence all that was generated went across the line. The object of this Bill is that, while there is a demand for it in Canada, the Canadians shall be allotted a fair proportion, whatever is needed. Under the regulations made with the park commissioners there was a stipulation in all the leases—because the three companies at Niagara Falls, as hon. gentlemen are probably aware, held leases from the park commissioners—that the companies were allowed to export one-half the power generated, and if there was a demand in Canada they must sell to Canadian consumers at a price not higher than that in the United States. However, the demand, in Ontario particularly, by industrial concerns has been very keen for some time to obtain cheaper electricity, and the object of this Bill is to regulate the export. Those parties who are now exporting will not come within the provisions of the Bill until six months after it passes, in order to give them time to adjust their sales to the new conditions, unless they in the meantime take out a license. All parties have to take out a license and submit to the department a statement of their exportation. The penalties for a breach of the Act are very high. I observe that they are not less than $1,000 or more than $5,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As the Bill was only placed in our hands a few minutes ago, we are not familiar with its provision, and I presume we can discuss it more fully in committee, if it be understood that we will not be confined to the consideration of the particular clauses under discussion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Certainly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In reading the discussion in the lower House there are many points in the Bill which suggested themselves to me as exceedingly objectionable. I wish to refer to one point in particular : The Bill provides for a limitation of the quantity of electric power generated at the Falls to be exported. It occurs to me that though you may regulate and restrict the exportation, hereafter should that power be required for industrial purposes in Canada, the exportation may be stopped. But there is this fact which has no doubt suggested itself to the government of the day : Supposing through the exportation of this electrical power, industries are established on the United States side of the river, and the exportation of electrical energy is stopped, will not the question of compensation come up at once ? It will have the effect of shutting down the industry and thereby entailing great loss to the parties whose money is invested in the industry. The answer to that, I dare say, is that the parties may use water-power or steam. That would be a sufficient answer ; but would it be doing justice to the parties whose industries had been operated by that electric energy. On the little consideration I have been able to give to the question, I think it is a great mistake to permit the exportation at all of electrical power generated at Niagara Falls. It ought to be reserved exclusively for the manufacturing industries of Canada. I foresee a great deal of difficulty and trouble in administering this law, particularly when the industries of this country, which are rapidly growing under the policy adopted in relation to electric power, become large enough to use the greater part of the electricity generated at the Falls. The question is an exceedingly important one. However, we can go more fully into it when we are in committee, and when we have had an opportunity of making ourselves familiar with the details of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no doubt the Bill is open to my hon. friend's criticism. What helps the situation materially, is the action of Congress. Under the influences of people who desire to preserve the scenic beauty of Niagara Falls, Congress passed an Act limiting the amount of electricity which may be imported from Canada into the United States. Strange to say, it is about the quantity that, under the regulations with the park commissioners, was first allowed. The park commissioners stipulated that if there should be a market in Canada, one-half the electrical energy at Niagara Falls should be distributed in Canada provided the rates in Canada were up to to those charged in the United States. However, this Bill goes further than that and provides :

5. Any such license may provide that the quantity of power or fluid to be exported shall be limited to the surplus, after the licensee has supplied for distribution to customers for use in Canada power or fluid to the extent defined by such license, at prices and in accordance with conditions, rules and regulations prescribed by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my hon. friend say whether we import electricity from any part of the United States?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think not. I think it is exclusively an export of our own.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then this legislation is not a reprisal, but merely to conserve our own resources?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is passed in compliance with a demand in western Ontario for cheaper electrical energy. All that has been generated at Niagara heretofore, excepting a small quantity lately brought to Toronto, has been used in the United States. Two of the companies being composed of United States capitalists, naturally used the electricity on the United States side. The third company, which operates in Toronto, has recently brought electricity to that city to be used for lighting purposes, and also as motive power for the Toronto street railway. The persons who own the larger part of the capital in the company to which I am alluding are also owners of the street railway, and have also the contract for lighting.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I must confess I cannot see how the Act of Congress limiting the amount of electricity to be admitted from Canada meets the point I have attempted to make. Any one who has paid attention to affairs at Washington, and the attitude of United States statesmen, must have observed that though large industries on the east side of the Niagara river have for many years been using the waters of the Falls for industrial purposes, there never was a word about the destruction of the scenic affect until Canadians began to utilize the water-power on the Canadian side. Then the statesmen of the republic at once saw that some decided benefit would be derived by Canada by the utilization of the power at Niagara and at once raised a cry that they were destroying the scenic beauty of the Falls. It is on a par with every act of the United States government and Congress whenever anything is done in Canada that they think will give this country an advantage; they at once raise a cry against it, and in this matter they are only following their usual custom. That is one reason why I claim that we should keep for our own purposes the electrical energy generated on the Canadian side of the river. The export may possibly be limited to the surplus for a time, but will that surplus be limited to the surplus of the present day, or will it apply to the surplus of five or ten years hence? Should the use of electricity increase rapidly, will the government reduce the exportation to the United States? And, should that be done, will not the question of damage to industries on the United States side arise?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—This appears to be a very important Bill. I have not yet had an opportunity to study its clauses. There is one point on which I should like an explanation: A company of United States capitalists is developing power at Fort Francis, on the Rainy river, and it is expected that 30,000 horse-power will be generated. The citizens of Fort Francis have compelled the company to erect a power house on the Canadian side. Does this Bill empower the Dominion government to charge a license for the exportation of the half that belongs to the United States side? They have agreed to supply power at a very low rate up to what is required on the Canadian side, and they purpose using the remainder on the United States side, until such time as the Canadian demand calls for half the power generated. As the whole of the power is produced on the Canadian side, will the company be compelled to pay a license on the half of the power exported, which properly belongs to the United States side?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In that case the parties have made an arrangement between themselves, and the government will not interfere.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—There is nothing about that in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Canadian side have agreed to allow the company to export power until it is required on the Canadian side, and no difficulty can arise.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (PP) An Act to incorporate the Live Stock Insurance Company of Canada, Limited.—(Hon. Mr. David.)

Bill (X) An Act to incorporate the Rock Life Assurance Company of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Perley.)

OTTAWA TERMINALS RAILWAY COMPANY.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN moved concurrence in the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to Bill (TT) An Act to incorporate the Ottawa Terminals Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG moved that the Bill be further amended by striking out the name of Francis H. McGuigan and substituting therefor the name of Frank Scott. He said: The reason for this is that Mr. McGuigan, who was, at the time of the framing of this Bill, an officer of the Grand Trunk Railway, has since then left the service of the company, and it is proposed to substitute for him Mr. Frank Scott, who is the treasurer of the company.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I object to this amendment without notice. Does Mr. McGuigan consent to this?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He has left the company's service.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Mr. McGuigan was second vice-president of the Grand Trunk Railway. Lately he accepted office as vice-president of the Hill system, and, before leaving Canada, was tendered a magnificent banquet by the officers of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, showing that he left in sympathy with the Grand Trunk Railway and to better his position. Now that he is no longer an official of the Grand Trunk Railway, the company would like to substitute the name of Mr. Frank Scott for his.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend asked was this done with the consent of Mr. McGuigan.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Mr. Chrysler is my authority for saying that the change is not questioned in any way.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed, under a suspension of the rule.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at Three o'clock.

THE ROSS RIFLE.

INQUIRY.

The Order of the Day being called:

By the Hon. Mr. LANDRY that he will inquire of the government.

1. How many rifles has the Ross Rifle Company manufactured, from the time it commenced the performance of its contract with the government up to March 1, instant:
(a) Of Mark No. I.; (b) of Mark No. II.; (c) of Mark No. III.?
2. How many of all these rifles has the government accepted after inspection thereof:
(a) Of Mark No. I.; (b) of Mark No. II.; (c) of Mark No. III.?
3. How much, up to March 1 instant, has the government given as payment in full for rifles:
(a) Of Mark No. I.; (b) of Mark No. II.; (c) of Mark No. III.?
4. What is the amount paid in advance for rifles in course of manufacture but not yet finished or not yet accepted on that date, March 1 instant?
5. How many rifles belong to the latter category and of what mark are they?
6. Out of the rifles accepted by the government and wholly paid for by it, how many of each mark have been distributed, and how many of them remain in the military stores?
7. At what places have the rifles been stored which have not been distributed?
8. To whom have been given or sold the rifles that have been distributed? What is the number, of each mark, thus given or sold? What regiments, rifle associations, bodies or individuals whosoever, are now furnished with the Ross rifle, and in what quantity has it been distributed to them?
9. In what respect is the Mark No. II. essentially or especially different from the Mark No. I.?
10. In what does Mark No. III. differ from the two preceding?
11. How many rifles of Mark No. II. have been substituted for rifles of Mark No. I., after a regular distribution of the latter?
12. Were the rifles of Mark No. I. convertible and have they been converted into rifles of Mark No. II.?
13. Will the improvements recently brought about in the rifle of Mark No. II., in order to make out of it the rifle of Mark No. III., be extended to all the rifles of Mark No. II. and to all the rifles of Mark No. I.?
14. If the improvements brought about in the Ross rifle cannot be adapted to rifles previously manufactured by the company and accepted by the government, what use does the government intend to make of an arm comparatively inferior ?

15. What, on an average, is the proportion of rifles set aside on first inspection by the government ?

16. Out of these rifles rejected on first inspection, what is afterwards, on the average, the proportion of those which a second inspection allows the government to accept ?

17. Has the government concluded a contract with the Ross Rifle Company for the manufacture of a bayonet for this rifle ? When, at what price, and for what quantity ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose the hon. gentleman is quite ready to answer that question now ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think so. It is a very long question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, and has been a long time on the paper.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was informed that it is all contained in the voluminous report that I brought down some time ago.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I perused that report from beginning to end, and from it I learn that there were only 16,500 rifles. Would the hon. Secretary of State inform me if the answers are all contained in that report ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. The answers are all there. The report reads as follows :

1. Not known by the Department of Militia and Defence.

2. (a) 10,500 ; (b) 16,512 ; (c) none.

3. (a) $262,500 ; (b) $400,300 ; (c) none.

4. $366,003.55.

5. 26,500 ; the majority of these rifles will be of Mark II. pattern, the remainder, probably from 5,000 to 10,000, will be Mark III. pattern, or whatever new Mark may be adopted.

6. Rifles distributed; Mark I., 3,210; Mark II., 3,521. Remaining in military stores :— Mark I., 7,290 ; Mark II., 12,991.

9. (a) Method of extraction ; in Mark I. it is entirely hammer action ; in Mark II. a cam action is introduced, to effect primary extraction.

(b) Method of cocking in Mark I. cocking is effected on closing the bolt ; in Mark II. cocking is effected on opening the bolt.

(c) Method of securing extractor, in Mark II. the extractor is secured to the bolt mechanism to prevent accidental loss, such as might have occurred in Mark I. when the bolt was not in the rifle.

(d) Method of securing the rifle sling, Mark I. has swivels at front band, trigger guard and butt.

(e) Chamber, in Mark II. the chamber is of different dimensions to Mark I. in order to facilitate extraction.

(f) Method of manufacture, in Mark II. methods adopted to produce certain components are different from those adopted to Mark I.

10. There is no Mark III. rifle yet.

11. None.

12. No.

13 and 14. Some changes and improvements in Mark II. are being arranged for. These changes can be extended to all Mark II. rifles and certain of them to Mark I., if considered desirable.

15 and 16. A rifle is not rejected as a whole. Each component is separately inspected and any defective parts are sent back to the factory to be replaced or altered as required and the rifle resubmitted for inspection. No rifles have been rejected after final inspection.

17. No.

CONGESTION OF TRAFFIC ON RAILWAYS IN WESTERN CANADA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY inquired of the government:

If they have had any communication with the railway companies operating railways west of Lake Superior in western Canada in regard to the congested state of transportation on these railways, and if so, what has been the result, if not, what does the government propose to do regarding this matter?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Communication was had, by this department with the Board of Railway Commissioners in the matter, it being under their control and the board advise that they had, during the winter, received numerous complaints respecting the service and car supply on the railways of the northwestern provinces, and had dealt with them as rapidly as possible, with the companies concerned and had succeeded in many cases in obtaining from the companies an improvement in the service. The severe weather conditions of the past winter, combined with the fuel famine that has prevailed, and which taxed the energies of the railway companies to prevent distress, have, however, made it almost impossible to handle the grain traffic satisfactorily. One of the engineers of the board is carrying out an inquiry into the conditions of affairs.

The situation is now, however, relieved, and both on the Canadian Northern and Canadian Pacific railways grain cars are being furnished. On the latter road since February 16, about 21,410 bushels of grain have been shipped from Belle Plaine, bringing the percentage of grain shipped to that market up to 60 per cent. It is believed that there will not be any further cause for complaint.

The whole question of railway equipment and car distribution is receiving the attention of the board, who appear to be fully aware of the importance of the matter.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That answer is somewhat satisfactory, inasmuch as the government have started to take some action in this matter. I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment no legislation has come before this parliament within the last two or three years that is of half as much importance as the matter of transportation, particularly in our western country. In my judgment the greatest difficulty in regard to this question in the western district is the shortage of locomotives rather than of cars. I think there are sufficient cars to handle the trade of the western country if there were sufficient locomotives to haul the trains. When a car is loaded 38 or 40 days to go a distance that can be traversed in three days, it shows that there is not sufficient locomotive power to handle the traffic.

If the money which they are spending in the construction of railways were expended in building engines there would be very little trouble in the west, or in any other part of Canada ; but so long as the railway companies have not engines enough to haul the cars, transportation will be blocked. I am advised that to-day, throughout the province of Saskatchewan, two-thirds of last year's crop has yet to be moved. That is a very serious state of things, not only to the farmers who produce the grain, but to the public throughout Canada. The farmers cannot sell their grain, and cannot pay their bills, and those who have furnished them with implements, &c., cannot be paid. I am very glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that the government have taken some notice of it, and I hope the result will be some relief from the present congestion. However, I have no present expectation of any improvement, because there is 6,000 miles of railway under contract in the Northwest to-day, and, if those roads have to be equipped with rolling stock, the shortage will continue to be as great as it is to-day and possibly greater when next year's crop comes to be moved. It is a poor policy to build railways that cannot be equipped. You might as well give a farmer twenty horses to operate his farm, and not give him harness and machinery. There is a grab game going on just now between the great railway companies in the Northwest ; they are building branch lines all over the country in advance of settlement. It was not so in the old days. Then settlement preceded the railways and the facilities for transporting freight were afterwards furnished. I have known an instance where a man had to haul his wheat 100 miles to a railway and the haulage cost him more than he got for the wheat. It is very poor encouragement to a farmer who is raising large quantities of grain to find that there are not transportation facilities to carry it away and that he cannot get paid for his produce. The banks have come to the rescue, it is true, and loaned money ; but it is a loss to the farmer to have to pay interest on borrowed capital. It is a very serious thing this lack of transportation in the west. I do not know how it is in the east, but in the west we cannot get our grain to market after producing it, and all for want of a few more locomotives to haul the trains. If the government can impress upon the companies the importance of supplying more engines, and if the government who, I understand, are building large numbers of cars for the Grand Trunk Pacific would use that money to build locomotives and loan them to the companies for a while, they would be doing a greater service to the country. I am glad to hear that the matter is occupying the attention of the government, and I hope the result will be to increase facilities for transporting the produce of the Northwest.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I quite admit that there is ample justification for the criticisms of the hon. gentleman; but I can assure him that repeatedly, during the months of January and February, the Premier wired Sir Thomas Shaughnessy calling attention to the state of things in the Northwest, and the answer was that he was powerless; that they had given orders for locomotives in all directions and could not get them. The Kingston Locomotive Works are filled with orders more than a year ahead. The United States Railway companies are in a very much worse position. I saw it stated in the press that in the month of February there were over a thousand cars detained somewhere between Illinois and Washington. It was particularly pointed out that goods which had been ordered for the Christmas distribution on the Pacific coast of the United States, were stalled in the month of February, showing that the conditions there were really worse then they were in Canada. In one telegram, the Premier suggested that the company should send motive power from the east, but the answer was that they were really short here too, and could not take the engines off the main lines without seriously disturbing the conditions of trade in the country. All I can assure the hon. gentleman is, that a condition arose in consequence of the unexpected severity of the winter and the snow blockade that made it impossible for the railway companies to carry out their engagements.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—How will it be when they build more railways ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am interested in a large manufacturing institution in the southwestern States, and can testify that the shortage of cars has been a very serious drawback this last year throughout that region. Every state has suffered more or less from the very difficulties which my hon. friend says have been experienced in the Northwest. I think the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Northern Railway deserve great credit for the efforts they have made to overcome the congestion in the Northwest. They have put forth every effort and endeavoured to supply the Northwest with transportation facilities when in reality the eastern provinces, Ontario at all events, has been somewhat neglected. I know of cases where cars were ordered six weeks ahead for the shipment of grain in Ontario and they could not be supplied ; so my hon. friend is complaining of a difficulty that is not confined to the west, but which is experienced all over the continent.

Hon. Mr. JONES—This is one of the most important questions that could come before us, if the House or the government were in a position to relieve the situation. It is, of course, interesting to learn that people in the United States are as badly off as ourselves ; although I do not know that that materially helps the situation in Canada. It reminds me of a story of a farmer at Moosejaw, in the Northwest, who had the misfortune to be burned out. A minister, whose church he attended went to sympathize with him, and said a great many nice things to him, and the farmer, a good old Scotch Presbyterian, did not take so kindly to the sympathy, especially when it was frequently repeated and finally said : 'Yes, Mr. Pastor, it is very serious, but thank God the neighbours are just about as badly off as I am.' That kind of satisfaction does not help. If they are as bad off as we are, they are unfortunate. I have a letter in my hand, received to-day from my office, calling attention to certain conditions of this nature, relating to several cars of goods shipped to northwestern Canada a couple of months ago. We were advised by wire yesterday that they had not yet reached North Bay. These goods were intended for the use of the farmers for spring seeding. They are likely to reach there when the spring seeding is nearly, if not altogether over, and a severe loss will be sustained, because the necessary tools they have contracted for, and expected would arrive, have not reached there. This becomes, therefore a very serious question not only to shippers of goods, but to those who expect them and to the railway system itself, because they are looking for increased returns from farmers by way of increased freight that is to come out. It appears to me that everything has been done that probably could reasonably have been done by the railway companies, and I am not finding fault with them, notwithstanding the fact that the situation is very serious, except in so far as the hon. gentleman opposite who has spoken said in connection with the building of new roads. It does appear to me that something should be done, if possible, to lessen the work that is going on in connection with new railways. There is in many parts of northwestern Canada a race between three systems of railways to reach certain points so that they will have priority of right, or that they will reach a particular section of the country as soon as their rivals, and any one who knows the situation there understands that it is at those important competing points that advantages are afforded to settlers which are not afforded at points other than competing points. That does not alleviate the trouble altogether, even at competing points. I have in my mind an illustration; two cars of wheat shipped from a station at a competing point in November, 1906, were on March 10, 1907, within fifteen miles from the town from which they were shipped, standing on a siding.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That shows that it is the want of engines, not the lack of cars.

Hon. Mr. JONES—I do not imagine, from the information that I have been able to gather—and I have devoted a lot of thought to this situation—that the government could help the railway companies in the direction indicated by my hon. friend from Wolesley, in providing locomotives. The government might possibly help the situation in the discouraging for a time the building of new lines. Hon. gentlemen in the west will know that the great railway companies, especially the Canadian Pacific Railway, were energetic last fall, in the building of new lines and in double tracking of their system from Fort William to Winnipeg, in order that they might be in a position to handle the additional traffic, and large numbers of cars and engines were necessary to look after the various gangs of men. The difficulty they found was that if they did not go on with that work they would be unable to finish it in time to take out this year's crop, and that was a great drawback. There are two great drawbacks in northwestern Canada, and they apply also to eastern Canada. I refer to the great shortage of engines, and to the still greater shortage of competent men to handle the engines and the trains. Both of these conditions together have brought about the state of affairs existing at the present time.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Would the hon. gentleman propose as a remedy that the government should put some check on the building of additional railways ?

Hon. Mr. JONES—I think it would be in the best interests of Canada, if the influence of the government went in the direction of influencing the railways to equip and operate more thoroughly the railways that are built, before they go on with extensions which, if taken care of, must be to the absolute neglect of thickly settled portions of northwestern Canada, that they cannot possibly attend to even now.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Unfortunately, we all appear to lose sight of that view when we pledged the resources of Canada thirty years in advance for the purpose of building the National Transcontinental Railway.

Hon. Mr. JONES—If I may be allowed to say a word with reference to that, I do not think we began too soon to get another great highway into the western part of Canada.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. JONES—I think if we had begun sooner, it would have been less necessary to have hurried the situation as it is being hurried, and hurried as it will, it will be overtaxed before it is completed. If the people in Canada intend that the present continental system from east to west shall take care of western Canada, it will be necessary for either the railway companies or possibly the parliament of Canada to consider a third transcontinental railway to help out the two that will be operating. What we want, and what the government of Canada should undertake to help us to do, is to obtain thousands and thousands of more men to help take care of the industrial situation as it is in Canada to-day. That and large numbers of engines and cars would materially help the situation. We have outgrown the conditions absolutely, and the whole system of railways in northwestern Canada is paralyzed with the congestion of traffic. It is true that the present situation has been brought about partially because of the climatic conditions, conditions that are unusual, and almost, I think, unheard of in northwestern Canada. But, notwithstanding that, and under the most favourable conditions, the people of northwestern Canada would have suffered seriously this season for the want of railways. I have in my mind a circumstance that I know of my own personal knowledge. In one of the sections of the country where wheat is very largely grown, farmers had on order in January over 600 cars which they asked to have to load at that station. Up to a recent date they had received but ninety cars—and 510 cars standing still on order. The grain cannot be moved till after seeding. People who know the country, and know the conditions, will understand that no considerable quantity can be moved out during the seeding time, and the farmers are prevented from taking care of the work which crops up in the country between seed time and harvest, the summer fallowing, &c. A great deal of the grain is stored in temporary storage bins at home, not so well designed to take care of the grain in bad weather as the bins in the older sections, and great losses will be brought about because of these conditions. These are not conditions which can be overcome by any of the railway companies or by the government ; but I think they can be helped somewhat if both work together in the direction of endeavouring to lessen for a time the rapid growth in the mileage of railways and by engaging men and engines to more fully operate the roads than we have at the present time.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We might continue this discussion indefinitely with some profit ; but I do not think there is anything before the Chair.

The SPEAKER—There is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If this debate is to proceed, I desire to take part.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No it is altogether irregular.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I shall bring it up when the Canadian Northern Bill is being considered, so that just as much time will be occupied.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (88) An Act to incorporate the Ontario and Quebec Ferry Company.—(Hon. Mr. Young.)

Bill (XX) An Act respecting certain patents of Philip J. Green, Melvin Hunt and John D. McMurrich.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr.)

CANADIAN MUSICAL DRAMATIC ASSOCIATION BILL.

WITHDRAWN.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN, from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Bills, to whom was referred back the report on Bill (I) an Act to incorporate the Canadian Musical Dramatic Association, Limited, with instructions to remove the provision respecting lotteries, reported that the promoters of the Bill asked permission to withdraw it and the committee had recommended that their request be granted.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN moved that the report be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

THE RULES OF THE HOUSE.

MOTION.

The notice of motion being called :

Hon. Mr. POWER will move :

1st. That (i) of rule 25 be amended by inserting after the word 'amendments' the words 'to a public Bill.'

2nd. That the four rules following be inserted after rule 31, that is to say :

Any substantive motion which has been adopted by the Senate, other than a motion relating to a Bill, may be reconsidered at the next sitting of the Senate : Provided, that notice of the proposed reconsideration is given during the sitting of the Senate at which such motion is adopted. Such notice may be given at any time during such sitting.

The motion to reconsider must be moved after 'Notices' and 'Inquiries,' and before 'Motion' on the next sitting day, unless postponed to some certain time by leave of the Senate.

When a motion for reconsideration is decided, that decision shall not be reconsidered ; and no question shall be twice reconsidered.

An order, resolution or other vote of the Senate, not being a motion for a stage of a Bill, may be rescinded ; but no such order, resolution or other vote shall be rescinded during the same session, unless seven days' notice be given and at least one-half of the whole number of senators vote in favour of its rescision : Provided that, to correct irregularities or mistakes, one day's notice only shall be sufficient.

3rd. That the following be inserted after rule 102 : 'A public document quoted from by a minister of the Crown may be ordered by the Senate to be forthwith laid upon the table ; unless it is stated by the miniser to be of such a nature that its production would be inconsistent with the public interest.'

4th. That the changes in the numbering of certain rules, made appropriate by the foregoing additions, be duly made.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The first motion of which I have given notice is to amend clause (i) of rule 25. Rule 25 deals with motions for which no notice is required, and paragraph (i) reads as follows :

For the consideration of Commons amendments forthwith or on a future day.

If hon. gentlemen will turn to rule 131, at page 52, they will find that it reads as follows :

When any private Bill is returned from the House of Commons with amendments, the same not being merely verbal or unimportant, such amendments are, previous to their second reading, referred to a committee of the whole, or to the select committee to which such Bill was originally referred.

Consequently this paragraph (i) does not apply, because that paragraph provides for the immediate consideration of Commons amendments without any notice and it is unnecessary, I therefore move the adoption of the first motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With respect to the next motion which applies to four rules, I may say for the information of some hon. gentlemen who were not here two years ago when the new rules were under consideration, that the four rules which are here set out were reported from the committee; and I may add that, when they were first considered, they were adopted in the House, but an hon. gentleman who objected to reconsideration succeeded in having these rules reconsidered at the next sitting of the House and they were stricken out. The rules, as

hon. gentlemen know, have been in print for some time, but it has been the practice to have in addition to the rules some forms of procedure, the British North America Act, and some other enactments which bear directly upon the work of the Senate, bound together in a volume ; and if any changes are to made in the existing rules, it is felt that this is the time to make the changes. Some hon. members think it would be well to insert these rules, which were not adopted, in the body of the rules. The substantial ground which was taken against the adoption of these rules was that when an Act is done by the Senate that Act should not afterwards be disturbed ; that there should be some permanence and finality about the action of the Senate. We all concur in that, subject to a slight qualification, which you find embodied in the saying 'be sure you are right, and then go ahead.' If no mistake has been made, I think we should stick to what we have done. But the English rule is not inflexible. Hon. gentlemen will see why it is not desirable that it should be inflexible. In the first place some comparatively important measure may be decided in a very thin House and the measure may be supported only by a very small minority of all the members of the Senate. I think it will strike every hon. gentleman that, in a case of that sort, the House, when a much larger number of senators are present, should have an opportunity to reconsider that action. That is the case where action is taken in a thin House. For instance, Friday afternoon we very often have a thin House, and it would be regrettable that any action taken under such circumstances should be final in every case. Then again there are cases where action is taken hurriedly. That happens in the most prudent legislative body. The Senate is a very prudent body, but once in a while it is liable to take action without sufficient information or sufficient consideration. The ground taken two years ago was that in England, under the British practice, you could not reconsider. I wish to direct the attention of the House as briefly as possible to a couple of authorities which show that that is not the case. At page 452 of Bourinot, the last edition, the author lays stress on the importance of having fixity of action, and he says unless such a rule were in existence the time of the House would be constantly frittered away in the discussion of motions of the same nature, and the most contradictory decisions would be arrived at in the course of the same session. Consequently, if a question or Bill is rejected in the Senate or Commons, it cannot be revived again in the same House in the same session. Then follows what I desire particularly to call the attention of the House to :

> Circumstances, however, may arise to render it necessary that the House should reconsider its previous judgment on a question, and in that case there are means afforded by the practice of parliament of again considering the matter. Orders of the House are frequently discharged and resolutions rescinded. The latter part of the 13th rule of the House of Commons provides 'no member may reflect upon any vote of the House except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.' in such a case, the motion will first be made to read the entry in the Journals of the resolution, and, when that has been done by the clerk, the next motion will be that the said resolution be rescinded, or another resolution expressing a different opinion may be agreed to.

I do not know that it is necessary to read anything from May, because Bourinot practically borrows from May, and at page 300 of the last edition of May, hon. gentlemen will find the same doctrine laid down. So that, clearly, under the English system resolutions of the House may be rescinded ; and we had an example of that the other day here when the hon. gentleman from Stadacona gave notice that on a certain day he would move that a certain entry in the Journals be read, and gave notice of a second resolution that he would move that that resolution be rescinded. The question is which is the better plan, the plan which we have now, or the one which is proposed in the resolutions which I have the honour to submit. The rules which I have the honour to submit, provide that notice to reconsider is to be given at the sitting of the House at which the motion objected to has been passed, for the next sitting. Every hon. gentleman who is present has notice that a motion to reconsider will be made. The notice appears on the Minutes. Every hon. gentleman who can make it convenient to attend the next sitting of the House has notice that this motion to reconsider is to be moved : there is no serious delay incurred, and then the matter is finally settled at the next sitting ; because the third resolution provides that the decision arrived at the second time shall not be reconsidered. And, further, I wish to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that these rules do not affect Bills, because a Bill has to go through several stages, and hon. members have numerous opportunities to oppose a Bill if it contains any objectionable feature. It does not, of course, affect routine motions. It just affects substantial motions such, for instance, as the adoption of a report of a special committee on some question of importance. I find that in the same resolution the question of rescinding is dealt with. The rule which the committee reported as to rescinding is the same, I think, as the rule which prevails in the Senate of the Commonwealth of Australia. This rule provides that where a resolution has been adopted—where any action of the Senate has been taken—and there has been no reconsideration, then there should be a week's notice of any motion to rescind that resolution, and that a majority of all the members of the Senate should be required to rescind. I think that that is a prudent provision, because otherwise you would be liable to have, in the closing days of the session, some important action taken by the Senate in the earlier part of the session, when the House was comparatively full, rescinded. To require a week's notice and a vote of the majority of the whole Senate is not too much.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It would have been more convenient if my hon. friend had moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to discuss these four resolutions. One of these amendments provides that we may deal with a substantive motion which has been adopted by the House during the same session on a motion for reconsideration, and another is that we may deal—although it is not stated in quite the same words—with the same class of motion by a process of rescission, which, as my hon. friend has pointed out, is the British practice, and is the practice which remained to us after the adoption of these rules and which was invoked by the hon. member for Stadacona during the present session in order to test the sense of the House as to whether a certain action of the House should be reversed. A motion to reconsider, my hon. friend will admit, does not belong to British practice, although it is quite common in the United States and also in the Australian colonies. This matter was discussed very fully a year ago, not once or twice but three times in this House, after it had left the committee, and there was a great deal of difference of opinion as to the expediency of reconsideration. It was held by many hon. gentlemen, especially by the hon. senator from DeSalaberry, who I regret is not present now, that a motion to reconsider only opened the door. In the very nature of the term it would not mean more than that. But the resolution, as my hon. friend has it here, must mean more than that—must mean that a motion to reconsider would be almost a motion to reverse the decision. I observe that he shakes his head in dissent from that suggestion. Does he mean that after you make a motion to reconsider you cannot rescind without calling into effect the remaining resolution with reference to rescinding? If so you would have then to give seven days' notice after having opened the door.

Hon. Mr. POWER—When a motion for reconsideration is decided in the affirmative there is a decision that such a vote shall be reconsidered. That decision will not be reconsidered. An hon. member could not move that that be reconsidered.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the only effect of the motion is to open the door. Then if you wanted to rescind you would have to proceed under another rule. I do not think there is any necessity for having two provisions. We have got on very well under the British practice. However, I have no very strong opinions on the subject, though I think one or the other would have been sufficient. I think, after my hon. friend tried to reverse—if that was his object—a substantive motion adopted by the House, he would move his motion to reconsider, and having carried that, would have to give his second notice to rescind, and it would go over for a week. He may not mean it that way, but I think that is the interpretation that would have to be put upon it. It is not very often we have to resort to anything of this kind. We should adopt either one or the other rule, and make it clear that we take power to go further on consideration and reverse what has been done, if not let it stand on the principle of rescission as laid down in May and Bourinot, and in accordance with British practice.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have a very good illustration of one statement made by the hon. member from Halifax in the thin House here to-day. If any senator desired to take advantage of a thin House he should always select Friday afternoon or Friday evening to accomplish his object. This question was discussed very fully in committee, and the proposition was rejected by a large majority of the Senate. Like the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, I have no very strong opinion on this question. But there is a point in it that in parliamentary practice I think we all know, that the principle of legislation in the British parliament, and also in this country, is that no question after having been considered by the Commons, or by the Senate, can be reopened during that session, and the great difficulty that presents itself, to my mind, in opening the door in the manner in which it is proposed to open it now, is that you may have a dozen questions brought up a second time. It is true that the proposed amendment of the rules provides that a reconsideration cannot take place twice during a session ; but you may have a dozen questions on which you may take advantage of this rule in order to bring them before the House ; so that the questions which have been fully discussed by a full House, as this very question was, may be brought up at any time and at a period similar to the one which we are now discussing, with a quarter of the full membership present. I am at a loss to know exactly what is proposed here. It says, after giving seven days notice, that the reconsideration must be carried by at least one-half of the whole number of senators. If that means anything, it seems to me to mean a majority of the full number of senators, and not a majority of those who are present at the meeting at which it is considered. If I interpret that correctly, that seems to me to be the only construction to be placed upon those words. Supposing the adoption of the amendment of the rules depended upon a vote to-day, we have not a quarter of the members of the Senate present, and, consequently, it would be impossible to carry any of these motions, providing it is advisable that we should adopt the rule, unless we had about forty-five members present when the matter was considered, and then you must have the full forty-five voting for it. As an hon. gentleman behind me states, the matter could not be brought up on a Friday. If it said 'one-half of the number of the senators present,' then there would have been no difficulty in coming to a decision on what could or could not be done. I do not propose to divide the House upon this question, but I do really think that the rules that have guided legislation, not only in the imperial parliament, but in Canada since confederation at least—and I do not know particularly except from reading, what took place before that—were all that was necessary for the proper maintenance of order and the consideration of questions. Old members of the House of Commons will remember that whenever a question was proposed for a second time it was ruled out of order at once, and there was an end of it. I do not know that any difficulties may arise out of this ? This is a rule in Australia, where they have adopted a great many rules which I do not think are at all suited to our system of government, because they are much more democratic in Australia than even the United States on very many questions ; they have placed in their rules very many objectionable provisions, to my mind, and I do think that if the hon. gentleman would content himself with adopting the first amendment, to which there is no objection, and which makes the rules plainer, it would be much better for the Senate and for our legislation in the future.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Belleville. He has reflected my views clearly with regard to this question. The hon. gentleman who has brought this matter again before the House deserves a great deal of credit for the study and attention he has bestowed on our present rules whilst chairman on the committee on rules two years ago. There is no question at all, that in regard to the rules as we have them, we owe a great deal to the efforts of the hon. gentleman from Halifax as chairman of that committee ; and I also give him the credit of being persistent in his efforts to have certain amendments to the rules which he always favoured even in the committee. This whole question was brought up last year and discussed at a very full meeting, if my memory serves me right, of the Senate, and it was decided by a majority on that occasion that these two amendments that are now proposed should not stand part of the rules of the Senate. I was one of those who voted with the majority on that occasion, and I am still of the same opinion, and as the hon. gentleman from Belleville has pointed out, the example quoted by the hon. gentleman from Halifax, we have before us to-day, of a thin House doing something which perhaps, if a full attendance had been present, it would not do. But I am not going to take up the time of the House in going over all the arguments of last year. I will simply read the declaration which Bourinot sets out on page 452, which is copied from May :

> It is, however, an ancient rule of parliament that no question or motion can regularly be offered, if it is substantially the same as one on which the judgment of the House has already been expressed during the current session.

That is the starting point. It is true there are exceptions under the British practice, and we decided as a House last year that these exceptions were sufficient—or in other words the British practice was sufficient, for the guidance of the Senate and that this practice would meet all the circumstances that might arise hereafter, so far as variations might be necessary from the ordinary rule. Hon. gentlemen will notice that while the British practice provides for exceptions against the general rule, if we adopt the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax there are no exceptions at all. Every substantial motion outside of motions which relate to Bills, may be reconsidered in the same session of the Senate, so that we depart from the ancient rule and the British practice by making the exception our rule, instead of the good rule which has prevailed so long. I do not know whether I have made myself clear or not, but hon. gentlemen can see that this is a very wide departure, and I call your attention to it, because the hon. gentleman who has moved this motion relies on the support of the House, on the ground that there is already in practice a safety valve, which, if it is a good thing in a minor way, if the deduction I gather from his argument is correct, would be a much better thing in a broader sense of making every motion passed by the House subject to reconsideration upon a day's notice. If my hon. friend is logical, why stop at the second consideration ? If our wisdom is better and better as we go along why not keep on reconsidering questions and possibly our decisions will be still better. I think that the conclusion we arrived at last year was a safe one, but that we have a safety valve now which gives sufficient opportunity to correct mistakes which may arise, or any judgment of the House on matters which, from one cause or another, we may have more light upon later, and I think we should rest our case on that. My hon. friend says, in support of his contention, that very recently the hon. gentleman from Stadacona had recourse to the procedure which he now urges upon this House. I should like to call attention to the fact that had this amendment been a rule of the House upon the occasion on which my hon. friend from Stadacona made his motion he could not come under this rule at all, because the motion which he made the other day was in relation to a Bill. It was an instruction to a committee on a Bill, and I take it that this amendment would not apply to his case in the slightest degree. In giving instructions to a committee, you may give a dozen instructions under the British practice. I question the procedure of the other day, although I raised no objection to it, nor did anybody else. I am sure we were all willing to allow the action to be taken. I think the hon. gentleman could have followed a different procedure which would have been more correct ; therefore he did not require to have a rule of this kind in our book of rules to help him out in the slightest. Last year we decided, with a very full House, that this change was not desirable. I think I can appeal to hon. members, that with the thin House we have to-day it would not be wise; at this particular time of the session, to make any change, but rather to leave our rules as we have them at present. I have every regard for the judgment of the hon. senator from Halifax, but I think in this case he should have accepted the verdict of the House last year, and left our rules as we have them now, retaining the good old practice that prevails at present and in regard to which, so far as my observation goes since 1900, we have never yet been inconvenienced by the practice which prevails, so far as my experience goes in this House, and I think hon. gentlemen will bear me out in that statement. So far we have had nothing to cure. First we have the safety valve that I mentioned a few moments ago, and I think that is quite sufficient. It would be a dangerous power to place in the hands of any member of this House. For instance, to-day, at the opening of this House, there were quite a number of members present. A question might have been decided in the affirmative, and I at the close of the sitting might move to reconsider that very question on Monday with, possibly, a very small attendance here. It is not reasonable to suppose that hon. members who left here with the idea that that matter was settled would get notice for Monday. They might be here and might not be here. There might be an unfair advantage taken in that way. If I were a designing character, I might so arrange with those who were in favour of my view to be sure to be in attendance on Monday, and a few minutes before six, because it says a notice of motion may be given at any time before the sitting of the House closed, a few minutes before six I would give my notice, and would have those in favour of my view on hand on Monday and the decision of the House might be reversed, and then it could not be reconsidered—a decision which a majority of the House would not for one moment favour. There is a danger that I can foresee, which I think we should avoid. Last year, hon. gentlemen will recollect, it was pointed out that the Senate is a deliberative body, and when it gives its decision, it is supposed to give it after due consideration, and it is not a compliment to the Senate to say that we should ask to have a second chance to decide a matter—we are the highest court in the realm, the only one who asks to have a second chance to give a decision on a question which, in the very nature of things, should in the first place have been given with the deliberation necessary to secure a correct and just verdict. I think it is rather a reflection on the House to suggest that we should have a second trial of the same question.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—If I understand it aright, no change could be made in the motion unless the whole House were notified and the majority of the Senate approved of it. Is that right ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Oh, no. Does my hon. friend refer to the amendment now before us ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The resolution that was passed.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In the amendment proposed for reconsideration it does not give any number, but in the notice for rescinding it is provided that at least one-half of the number of senators should vote in favour of the proposition.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—You could not make any change until you notified a majority of the Senate; they would have to be cognizant of any change.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—If I give notice before this House rises, every member present may know of it, and half of them may not know of it. There is no cast iron rule that every one shall be notified, but it is supposed to be the duty of every one to be present and get his notification in that way. I trust that hon. members will leave the rules as they are, in so far as the question now before the House is concerned.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is a matter affecting the management of debates and proceedings of the Senate which may materially interfere with the government in many respects, and I wish to ask if the government has any opinion upon it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think the government have any opinion on the subject. The government was really not represented on the committee at which the rules were formed. I may have been named a member of it, but I never attended it, so that the rules were made by the body of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But the hon. gentleman was present when the vote was taken rejecting this provision.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I relied upon the wisdom of the majority.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does the hon. gentleman think it would be all right for a small House of twenty-four members to reverse the deliberate action of the Senate on this question a year ago, with a full House ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—With respect to that objection, this notice has been on the paper for at least a fortnight—from March 19th and hon. gentlemen have had notice that it was coming up, and I do not think it can be pleaded that there has not been sufficient notice. I observe that there appears to be in the minds of some hon. gentleman a tendency, for which the form of resolution was perhaps responsible, to mix up reconsideration and rescinding. They are two totally different things. I think the hon. gentleman from Killarney said, if I caught his meaning, that I wish to make a general rule of what is now the exception. The truth is that the general rule now is that any member of this House can at any time whatever, on giving two day's notice, move to rescind any resolution of this House passed during the same session. Now, instead of making that easier the proposed rule makes it more difficult. A member has to give notice of reconsideration at the sitting of the House when the motion or resolution is adopted. That is a protection to the House. He cannot wait until three or four days or a week after and then take his action perhaps at the close of the session. It will be seen that the effect of the first part of this resolution is to protect the House. The hon. gentleman from Killarney also told us what might happen if, late on Friday afternoon, a notice was given and hon. gentlemen might not be here on Monday. The hon. members of this House, as a rule, consult the Minutes, and there they would find the notice for Monday. Then the hon. gentleman laid stress—and I was a little surprised at that —on the fact that the Senate was a deliberative body. I remember that was one of his strong arguments a year ago; but the hon. gentleman's memory is not so short that he has already forgotten that the Senate, in Committee of the Whole, adopted these rules. The Senate supposed then to be a deliberate body did that notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's arguments. When the Senate met again, and we resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of these rules, the hon. gentleman's arguments I suppose had had time to sink into the minds of hon. members, and several hon. gentlemen voted differently from the way in which they voted on the previous occasion. So that I do not think the hon. gentleman is serious when he lays such stress on the fact that the Senate is a deliberative body. The object of the notice to reconsider is to provide that there shall be a deliberate judgment of the Senate, and that there shall be no snap vote.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When this matter was up for consideration last year, I did not feel as actively interested in the question as some members of the House, but owing to what I might term the acrimonious discussion that ensued, I think it would be extremely unfortunate that we should dispose of so important a question, and one which gave rise to so much diversity of opinion when so few members are present. I therefore move the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

MONDAY SITTINGS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved :

That when the Senate adjourns to-day, and on subsequent Fridays, until the end of the session, it do stand adjourned until the following Monday, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I was asked by several members who left this afternoon to suggest that it would be more convenient to them to meet on Monday evening. If there is any urgency about it, I will not press the request.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If it is the feeling of the House, I have no objection.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Three o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—BRANCH TO SYDNEY MINES.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.) inquired of the government :

1. Is the Intercolonial Railway branch from North Sydney to Sydney Mines on the track of the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company's Railway, and if so, for what distance ?

2. What arrangement has the government made with the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company in this matter ?
3. What amount has been or will be paid to the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company for this privilege ?
4. Is the Sydney Mines Railway station contracted for ?
5. Who has the contract ?
6. What is the amount of the contract ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer is as follows :

1. No, the Intercolonial Railway use their own track.
2. Answered by number one.
3. Answered by number one.
4. Yes.
5. Chappell Brothers & Company.
6. $6,980.

MEDICAL INSPECTOR OF IMMIGRANTS AT SYDNEY, C.B.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.) inquired of the government—

If Dr. J. W. McLean, North Sydney, is in the employ of the government in connection with immigration or otherwise ?
What is the nature of his duties?
What is his salary ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—the answers are :

1. Yes.
2. He is medical inspector of immigrants at Sydney, Cape Breton.
3. $1,000 per annum.

INCOMPLETE RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to direct the attention of the leader of the Senate to the incompleteness of the returns brought down in answer to questions of mine with reference to contracts let on the Grand Trunk Pacific and National Transcontinental Railway. I made inquiries to ascertain the amounts of the contracts. I thought I had made my motion sufficiently comprehensive to include the rails and ties. Before preparing my motion, I consulted an excellent railway authority who told me that that would be held to mean the cost of the ties and rails as well as of the other work. However, it appears it was not so understood by the department, and the return brought down did not contain the cost of the ties and rails. Then I made a supplementary motion, asking for this information which had been omited in connection with all the sections of the road about which they had supplied the other particulars. Yesterday my hon. friend brought down what purported to be the supplementary information that I had asked for. Now, when I compare the information that was brought down with the returns previously given by my hon. friend, I find that there are discrepancies. I find that the return of yesterday enumerates two sections not included in the original return, so that I have for these two sections the cost of the ties and rails, but not the major part of the cost of those sections.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Are they under contract ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They must be under contract. It is only with regard to sections under contract that I ask for this information, and it seems to me there can be no doubt that they are under contract and that this supplementary information is supplied with regard to them ; but it is of no value to me, because I have not got the major information that I asked for. It looks as if the department had made a mistake, and thought they had already given me the information with regard to ballasting, track laying, grading, &c. But in addition to that, I find there is another section about which I had a return of the cost of ballasting, tracklaying, and grading 150 miles, for which the supplementary information is not given.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Will the hon. gentleman give me a memo. of the missing information, and I will try to get it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There are two sections about which I have some supplementary information, and there is another section as to which I have the main information, but no supplementary information. I will give my hon. friend a memo. of it after the House adjourns. I have been a long time trying to get this information, and I hope this will complete it, at least for these sections.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should like to ask my hon. friend when I may expect to get some returns for which addresses of this House were passed some weeks ago ? One was with reference to the operation of the steamer 'Montcalm'. It must be nearly a couple of months now since I made that motion. There is another with reference to the operation of the Civil Service Insurance Act, a very simple return. I think it would not take long to get it ready. Then there is another with reference to exhibits.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think that was brought down.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have not been able to find it if it has been. My hon. friend, I think, has reference to the first inquiry I made with regard to this. Afterwards I moved for a return. I may say that I noticed that leave had to be obtained in the House of Commons to get these exhibits for this House ; that they are held to be in the custody of the House of Commons. The Minister of Finance has to make a motion in order to get the permission of the House of Commons to furnish those exhibits to the Senate. I cannot understand why the exhibits pertaining to a report of a royal commission, submitted to both Houses of parliament should not be as much in the custody of this House as of the House of Commons ; but I notice in 'Hansard' that an application had to be made to the House of Commons in order to get the consent of that House to bring those exhibits here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am very glad the hon. gentleman has brought that question before the Senate. When I noticed the action of the House of Commons on this matter, I proposed to ask the government under what rule or principle public documents coming, as in the present case, from a royal commission appointed by the government, are submitted to the House of Commons, and cannot be furnished to the Senate, even when asked for by a motion of this House, without the consent of the House of Commons. I have been unable to ascertain any authority for taking a position of that kind. Why not the same principle apply to any departmental report laid before the House of Commons ? These reports are public property and, when the commission made its report, it certainly was as much public property as the Finance Minister's annual report laid before parliament. I intended to ask for information, because I have not been able to ascertain any authority for taking that position. Perhaps my hon. friend from Killarney (Hon. Mr. Young) who occupied the position of Speaker for a number of years in one of the provincial legislatures, may be in a better position to give information on this point than I am. If he has any information to justify the position taken by the Minister of Finance on this question, I should like to hear it. If not, perhaps the Speaker might give us some information.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I might be allowed to make this explanation. I inquired of the secretary of the insurance commission, who is now back in his department, because my hon. friend told the House that we could examine the documents of the insurance commission in the Finance Department, and I did so. I knew they were there. Since then, seeing this notice elsewhere, I asked the secretary to explain it. He said they were not laid on the table of the House of Commons at all, but that they had been taken into the custody of the House of Commons ; but how they could be taken into the custody of the lower House is something I cannot understand.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am afraid I cannot give any explanation. The rule, if there is one, must be a very ancient and absurd rule, as there are such rules, no doubt, between the two Houses. The Senate was quite as much entitled to the documents as the House of Commons. The information I had was that they were to be left in the Finance Department where they would be available to anybody calling to see them. I do not know how they got to the House of Commons. It is too ridiculous to say that the Senate should not have as free access to them as the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend know of any practice that would warrant the exercise of such a right ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I ask why it has been invoked by the House of Commons ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Who has asserted that right on the part of the House of Commons? Is it the clerk?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The shortest way is to see Mr. Flint and ask him about it, and I have no doubt he will say that any exhibit you want can be taken over.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The question arose in the House of Commons in this way: the motion was made to have them laid on the table of the Senate, and then the Finance Minister, in the other House, stated that they could not comply with the request made by the Senate until he had received the authority of the House of Commons to surrender the custody of the exhibits and send copies of them to this House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We were not seeking the documents; we only wanted copies.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It may have been a wrong assumption on the part of the Finance Minister.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (108) An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act.—(Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright.)

Bill (LL) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Young.)

Bill (94) An Act to incorporate the Nipissing Central Railway Company, as amended.—(Hon. Mr. McKeen.)

Bill (48) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company, as amended.—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

HAMILTON RADIAL ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG (in the absence of Hon. Mr. Gibson) moved a third reading of Bill (MM) An Act respecting the Hamilton Radial Electric Company.

Hon. Mr. KERR moved in amendment that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that the following words be added to section 1 thereof:

And all rights, privileges and immunities which the company has heretofore been entitled to under its Act of incorporation and amendments thereof and otherwise are hereby continued and confirmed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In what way has doubt been thrown on the right of the company to exercise all its previous privileges and immunities?

Hon. Mr. KERR—It will be remembered that when this Bill was before the committee there was a discussion as to whether it should be declared a work for the general advantage of Canada, and the contention and the view adopted was, that it had been in effect created a work for the general advantage of Canada by reason of the general Railway Act. Hon. gentlemen will remember that Mr. Gibson of Hamilton pointed out that under the Railway Act of 1888, and the subsequent legislation relating to the Railway Act, it did come within the words defining it to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, and this is only providing for continuance of the rights created by the clause in the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did he not also point out that by the decision of Judge Street these rights could not be taken away, and it is to give that effect that these words are put in.

Hon. Mr. KERR—That is all.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I had not the fortune to be present when this Bill was discussed in the Railway Committee. It seems to me the question must necessarily arise, that if this company chooses to come to the federal parliament it must abandon any privileges and immunities inconsistent with the federal law. Consequently, if we pass this proposed amendment which my hon. friend now moves, and which seems to me to be an extraordinary amendment, one which certainly is never moved in connection with provincial charters heretofore obtaining federal powers, that it would practically give the company all the powers enjoyed as a provincial company as well as the advantages of a federal company, and yet the advantages it had as a provincial company would be superior to those which we are now giving it, and it might possibly be able to, in fact, ignore the obligations thrown on it by federal legislation.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Are those powers in conflict?

Hon. Mr. KERR—No. I do not understand there are any powers in conflict.

What was pointed out was this, that the company having been incorporated with certain powers, and the application of the Railway Act of 1888 upon that charter made it incidentally a work for the general advantage of Canada, that, therefore, it had been all along of that nature.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Has it ever been a Dominion company until now ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—No. It is only by virtue of its being a provincial incorporation which came within the lines of this provision declaring it to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under the old Railway Act, a large number of provincial companies were enumerated.

Hon. Mr. KERR—This was not one of them ; but it was by virtue of that Act, and what was contended was that the statute of 1888 having operated upon it, it became immediately and definitely a work for the general advantage of Canada and that the British North America Act immediately operated with all its effect, and that no legislative authority can repeal that except the same power which had passed the British North America Act, because it would in effect be amending and curtailing powers which had the effect of imperial legislation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why was not this suggested by the Railway Committee ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—It was suggested, but it was overlooked, and so the notice of motion to amend was given when it was found that no action had been taken upon it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I see in the margin of the Bill, that it has been under the Ontario legislature in all these years—1894, 1895, 1896, 1900 and 1904. If it was under the Railway Act by virtue of the statute of 1888, it is very curious that they should be still invoking the Ontario power ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—Those are extensions of the power.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Up to the present time, it has been under the Ontario legislation.

Hon. Mr. KERR—No ; they have assumed the contrary. Justice Street determined it had by virtue of that statute been from the time of construction of the railway a work for the general advantage of Canada. That is the view that was taken, and there seems to have been no question raised about it at that time. The words incorporated in this amendment were suggested in the committee, and it was supposed by those present that they had been adopted ; but when they saw that they had been omitted, it was proposed that they be added at the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Has the hon. gentleman observed that they have been discussing it in the provincial legislature and contending that it is ultra vires of this parliament, and that they intend to meet such cases by taxation ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is the hon. gentleman aware that the Premier of Ontario has protested strongly against this and another Bill—protested against the Dominion interfering with provincial rights, and has announced his intention of seeing further about it ? In view of the fact, I think it would be well to suspend the passage of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Although the representative of the Ontario government was present, it was stated that they were not objecting, so this cannot be the particular Bill that was referred to. Of course, if there is any serious objection to the passage of the Bill, I would ask to have the third reading stand over.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest to my hon. friend to refer this Bill back to the Railway Committee, where its application can be discussed more intelligently than here. We are undertaking to confirm all the legislation of the provincial legislature without having the statutes before us relating to them, or any information whatever by which we can determine its applicability. I have no particular object in view except to point out to my hon. friend the extraordinary rights asked for by this company, namely, to enjoy all the advantages of the provincial legislation and at the same time obtain all the advantages we can give them. There must be some conflict between the provincial and Dominion laws respecting these railways, and there cannot possibly be harmony between those two ; yet it seems to me we are asked to confirm all the provincial rights which the company has heretofore enjoyed. I think if it went before the Railway Committee the matter could be very properly discussed there, and, if it is found desirable that it should be done, I have no objection to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. KERR—If the hon. gentleman thinks it necessary, I would ask permission to withdraw the motion and let the order stand over till Monday, when, in all probability, Senator Gibson will be here. I would consent at once to what has been suggested if the Bill were not a Senate Bill, and the delay involved would have the effect of throwing it over until another session.

The order was discharged and placed on the Orders of the Day for Monday next.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (3) an Act in amendment of the Railway Act, 1903.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. POWER—It may be remembered that when the Bill was in committee before, it was suggested that it needed to be in a certain sense recast, not that its meaning had to be altered, but that it needed to be recast on account of the consolidation of the statutes, and the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill has asked me to move two or three amendments. The first line reads section 159 of the Railway Act of 1903. In the revised statutes the reference is section 196 of the Railway Act.' I therefore, move to substitute 196 for 159, and strike out 1903.

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG from the committee reported the Bill with amendments.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (BBB) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 4,

4. There are hereby inserted in the said Act, immediately after section 18 thereof, the following sections :

18a. It shall be necessary to pass the higher grade examination in order to qualify for appointment as a junior second class clerk.

18b. It shall be necesasry to pass the railway mail clerks' examination in order to qualify for appointment as a railway mail clerk.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Postmaster General says he cannot obtain employees, if they have to pass a qualifying examination, and the department is making its own examination, laying down a series of questions to be answered. A mere technical knowledge of geography, arithmetic, or history has no bearing whatever on the duty of railway mail clerks.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think I am safe in saying that there are hundreds, if not thousands who have passed the civil service examination, and are ready to take the positions. Perhaps they may not be of the right colour.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Probably they would not accept the salary.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 6,

6. Paragraph (a) of section 20 of the said Act is hereby repealed and the following is substituted therefor :

(a) that at the time appointed for such examination he will, if an applicant for the preliminary examination, be of the full age of fifteen years, if an applicant for the qualifying or railway mail clerks' examination be of the full age of sixteen years ; and, if an applicant for the higher grade examination, be of the full age of eighteen years.

Hon. Mr. POWER—These are very small ages.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They grow up in the service.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It seems to me that is a proposition which would not commend itself to the judgment of the average man.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The position of mail clerk is a very important one. It seems to me that the age of applicants is too young altogether, unless it is intended to keep them on probation a long time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is simply for examination.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No matter at what age candidates are admitted for examination, they are not eligible for an appointment until they have reached the age of 18 years.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is all right.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—With the exception of one clause, this measure applies almost exclusively to railway service, does it not ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not altogether. It was largely at the instance of the Railway Department that the Bill was drafted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are only one or two clauses that refer to any other department. In discussing some years ago the manner in which the Civil Service Act had been administered of late, or rather not administered, I suggested the propriety of the government repealing the whole Civil Service Act. Judging from the manner in which it has been applied of late years, it is of very little use. In a discussion the other day the question was asked the government whether a certain gentleman had been appointed an excise officer, I think in New Brunswick, and the answer was 'yes.' The question was, did he pass a preliminary or qualifying examination ? And the answer to that was: 'We have no record in the department of any examination having been passed, or that he was qualified,' and there the discussion ended. If excise officers, who require technical knowledge of the work they have to perform, can be appointed without any examination whatever, it seems to me superfluous to have a statute upon the books providing for an examination of the minor officers. I daresay the hon. gentleman from St. John (Hon. Mr. Ellis) may know the case to which I refer, or possibly he may have overlooked the discussion in which the facts were brought out ; and if the hon. gentleman from Wellington (Hon. Mr. McMullen) will only cast his eye over the supplementary estimates, I am inclined to think he would not be able to sleep to-night, because I have heard him denounce so often, and in such vigorous tones, the language that is used in the supplementary estimates in reference to increases in salaries to very small amounts and to very large amounts, 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary.' On one occasion I pointed out that there were sixty or seventy cases of promotion and increases of salary, in one session, in the estimates which were laid before parliament, covered by the words 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary.' If my hon. friend will only look at the main estimates and the supplementaries brought down, particularly this last one, he will find this phrase repeated over and over again. I understand what his answer is—you did the same thing. All I can say to him is, that it was never carried out to the extent to which it is carried at the present time. There are cases, I frankly admit, where it is advisable to promote a clerk who has superior ability and qualifications not possessed by others, that you should adopt this system of promotion, but it is carried in these estimates, and under the practice that prevails now, to the extent of from $10 in one instance, to one case here of $75,000. The Civil Service Act and civil service reform are absolutely a farce as administered to-day.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Gentlemen of the opposition ought to do their work better in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a most unsatisfactory Act and full of inconsistencies. From time to time this government, and perhaps their predecessors, may have had the idea of making a change and referring the matter to a commission. I do hope that before another session we shall have the whole subject referred to a commission who will draw up an Act that parliament will observe and be bound by and not have 'Notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary' repeated in the legislation of every session.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the government ought to perform their own duty in the matter and not refer it to a royal commission.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—In reply to the hon. senator from Belleville, I sat in opposition in the House of Commons for fourteen years and endeavoured to discharge my duty faithfully during that time. I found fault with everything which, in my opinion, should be found fault with.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And everything else.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—After discharging that duty for fourteen years, I am entitled now to some little rest. If I were to persist in fault finding, there is plenty of room.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not find fault; simply called attention to the matter.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I condemned the civil service for many years, owing to the fact that it was not based on a more independent and durable basis. I am delighted to hear now from the hon. Secretary of State that he hopes to introduce a Bill that will deal with the whole question of the Civil Service. It is full time. In the United States even the President, under their Civil Service Act, has not the power to remove a common letter carrier. All civil servants are placed in an independent position and are not liable to be thrown out or interfered with in the discharge of their duty. If they do not render good, faithful, efficient service they are liable to be removed, but not otherwise. In England, the civil service are on a similar basis. They can only be interfered with or removed for cause. I have been informed that such an Act has been in force in England for many years, and I should like to see similar legislation here. The government of which my hon. friend from Belleville was a member, appointed two commissioners to examine and report upon the civil service. The last commission reported by Bill, which they recommended parliament to pass. It never was acted upon, so that the report of the commission remained a dead letter and a large amount of money was spent for which the country got no return. I should like to see our Civil Service Act recast and put in such a shape that men in the employ of the country shall render efficient service for the money they receive. Speaking from what I gathered in my examination in years past there are dozens of men on the list of the civil service in Canada who are not rendering more than ten cents worth of value to the country for every dollar they draw. That should not be the case. We should have the service recast completely, so that officials would render to the country some reasonable service for the salaries they draw. I only rose to reply to the hon. gentleman from Belleville when he referred to me. I hold the same views now that I held when in oposition to his government. I believe the whole system should be recast, and the civil service put on a better and more independent basis.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the suspension of the thirty-fourth rule.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—A petition has been presented to the House regarding the civil service. I would prefer that petition should be considered before the Bill is passed.

The third reading was postponed until Monday.

THE YUKON ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (109) An Act to amend the Yukon Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the character of the Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is to enable the government to appoint an acting governor. No commissioner has been appointed since Mr. McInnes left.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my hon. friend say when Mr. Smith is to be appointed commissioner ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot. I have heard several names mentioned.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps I might give the hon. gentleman some information. This appointment will be made immediately after the prorogation of parliament.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not heard so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have so heard.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I will accept that answer to my question.

The Bill was read the first time.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (143), An Act to amend the Immigration Act.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill should be placed on the orders for second reading on Tuesday next. He said : This is a definition of a stowaway, and provides that an immigrant becoming a public charge or a criminal within two years after his arrival may be deported.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (134) An Act respecting duties of customs.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

The Senate adjourned until Monday at Three p.m.

DIVERSION OF THE WATERS OF THE RIVER ALLAGASH.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN rose to :

Call the attention of the government to the fact that the waters of the River Allagash, a tributary of the River St. John, have been and are being diverted from their natural course and will inquire what action, if any, has been taken, or if any action is to be taken by the government.

He said : I wish to state a few facts which I desire to bring before the notice of the government, as well as of the people of Canada. The people that are affected most directly by the diversion of the Allagash river are those of New Brunswick generally, a portion of the people of the state of Maine, the province of Quebec, and I think the whole of Canada, because I believe that the diversion of the waters in this case is altogether contrary to international law, quite independent of the treaty which was passed in 1842. An attempt was made to divert these waters in 1841, before the passing of the Washington treaty. In 1841, a gentleman carrying on a lumber business in the state of Maine, interested on the Penobscot river, applied to the legislature of the state of Maine for a charter to authorize him to cut a canal between a small lake on the head waters of the east branch of the Penobscot river which was within a short distance of another lake, forming one of the group of the different lakes being the source of the Allagash river, a tributary of the St. John, in order to get water from those lakes into the Penobscot river, where it was getting scarce, as is the case with many of our rivers now at the head waters. The legislature refused to grant the charter at that time, for the reason, I understand, that it would be contrary to all international law to divert the waters of any stream from its natural course. The applicants, however, went on and cut the canal without any legislative authority at all, connecting those two waters in such a way as to divert the flow that should go down the St. John river, into the Penobscot.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to explain where the river rises and flows ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN—That branch is entirely in the state of Maine, but it flows into the St. John river. It is a portion of the St. John river water, but the portion affected is within the state of Maine, of course. In 1841, before the passage of the treaty, application was made to the state of Maine, as I have already stated, for authority to construct this canal. The state legislature refused, yet, notwithstanding that refusal, the canal was constructed. It was found then that more water was required than would come by the change of levels through this canal, and in order to get more water the same parties applied for the right to construct dams on the Allagash river below the large lakes—Lake Chambelain, Lake Churchill, Eagle lake, or Heron lake and five or six smaller lakes tributary to that river, all waters naturally flowing to the St. John and forming a considerable portion of the waters of that river. They applied for permission to construct dams below those lakes so as to raise the levels and send a larger volume of water down the Penobscot, to that extent decreasing the flow of water down the Allagash river. The people of Maine are interested in this way : while this tributary is all within the state of Maine the timber lands are held by private individuals in most of that country. The holders of the timber lands on the Allagash river are United States citizens and they find that they cannot get their lumber down the Allagash river because the water has been diverted to flow down the Penobscot. After the canal was constructed, the legislature of Maine did grant Acts of incorporation to different companies, and one of these Acts legalized the canal that was constructed, and gave the company power to build such dams as might be necessary to enlarge the flow of water through the canal. In 1903 further application was made by the same company to raise the dams still further below the lakes so as to increase the flow down the Penobscot river. A prominent gentleman in the state of Maine went before the legislative committee to whom this question was referred, and, on his statement of the facts which I am now submitting to the House, the legislature refused to grant any further authority in the matter, and it so remains. It has given rise to a great deal of trouble. The two first companies that came in conflict were United States companies. So bitter was the conflict that they armed their men and it was only by accident that a very serious riot was averted. Both companies sent hundreds of men to the scene of the dispute armed to the teeth, and if a conflict had taken place it would have been attended with very serious loss of life. That has been repeated since then. At one time, one of the lumber companies blew up the dam with dynamite. It was immediately rebuilt by the other company who still hold the fort and the water. What I should like the government to understand is this : That the diversion of those waters was an act of great injustice not only to the people of New Brunswick and Quebec, but to some of the people of the state of Maine, and they have good reason to complain that the United States has allowed one of its state legislatures to grant power to a company to divert a very considerable portion of the water of the River St. John from its natural course, to the great detriment of all the lumbering industries in that section of the country. It is for that reason I wish to call the attention of the government to the fact, not because I did not suppose the facts had not been brought to their notice before, but because I do not think that the circumstances are well known to the Canadian people. Very little has been known about this legislation, and the extent of the diversion of water from the St. John. Even in my own province it has not been understood. About 1903 I, on behalf of some of my constituents and people interested in lumbering, applied for a charter here, and our syndicate applied for a charter to the legislature of Maine, for the purpose of building a dam and a sorting boom at a place called the Winding Ledges on the River St. John, where the river forms the boundary between the two countries. To show how little was understood about it at the time, in 1903 when the Maine legislature was dealing with the other Act to which I have referred, to increase the powers of the United States company to dam the Allagash river, that Act was interpreted by a portion of the New Brunswick press as the Act of myself and associates applying for the right to construct a dam at Winding Ledges. I mention that fact just to show how little the real situation was understood at that time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The attention of the government has not been called to this particular case. The attention of the government has been called, however, to the obstructions placed on the River St. John by United States lumbermen, and I may say that very little attention has been paid to it by the government of the United States. About a year ago, after the formation of the international commission, a proposition was sent to the government at Washington that they should allow the commission to take up the St. John river case, because it was an international question, affecting the diversion of waters. However, as showing the extraordinary influence of the individual senators at Washington, the government declined unless they got the consent of the state of Maine to do it. The state of Maine, of course, was supporting the United States lumbermen. The senator from Maine had to be consulted, and nothing was done notwithstanding repeated remonstrances, for nearly a year. Finally, I believe, they have consented to place the question of the obstructions in the St. John river, where it forms a dividing line between the two countries, under the sovereignty of the international commission. About two years ago some parties came to see me from the northern part of the state of Minnesota. They called the attention of the government of Canada to the fact that a river flowing north through the state of Minnesota and emptying into the Lake of the Woods was being diverted by a powerful company in the state of Minnesota, backed up of course by state powers. The people complaining were those who lived in the vicinity of the river, and who, of course, objected very strenuously to the diversion of a river flowing north into Canadian territory, so that its outlet would be diverted to the south, in the neighbourhood of Duluth. Representations were made to the government at Washington in reference to that matter, and, I presume, it took at least a year or a year and a half before the Washington authorities could be induced to place so flagrant an instance as that under the control of the international commission. I mention those instances to show how extremely difficult it is to move the United States government to take action in international matters. The waters that flow north into the international boundary should not, under international law, be diverted south and the whole character of the river altogether changed. This particular stream referred to by my hon. friend, which is tributary to the St. John river, is one similar, exactly, to the case in Minnesota. The Minnesota case has been placed under the control of the international boundary commission. I shall be glad to be furnished with a copy of the hon. gentleman's observations, to have them transmitted to the international boundary commission, and ascertain whether they will not make proper recommendation to have the flow of the Allagash river also submitted to the international commission.

REPORT OF GEORGIAN BAY EXPLORATION COMMISSION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER rose to call :

The attention of the government to the urgency of laying before parliament at the earliest moment the report of the commission appointed by the government to make an exploration of the route of the proposed Georgian Bay Canal ; and to inquire whether parliament may soon expect such report, and if so, when ?

He said : In making the inquiry I have put on the order paper I have no intention of claiming the attention of the House for any length of time. It would, perhaps, be hardly fair at the present stage of the session to raise any debate on this important question. Yet, I hope that the House will allow me to say just a few words. Some fears are daily expressed that the trade of the west will be diverted from Canadian channels to the benefit of the transportation companies south of the international boundary. I may assure you, gentlemen, that the west is as Canadian in sentiment as any other part of the country. But in matters of trade, the western man is also as keen as anybody else. Whilst desiring to direct his trade through Canadian territory, yet when he sees his grain accumulating at the railway stations without any possibility or expectation of being shipped in the near future, he naturally looks around for better transportation facilities. It is practically the second year from the time he has commenced to till his soil that he can reap the final results of his work. Surely no one can find fault with our farmers if they try to dispose of their produce and improve their situation. If we desire to keep our trade within our own borders, Canada must come to the rescue of our farming community, as well as to the trade of the country generally. The railways, unassisted by canals will not be in a position to come to their relief. There are railways now being improved ; there are others being constructed or in contemplation. But at the present rate of development of traffic, those railways, when completed, will not be able to carry out the increased amount of products combined with the ordinary trade. New outlets will be required—are now required. A few days ago members of this House read to this Senate official documents by which we were apprised of the congested condition of traffic now existing throughout the west. In presence of such a condition, the construction of the Georgian bay canal seems to be an absolute necessity. That project has been talked of for long years back. The country seems to have been afraid of undertaking so great a work. But the time has now come when nothing should be allowed to interfere with its realization. The demands of trade are urgent. The development of our agricultural industries and the prosperity of our commerce require such an undertaking. And it seems to me that it should be a government work, inasmuch as it would be a great military strategic route. It seems to me quite evident that the country should at once take proper measures for the constructing of the long desired waterway. The government have lately had an exploratory survey of the proposed canal by expert engineers and a report on the project has been prepared. Now, let us have that report at an early date, so that parliament may be in possession of the most recent data and be prepared to consider any proposition having in view the actual construction of the canal. Next session, I intend to urge that construction, and will content myself this year with making the inquiry that I have placed on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am very glad indeed that the hon. gentleman is a convert to the Georgian bay canal proposition.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I always have been.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I only hope he will influence all the members from the Northwest in favour of it also. When the matter was discussed in this Chamber a few years ago, it had not very many friends behind it. That is some fifty years ago. At that time I was an advocate of it. We did make a beginning. The Chats canal was a part of the Georgian bay system. The contractor found the rock so hard that ordinary black powder had no effect upon it. It was before dynamite was invented, and the contractor had to throw up the contract and so it has remained ever since. If any hon. gentleman will take a run up to the Chats rapids he will see there the beginning of the Georgian bay canal system. The contract was given to Mr. A. P. McDonald, who afterwards became member for the county of Middlesex, when parliament was sitting in Toronto. He produced samples of the stone to show the impossibility of making any further progress with the work, and begged to have the contract taken off his hands, and to be paid for work he had done up to that time. About ten years ago, a company of English capitalists was formed. They secured from the parliament of Canada a charter with very large powers. They made some preliminary surveys, not to any great extent, but did nothing actually. Two years ago the government appointed a body of engineers to go over the whole route from the mouth of the French river down to the city of Montreal and make a full report upon the difficulties that had to be overcome, and the stretches of the river that required only to be dredged, and upon various other points that required considerable expenditure. I do not know that that report has been completed. If it has been completed, it has not been brought to the notice of the government. The engineers are giving the finishing touches to it now. I may say that the views of the engineers who have been examining the route favour a very much greater depth than my hon. friend indicated. Some 20 or 22 feet I believe was the depth proposed. The vessels which navigate the upper lakes generally draw from 20 to 22 feet, and if they are to navigate the Georgian bay canal it will require to be 22 feet, unless we make it simply a barge canal, which would not be of so much value. When the report has been finally completed, it will be laid before parliament, and we will all have an opportunity of seeing what will be required to construct that great work.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Judging from observations of the hon. minister the report would seem to be far distant.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The report is being finished now.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—When may we expect it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not this session of parliament.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—During the recess, perhaps?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, I think so.

CONGESTION OF TRAFFIC IN THE NORTHWEST.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to call the attention of the House and particularly the Secretary of State, to an article that appeared in the Winnipeg 'Tribune' of Thursday last, which reads as follows :—

For three days now there has not been a through train to Edmonton over the main line of the Canadian Northern Railway and as a result of this both in Winnipeg and Dauphin, Man., many hundreds of settlers just coming into the country,—a large portion of them being Americans—are delayed and put to considerable expense. It is said that at Dauphin there are fully 1,000 people waiting to get through and that five horses have died at this point through exposure.

In Winnipeg the immigrants are becoming impatient and many of them are to be seen in the vicinity of the depot making anxious inquiries with regard to the prospects of getting out of town.

The station platform is piled with baggage and the Canadian Northern Express Company and post office department are becoming congested with freight and mail.

The delay is caused it is said by severe snow storms that have been sweeping over the prairies west of Humboldt, in Saskatchewan.

It is quite possible that that report is greatly exaggerated, as many of the reports which reached here last winter were ; but it is again possible that there is considerable truth in it, and if there are one thousand immigrants at the town of Dauphin, they are certainly suffering. I desire, therefore, to call the attention of the Secretary of State to this question and would suggest that the Minister of the Interior be required to ascertain if there is any suffering among the immigrants at that point.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is rather unfortunate that the rush to Canada has commenced at so early a period. With our climate and liability to snowstorm up to the end of March and beginning of April it is very regrettable that people should come so early, because it is quite impossible where three, four or five thousand people rush into any section of that new country all at once that they can be taken care of properly as one would like to see them, and protected from the weather. I suppose the trains are blocked at the present time by snowstorms. I feel that the report is exaggerated very much, but I shall be pleased to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the conditions, and suggest that he should notify his agents by wire to minimize the inconvenience and suffering, if there is any, of these people who have come in. That is the best that can be done.

CIVIL SERVICE INSURANCE.

RETURN.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg to lay on the table the return asked for by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield in regard to regulations made by the Governor in Council under section 14, chapter 13 of the Act, intituled 'The Civil Service Act.'

The department states that it would be a breach of confidence to give the names. Otherwise the information asked for has been furnished. That is the policies issued from 1893 down to the present time, and the premiums. In regard to question No. 5, there are no records in the office from which the information asked for could be obtained. Number 5 question was the total amount of the excess of the deduction from the salaries of the policy-holders on account of superannuation, &c. All the available data that could be furnished has been brought down.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have not the slightest curiosity to know the names, but I think that as they are government officers there could be no objections. However, I have not the slightest desire to see them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The head of the insurance branch sent me a letter for Mr. Fielding in which he pointed out that the names had never been given. That information is confidential, and would not avail anything except the gratification of curiosity. The numbers are there and the losses by death and all the other information.

CHANGES IN THE CABINET.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State if he could take us into his confidence and tell us something about the numerous changes which took place lately in the cabinet. I hear we are now without a Minister of Militia. He has left the country, and there is a new acting Minister of Militia in the Senate. Is that the only reform that the government is going to bring to the Senate—to bring to us a Minister of Militia ? The hon. Secretary of State should acquaint this House with the changes. We are told that the inspector general has gone also. Is that true? Has Lord Aylmer departed for his military duties ? Who has succeeded Lord Aylmer ? Is it Col. Vidal ? If so, who will replace Col. Vidal ? Could the hon. minister furnish us with the reasons why Lord Aylmer has been placed on the retired list ? Those are momentous questions.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Better give notice.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, I think the minister should answer immediately.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—With regard to the Minister of Militia, there is no change. He has gone on a temporary visit to England, and it is not usual to make any announcement in parliament in connection with the visit of a cabinet minister who may be away only for a few weeks or a month.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is he coming back ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, he is coming back. With reference to Lord Aylmer, I may say that at the time he was appointed to the recent position which he so well filled, he was advised that the period was limited to a term of two years, to expire in December, 1906. He would then have reached the limit in age, which is 65. He himself was a consenting party, and even went so far as to endorse the recommendation to council, that he approved of the action of the minister limiting the term to two years. It had gone a few months over the two years. Col. Vidal is named by the minister to succeed Lord Aylmer. That is as far as things have gone at the present moment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has Col. Vidal not passed the age limit ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—No he has not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Where does the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière get his information ?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The papers of Montreal give his age as being 64 years. He has one year more to run.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am not asking the hon. gentleman. He does not know a word about it. I am asking the Minister of Militia ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have given my hon. friend all the information I possess. I am advised by the deputy minister, who certainly ought to know, that Col. Vidal has not reached the age limit.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has not yet informed us who is the acting Minister of Militia. That was one of the questions asked by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. I have seen it stated in the newspapers that the hon. Secretary of State is the acting Minister of Militia, and it was intimated that he was to visit all the camps next year. I hope that we may see him on horseback galloping about inspecting the ranks. Apart from that, the statement of the hon. Secretary of State differs entirely from the statement made in the 'Globe', which I suppose got its information from the government, in reference to Lord Aylmer's retirement. The statement in that journal was that he was removed without his consent, and, more than that, without knowing it at the time. I have seen also a statement made by the Minister of Militia at Halifax to an interviewer, that he had intimated some time ago to Lord Aylmer that he was to be retired when he reached the age of 65, but that he was to keep it secret until the time arrived. Of course I am only repeating what I have read in the newspapers. It is well known that Lord Aylmer is healthy, rugged and vigorous, notwithstanding he has reached the age of 65.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He will be 65 next September.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to know if my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, is acting Minister of Militia ? And, if he is, whether it is correct that Lord Aylmer's successor has been named ? We all know that Lord Aylmer is not only an efficient officer, but has had a great deal of experience and was promoted, not on account of his politics—because he was appointed by the late government—but because of his efficiency. It is said that Colonel Vidal is only one year younger than Lord Aylmer ; that he is an invalid, and that if he receives the appointment the probabilities are he will not be in a position, through physical disability, to attend to the duties pertaining to the office and that his promotion is simply for the purpose of giving him an opportunity a year or a year and a half hence to retire on a pension larger than he would receive if he retired holding his present position. I have seen it stated in the press that the retiring allowance of Lord Aylmer will be $4,200. If Colonel Vidal is promoted to the same position, will he not be enabled to retire, in a short time, on an equally large retiring allowance ? My hon. friend shakes his head. If I am in error on that point, it is well that the public should know. I regret very much that any regulation exists making it compulsory for any officer of militia to retire at the age of 65.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—At the age of 63.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is still worse, when the officer is in good health, phyiscally and mentally. We know very well, looking around this Chamber and among our acquaintances in social and political life, that men of 65, and many men of 75, are as capable and even better qualified to perform their duties than they were at the age of 40 or 50, from their enlarged experience. If such a regulation does exist, my strong conviction is that it should be repealed. If current reports are true, Lord Aylmer, who is an efficient officer and in vigorous health, is to be retired in order that a gentleman, however well qualified he may be so far as military knowledge is concerned, who is an invalid and not likely to be in a condition to perform the duties long, may take his place. I say that is an outrage upon the militia and certainly an improper exercise of the power vested in the Minister of Militia.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to correct one impression which has gone abroad, which is, if Colonel Vidal were promoted, within a few months he would be able to retire on an allowance of $4,200. Lord Aylmer has served the full term of 35 years, and, consequently, retires with thirty-five-fiftieths of his pay on leaving the force. His pay was $6,000 and his retiring allowance therefore is $4,200. Colonel Vidal has been in the service 24 years, and if he retired within a few months, his retiring allowance would be $2,800.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will that be based on the salary which he is now receiving ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—On the salary of $6,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman did not let me complete my question. What I wanted to know is this : would the allowance the hon. gentleman mentions be based on the salary that Col. Vidal is now receiving, or on the salary he would receive if promoted to the position now occupied by Lord Aylmer ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I understood the hon. gentleman question even before he put it. I say if Col. Vidal is retired from the position of inspector general, in which position his salary is $6,000 a year, his retiring allowance will be about $2,800.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I may say that the little streak of inquisitiveness on the part of the hon. gentlemen from Strathcona and Belleville, has not succeeded in iliciting the most vital information called for at this moment with regard to the ministerial changes which have recently taken place. It is a consolation, no doubt, to this honourable House to find that the old adage is coming true, that where there is a great loss there is often a little gain, and this House appears to be the gainer in the shuffles which have recently taken place ; for we have in the Senate the acting Premier of Canada, and the hon. gentleman opposite (Hon. Mr. Scott) is acting Minister of Militia in addition to the onerous and important duties he has all along held as leader of the House and Secretary of State. It does seem anomalous, however, that we should have the acting Premier following the lead of one of his subordinates, the Secretary of State. It is an instance of Jack being as good as his master, or even a little better. However, speaking of big loss and little gain, there have been changes which I suppose out of politeness we are bound to consider as losses. First is the visit of the Premier to England. We can only regard that as a very desirable thing indeed. He is on his way to the performance of high and important public duty, and the Minister of Militia accompanies him. We have nothing to say so far as these two changes are concerned, but talking of the big losses the government has evidently sustained quite a loss recently in the resignation of the Minister of Railways, and it is singular that the questions which have been asked with regard to the changes in the ministry have not led to any explanation from the ministerial benches of that resignation which has filled so important a place in the public mind and public discussions during a week or more. Talking of losses, there is another minister who is either lost, stolen or strayed—the Minister of Public Works and it is due to this House that we should know not only why the Minister of Railways has resigned, and whether it is intended shortly to fill that place, but also know the whereabouts of the Minister of Public Works, who has been missing from Canada since early in November last. I am very much surprised that these proper questions, addressed to the ministerial benches, have elicited no explanations with regard to the two important departments now vacant, one by the resignation of the Minister of Railways and the other by the disappearance—I think that is about as correct a word as I can use—of the Minister of Public Works. It is due to this House that we should have some explanation with regard to these matters.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—This discussion is entirely out of order, no notice having been given by the hon. member from Stadacona, and I raise the point of order.

The SPEAKER—The hon. member from Marshfield is within his right in asking for an explanation of the changes in the ministry.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The hon. member from Marshfield is quite within his right in making the request we have heard. As regards Mr. Emmerson, the late Minister of Railways, if the hon. gentleman will look at 'Hansard' he will find the reasons which actuated Mr. Emmerson fully given in a letter addressed by him to the Premier and read to the House of Commons. Personally I may say that I very much regret that Mr. Emmerson should have seen fit to tender his resignation, and I have no doubt that at the proper time, and in the proper way, Mr. Emmerson will show that the charges which have been made against him are unfounded. I believe they have already been contradicted by the parties who are in the best position to know about them. I think it recounts to Mr. Emmerson's credit that, under the circumstances, he should have felt it was better to meet those charges as a private member than in any way or shape to embarrass the Premier who was just on the eve of departing for England on a very important mission, as the hon. gentleman has said. With regard to the Minister of Public Works, it has been repeatedly explained in the House of Commons by the Premier that that gentleman has, unfortunately, been in a state of very poor health for several months past and that for a long period he has been debarred, by the order of his medical advisor, from paying any attention whatever to public or private business. He was desirous, as everybody knows, of resigning his seat, and it was only after a formal reference to the committee specially charged with these matters in the other House that it was decided that the resignation which he had sent in was not valid, and that, therefore, he still remained a member of the House of Commons and a minister of the cabinet. My hon. friend, the Secretary of State, reminds me that the Committee upon Privileges and Elections in the other House, to whom this matter was referred, unanimously decided that the resignation could not be accepted. I have not the slightest doubt that as soon as Mr. Hyman's health permits, he will implement that resignation, and when he does it will be time enough to consider what action should be taken.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Since Mr. Hyman has this burning desire to resign, and is incapable of carrying out his earnest and urgent intentions, would it not be well for the Right Hon. Acting Premier to try to find out his whereabouts and give him such valuable assistance as he and one of his colleagues can furnish, and between them suggest a means which would enable him to resign ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—We have nothing to do with the other House, and it would be looked upon as ultra vires on our part if we undertook such a thing ; but I will see that the views of my hon. friend, who is a man of long experience in public life, are conveyed to the representatives of Mr. Hyman at the earliest date.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will read from the King's regulations, paragraph 26, which deals with the superannuation of militia officers. It provides that colonels who attain the age of 63 will, unless in very exceptional circumstances, be placed on the retired list, and no officers above the ages mentioned for the respective ranks are to be promoted to such ranks. Now these officers like the thoroughbreds, have a fixed date for determining ages, and the date provided in the King's regulations is September 1 in each year. The age will be calculated from the 1st September. Colonel Vidal, by the militia list, appears to have been born on the 16th of May, 1843. Make that the 1st of September, 1843, and he was last September 63 years old and is therefore beyond the age. Colonel Alymer was born on the 28th March, 1844, and he was therefore 64 on the 1st of September last.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State has not informed us yet who is acting Minister of Militia ? I am desirous of knowing whether the hon. gentleman is acting in that capacity ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—After Sir Frederick Borden left, the deputy minister came over to consult me about some matters. I said, 'Why do you consult me ? and he replied, 'The minister said you are to act.' I said 'I heard nothing at all about it, it is news to me.' I had not perhaps taken as much interest in the Militia Department, in recent years as I formerly did, and, therefore, it was perfectly unexpected that the duties were to be delegated to me ; but my colleagues having ascertained Sir Frederick Borden's wish, named me by order in council at a subsequent date.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the hon. gentleman is the warrior ?

DELAYED SALARIES.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the orders of the day are called, I should like to ask the hon. leader of the House who is now acting Minister of Militia, if he is aware that the salaries of the department over which he presides, which were due on the 31st of March, are not yet paid ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I mentioned to the House a day or two ago, when I brought up the Supply Bill, that it was important that we should pass it. Mr. Fielding wanted it passed at once because it is only a partial estimate. It takes one-fifth, together with some general items that have already been passed. I hope we will have that Bill passed to-morrow or at all events by Wednesday, and then the money will be forthcoming.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But, as I understand, the Supply Bill to be taken up to-morrow is for the year ending the 31st of March, 1908. I am speaking of moneys due that will come in a supplementary Supply Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will make an inquiry about it. The supplementaries ending the 31st March have not been passed yet in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Can nothing be done about it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will see if some arrangement cannot be made.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Can nothing be done to pay those employees ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall be very glad if some arrangement can be made.

THIRD READING.

Bill (91) An Act respecting the St. Maurice Valley Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Legris.)

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON moved the third reading of Bill (82) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—As hon. gentlemen will observe, I have placed a notice on the order paper of an amendment to the Bill now before us, which I intend to submit. I am glad to find that my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, as well as my hon. friend the leader of the House, are in their places, because the question involved in the amendment that I am about to propose is one of great public importance, and one upon which the government have apparently a declared policy. It is altogether in line with the policy that the government has adopted in reference to this very question that I intend to address my remarks. The Bill, as hon. gentlemen will observe, deals with a pension fund that it authorizes the Grand Trunk Railway Company to institute, and the question deals with the power of the company to deal with their employees so that the employees will contract themselves out of their right for damages against the company if they sustain injury or death in consequence of the culpability or negligence of the company. I think I am right in laying down this proposition in common law, that if a railway company or other common carriers undertake to carry passengers, employ men and if the men engaged in the service of the company or passengers carried by the company are injured, the company is liable to damages if the accident is due to the culpability or negligence of the company. That proposition is so plain that it cannot be disputed. That principle of common law is sometimes abrogated, sometimes varied, and sometimes made subject to restrictions by statute law. In 1874 the Grand Trunk Railway Company got authority from the parliament of Canada to establish what they call a superannuation and provident fund. It provided as follows :

12. The fund shall be formed, invested, managed and distributed in accordance with the rules and regulations contained in a scheme to be prepared by the company, and sealed with their common seal within six months after the passing of this Act, until altered in accordance with the powers which for that purpose may be inserted in and contained in such rules and regulations, and afterwards in accordance with the rules and regulations that shall be for the time being in force under the provisions of the said scheme.

14. The said fund shall be vested in and belong to the committee for the time being, having the management of the said fund under the provision of this Act, and or the said rules and regulations for the time being in force as aforesaid ; and such committee may sue and be sued in the name of their secretary, and shall invest, manage and distribute the same in accordance with the provisions of this Act and the said rules and regulations.

This was the Act of 1874, under which the Grand Trunk Railway Company first got authority to establish a superannuation and provident fund.

In 1878 the company got further power from parliament to establish what is called a provision for insurance against accidents. It provides as follows :

2. It shall be lawful for the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada to make either separately or in connection with the superannuation and provident fund, authorized to be created by the Grand Trunk Consolidated Debenture Stock Act, 1874, provisions for insurance against accident to its employees, which may include insurance against death, the payment of allowances during any period when they may be unable from accident or sickness to follow their ordinary calling, and the providing of suitable medical or surgical attendance.

3. The company shall contribute to such funds annually any amount not exceeding one hundred and fifty per cent of the amount which may be subscribed annually to such fund by the members thereof, and the amount so subscribed by the company shall be considered as and forming part of the 'working expenses' of the said company as defined in the Grand Trunk Arrangements Act, 1862, and shall, for all purposes of priority of payment, be considered as a payment of wages due to the servants of the company.

4. The povisions of the Act hereinbefore firstly cited establishing the superannuation and provident fund shall, as regards the scheme and the management thereof, apply to the insurance fund by this Act created, whether the same be organized in connection with the said superannuation and provident fund or separately.

I merely remark that as far as I have been able to ascertain—and I have the report of cases decided in court as my authority—that no insurance plan was ever put in force in conformity with this law of 1878. There was and there is an insurance scheme, but it is on the assessment plan, and calls are made on the death of any member from all the members for the purpose of making up the loss, and that the Grand Trunk Railway Company has never contributed anything to any insurance scheme. I mention that in order that there may be no misconception as to what has been done. But I wish to direct the attention of hon. gentlemen to this fact, that the Grand Trunk Company were given power in the Act of 1874, and again in the Act of 1878, to make rules and regulations for the government of these funds, and these rules and regulations, having the authority of parliament in their making, become the law of the land. One of these rules, No. 5, provides that all the servants of the company should be connected with this fund. They made rule 19, which provides that they shall make by-laws for the carrying out of some of the rules, and they made rule 15 which I will read to the House as being the vital one upon which so much controversy has turned, in Canada, during the last few years :

In consideration of the subscription of the Grand Trunk Railway Company to the society, no member thereof or his representatives shall have any claim against the company for compensation on account of injury or death from accident.

Now I say without hesitation that that is a provision which would never be made by any parliament in the British dominions with their eyes open; but they gave the Grand Trunk Railway Company power to make rules and regulations, and in the exercise of that power they made rules and regulations which, under the Acts of 1874 and 1875, have all the power and effect of law. It was done years before the employees knew there was any such regulations in existence. Deaths occurred and claims were made, and then it was found that this rule was in existence, and that it legally barred the claims of the families of the men who had been killed in the service of the railway. A great deal of indignation was expressed among the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in Canada, who number about 25,000 men, and who altogether include a population of about 100,000 people. The press took up the matter about seven or eight years ago, when some cases were in court, and the result was that when the Railway Act came before parliament, three years ago, Mr. Guthrie, of South Wellington, a Liberal member supporting the present government, introduced an amendment to the Railway Act, the object of which was to render illegal and invalid this regulation or any other regulation of similar import and effect made by the Grand Trunk Railway or any other railway company. As soon as the amendment was proposed, it was admitted by the then Minister of Railways, the late Mr. Blair, to be a good one, and one that deserved to be made law, but he took the ground that it was not within the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament ; that it being a matter which pertained to civil rights, it could only be dealt with by the provincial legislature. He was supported in that view by Mr. Fitzpatrick. Both were eminent lawyers and the result of their opinion was that the amendment was dropped. The next year, in 1904, Mr. Lennox, the member for South Simcoe, introduced a Bill similar in its object and language to the amendment that Mr. Guthrie had presented the previous year. He had been the champion in the courts and elsewhere of the servants of the Grand Trunk Railway in this matter, and had acquired a great deal of information with regard to it and he introduced a Bill in the House of Commons such as I have described. When the Bill reached the second reading, Mr. Fitzpatrick, the Minister of Justice, expressed the same opinion that he had given the previous year. Mr. Lennox addressed a very lenghty, and what proved to be a very able argument, to the House sustaining his opinion that it was within the power of the parliament of Canada to pass the Bill. At the conclusion of that argument, Mr. Fitzpatrick, who had the reputation of being not only a good lawyer, but of being an eminently fair man and disposed to give due importance and consideration to a good proposition no matter from whom it came, said he had listened with great attention to the speech of the hon. member for Simcoe; that he still entertained the opinion that he had before expressed, but the arguments of Mr. Lennox seemed very strong and he would not like to adhere too strenuously to the view he had expressed. He suggested that the debate should be adjourned a couple of days until he had time to consider the question, and it was arranged that the Bill would not lose its place on the order paper. Two days afterwards, the debate was resumed and Mr. Fitzpatrick said he had looked into the matter with a great deal of care and had not changed his mind, but he did not claim to know all that could be known on the question. He said that his hon. friend had made a very strong argument, and was very strongly of the opinion that the power did rest with this parliament to pass the Bill he, therefore, suggested that the Bill should be sent to the Railway Committee, where all could work to make it as stringent as possible, and he suggested that a clause should be attached to the Bill providing that it should not go into operation until it has been submitted to the Supreme Court. Then if the Bill was found to be intra vires it would go into force on proclamation of the Governor in Council. The Bill was accordingly sent to the Supreme Court, and the contention of Mr. Lennox was proved to be correct; the Act was sustained and, as the acting Premier knows, the law went into operation, on the 1st of April of the present year. It was thought that that had settled the question, but, unfortunately, in the extreme desire that was felt by both Mr. Fitzpatrick and Mr. Lennox to make the Bill of such a character as would ensure its being found constitutional if possible by the Supreme Court these words were introduced: 'Notwithstanding anything in any Act heretofore passed by Parliament,' of which I shall speak hereafter. The Bill was made a government measure and put through both Houses under the prestige of the government, and it provided that no such regulation as that which I have described could be held to bar the claim of any employee of any road in Canada having a charter from the government from prosecuting his claim against the railway company in consequence of injuries received or in the case of death resulting through negligence or neglect of any officer or employee of the company. In their extreme desire to make the Act constitutional, they inserted the provision to which I have already referred, that it should only apply to Acts heretofore passed. It is now a matter of grave doubt whether a strict construction of that law would make it applicable to a pension fund that is created under an Act passed, say this year, after that Act became law. That is a matter of grave doubt, and it appears that the Grand Trunk Railway which has in its employ some of the very ablest lawyers in Canada, have come to the conclusion that they have a chance of re-enacting the old regulations which has been declared invalid as far as their former Acts were concerned, and they have now come before parliament with a Bill creating another pension fund. It is not necessary for me to quote the exact words of it, because it is familiar, I have no doubt, to most hon. gentlemen in the House. It provides that the Grand Trunk Railway may establish a pension fund. It makes no reference to their superannuation and provident fund of the past, but that they may now establish a pension fund, and that they may make regulations not inconsistent with law, for the management of the fund; and it provides further that all the powers vested in the company in the past, and now vested in the company, shall remain, and that the powers under this Act should not be considered as divesting the company of the powers they possess under the Acts of 1874 and 1878 as far as they are consistent with law. There is a grave doubt, and I think more than a grave doubt—about that Act of 1904, and I think I must read that Act in full, in order that there may be no misconception of what it contains. It is as follows:

1. Notwithstanding anything in any Act heretofore passed by parliament, no railway company within the jurisdiction or legislative power or control of parliament shall be relieved from liability for damages for personal injury to any workman, employee or servant of such company, nor shall any action or suit by such workman, employee or servant, or, in the event of his death, by his personal representatives, against the company, be barred or defeated by reason of any notice, condition or declaration made or issued by the company, or made or issued by any insurance or provident society or association of railway employees formed, or purporting to be formed, under such Act ; or by reason of any rules or by-laws of the company, or rules or by-laws of the society or association; or by reason of the privity of interest or relation established between the company and the society or association, or the contribution or payment of moneys of the company to the funds of the society or association; or by reason of any benefit, compensation or indemnity which the workman, employee or servant, or his personal representatives, may become entitled to or obtain from such society or association or by membership therein ; or by reason of any express or implied acknowledgement, acquittance or release obtained by the company or the society or association prior to the happening of the wrong or injury complained of, or the damage accruing, to the purport or effect of relieving or releasing the company from liability for damages for personal injuries as aforesaid.

The Grand Trunk Railway Company, for some good reason of its own, having a law on the statute-book which has enabled them for 33 years to conduct a superannuation fund, come to parliament and ask this House for authority to have a pension fund. The difference between a superannuation fund and a pension fund is the difference between Tweedledum and Tweedledee, and the question arises, why do they, having all this ample machinery in their power, come to parliament and ask for power to organize the pension fund ? The belief to-day is firmly established in the minds of the workmen, who now know what is going on in the minds of their own counsel, and in the minds of many members of the House of Commons, that the Grand Trunk Company are taking this step in order to avoid the Act of 1904, and in order to get back to their old ground, by which they will be enabled to make a rule, such as they had before to defeat a claim of their workmen if they should, as no doubt many of them become disabled from injury received by accident, or from death, and be relieved of the responsibility. I think this is something the parliament of Canada should not tolerate, as I submit to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, representing the government in this House, that we have all a responsibility in this matter, but that the government have a good deal more responsibility than we individual members have, because they are responsible for all legislation that passes through parliament, and I wish to warn my hon. friends that if this Bill is allowed to go through in the form in which it is now attempted to be put through ; if I am now pointing out, that the Grand Trunk Railway will be able under that law to defeat the Act of this parliament in 1904, prove to be correct, and if this government permits that to be done, the responsibility will lie at their door. My hon. friend, is a very old parliamentarian, and shows great assuidity and courtesy in his treatment of measures coming to this House and in responding to anything that is worth considering that comes from this side of the Chamber. When I spoke of the policy of the government, I was then referring to the Act of 1904, which, though introduced by a private member, was finally, at one of its stages, taken charge of by the government, and put through as a government measure. It then became the policy of the government to prevent any such rule or regulation as that being made law, and thus defeat the ends of justice and injure the poor people working in the Grand Trunk Railway. The government confirmed that policy, and continued to work under that policy, and they put an Act on the statute-book, assented to only a few days ago, in this House, called the Pension Fund Act of the Intercolonial Railway, and I wish to call my hon. friend's attention to some of the provisions of the Act. Up to the present time there has been no pension fund in operation in connection with any railway in Canada, except the Grand Trunk, for the simple reason that our other railway enterprises are comparitively new ones, and the employees have not got old on their hands. The Grand Trunk was compelled many years ago to make a provision for its old and faithful servants. The government of Canada is this year compelled to make some provision for their servants on the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway, and to put the Bill through parliament this session. The Canadian Pacific Railway, a younger institution, will be compelled before many years to do the same thing, and all the railway companies of Canada will ultimately have to follow suit; but at the present time the Grand Trunk Railway has stood alone in this matter. The Intercolonial Railway joins them now. The Act that was passed this year, and which is now the law of Canada, taking effect on the first of the present month, provides that there should be a pension fund established in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. It provides that contributions by the government of Canada should not exceed a certain amount, which with all contributions from the employees to the fund shall be managed by a board, the chairman of which shall be the general manager and two other officials of the road, and two representatives of working men on the railway. This board of five have power to make regulations, and they have a government control of that fund. The power given to them is not exactly worded the same; it is practically the same as that which was given in the Acts of 1874 to the Grand Trunk Railway, but the government took great care in this Bill to put in a proviso which would not allow them to be tempted into doing what the Grand Trunk Railway did and which I think they are attempting to do again. The closing section of the Act of which I am speaking reads in this way:

> Nothing in this Act, and no action taken, thing done, or payment made by virtue hereof shall relieve His Majesty from liability in the event of damage arising from the negligence omission or neglect of any officer, employee or servant of the minister.

Am I not right in saying that this was the policy of the government in 1904, when, to their infinite credit, they took up a Bill that was introduced by a member of the opposition, and finding it was meritorious, made it the law of the land, and they have shown by their legislation of this session that they will still continue to act on the same policy, and let this principle apply to the road that is under their own management. I have heard it asked, 'Why apply this rule to the Grand Trunk Railway? Make it a general provision.' It happens, as I have said, up to this moment, and at the present time, and probably for many years to come there will be no railway having a pension fund, and its object could only arise in connection with the establishment—

Hon. Mr. POWER—Excuse me. The Canadian Pacific Railway have a pension fund.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My informant is Mr. Chrysler, of the Grand Trunk Railway, who should know about it; but any way if the Canadian Pacific Railway have such a fund and they have the power to make similar regulations—

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have never heard of it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Mr. Chrysler, who would probably know a great deal more about the Grand Trunk Railway than the Canadian Pacific Railway, told me he thought the Grand Trunk Railway was the only company to the present that had such a pension fund, except the Intercolonial Railway; but I am delighted, if it is correct, to know that the Canadian Pacific Railway has such a fund, and if that is the case the law of 1904 bars them anyway unless they come to parliament and try in an underhand manner, as the Grand Trunk Railway is trying to do, to get a new Act to enable them to continue to do what they were prohibited from doing under the legislation of 1904. If the Canadian Pacific Railway has a pension fund, and it was established before the 1st of April, they are fairly under the Act of 1904. The only question that arises is as to the Grand Trunk Railway and the strong conviction formed in the minds of their employees and of eminent lawyers studying the question and working in their interests, is that the effect of this new Act with regard to the pension fund will enable them to evade the provisions of the Act of 1904. At a critical stage in the former discussion my attention was called to a provision of the Bill of the Grand Trunk Railway, which the gentleman who called my attention to the matter appeared to think was of great importance as bearing upon this question. It will be found in section 5 of the Act, which reads as follows:

> 5. The company may, for the purposes of making provision for the payment of allowances to employees after leaving the service, establish a fund to be known as 'Grand Trunk

Pension Fund,' and may from time to time contribute thereto out of the gross earnings of the company such amounts as the directors determine.

And it was gravely and seriously said that there could be no harm in this, because it was said the employees could not be effected until after they left the service of the company. The suggestion was so crude and devoid of reasonableness that I think it will be scarcely necessary to reply to it at all, because the Grand Trunk Railway, under the Act of 1874, had power to pass a by-law that every one of their employees should come into the fund. They will have the same powers under this Act to make such a provision, and although they certainly could not get a pension until they retired from the service, yet they might be killed while in the service, and their families would get nothing. They would be debarred from having a claim, because if the father had not been killed by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, he might get a pension some other time. The suggestion was so averse to common sense that I would not have referred to it if I had not found that one or two gentlemen, in a little discussion I had with them before entering the House, seemed to attach importance to this question. Whatever importance might attach to the question of contribution by the company to an insurance fund, which would result in a payment to the family of the man that was killed, whatever reasonableness there would be in such an insurance fund, forming the ground for making this regulation, there can be none in the case of a pension fund, because by the time the man lived to earn the pension there would be no danger of his being killed or injured in the service. It is during the years he is in the service, and when he is not deriving any benefit, and living in the hope of getting a pension after he is retired, he may be killed and this cruel and un-British regulation is made to stand right in his face and says: No, your family will not get a cent because he had a hope, a promise, held out to him during his lifetime that if he was not killed he would get a pension sometime during that lifetime. Another statement has been made, and industriously circulated amongst the members of the House, that the Grand Trunk in establishing the fund intended to depart from the principle which guided them in contributing to former funds. One of the differences was that with regard to this fund they were to contribute all the fund and not to call upon the employees to contribute any. I was anxious to know where this piece of information came from. The gentleman that represented the Grand Trunk before the committee did not make that statement, although some member made it in his hearing and he did not contradict it. I looked through the Bill and found no such provision, or any provision that will bear such an interpretation. The clause reads as follows:

They may establish a fund to be known as the Grand Trunk Pension Fund and may from time to time contribute thereto out of the gross earnings of the company such amounts as the directors determine.

It might be ten per cent; it might be a hundred per cent; it might be the old limit, which they must not exceed, 150 per cent. of the contributions of the man. But there is no sum fixed, and from that fact we are left to conclude that it is not likely to be any greater than the old limit anyway. At all events, there is nothing in the Act to support the contention that the Grand Trunk was to contribute all, but even if the Grand Trunk contributed every cent of it, and they made that pension a thousand dollars a year to the men, they had no right to turn around and say to the men, 'If you are killed in our service before you can earn that pension, your wife and little ones will be thrown upon the cold mercy of the world, and will have no claim on us for a single dollar. The thousand dollars or ten thousand dollars will remain in our coffers. We will get the benefit of it and your wife and children will get nothing.' No matter how large the amount may be, it does not make the slightest bit of difference; but the statement was spread among the members of this Senate that they were to contribute all, and because they contributed all, therefore they had the right to make this un-British regulation which would deprive the widow and orphan of their just rights, if the bread-winner had been killed through the culpability of this company. We were told that the law is all right as it is; we were told by the legal representative of the company, that a decision had been rendered in England about year ago, which had gone against the Grand Trunk Railway, a case known as Millar vs. the Grand Trunk Railway. I had seen that case and read it over, and I ventured the statement that the case was decided on clause 1056 of the Civil Code of the province of Quebec. I was contradicted. I was told it was not on that clause. I have that judgment in my hands, and I propose to read from it to prove that I was absolutely right, and that the committee were misled when they were told by Mr. Biggar that the case of Miller vs. Grand Trunk Railway was not decided on the law of the province of Quebec. The point of its being decided on the law of Quebec is this: That while under certain circumstances and certain conditions, such as that of the Miller case, a citizen of the province of Quebec who would happen to be killed in the service of the railway company through the culpability of the company, would have his remedy as Mrs. Miller had, it shows that as far as all the other provinces of Canada they have no law such as that of the province of Quebec are concerned, that employees of the Grand Trunk Railway would have no remedy whatever. The history of the Miller case is as follows: it came before Judge Doherty and a jury in Montreal, and the jury, under the direction of Judge Doherty, found a verdict for Mrs. Miller, with very considerable damages for her and for the children. It went to the court of King's Bench, and that court, under the law of Quebec, upheld the decision of Judge Doherty and the jury. It was then appealed by the company to the Supreme Court of Canada, and the Supreme Court reversed the decision of the courts below, and declared against Mrs. Miller on the ground that clause 1056 of the Civil Code of the province of Quebec was a re-enactment of what is called Lord Campbell's Act in England, which had received interpretation from the courts of Great Britain, and these courts were unfavourable to the contention of Mrs. Miller. In that way the court decided against Mrs. Miller and in favour of the Grand Trunk. It was carried to England and, after six long years in litigation, the Privy Council declared in favour of Mrs. Miller and reversed the decision of the Supreme Court on the ground that section 1056 of the Criminal Code of the province of Quebec was not a reactment of the English Lord Campbell's Act, and that therefore the cases that were decided in England were not applicable to this case; that there was a marked and an important difference between the Act of Quebec and Lord Campbell's Act and in consequence they found that Chief Justice Strong, Judge Taschereau, and the other judges that concurred with them were wrong, and that the Civil Code of Quebec was an independent enactment different from Lord Campbell's Act, and was entitled to an independent interpretation, and was not subject to a decision adverse to Lord Campbell's Act, which had been given in England. I make this explanation because I was so emphatically contradicted by Mr. Biggar when I said it was under the provision of the Quebec Code that the Miller case finally decided and not by virtue of the law of the Dominion of Canada. The contention that was set up elsewhere on this subject was as I have already mentioned that the Act of 1904 is effective, and that independently of that Act the Miller case shows—and that is the contention that was set up—that the employee was safe. I shall now read the judgment of the Privy Council:—

Judgment of the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the appeal of Dame Mary Miller, es-nom et es-qualité v. The Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, from the Supreme Court of Canada; delivered the 14th February, 1906.

Present at the hearing:
Lord MacNaghten.
Lord Davey.
Sir Ford. North.
Sir Arthur Wilson.

(Delivered by Lord Davey.)

The appellant, Mary Miller, was the widow of Richard Ramsden, an employee in the service of the respondent company. On the 10th January, 1900, Ramsden was killed in a collision which took place between two trains on the respondent company's railway. The appellant has brought this action on her own account and as tutrix of Ramsden's minor children against the respondent company for damages occasioned to them by the accident. The action was tried by Mr. Justice Doherty with the assistance of a jury, and by their verdict the jury found (amongst other things) that Ramsden's death was caused by the fault of the respondent company and its employees, and that Ramsden did not by his conduct contribute to bring about the said accident. The jury assessed the damages suffered by the appellant personally at $6,000, and those suffered by the children at $4,000.

The learned judge without entering judgment reserved the case for consideration of the Court of Review. That court gave judgment in favour of the appellant and their judgment was affirmed by the Court of King's Bench, but was subsequently reversed by the Supreme Court from whose judgment the present appeal is brought.

Article 1056 of the Civil Code of Quebec contains the following provision :

In all cases where the person injured by the commission of an offence or a quasi-offence dies in consequence without having obtained indemnity or satisfaction, his consort and his ascendant and descendant relations have a right, but only within a year after his death, to recover from the person who committed the offence or quasi-offence, or his representatives, all damages occasioned by such death.

It has been decided by this board in Robinson V. Canadian Pacific Railway Company (1892 A.C. 481) that the right of action of the widow and relatives under this article is an independent and personal right of action, and not as in the English Act known as Lord Campbell's Act conferred on the representatives of the deceased only. The right of action of the appellant is therefore prima facie clear unless the deceased in his lifetime obtained indemnity or satisfaction for the negligence of the respondent company or its employes. Indemnity he had none, for neither he nor his representatives ever received, or became entitled to receive, anything on that account, but it is said that Ramsden obtained satisfaction and it is sought to show that as follows:

Ramsden was at the time of his death a member of the Grand Trunk Railway Insurance and Provident Society and indeed he was compelled to become a member of the society as a condition of his employment. By a by-law of the society (No. 15) it is provided that 'in consideration of the subscription of the Grand Trunk Railway Company to the society no member thereof or his representatives shall have any claim against the company for compensation on account of injury or death from accident'. It cannot of course be maintained that Ramsden could by any act of his own release or discharge the independent right of action of his widow and children under article 1056, but it is argued that he bartered away any right of action he himself might have had, and had accepted the subscription of the company to the funds of the society in accord and satisfaction of such right of action and thus obtained satisfaction within the meaning of article 1056. To this argument several answers have been made, but before discussing them it will be convenient to consider the constitution of the society and its rules and regulations.

The society was formed by the respondent company under the powers conferred by two Acts of the parliamnt of Canada, 37 Victoria, chapter 65 and 41 Victoria, chapter 25. By the former Act the company was authorized to create a superannuation and provident fund, and by the latter Act (section 2) the company was empowered to make either separately or in connection with the superannuation and provident fund provision for insurance against accidents to its employees which might include insurance against death, the payment of allowance during any period when they might be unable from accident or sickness to follow their ordinary calling, and the providing of suitable medical or surgical attendance, and (section 3) the company was bound to contribute to such fund annually any amount not exceeding one hundred and fifty per cent of the amount which might be subscribed annually to such fund by the members thereof. The rules and regulations of the society, as amended, are, so far as material, to the following effect : The objects of the society are defined to be (3) to provide benefits or allowances to members when rendered incapable of following their usual, or any other suitable, employment in the company's service by illness or bodily injury. (4) To provide, in case of the death of any member, a sum of money contributed by members of the society, and payable in accordance with rules 50 to 62. (12) The affairs of the society are managed by a committee of management and local executive committees. (13) The committee of management is composed partly of members nominated by the board of directors or the local executive committees, and partly of officers of the respondent company. (40 and 41 as amended) Sick allowance is given at the rate of 50 cents per diem for the first six months, and 25 cents per diem for the second six months, and thereafter, until the member is certified to be incurable or unfitted for his usual employment, when all further claims on the sick fund ceases, but the member may continue his subscriptions to the insurance fund, or any member so certified may be permitted to commute his insurance for an immediate payment of one-fiftieth of the total amount insured for each complete year of membership. (50) Insurance is divided into six classes. (57) The amounts of insurance in each class, and the premium rate in each are defined. (58) Upon the death of a member all the other members are to be assessed as many rates of the class in which insured as will in the aggregate produce as nearly as possible the amount for which the deceased member was insured, the balance over or under being carried forward to the next ensuing levy. In rule 66 it is stated that the respondent company will each half-year contribute out of the revenue of the company a sum in aid of the sick benefits and allowances of the society.

It will thus be seen that the provisions for sick allowance and insurance are quite distinct. The respondent company contributes only to the former and does not undertake to contribute to insurance as it was apparently contemplated by the Act that they would do. The sums payable on death or in commutation of insurance are to be raised exclusively by a levy on the other members. The scheme is, in fact, one for mutual life insurance.

The by-law in question (No. 15) which is relied on was made by the committee of management in exercise of a power contained in rule (19) to make such by-laws as may from time to time be found necessary for the management of the affairs of the society. It was contended in the courts below that the by-law was not a due exercise of the power and was invalid. It was also contended that the by-law was invalid on the ground that the provincial law does not permit a person to contract himself out of responsibility for the consequences of his own wrong though he may so relieve himself from responsibility for the acts and defaults of his employees. And a question of some nicety was raised whether the verdict of the jury had found negligence on the part of the company itself. Both these questions formed part of the grounds of decision by some at least of the learned judges who were in favour of the appellant. Both these points were not discussed at the bar on this appeal, and their lordships are not called upon to express, and do not express or imply, any opinion upon either of them.

Assuming the by-law to be valid, is it, in the circumstances, an answer to the appellant's action? It is not sufficient to say that the possible right of action of the deceased has been extinguished, as was held in the case of Robinson v. Canadian Pacific Railway Company, where it had been lost by prescription. And, as Lord Watson pointed out, the provision as to duelling in article 1056 shows that cases were intended to be comprised in which there could be no right of action in the deceased. Their Lordships see no reason why the release or discharge by the deceased of his possible right of action should be held to be satisfactory within the meaning of article 1056 of itself, or unless the deceased has thereby obtained from the offender something which is a real and tangible indemnity or satisfaction for the offence or quasi-offence in question. In this case Ramsden, of course, was not, and neither his representatives nor his widow nor his children were, entitled in consequence of the offence or quasi-offence of the company to a single dollar out of the sick fund. The insurance cannot be considered to be such indemnity or satisfaction, first because the money payable in respect of it did not (according to the rules) proceed from the offender even in part, and secondly, because the payment is independent of, and bears no relation to the offence or quasi-offence, and would equally have to be made if the deceased had died a natural death. Their lordships are aware that evidence was given that the respondent company does not recognize any division of the society and makes its contribution to the society to be used as it pleases. But this is not in accordance with the scheme contained in the rules, and for the present purpose their lordships can only regard the rules as they stand.

Holding the views which have been expressed, their lordships do not find it necessary for them to discuss the question raised on section 243 of the Dominion Railway Act, 1888.

Their lordships are not sure that in coming to a conclusion in favour of the appellant they are differing from the real opinion of the learned judges in the Supreme Court. Chief Justice Taschereau said in the course of his judgment:

Here, were I unfettered by authority, I would be inclined to doubt if the deceased can be said to have received any indemnity or satisfaction, but I am bound by the authority of the Queen v. Grenier (30 S.C.R., 42) to hold that he has.

And the other learned judges who delivered judgment in favour of the respondent company also held themselves bound by that decision which they thought could only be distinguished if the company was itself in fault and not merely responsible for the fault of its employees. In the Queen v. Grenier the judgment of the court was delivered by Chief Justice Strong. The learned judge held that the action given by article 1056 is merely an embodiment in the civil code of the action which had previously been given by a statute of Canada re-enacting Lord Campbell's Act, and that therefore the English decision on that Act, such as Griffith v. Earl of Dudley were applicable to the case. He is reported to have said:

It must be acknowledged that if the deceased would, if he had survived, have had no claim for damages against the Crown, the suppliant can have none, provided we are right in assuming this to be a proceeding to be governed by the law applicable to actions under Lord Campbell's Act.

The assumption thus made was admitted by learned counsel to be erroneous, and their lordships cannot attach any weight to a decision founded upon it.

Their lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the judgment of the Supreme Court dated the 10th November, 1903, be reversed and the judgment of the Court of Review, dated the 31st March, 1902, and the judgment of the Court of King's Bench, dated the 20th November, 1902, be restored and that the respondent company do pay to the appellant the costs of its appeal to the Supreme Court. As the appellant is appealing to His Majesty in Council in forma pauperis she will have only such costs of her appeal as are usual in such cases.

As I have pointed out, there are grave doubts at the present moment amongst as good lawyers as those who are in the service of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and that is saying a great deal, as to whether the Act of 1904 is sufficiently far reaching, on account of its peculiar phraseology, to operate against the pension fund that is created this year. That view is held strongly and honestly. I admit there is a doubt, but I say this, and I submit to hon. gentlemen, if the representatives of the Grand Trunk Railway think that the Act is all right as it is, and only subject to a doubt, why not remove the doubt? It would be better for us to re-enact in bold solemn characters the regulation of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, barring the widow and the orphan in plain emphatic language, than pass a Bill which is clouded with doubt? Who will suffer if we leave the Act in that position? The widow and the orphan will suffer. When they go to an honest lawyer and he tells them there is a doubt whether the Act of 1904 would apply, what would be the effect? In nineteen out of twenty cases the families of the employees would go home disheartened, and would not attempt to prosecute their case. The Grand Trunk Railway Company would keep them in litigation for years, and the poor widow and the poor orphan would be in a pitiless and helpless position to fight their battle against such a powerful corporation. I ask, hon. gentlemen, are you satisfied to leave the law in a position of doubt? My hon. friends in the government did not think it was right to leave this matter in doubt when they dealt with the Intercolonial Railway. They put a clause in the Bill which removes all doubt. I ask that a similar clause be put in this Bill. If the Grand Trunk Railway Company do not wish to evade the law of 1904, and create a fund that will not be affected by that solemn legislation of this parliament, why should they oppose the passage of an amendment that will say so in clear and emphatic terms, and render litigation almost if not altogether impossible? It can be done. My attention had not been called to the provisions of section 26 of the Intercolonial Railway Act when I put the notice of my amendment on the order paper. I confess, after looking it over, that I would be fairly well satisfied if the Intercolonial Railway provision slightly altered were adopted. However, the amendment that I offer has been prepared by a man who knows more perhaps about this question than any one else, and if it is made law it will admit of very little litigation. On examining very closely the clause of the Intercolonial Railway Act with the aid of a legal gentleman we came to the conclusion that the closing paragraph was a little unfair to the government, and if applied without any change might be equally unfair to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. If this honourable House agrees with me, as I hope and trust they will, that we should close this matter up in such a way that there will be no doubt and we will make a clear enactment of which we will never be ashamed, we might adopt this section slightly changed as I now read it:

But nothing in this Act and no rules, by-law or regulation made, action taken, thing done or payment made by virtue thereof, shall relieve the company from liability in the event of damage arising from the negligence, omission or default of the company, or any of its officers, employees or servants other than and except the negligence, omission or default of the person injured.

The word to which such exception is taken is that it might be possible that a man who would be a claimant against the company under this Bill might have been himself, as an employee of the company, the really culpable party who caused the accident; yet under the wording of the section he would be able to collect damages. Nothing would be more unfair than that. While the family of an employee of the company who is himself without fault and has not contributed by his own negligence and mistakes should be able to recover damages, I have no hesitation in saying that the man who is himself responsible for an accident should not be able to avail himself of the Act under any pretense whatever and mulct the railways, which, through him, sustain great loss. However, that is merely a verbal change, and if the hon. Secretary of State agrees with the view that I have placed before the House it can be easily effected. The matter could have been better presented by a lawyer, but I have grasped the subject as well as I could from a layman's view, and my strong conviction is that we should not fail to deal with the subject now. The House of Commons will be considered free from blame because public attention was not called to this matter when the Bill was before that body, but if we allow the Bill to pass in its present form and the result of it should be to allow the Grand Trunk Railway Company to establish another fund free from the restrictions placed upon them in 1904, depriving the widow and orphan of their rights, a grave responsibility will rest upon this House. I must apologize to hon. gentlemen for having spoken at such great length, but the subject is one of very great importance, I therefore move that the seventh clause of the Bill be amended by adding thereto the following words:—

Provided, however, that the company shall not be relieved from liability for damages for personal injury to any of its workmen, employees or servants, nor shall any action or suit therefor by such workmen, employee or servant, or, in the event of his death by his wife, heirs at law, or personal representatives against the company, be barred or defeated by any rules, by-laws or regulations made or adopted under authority of this Act, or

(3) By reason of any express or implied acknowledgment, acquittance or release obtained by the company prior to the happening of the wrong or injury complained of or the damage accruing to the purport of effect of releasing or relieving the company from liability for damages for personal injuries as aforesaid, or by reason of the contribution or payment of the moneys of the company to the said fund or of the benefit or payment to which the workman, employee or servant, or his wife, heirs at law or personal representatives may become entitled out of the fund aforesaid.

Also, that the 8th section of the said Bill be amended by striking out the words 'conferred upon' in the second line and inserting the words 'now vested in' in lieu thereof.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not propose to discuss the matter in the learned and elaborate manner in which the hon. member from Marshfield has discussed it. He made a speech which contained a great deal of valuable information and gave evidence of great industry and persistence on the hon. gentleman's part; but it is a sort of speech which might better be directed to a different Bill from the one now before the House. What does the Bill say? Clause 5, which deals with this matter, provides:

5. The company may, for the purpose of making provision for the payment of allowances to employees after leaving the service, establish a fund to be known as 'Grand Trunk Pension Fund,' and may from time to time contribute thereto out of the gross earnings of the company such amounts as the directors determine.

There is no provision to be made for—it does not deal with the cases of employees who are killed by accident. The fund does not begin to operate until the employee has left the service of the company.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot think that the hon. gentleman is quite serious.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Quite serious.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He will have to tell us so before we will believe it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman has a very forcible way of putting things sometimes; but I am in the hearing of a number of hon. gentlemen whose intellects while not perhaps of the high standard of that of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, have still a reasonable amount of clearness; and I think that a great many of those hon. gentlemen will agree with me.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Would not those words 'after leaving the service' apply to those dismissed? Their fate would be adjudicated on before they left the service.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That would probably be governed by the regulations.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—As a matter of fact, they would be bound by this when the fund went into effect. That was the case in the old Act—all the employees would be compelled, and the new rules would be the same.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If hon. gentlemen will turn to the original Act of 1874 they will find that the fund which is provided for there was not all to come out of the revenues of the company, but the company was to contribute a portion, and the employees another portion, and surely the company have a right, if they choose to establish a fund with their own money to decide the conditions under which their employees should share in the benefits of that fund.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—But not illegal conditions.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If hon. gentlemen will look at the phraseology of the Act of 1874, and of this Bill, they will find that from the Act of 1874 it is perfectly clear that the employees have to contribute. It is provided that the company should contribute not less than half, and the employees the remainder. There is nothing in this Bill to indicate that the employers are to contribute anything whatever to this fund; and although the hon. gentleman from Marshfield stated that counsel representing the Grand Trunk Railway Company did not make that statement—although I know it is out of order to refer to what took place before the committee—my recollection of what took place is altogether different from that of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—How are we going to tell now?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I cannot answer all the conundrums of the hon. gentleman. This amendment is quite unnecessary. This Bill has nothing whatever to do with accidents occurring to employees of the company, and the hon. gentleman's amendment deals solely with that. The Act of 1904 deals with that matter. I will not read the whole section of that Act, but I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that there is no reasonable doubt as to its meaning. The hon. genteman predicated his demand for this amendment on the statement that the Act as it stands at present does not cover the ground, or that at any rate there may be serious doubt about it. How does the Act of 1904 begin: 'Notwithstanding anything in any Act heretofore passed by this parliament, no railway company within the jurisdiction, &c., should be relieved from liability by any agreement made with an employee.' That was notwithstanding anything in any Act passed before the 10th of August, 1904. Up to that date the employees were protected. Neither the hon. gentleman nor any one else can show that there has been any legislation since that date which takes away that protection from the employee, and, consequently, the amendment which he proposes is quite unnecessary, even if this Bill did deal with the cases of employees who were killed in the service of the company. Then as to clause 7 of the Bill, which states that the directors may make and adopt all such rules, by-laws and regulations not inconsistent with law, they could not make a regulation inconsistent with the Act of 1904. I think it is an objectionable practice to undertake to tack on to a private Bill, dealing with one particular company, something which if it should be enacted should be a general law. If there is any doubt in the minds of the senators or of the government as to whether this Act of 1904 applies to all those employees, then I think the workmanlike way to legislate is to let the government introduce a Bill to remove any doubt that may exist. I do not think there is any doubt, but if there be a doubt, introduce a Bill as a public measure; but to tack an amendment of this kind in such an unexpected way to a private Bill is a highly objectionable proceeding.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—How can the hon. gentleman say there is no doubt? He may be of opinion himself that there is no doubt, but a contrary opinion may be held by others.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Humility is a very admirable virtue; but I think one has a right to say 'it is my opinion.'

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—But not to go any further.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I simply stated what was my humble opinion.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—Has the hon. gentleman any knowledge that the government will introduce a Bill to remove the doubt he speaks of?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am quite willing to support such a Bill if it is introduced.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I find on reading this Bill very carefully that it is about as vague a piece of legislation as has come under my notice since I became a member of this House. The first four clauses deal with the material aspects of the company with which this House can have no quarrel. The fifth clause is a most excellent one. It is a model of good-will on the part of a corporation towards its workingmen. They wish to provide that when their employees are worn out in their service there should be a fund to provide for their old age. The object is christian, charitable, and one which should be commended. It is also generous, because the Grand Trunk Railway Company have asked parliament to give them the right to contribute out of the gross earnings of the company such amounts as may be determined. This clause establishing this pension fund, makes no mention of what is going to constitute that fund in its entirety. It simply says that the Grand Trunk Railway Company asks for the right to contribute towards the pension fund. Are we to understand that the men should have no right to contribute to that fund? Why not ask the right to have the labour organizations of that company contribute also? Then we would know that the fund was not altogether one of charity but of generosity and good-will? Clause six provides.

6. Any sums contributed to the said fund by the company shall be considered as, and form part of, the working expenses of the company as defined by the agreement set out in the schedule to the Grand Trunk Act, 1893.

That is also a material aspect of the question which does not affect the principle at stake. Clause seven provides:

7. The directors may make and adopt all such rules, by-laws and regulations not inconsistent with law as they deem proper and necessary for the due and efficient management, administration and disposition of the said fund.

That is a most dangerous piece of legislation. We are asked to transfer all our powers of legislation and enactment into the hands of a committee outside the domain of parliament and not subject to the jurisdiction of the people. We transfer to the company all the passing of by-laws and regulations which should be at least participated in by all the members of the society—because, if I understand it aright, this pension fund is not going to be solely a contribution from the company, the men I suppose will have to contribute their share. An hon. gentleman says so. Then if the men are not going to contribute, the company has a right to pass by-laws for the administration of the funds. But they had the same right when they established the pension fund under the legislation of 1874 and 1878, and there was no provision then that any one participating in the benefits of that pension fund should waive his rights to compensation for injury or death. I know from practical experience and interviews and communications with the men of that Grand Trunk Railway system that they found it a grievance and a hardship to have to sign a declaration whereby they waived the right of their widows and orphans to claim damages in case of injury or death through the fault of the company.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The hon. gentleman is a lawyer. Was that waiver any good ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It was good for thirty years, until a widow had courage and money enough to fight the case to the Privy Council.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Is it good ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The Privy Council judgment is good owing to this clause in the civil code of Quebec, and we tell the rest of the Dominion we have the best code of laws known to the civilized world, and if it were not for that article 1056 no citizen of Quebec would have been able to collect a cent. Has not the Privy Council told us so in its judgment ? Has not the Supreme Court of Canada told us the contrary, notwithstanding the judges of our lower court in Quebec who understand and thoroughly appreciate the law, but once we have the limits of the province of Quebec and put the interpretation of our civil code into the hands of lawyers who never knew what the civil code was, they fail to appreciate the fine distinctions, the relations between the man and the civil right, and the result is that when we come up to the Supreme Court or go outside of the province of Quebec they are very often against the law of our province. But fortunately, at the head, the source of justice in this empire, we have men in the Privy Council who, on more than one occasion, have reversed the decisions of the Supreme Court on questions of provincial law and provincial and civil rights. We have men in the Privy Council who understand what our civil code means, but why put citizens to all that trouble to secure a recognition of their rights? I hold that, as in the past, the company has no right ; it was given to the corporation to draft by-laws for the due and necessary administration of the fund and one of the principal by-laws was that a man could not get any benefit out of that fund unless he signed away his civil rights. I contend that that was ultra vires; but why put it in the hand of any corporation to pass by-laws that are ultra vires? I contend that this parliament has no right to give companies that power. Even if you put it in black and white do it so that there shall be no doubt about it, no veil thrown over it, no craftiness in its construction; do openly and boldly what it does in a cowardly way and say to the company : 'We give to you the power to force the men who have a right to participate in the benefits of that pension fund to sign a declaration containing a provision that their right to damages is waived if death occurs from injury.' If you did that it would be ultra vires and unconstitutional. And why ? You would be wiping out one of the principal clauses of our civil code ; but it would be ultra vires with regard to Quebec. They have no such right in the other provinces. If they have not that right, then your enactment would be good against them ; but a federal enactment cannot cut out clause 1056 of out Civil Code, and that is why I say, putting this power in the hands of the trustees of that fund, or the directorate, whatever you wish to call them, in this shape, is giving an opportunity to re-enact other old by-laws which have been, as far as Quebec is concerned, cast aside and put down by the Privy Council. Why pass legislation when we know there is a doubt in the clause ? Why not make our laws clear and not require people to go to court for interpretation of what parliament intended to give them ? Why not make the clause so clear that he who runs may read. Why not say in that clause. 'The directors may make and adopt all such by-laws, rules and regulations not inconsistent with civil rights,' then we would understand. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield has furnished a very able interpretation of the situation. I appreciate his line of argument from a legal point of view. I do not know whether he is a lawyer or not ; but his case was clear. I know the feelings of the workingmen of this country, that they do not want that power in an indirect way to be given to any corporation. Why give it to one and not to all ? Why not have in this Bill the same provision as in the Intercolonial Railway Bill, the road over which parliament has the direct control, the clause, 'Notwithstanding any by-laws that may be passed, any man who suffers injury and damage or death through the fault of officers of the road shall be entitled to damage.' Why not put that in plain language ? It is not so here, and I for one to make it clear, am prepared to accept any amendment, either the one proposed by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield or any other, that no company has the right to force a man to sign a document whereby he will waive rights which are granted to him under the natural and civil law. That has been done for thirty years in this country and it should not be tolerated any longer. The hon. gentleman from Halifax says there is no danger. He says there is no doubt in his mind that danger can arise from the passage of this Bill ; that since 1904 we have passed no legislation opening up a road to a condition of things of that kind. We know very well that no such legislation has been passed. But what does the hon. gentleman do with the suggestion offered by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield in regard to the Act of 1904, where it says 'notwithstanding any legislation heretofore passed.' That does not say any legislation that may be passed hereafter, and that is where the courts come in and interpret it. They will say 'why parliament has an object in inserting the word 'heretofore ?' Why not say heretofore or hereafter ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does the hon. gentleman mean to say one parliament can tie the hands of another ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It can tie the hands of another on a question of justice all the time. Parliament cannot override the principle of justice. It can do so by brute force, but I hope there is no hon. senator in this House who would like to exercise his brute force to override a principle of justice. Clause 8 reads as follows :

8. Nothing in the preceding sections shall be construed as in any way limiting any powers now vested in the company, but the powers by this Act conferred shall be held to be in addition thereto.

See the force of this clause—nothing in the preceding section shall be construed as in any way limiting any powers now vested in the company ; but the powers by this Act conferred should be held to be in addition thereto. 'So that the power that the company had before they came here still exists, and that is the power to force a man to sign that declaration. It still exists. It does not exist for the province of Quebec, but it is admitted by prominent men that it exists for the remainder of Canada, where that natural right is not recognized. So that this Bill, to my mind, requires a statement of some kind providing that no employee of any company or of this company shall be forced, or shall even be permitted to sign a declaration waiving his right to damages for injury or death, due to negligence of the company, because in doing so he is doing an immoral act and he is taking the bread out of the mouth of his widow and his orphans. He is forcing the country by this Act to keep these people and keep these widows if the employee dies without anything to his credit, so that it is an immoral act from that point of view. To come back to clause 5, it is said that on leaving the service of the company he shall be entitled to a pension. We know not what the amount is to be, and we know not on what conditions.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The company are not obliged to give it. They can give it to one and not give it to another if they wish.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then you are introducing a new piece of legislation.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Not at all. Read the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does the hon. gentleman mean to say the company will establish a fund and give from it to one and not to another ?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Most decidedly—that is what I mean to say, and that is just what the hon. gentleman does not understand.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do understand. I understand you have given them a power and it is not destroyed. They have had it for the last thirty years, and this Bill says it shall go on. These powers continue to exist. Under these circumstances, I feel that we owe a duty to the working man who is not here to have his claims set before the people and to have them listened to, not to have legislation all on one side. The workingman is the essential element of the prosperity, progress and development of the country, and we have no right to stand by the side of the corporations and give the corporations rights while we sacrifice the interests of the children and widow of the workingman. I hold that he shall not be permitted to sign any such declaration.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Just one word. The hon. gentleman from Victoria division has taken great care of the workingmen of the country in this Chamber. He might have observed that this Bill has already passed the House of Commons, where there are several representatives of labour who have not seen all these dangers. The hon. gentleman forgets that this fund is simply a gratuity given by the Grand Trunk Company to those employees to whom it chooses to give it. The workingmen have no legal right whatever in that money. It is money that the company will take out of their gross earnings, and they will give it to such of their employees as they choose to give it to. There is no question about the employees signing off their rights.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—What is the use of the law if they can do that ?

Hon, Mr. CASGRAIN—There is no question of signing away rights, because the workingmen have no legal right in that fund at all. It will be the money of the Grand Trunk Railway. As to the disposition of the fund, that can be disposed of by such by-laws as the directors may think fit to pass, because it is the money of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway, not the money of the employees. Therefore, the hon. gentleman from Victoria would not want this Senate to tell the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway how and why and where and when they will spend their money ; if it is their own money surely they will be entitled to spend it as they like. It would be quite different if it were the money of the employees. It would be a different matter if this Bill provided that the employees were going to contribute this money. In that case the hon. gentleman might be right in his argument, but he forgets that this money does not come from the employees. It comes from the company themselves out of the gross earnings. The clause says 'The company may, for the purpose of making the payment of allowances to employees after leaving the service, &c.'

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It does not say 'Good employees.' It simply says 'employees.'

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—At the discretion of the company. I cannot make the hon. gentleman understand that law. This is very plain, and if anybody had heard the discussion in another place it would seem still plainer, that this is simply money of the Grand Trunk Railway to be given as a premium to good employees ; to be given to those to whom they choose to give it, and not to be claimed as a right by any employee. There is the superannuation fund of the Grand Trunk, which is quite another matter, which has been in existence for many years, and in the Grand Trunk superannuation fund large trust funds are held by the company; but the employees themselves contribute to that, and the employees have a right to claim out of that fund, if they be disabled, or get maimed, or their widows and children have a claim on the fund if employees are killed in the service. But this is a different matter entirely. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman from Marshfield has had a wrong conception of the matter from the very start. Very much like the hon. gentleman from Victoria, he has the idea that the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway have a right to the fund, and it is very likely that if such conditions were imposed upon the creation of the fund it would be a very easy matter for the company not to create the fund if you surround it with difficulty. I think the hon. gentleman from Victoria will admit that the Grand Trunk is at liberty to establish that fund or not. There is nothing to compel them to establish it, and he thinks he has the interests of the working classes at heart, and he would examine this Bill, he would see that perhaps the Grand Trunk would not feel like establishing the fund, and in that case the very object he has in view of protecting the workingman would be destroyed; because, if this provision were attached to it, the Grand Trunk would not establish the fund, and there would be no money for any one. By this Bill the Grand Trunk may and will very probably give a pension to all employees who have been there a number of years, according to the number of years they have served. The good employees will be rewarded, and it will be a splendid thing for the workingman himself.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Will the hon. gentleman explain what he understands by a good and bad employee? Here is where I find a weapon in the hands of the company and a means of coercion that I do not relish at all.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—A good employee in the estimation of the railway company; but the workingman has no legal right to this fund. It is simply a bonus, a gratuity arising out of the good-will of the company. Surely we are not going to make rules, and say that the company shall give this money to this one and that one? The shareholders have a right to give this bonus to whom they please.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—But the power is put in the hands of the company to discriminate amongst its employees as who are the good and who are the bad. It brings me back to past ages where the servant was next to a slave and would only come to prominence by courtesies and by acts of subserviency which are abhorrent to the spirit of the present age. I would rather that they should have no such power than to place in their discretion that which they will no doubt make use of and very likely abuse, and which will work to the moral degradation of the service.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Would the hon. gentleman make any difference between the good and bad employees?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Yes; I would consider a good employee an employee that has kept in my service, and all the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway, if they are retained, are prima facie good employees.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Surely we are getting away from the question altogether. This discussion has taken a long range. I suppose we will all admit that every employer of labour, of whatever kind, can remunerate a man who leaves his services, after he has been there a number of years, can provide against his suffering in old age. He voluntarily sets apart a sum of money which will enable him to do that with one or two or three employees or more as the case may be. He may determine how much he will give to one and how much he will give to another according to the length of service, according to the necessities of the person, or according to his own will. Surely that can be done by any employer of labour. The Grand Trunk could not do that to-day because the money of the company has been devoted to a definite purpose, the operation of the road and the payment of dividends. Therefore, it becomes necessary, if they are to have the same power that any one in this Chamber has; that any merchant in this city or throughout the country has; that any manufacturer or private individual has, when a man leaves his employ to say to him 'You have been a faithful employee—I will give you an allowance of so much a year, or give you an allowance for five years, or for any length of time, or help you over such and such a term. This is what the fund is intended for. Without this legislation the Grand Trunk Railway could not appropriate funds out of its gross earnings, and this is a mere authorization to create a fund from a portion of its gross earnings, in favour of the faithful employee, in favour of the man who has served the company well, probably for a lifetime or a short time, but still well, in proportion as his merits are, in proportion as the company thinks he is deserving of recognition. Surely the company ought to be allowed to do that. It is necessary in their case that they must do this according to certain lines. Any employer can do with his money as circumstances may render it advisable; but a company must do it by some sort of system, and therefore they should pass this resolution. You or I could make this resolution the moment a man left our employment. You or I could make it in advance, but they have to do it on some equitable line or principle. That is what this Bill is. It differs entirely from the case discussed by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, which was the case of a superannuation fund in which there were joint contributors. Miller and the Grand Trunk is a case in which the company had contributed to a fund, the employees had contributed to a fund, and two things were provided for; one was for sick allowances during the time a man would be in the employment of the company, and the other was insurance and provision against his death, and benefit to his heirs. In that case this distinction was pointed out; and it happened to be a case in which the company had contributed towards a joint fund providing for sick allowances and insurance. That is not this case at all. The employee has no interest in the fund any more than the employee of any merchant in town has an interest in the profits of his employer. It is a gratuity given by an employer to some one in his employment who has rendered services that deserves recognition. Surely under those circumstances the man might take into account the conditions under which he retires. Is he retiring from the Grand Trunk Railway to go into another Company for a larger salary? Is he going into some other employment where he will make more money for his family? Or is he a man who is disabled, whom age has overtaken, or a man of broken-down health? Has he met with trouble in one way or another, and is he, therefore, entitled to consideration? All these matters have to be taken into account. We are dealing with a fund, a voluntary payment, a sum of money created by voluntary acts, by taking it out of the gross earnings, so that when a case occurs the company can make provision. It does not seem to me these proposed amendments are at all applicable or proper.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Will my hon. friend tell me how he would like a superannuation law, if it were enacted, giving the government the power to reward the good servants and abstain from rewarding those they would choose to designate the bad servants? It comes to that. It makes an undesirable distinction.

Hon. Mr. POWER. It is public money.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER. The tendency is to degrade the service of the Grand Trunk Railway, and it would degrade the civil service if such a system were adopted in that service. I say that it is the spirit of favouritism. That spirit that keeps the employee under the sway of the employer in a manner tending to degrade him, something after the tipping system. Why? The Grand Trunk Railway or any big corporation will make invidious distinction among the employees, even among those they have had in their service for a long time. The effect hon. gentlemen will be, that, as in the civil service, employees will find it profitable to crouch at the feet of their employers. There will be sycophanting; there will be acts of eavesdropping, such things as are derogatory and degrading. Let us remember hon. gentlemen that we are here in duty bound to protect not only the salaries of the employees but, as far as we can, what we call their état d'âme. We are bound to elevate the class, possibly the most deserving of all classes of citizens in this or any other country, the labouring class. We are here to protect them materially, mentally and morally ; now in sanctioning such an Act, we are doing them an injury. I would rather have no benefit fund at all than have it created under those circumstances. At all events, let me ask you, is there any one in this House that finds fault with the object that is represented by my hon. friend's amendments here—I do not care for that one particularly, if the government are willing to have general laws enacted so that this company will not be singled out, neither in being harassed with obligations, or on the other hand not allowed to single itself out by being put in a position to harass its employees. In that case I would be willing, if the government were to make such an announcement, to see this amendment withdrawn. Unless the government is prepared to do it, I will insist, as far as I can, on voting upon this for the object it has immediately in view and especially to arouse the government to introduce a general law to the same tenor and effect.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—I always thought that the function of this House was to watch, to guard and to criticise all Bills coming down from the House of Commons, and I am afraid it would not be true if we said that this Bill had been carefully considered in the House of Commons. The other day in the House of Commons they passed a Bill for labelling lobster cans, and some of the supporters of the government who voted for that Bill were lobster-packers themselves, and it was only when the protest came from the province of Nova Scotia that the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce corrected that Bill and made it passable and agreeable to the will of the large packers in the province of Nova Scotia. The government should give an assurance that they will introduce a Bill during this session that will guard the interests of the employees of that rich and exacting company, the Grand Trunk Railway—and I have not the greatest confidence in railway corporations, either the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway. They are exacting and want to have the control of everything, and I think the hon. gentleman from Marshfield deserved a great deal of credit for the research he has expended on this measure. Whether, I agree with him on all questions or not, I must give credit for the great ability and industry he has shown in dealing with questions that affect the interests of the Dominion of Canada.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have been requested by a number of hon. gentlemen who cannot be present to-night to move the adjournment of the debate. It would be much better to do so as the Senate is now nearly empty and it is better to have a larger House when a measure of such importance, and the proposed amendment, can be thoroughly considered. I may say, without entering into a discussion, that to my mind a great deal of irrelevant argument has been advanced in reference to matters altogether beyond the meaning and intention of the Act. When I have the opportunity of addressing the House again, I shall try and give my view of it whatever my opinion may be worth. We have all a right to form an opinion upon these matters, and it is well that we should discuss the question as we understand it. If I thought for a moment that the effect of passing this measure would be as indicated by the mover of the amendment and those who supported it, it should have my most hearty support also. I shall give my reason, when I speak, why I do not think the amendment at all applicable. I move that the debate be adjourned until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (BBB) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—When I was making my statement upon the question of civil service reform, my esteemed friend from Marshfield challenged my statement regarding the permanent and independent character of the civil service of England. I have looked up the Act and find that I was quite correct in the statement that the civil service of England are in an independent position. They are the servants of the Crown, and can only be removed from their position for want of efficient service. The Act was passed in 1857 and has been in force ever since with several amendments; so my hon. friend was not at all justified in challenging my statement.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a third time, and passed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (EEE) An Act for the relief of Arthur Leon McPherson.—(Hon. Mr. Perley.)

Bill (93) An Act to incorporate the Eastern Canada Manufacturers Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—(Hon. Mr. Gibson.)

SUPPLY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (141) An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the service of the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1908. He said: The financial year, as hon gentlemen know, terminated on March 31. No payments can be made of money appropriated for the present financial year until the advance estimate Bill has been approved. The Bill now before the House provides for $11,706,964 of estimates that have finally passed the House of Commons, and of one-fifth of the balance, which, of course, includes the ordinary running expenses of the government, salaries and things of that kind, amounting to $14.-331,204. The Finance Minister is very anxious that the Bill should go through with as little delay as possible as no payment can be made until it is approved by both Houses of parliament.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I observe that this Bill is not yet printed in French, though it is now three or four days since it came up from the House of Commons. I do not object, but I call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that he may know that his order has not been carried out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is just one item to which I would like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman from Wellington. On one page he will find an item of $50,000, which is paid 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' What is the good of the Civil Service Act?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Might I ask my hon. friend if he is fully assured that this is one-fifth of the estimates? If so, it indicates an extraordinary budget for the coming year. I notice by this Bill we are voting twenty-six million dollars; that would represent a Supply Bill of over $150,000,000 for the coming year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman did not catch what I said. I stated that estimates had already passed through the House of Commons amounting to $11,706,964. Of the balance yet to be passed, one-fifth would be $14,331,204 and it is that one-fifth and the $11,176,964 that this Bill is intended to cover.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is this the final estimate for the year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are supplementaries for the current year that are still to come down.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It will approach $100,000,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, about $81,000,000.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—How is it that the estimates for the year ending 31st of March last have not been voted before this?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have not yet passed the House of Commons. I know they were before the House of Commons some three weeks ago. I will make inquiry.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN MANITOBA BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (114) an Act to authorize the exchange of certain lands.

He said: This Bill is composed of two paragraphs. It appears that the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company have made an application to the Department of the Interior for two sections known as 11 and 29 in township 14, range 12, east of the principal meridian. Those two lots are school lands. Clause 2 provides that no sale shall be made to that company until the Minister of the Interior has by notice in the 'Canada Gazette' set apart as school lands other Dominion lands of equal area and value, as nearly as may be, in lieu of the lands mentioned in clause 1. That is the whole Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my hon. friend give any information as to the probable price at which those lands will be sold to the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In view of the extraordinarily reasonable figures asked by the government of late in selling large tracts of land, it seems to me this Chamber should have some information on the subject as to how much those lands are to realize.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know whether there is a valuation of it, but I shall endeavour to obtain the information before the next stage of the Bill. As my hon. friend knows, whatever may be said of the ordinary Crown lands of the Northwest it must be admitted that for the school lands very handsome prices have been obtained, running from $9 and $10 to $16 and $18 per acre.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—More than that, they have averaged almost $25.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The provision in the second clause is that the lands must be of equal value ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would in no way govern the price to be realized by the government. They would have to reserve Dominion lands equally good. That, of course, would not govern the price.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall endeavour to get the price before the next stage of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

ELECTRICITY AND FLUID EXPORTATION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on (Bill 60) An Act to regulate the exportation of electric power and certain liquids and gases.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hon. gentlemen will notice, in the seventh line, that persons who are already exporting are given three months in which to take out a license. It is proposed to enlarge that to six months so that ample notice may be given.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Have the government taken into consideration the working out of this phase of the law ? Let us assume for a moment that contracts have been entered into by power companies for the exportation of power or gas ; in what way will the government indemnify such companies for any damage they may suffer by reason of, say, an action brought upon a contract or other loss which they may sustain ? It seems to me the government must have given some consideration to that very important question in working out the clauses of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No details whatever have been worked out. It was rather taken up in accordance with a sentiment that went through all Ontario five or six months ago, the people demanding that they should have cheaper electrical power and protesting against the amount that was then being exported. Practically, until a few weeks ago, no portion of the power generated at Niagara Falls had been transmitted any distance from the Falls. Now, about 30,000 horse-power is being transmitted to Toronto for the purpose of the electric light company and also the street railway company. There was a considerable clamour, and in January last the people were called on to vote under by-laws that were submitted as to the amount of power that they needed. Those by-laws were carried by very large majorities, in Toronto by seven to one, although it is said, and I believe said with truth, that the three Niagara power companies did all they could to defeat those by-laws. They looked upon it as rather an attack on vested interests, although at the time the right was given them to pass through the park at Niagara Falls, the park commissioners stipulated that if power was required in Canada, not more than one-half the power generated should be disposed of in the United States, provided, however, that the price to be obtained in Canada for power was equal to the price obtained by the companies in the United States. Two of the companies are practically owned by United States capitalists, and naturally they are interested when a limited amount of power was generated to transmit it to the state of New York and this was done with the full approval of parliament. This legislation is in obedience to a sentiment which has grown up recently, that Canada was allowing this important energy to be transmitted to another country and, practically, Ontario was losing the whole benefit of it. The largest volume of water is on the Canadian side and the largest power is generated in Canada. How it will work out I cannot foreshadow. I know that what my hon. friend has intimated is likely to arise, because two of the charters were obtained at Ottawa. One charter was obtained at Toronto ; but practically all the clauses in reference to the export of power are the same in the three —there was no restriction—they were authorized to transmit power to the United States. The only restriction on the transmission was the condition inserted in the agreement made with the park commissioner ; that is, that only one-half of the electrical energy generated should be exported, provided a market was found for the other half in Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While I am in sympathy with the sentiment mentioned by my hon. friend as to the utilization by Canada of the power generated at Niagara Falls yet I am bound to say that even in view of such a strong assertion of public sentiment as that referred to, the government would not be justified in passing legislation of this kind without making provision for the cancellation of contracts already entered into. While I can appreciate the desire of the government to introduce legislation of this character to meet a popular demand, yet the legislation should have provided for the conditions arising as to any damages which may be claimed against any of these companies for breach of contract arising through the passage of this measure. This Bill is not confined to the exportation of electrical power generated at Niagara Falls, but deals also with natural gas petroleum, and other commodities of that kind. The government, in obedience to a public sentiment, introduce a bald Bill saying that these contracts which the power companies have entered into should not be carried out, and without ascertaining what the damages the companies may be liable for or the amount that should be paid when the law is put into force. This Bill has not been properly worked out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The contingency is not likely to arise, because if hon. gentlemen have followed the legislation at Washington, they know that special provision has been made there that no more than a certain quantity can be imported. I think two of the companies were allowed to import into the United States 60,000 horse-power each. The third company, which is the company owned chiefly in Toronto, were restricted to I think 30,000 horse-power. They made an appeal to the authorities at Ottawa and Washington that they should not be cut down to a lower amount than the other companies, and the United States consented that the electrical company which had headquarters at Toronto should be permitted to export to the United States 45,000 horse-power. The remarks of my hon. friend would not apply to gas or oil. We have been exporting gas for the last twenty-five years, until we exported all that could be found in the county of Essex. There are still gas wells in the county of Welland, and the municipalities there have petitioned the government to stop the export. Practically all our gas production has been used, up to the present time, in the United States.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why does my hon. friend say that it does not apply to gas ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I say the argument does not apply, because there is no embarrassment with regard to gas. The consumers have got no rights from Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It applies to the exportation of natural gas.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But the government is not embarrassed by it, because the government has given no sanction to it in the past.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the natural gas companies have been exporting to the United States, surely it does not lie with the government to say now that they shall not continue to do so, particularly if they are doing so under contract?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are not in the same category at all as the electric companies.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They are under the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are under the Bill, so far as the regulations which may be enforced, but they are not in the same embarrassing position. Quite irrespective of the provision in the Act giving the companies at Niagara Falls the right to transmit electricity to the United States, it is quite within the power of parliament to put on an export duty, just as the province of Ontario some time ago stopped the export of its logs, although the timber limits had been sold to United States citizens who had paid large sums of money for them. Still, the government decided the logs must be cut in Canada. The same principle applies in this case, but the question is not likely to arise, because the United States itself has placed an impediment in the way that the Canadian companies cannot export to the United States more than one-half of what they would generate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think there is a great deal of force in what the leader of the opposition says with respect to the difficulty which may arise hereafter in the form of litigation, and it appears to me that as soon as this Bill has passed the committee it should be allowed to stand, and have a clause prepared which would authorize the Governor in Council to make regulations to meet the difficulty which the leader of the opposition has suggested.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 9 authorizes the Governor in Council to make regulations.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There might be a subclause added to clause 9 to provide for this particular case. It is a great deal better to take a little trouble now, and so avoid greater trouble later. The Bill has passed the other House, and there is no danger of its being lost if it waits a day or so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government might consider the propriety of introducing a clause in the Bill to indemnify companies that might suffer damages by reason of enforcing those clauses.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No ; the government have positively declined to do anything of the sort. The question has been already considered and discussed, and it was not thought advisable to do so in the public interest.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If damage should arise? I refer particularly to the case of a contract. Let us assume that a company has entered bona fide into a contract for the exportation of power—to supply a certain volume of power, and under this Bill they are prevented from carrying out their contract. Surely it cannot be said that it would be unreasonable to indemnify the company against the damage which, in a court of law, they would be called upon to pay?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The government have considered that fully. The observations I made were really placing the picture in the light it was looked upon by those who take the view of my hon. friend. The government does not take that view. The government has considered the whole question, and has decided that parliament possessed the whole right, irrespective of the leases, to place a duty on the exportation of electric fluid.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I dissent in toto from the remark made by my leader as to the principle of the Bill. I am opposed to the exportation of this electric power, in every sense of the word. I see great difficulties that might arise hereafter as the requirements of the industries of Canada may increase. It is true you have the power to annul the licenses permitting the companies to export ; but just as soon as the present surplus power generated at the Falls is required by the industries of this country you will have to destroy the industries operated by this power in the United States. It is very true you may say in reply to that, that is a matter of no consequence to us ; they took the responsibility, but we know the tenacity with which our neighbours across the line adhere to what they consider their rights, whether direct or inferential, and I see a great deal of difficulty which may arise from that.

Instead of imposing an export duty on natural gas, to my mind it should not be exported at all. The government should prohibit the export of natural gas. Cases have arisen where the flow has ceased altogether from the fact of its having been utilized in Detroit and other places on the other side of the line, to the detriment of our own industries and the injury of our own people.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I trust that in time, at any rate, broader principles may prevail and perhaps, if the government allow this to stand, the public opinion which is now so, I will not say childish, but so lacking in sane ideas will change. My idea is that anything this country can produce and sell to advantage it ought to sell and that trade should go on entirely independent of those petty local feelings which prevail, particularly in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman say he is in favour of exporting whatever we produce ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Whatever a country can produce and sell to advantage.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman in the abstract, providing it does not injure ourselves.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—When you sell a product of the country, it does not injure you.

On clause 10,

10. The Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in the 'Canada Gazette,' impose export duties, not exceeding ten dollars per annum per horse-power, upon power exported from Canada, or not exceeding ten cents per thousand cubic feet on fluid exported from Canada, and such duties shall be chargeable accordingly after the publication of such proclamation.

2. The Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in like manner, from time to time remove or re-impose such duties or vary the amount thereof.

3. The Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in like manner, exempt from the payment of such duties such persons as comply with the direction of the Governor in Council with regard to the quantity of power or fluid to be supplied by such person for distribution to customers for use in Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why is this made optional with the government ? Why are they given powers to impose a duty ? This is really legislating by order in council. I cannot conceive any reason why the duty should not be imposed by the Bill itself, instead of leaving it optional with the Governor in Council. If it be proper to regulate the export, and that a duty should be levied upon the quantity to be exported, why is it not made imperative instead of being left optional with the Governor in Council ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will explain to my hon. friend. There is no desire whatever to interfere with a legitimate trade, exporting electricity or gas to the United States, provided they do not export any part for which there is a demand in Canada. It is the surplus over what Canada may require that can be exported to the United States. Where there is a demand in Canada they cannot export. Clause 5 is the one which covers that point.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That does not cover the question of export duty?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They can only export the surplus. Say that in Canada there are 400,000 horse-power generated. There is a demand in Canada for 250,000 horse-power. That would leave 150,000 horse-power to be exported.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why is it that the Governor in Council takes the power to levy an export duty, and not parliament?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We cannot define what the surplus is. From day to day and week by week and month by month the surplus may change.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The export duty will not be governed by the quantity.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, but the duty is specified.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The amount of duty is specified, but I say that the power to impose it should not be placed in the hands of the Governor in Council, whether it be an export or import duty. The tenth clause does not in any way refer to the surplus quantity that may exist after supplying the Canadian market. It says, 'The Governor in Council may by proclamation impose an export duty,' and it defines what that duty is. The Governor General is taking power to do that which parliament alone has the power to do.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the clause carries out exactly the views of my hon. friend, if he will read it. It is only the surplus that goes out of Canada that the duty is charged on.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is on the amount that goes out of Canada, whether it is a surplus or not. The only ground upon which you can possibly base that argument, is that the fifth clause provides that they can only export the surplus. That does not touch the part of the Governor in Council having the power to impose a duty which, under our constitution, is vested solely in parliament.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am a strong advocate of maintaining to the fullest degree the powers of parliament, but I can see some reasons for making an exception in this case. As I understand, it is not the intention of the government to impose any duty on the export power or gas at present, and as long as the Canadian consumers of power and gas are supplied, no export duty is needed; but when the position changes, and when there is a demand in Canada for the greater part of the power and gas that are produced, then in order to guarantee that Canada will get her fair proportion, the government will have the power to impose a duty which would tend to prevent the export.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But would that duty apply to the surplus only?

Hon. Mr. McLAREN—I have been connected with the company which has been exporting gas into Buffalo for sixteen years, connected with the Standard Oil Company, and have a contract to export that gas, and we have permission from the government to place the pipes across the river and take the gas to the other side; but the duty of ten cents per thousand feet is prohibitive. The gas is not worth that at the well.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The argument of the hon. gentleman has no force, because the moment the exportation exceeds the surplus, than it is prohibitive, and there is no power in this law to impose an export duty upon the surplus. The moment they have to export it to a certain extent they have no power to go beyond that, and you could not give them that power by imposing a duty.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot appreciate the point made by my hon. friend from Halifax, for the reason that the license which has to be taken out by the exporter must mention the amount with which he can deal, under clause three and five; consequently when a license is acted upon, then you know at once the quantity to be exported. You cannot exceed the amount which, under the license, is provided. Therefore, he immediately exercises the rights of his license when the export duty comes into play. But it seems to me there is another point worthy of comment under section ten, and that is the extraordinary powers given to the Governor in Council. For instance, under sub-clause two, the Governor in Council may, by proclamation, published from time to time remove or re-impose such duties or vary the amount thereof. That places the companies absolutely in the hands of the Governor in Council, and I need not say that this is a political weapon which may be exercised in the most arbitrary way, a weapon by which the Governor in Council may compel influential companies to give a support to the government which they otherwise would not. It seems to me we are drifting into a kind of bureaucratic form of government, by which parliament from session to session is abrogating the functions which properly pertain to it, namely, of passing legislation with reference to taxes, and handing those powers over to the Governor in Council. I need not say that a government, no matter whether they be a Liberal or a Conservative one, is a human organization, which will naturally exercise every power that it possesses, and also the pressure which it can bring to bear upon those with whom it has to deal to secure all the support possible to maintain power, and this is certainly a step in that direction. It seems to me that every session we are becoming more progressive in the way of handing over to the Governor in Council the powers which should be exercised by parliament and none other.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot see any possible evil consequences that are flowing from it. It is impossible to frame language more just. If the government infringe on any right, a petition of right can be obtained from the Crown, and the case can be tried in the Exchequer Court; but parliament could not define how much gas or electric power could be exported. You cannot tell whether it is one-fifth, one-fourth, one-third or one-half. It is absolutely impossible to define it, and you must leave the power somewhere. It does not seem to me that it is open to the charge of my hon. friend that it could be abused. I cannot see how it could be, because it operates naturally. If there is a demand in Canada for power it cannot go to the United States, and if there is no demand in Canada it can go to the United States. But Congress has already settled the amount. We cannot send to the United States any more than a given quantity, about $170,000 worth.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think either the leader of the opposition or myself have had the power to explain really what we do mean. The exportation of the surplus or half the surplus has nothing whatever to do with the power which is given to the Governor in Council to impose a duty whenever they think proper. It may be done properly or improperly. I think my hon. friend in this case has forgotten history as applicable to himself and to others. I remember the time, and so will my hon. friend, when he was supporting the Ontario government, when rigid rules were laid down by the late John Sanfield McDonald, when he was at the head of the government, in reference to granting subsidies. He would not grant a subsidy to a railway until the whole scheme was laid before the legislature. He would not trust himself or the government to arrogate or take the power to themselves to dispose of public funds or to impose them as these clauses do. In this clause the government take power to impose a duty or to repeal that duty and reimpose it. That is the point we are arguing, and not the question of surplus at all. If that is the doctrine of Liberalism, I fail to understand what the constitution under which we live and under which we have been governed for many years really is, and more particularly when applied to the professions of what is termed the Liberal party, both in this country and in England. However, you have the power and you have the majority to do it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I drew the attention of the House to a point in connection with the development which has taken place in Fort Frances on the second reading of this Bill. There is a company developing power on the Rainy river that runs out of Rainy lake to Lake of the Woods. The corporation of Fort Frances has entered into a contract with a company providing for the erection of a power-house for the whole of the power produced on the Canadian side. I know that is the agreement. The company expects to export one-half the power developed there to the Minnesota side, and the other half is to be used, if it is required, on the Canadian side; but the company want the right of exporting the power to the United States side, if there are not users on the Canadian side. In view of the fact that they have entered into a covenant to erect a power-house for the whole of the power produced on the Canadian side, it looks to me from the reading of this Bill—and I have read it twice—that if the government were so disposed, they could impose a duty on the whole of the power exported. Of course the hon. Secretary of State assured me, in reply to what I said before, that is was not the intention of the government to do that. Well, I do not know that it is but there is no provision that I can see in the Bill that where a stream is an international waterway, utilized for the production of power, and where the power is all produced on one side, that the party can export a portion of it or if necessary one-half to the other side, without being interfered with. There is nothing in the Bill that I can see that will secure that as a condition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are not arguing that point at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are two reasons why my hon. friend should not be in the slightest degree uneasy in reference to that. In the first place, clause 5 specially provides that the surplus may be exported. There is no duty at all on it. It is only while the surplus exceeds one-half that there is any risk there, and so long as it is not wanted on the Canadian side it can be exported. The country's rights are preserved under the statute that we passed here. I think I took a great deal of interest in the framing of that law. You may recollect we had it up in committee day after day, and I am quite familiar with it. I think I had to do with the redrafting of a portion of it that was corrected. That is under an agreement made between the two parties. No possible questions can arise there. There will not be a surplus if Canada uses an equal quantity with the United States, up to that time there will be a surplus for the United States which Canada does not want.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—There will be no duty on that surplus until Canada does want it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.), from the committee reported the Bill, with an amendment, which was concurred in.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Consideration of the third report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament.—Hon. Mr. Ellis.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I move that this Order of the Day be discharged and placed on the Orders of the Day for Friday next. I wish to make a statement to the House in regard to what has been said in another place. The hon. gentleman from Labelle has impugned the motives of the committee, and I feel in duty bound to make an observation or two on that account. I can understand very well that there may be criticism of any report that may be made by a committee ; but I think it is hardly fair to impute motives to a committee. This is a joint committee of both Houses. The hon. gentleman, on the 22nd of March, in making an observation to the House, complained that the report of the Insurance Commission was not recommended to be printed by the committee, and then went on to say :

It is not only that report, but there are many other documents that are recommended not to be printed. There are for example the documents of the Transcontinental Railway Commission, pertaining to the improvements in the Quebec harbour. Those are documents of importance, because they specially concern considerable interests in the province of Quebec.

That was all right. Then he proceeds :

I do not know whether they are yet printed in English, but they should certainly be printed in both languages. It seems to me this report is made merely to prevent the translation in French. That certainly is the reason with regard to the report of the Insurance Commission, &c.

I desire to say on behalf of the committee that so far as I know—and certainly I think I am safe in saying for the hon. gentlemen of the committee who are members of this House—that no such feeling ever animates them with regard to the printing of public documents. The question comes up whether a document is worth printing or not—whether it should be printed or not. If it is not considered a document that it is necessary to print, the committee endeavour to save the country the expense ; but if it has already been printed by order of the House, or by some authority of the House, then the committee finds it printed and it has nothing further to do with it. That was the case with regard to the Insurance Commission Report. It was in print, and, acting upon that rule, the committee did not print it. With regard to the documents referring to the Transcontinental Railway Commission, and pertaining to the improvements of the Quebec harbour, the hon. gentleman said :

These are documents of importance, because they especially concern considerable interests in the province of Quebec.

I might say that there were no documents. There was an order for documents, but the report of the officer of the government, to whomsoever it went, came back saying there were no documents on that question between the Transcontinental Railway and the public authorities. I feel bound to make this statement, because it is hardly fair to place the committee under the charge of having any feeling against the French language.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDRESS TO IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

CONSIDERATION POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Consideration of the message from the House of Commons, informing the Senate that they have passed an address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, humbly representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, to be made by Canada to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their governments and legislatures; and requesting the Senate to unite with the House of Commons in the said address, by filling up the blank therein with the words 'Senate and.'—Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that this Order of the Day be discharged, and that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is providing for the expenditure of money is it not? The rule provides that this Senate shall be informed as to the government having the consent of the Governor before it is presented. We have been in the habit of ignoring that principle of constitutional law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is an address from both Houses, asking the imperial parliament to make a change in the British North America Act in accordance with what the provinces demanded at the recent conference. It increases the provincial subsidies up to a couple of millions.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps the point I raise does not apply directly to this. Before the estimates were passed by this House, we should have had the information that the Governor General authorized the presenting of these reports in the same manner as it is done in the Commons. This is the rule but it has never been carried out here in practice.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—May I ask the hon. Secretary of State what would be the effect, if all the provinces do not concur and pass similar addresses? Will this House go on with an address in view of the strong possibility of the province of British Columbia refusing to pass an address.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The case of the province of British Columbia as the hon. gentleman probably knows, was submitted to the other eight provinces and they decided that a bonus of $100,000 would be a reasonable amount, in addition to its proportion, to be allotted to British Columbia. The Premier of British Columbia declined to accept the $100,000, but it is thought the imperial parliament, when being advised, as they will be by the papers, that go before them, that the other eight provinces have all united in the statement that $100,000 extra to British Columbia is ample compensation for the conditions that exist there, that that will have its bearing with the imperial parliament. I may say that British Columbia is sending a delegate over especially to be present, and they are of course carrying out their protest just as Mr. McBride did when he was in Ottawa, objecting to the $100,000 as not being enough.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does my hon. friend propose that parliament should ask the British government to agree to this plan with one of the most important provinces protesting? Would he put it through in the face of that fact?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In a very important matter of this kind the people of the different provinces should be consulted. I am certain the provincial government would be swept out of existence in Prince Edward Island, if that province was appealed to at the present moment, for agreeing to such terms.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand the subject has been brought up in all the provincial legislatures. Of course, the question goes back many years. They have had repeated conventions, and I think as far back as five or six years, they came to an agreement contained in the paper that will be submitted for consideration to-morrow. What other tribunal would my hon. friend say could settle this question of British Columbia's demand? It is said, and said with some degree of truth and justice, that the conditions are different in British Columbia; that it is a large province, and a large area of land is more difficult to administer, and, therefore, they should have something additional in consideration of that fact. The other eight provinces agreed that that demand was reasonable, and then they discussed together what would be a suitable amount to allow to British Columbia in compensation for the conditions there. They are somewhat similar to those that exist elsewhere, and they came to the unanimous conclusion after discussing it, that $100,000 would be a fair amount to allot to them. There is no other tribunal, otherwise it would break down the whole thing.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My point is that there was a solemn treaty entered into between the provinces at confederation, and, do you propose to abrogate that treaty and establish different conditions with an important province of the Dominion, constitutionally objecting to anything of that kind? And, incidentally, there is the question that in abrogating this treaty that was made at confederation, there should be an appeal to the people of the different provinces, and I tell my hon. friend that the people of Prince Edward Island are almost a unit in opposition to this proposition.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to draw attention to the fact that the question before the House is a motion to postpone the order of the day.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at Three o'clock.

TREATY BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, may I direct the attention of my hon. friend to an article which appears in this morning's 'Citizen,' and upon which some information might be given to the House. It reads as follows:

Washington, April 8.—It was officially admitted to-day that a treaty had been drafted between the United States and Great Britain, providing for the appointment of a joint commission which will consider all of the complex questions connected with the water boundaries between Canada and the United States. This will include such questions as the disposition of the waters of the great lakes; the regulation of the use of water at Niagara Falls for power purposes and the whole general subject of fisheries' regulations not only for the great lakes, but for the Atlantic and Pacific states. This treaty will require the approval of the United States Senate to become effective, but it is possible that an arrangement in the nature of a modus vivendi will be reached between Secretary Root and Ambassador Bryce in the near future.

I desire to ask if there is any truth in the report, which seems to have been officially made, and to further say that in the event of such treaty being negotiated, I hope the government of Canada will strongly protest before any commission that may be appointed, against the adoption of any modus vivendi, for the continuance of treaty rights, pending the ratification of such a treaty by the United States. The whole treaty history of Canada practically,—at least between Canada and the United States—has been one of modus vivendi, by which Canada has been precluded from enjoying the benefits which almost invariably flow from those treaties, and by which the United States invariably participates in all the advantages which have been negotiated to flow from Canada to the United States. Possibly my hon. friend may have some information which he can give the House as to this treaty, which is apparently about to be consummated. We have heard so many reports of late, and the presence within the last few months of Mr. Root, the Secretary of State for the United States, as well as the British Ambassador in Ottawa, gives a certain amount of probability, it seems to me, to the despatch which appears in to-day's issue of the 'Citizen.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume this will go on record as the latest report which has no possible foundation. If there is foundation for it, the government of Canada have not been advised of it. No information has been sent to us. The commission having control of the waterways between the two countries, was appointed a year ago and has been acting. There is no intention of superseding them, because you may remember that one of the members of that commission, representing the United States, died, and a successor was appointed, and they have from time to time been acting and conferring together, which I know as a matter of fact, so that I fancy that this report is probably made up by a news reporter who wanted something startling to communicate. I do not know that there is any foundation for it, more particularly as it refers to the international waterways, which are now all under the sovereignty of this commission. For a long time the St. John river difficulty was withheld, but now even that has been placed under the control of the commission. It may be that something is being drafted at Washington to be submitted, but if such a document has been prepared it has not reached us yet.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend does not presume to say that the waterways of the two countries are under the administration of the commission referred to? As I understand it, that commission was simply appointed by the two governments to report upon the waterways, not for the purpose of entering into any treaty with regard to the rights of either countries, nor even the recommendation of a treaty, but simply to report to their respective governments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Practically, so far, there has been no dissent from the finding of the commission. Although they have not been formally confirmed, yet in both countries there has been a tacit acceptance. In some instances, of course, the grievances have not been removed, and Congress has itself, in connection with the Niagara Power Companies taken the question practically out of the hands of the commission, and dictated as to what their view was.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Did I also understand my hon. friend to say that the late Joint High Commission has held a conference? I understand there has not been a conference of that commission within the last few years.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The commission to which I refer is the waterways commission.

Hon. Sir. MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I understand the Hon. Secretary of State aright, he says that no treaty has been entered into between Great Britain and the United States of which this government has been informed. That is what I understood him to say.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir. MACKENZIE BOWELL—It cannot be that the British government is treating us as it did Newfoundland. At least I hope not. I cut out of a paper the other day a long list of questions which were to be discussed between the British Ambassador and our own Governor General and government. It was followed by a statement in a telegram from Great Britain that Canada had consented to some of them. I must confess that I did not at the time think it possible that the questions mentioned in that list were of a character that Canada would ever consent to. They struck me as colossal impertinence on the part of the Washington authorities, if they ever made such a proposition to the government. However, it is gratifying to know from the statement of the hon. gentleman that they have no intimation of any treaty being entered into of the character mentioned in the despatch quoted by my hon. friend from Calgary. I hope we shall not be placed in the same position as Newfoundland was placed recently, when questions of modus vivendi affecting the trade, the interests or the autonomy of the country are considered.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If my hon. friend read the observations made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the banquet recently given to Mr. Bryce at the Russell House, he would have noticed that Sir Wilfrid said very distinctly that Canada was not now going to Washington, and that he made other comments in a similar strain which attracted the attention of the British press. My hon. friend will probably have noticed some comments on the instructions which Mr. Bryce received during his Canada tour, not only at Ottawa but at Toronto, and will have observed no doubt his very judicious silence on all questions connected in any way with international complications between Canada and the United States. Canada is perfectly safe up to the present time.

THIRD READING.

Bill (141) An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1908.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY BILL.

DEBATE ON THIRD READING CONTINUED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for the third reading (Bill 82) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, and the motion in amendment of the Hon. Mr. Ferguson :

That the 7th section thereof be amended by adding thereto the following words :

Provided, however, that the company shall not be relieved from liability for damages for personal injury to any of its workmen, employees or servants, nor shall any action or suit therefor by such workman, employee or servant, or, in the event of his death by his wife, heirs at law, or personal representatives against the company, be barred or defeated by any rules, by-laws or regulations made or adopted under authority of this Act, or

(3) By reason of any express or implied acknowledgment, acquittance, or release obtained by the company prior to the happening of the wrong or injury complained of or the damage accruing to the purport or effect of releasing or relieving the company from liability for damages for personal injuries as aforesaid, or by reason of the contribution or payment of the moneys of the company to the said fund or of the benefit or payment to which the workman, employee or servant, or his wife, heirs at law or personal representatives may become entitled out of the fund aforesaid.—(Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.)

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When I moved the adjournment of the debate last night, I intimated that if I could fancy for a moment that the passage of this Bill which is now before us would have the effect indicated by the mover of the amendment, and by others who seemed to take the same view that he does, I scarcely think that there would be a gentleman in the Senate who would not cordially approve of and vote for the amendment. I am very much afraid, however, that the Bill is not fairly understood. I say this with a great deal of humility, because I notice sometimes when one gentleman differs from another, it is intimated to him that he does not understand what he is talking about. We can, upon questions of this kind, in considering an important provision such as this now under consideration, differ very materially as to the effect which it may have in its administration without being told that we do not mean what we say or that we do not understand the question. The subject of superannuation and pensions has been occupying the attention not only of all governments, but of the different railway corporations on this continent and in Europe, and I may be permitted to refer to the different schemes which have been thought out and which are now virtually, so far as the railways themselves are concerned, laws which govern them upon these questions. We were told yesterday that there is as much difference between a superannuation and a pension as there is between tweedledum and tweedledee. It strikes me that gentlemen who give any consideration to this question will understand that a superannuation is altogether different from, and is based upon different principle entirely to a pension. Take the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway at the present moment; the Grand Trunk Railway now have two or three systems to aid their employees under certain circumstances, and the same remark applies to the Canadian Pacific Railway. All the great corporations in the United States and England have adopted the same principle that governs both the superannuation and other schemes designed to protect their employees in cases of sickness, or retirement after they attain certain ages when they are considered unfit for work. The Grand Trunk Railway system have to-day a superannuation fund to the extent of nearly one million dollars, which is invested in different securities, for the purpose of paying annuities to the clerical staff, exclusively, when they reach a certain age. To this fund the clerical staff pay two and one-half per cent of their monthly wages, and the company the same amount out of the funds of the company; that is paid by the staff for the benefit of those who contribute. Then they are placed upon a superannuation list, provided they desire it, and they have a right to claim superannuation at the age of 55. The amount paid by these clerks and the amount to which they are entitled is based on the same principle as that which the government Superannuation Act is framed. The different sums paid to these employees when they are superannuated range from $200 up to $2,000, based upon the amount of their salaries and the sums which they have paid into the fund. That is the principle that governs the present Grand Trunk Railway superannuation scheme. Of course it applies to other corporations in precisely the same way, but I use the word Grand Trunk Railway, because it is their Bill we are discussing. Then they have a provident insurance fund which applies to the whole staff, to the messenger as well as to any one else, and to this fund the men contribute a certain amount, and the company contributes between twelve and fifteen thousand per annum. From this fund a sum is given at the death, or in case of injury, or in case of sickness, when they are provided with medicine and attendance which is necessary for invalid employees. These are the principles governing the superannuation and the provident fund as it exists to-day. What are we asked to do in the Bill before us? That is what we really have to consider. If you read the Bill closely, you will find that the provision is that the company may—mind you it is permissive on the part of the company—make provision for the payment of an allowance to employees after—do not forget this point—after leaving the service. That is, the company ask permission to set aside part of the earnings of the road to provide an allowance for employees after leaving the service, and to establish a fund to be known as the Grand Trunk Pension Fund, and may from time to time contribute thereto, out of the gross earnings of the company, such amounts as the directors determine. In reading it, I can come to no other conclusion than this: that the Grand Trunk Company desire from the parliament of Canada permission to utilize, or set apart, or contribute a portion of their gross earnings as a pension fund and charge this contribution to current expenses of running the road. My hon. friend to my left (Hon. Mr. Sullivan) said to me last night 'Why do they not do this without coming to parliament?' For this reason: The directors are the trustees and custodians of the money earned by the railway, and they have no right to distribute that money in the way of contributions or for any other purpose than the running of the road, and for the benefit of the stockholders or shareholders of the company. Hence it is necessary to have power from parliament to enable them to do this. They might obtain power and authority by another means. They might for instance, if they could get all the shareholders and all the bondholders together, and get their united consent to dispose of their money in this way, they might do it. With the immense number of shareholders in the Grand Trunk Company, that would be altogether impracticable. There is nothing in this provision that can by any possibility, to my mind, be construed into giving power to pass a by-law or the adoption of a regulation to deprive an employee of the railway of any right which he might have under any law that exists. First of all, he has no claim on this fund. It is purely a gratuity on the part of the corporation; in other words it is nothing more nor less than a charitable contribution to old employees of the Grand Trunk Ry. whom they desire to retire from employment. We all know this, and we had an illustration of it a few days ago; take a corporation like the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway and particularly a government railway like the Intercolonial. There are honest, straightforward employees, men who have been trusted as employees of the railway for years and years, until they have become absolutely useless through old age or infirmity. Well, at that period of their existence the Grand Trunk Railway, as the government of Canada has very properly done under the law which we passed a short time ago, not only established a superannuation fund similar to that which is provided by the different railway corporations of the country, but they have appropriated a large sum of money, reaching up, I think, if my memory serves me right, to $60,000 or $70,000. What for? For the purpose of enabling them to contribute to the support hereafter of the old employees who are still in the employ of the railway, but who have become absolutely useless for the work they have to perform. I take it that that is precisely what the Grand Trunk Railway proposes to do in this case. They have been in existence for a long long time. They have to my knowledge men in their employ who have been connected with the road for the last 20 or 30 years. They have arrived at an age at which they are not as useful as they were in their younger days, and the Grand Trunk says: 'We must dispose of these men, and we cannot discharge and throw them on the world, to the mercy of charity, because their wages during the period they have been employed with us have not been sufficiently large to enable them to lay by anything to support them in their old age, and their families.' I look upon this as one of the most commendable acts that any large corporation could possibly adopt in the interests of those in their employment. While I cannot agree with the junior member for Halifax, that we are to be guided altogether by what took place in the House of Commons, I have learned from a gentleman from that Chamber, that this matter was threshed out, not only in the House but also before the committee for a long time, and Mr. Lennox informed the Senate committee, while we were considering this question, that he had moved the resolution himself in the Commons but had been defeated. I am speaking from what I believe to be in the interests of the workingmen. What would be the effect of adopting such a drastic amendment as that proposed to this Bill? Is it at all likely that if the company are to be hampered in the manner in which it is proposed to hamper them in this important matter, that they will establish this fund which they contribute themselves, and for which they ask not one red cent from the men who are to benefit by it, is it at all likely they will put themselves to the trouble and have all the annoyance of establishing such a fund? They will rather leave the unfortunate men who have arrived at an age when they are unfit for work, and have not saved sufficient to sustain them during the later period of their lives, without anything to live upon. They may be objects of charity, or, if I were in the old country, I would say subjects of the poor-house; but the less we have of poor-houses in Canada the better. The object of the Bill is to prevent a contingency of that kind, and it would be in the interests of the workingmen of the country who have arrived at the age to which I have called attention that this Bill should become law, and we should not only do that, but we should encourage to the fullest possible extent all these great companies who are adopting that system. I know it is a fact in Ontario, and I presume it may be the case in other places, that in large manufacturing establishments they have no superannuation fund. They are not obliged to give any superannuation to men who have been in their employment for years and years if they want to dispense with their services; but as a matter of fact, they either give them a large gratuity, or give them so much annually during the balance of their lives. I know of an establishment in the city where I live, a distillery, where the same principle is adopted. It has been purchased by outsiders, and they are increasing its capacity. The men who have been in that employment for 20 or 30 years have been retired, and the company has granted them, out of their own funds and out of their individual pockets, a certain sum per annum while they live. That is what the Grand Trunk proposes to do by this Bill. I was a little surprised, because I could only come to the conclusion that my hon. friend, when he made the statement here that there was no intimation before the committee when this Bill was under discussion, that the Grand Trunk Company was not to contribute all the funds necessary to create this pension fund. If I understood him aright—and perhaps I misunderstood him—he was not correct in that statement. It was distinctly stated by Mr. Biggar, that every cent of the money that was to be paid for the establishment of this pension fund was to be paid out of the gross earnings of the company.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is the reference intended for myself—that I made that statement?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, I understood the hon. gentleman to say that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The statement I made was, that it was stated in the committee, but I did not think the statement was made by Mr. Biggar. That is what I said; but in connection with that, I should like to know why it is, if they intend to contribute the whole of this fund, they do not put it in the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should have no objections to that at all, but I should like to know from my hon. friend since he has asked that question, supposing they do not put it in the Bill, where are they to get the fund ? No employee of the company, under this Bill, is obliged to contribute towards it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Oh, yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If he wants to reap the benefit of the Superannuation Act then he has to pay. If he wants to reap the benefit arising from the Accident and Provident Fund, then he has to pay. That is not only in the Bill, but that is in the regulations. In this case, so far as I am informed, and so far as the committee were informed, there is no intention to ask any employee to pay one cent. I agree with my hon. friend who has just asked that question ; it would have put the matter beyond a peradventure or a dispute if they had put such a provision in the Bill, but it is tantamount to it. What does the Bill say ? The company asks permission to do a certain thing. They do not ask permission to tax anybody but themselves. They ask permission to make regulations for the government of a fund provided by themselves. The regulations do not go beyond the governing of this fund.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They ask power to make regulations, and one of these regulations is that there shall be a contribution from their employees.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is nothing of the kind in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The regulations can go that far.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then if the regulations can go that far ; if regulations of that kind can be made, then no one is compelled to contribute ; it is not a compulsory Act, and the company cannot compel the employees to pay it, and should the employees decline to pay into the fund, of course they would be deprived of any benefits to be derived from it. But there is no such intention, and it is only an inference drawn from it that something may be done now in the interest of the pensioners. A good deal was said about the decision rendered by the Privy Council on the question of making a regulation to deprive the employees who joined the pension fund or the Provincial Accident Fund, of any rights they might acquire because of injury to themselves. If my recollection serves me right, that was not a question with the Grand Trunk Railway so much as it was with the Intercolonial Railway. The Intercolonial Railway, a government railway, adopted precisely the same rule and regulations that the Grand Trunk did in the establishment of a fund. Then the question arose as to the legality of a clause that would enable the company to contract themselves out of liability. That provision was very properly tested in the courts, and it was decided under the code of the province of Quebec that the company had no right to do it. I do not well see how it could be decided under any other law. The offence, if offence it was, was committed in Quebec, and consequently the Privy Council had to decide the question under the laws of Quebec. This is a point I do not pretend to give an opinion upon ; it is a question for lawyers to decide, whether the common law of England under which we live does not go just as far as the Quebec code on a question of this kind. That is a matter which must be left to the lawyers and judges to decide. The question is very plain, so far as the province of Quebec is concerned, under their code. I take it that the same principle of equity and justice would prevail under the common law of England. However, I give no opinion of that kind, but as a layman taking what I consider a common-sense view of it, that is the conclusion I should come to. I take this position in the firm conviction, strong as it can possibly be in my mind, that the legislation which we are asked to adopt is wholly and solely in the interests of the workingmen of these corporations, who have arrived at a period of life when they have to be retired, because they are comparatively of little use to the companies in which they are employed, and it is a provision to keep them comfortably during the remainder of their lives, and that too out of the earnings of the company, and not out of their own savings or of any money from their own pocket.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Middlesex)—As I understand the question before the House, it would appear that in 1874 the Grand Trunk Railway Company established a superannuation scheme for the benefit of its employees. That scheme has been fully discussed in the early stages of the debate, and it appears that the company contributed out of its own resources to that superannuation fund and the employees contributed also. Regulations were made under that scheme by which the employees would share in the general contributions of the Grand Trunk Railway Company and themselves, but the Grand Trunk Company, it is alleged, required its employees to make an agreement whereby if they suffered injury while in the service of the road the Grand Trunk Railway Company would not be liable. If such be the case, it was certainly a very objectionable agreement to make, and could not be defended here or anywhere else. I remember when the Compensation for Workmen Bill was first passed in England, there was no provision in that Act to prevent employees from entering into an arrangement with an employer whereby the employer would not be liable for injuries suffered by the workman. The law stood in that form for some time, and was subsequently amended to provide that no workman could contract himself out of the statute. In Ontario, our first Act for the compensation of workmen was based on a similar principle, and was subsequently amended as the English Act was, and the law of Ontario on that subject stands as does that of England to-day. In 1878 the Grand Trunk Railway Company established another system, whereby there was a sort of insurance for its employees, and the conditions upon which that insurance was paid were somewhat similar to those in the Superannuation Bill. Complaints were made and continued from time to time against the railway system because of its exercise of power over its employees to refuse payment for injuries under conditions where it was thought by the workmen that compensation should be paid. Private arrangements were made, but these were not always satisfactory and the workmen felt that they were, to some extent, in the power of the company that employed them and so suffered loss. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield cited a case which arose in the province of Quebec and which was appealed to England, in which case the Privy Council held that so far as the employee was concerned there was a remedy in the courts, and that the suffering employees could be paid and ought to be paid whatever the court determined. The hon. gentleman alleges that that did not extend to the province of Ontario. I am not going to dispute that proposition. Assuming it to be true, however, I understand by the Railway Act of 1904 that statute was amended to provide that no workman could put himself in a position to contract himself out of the statute and where under no circumstances, if legal phraseology means anything, could the railway company be relieved from paying whatever the court should hold to be proper compensation in the premises. The first two lines of the statute read as follows :

> Notwithstanding anything in any Act heretofore passed by parliament, no railway company within the jurisdiction and legislative power and control of parliament shall be relieved from liability for damages for personal injury to any workman, &c.

The hon. member from Marshfield takes the ground that because of the insertion of the word 'heretofore', that Act does not look forward. His contention was that the Act looked backward, but is silent as to the liability of the company subsequent to 1904. Acts of parliament are effective ordinarily from the date of their passage. A retroactive Act speaks backward as well as forward. This Act of parliament goes backward as well as forward. It says : heretofore. This evidently was an Act intended to cure what was supposed to be a defect in previous legislation ; therefore the insertion of the word 'heretofore', but because the word 'heretofore' is in this Act it does not follow that it shall not apply to cases which arise subsequent to 1904, for it speaks forward as well as backward. If there has been any defect in the Act of 1874 or the Act of 1878, whereby the Grand Trunk Railway might deal unfairly with its employees, I believe that defect was cured by the Act of 1904, and I think that the Act is operative now and speaks forward as from that date, so that so far as all railway companies under the jurisdiction of Canada is concerned, what my hon. friend from Marshfield proposes to do by his amendment is already done. I may say, speaking as a new member of the House and not very familiar with Dominion legislation on this point, I was entirely in sympathy with the hon. member from Marshfield during the early part of his speech. I thought he had a strong case. He put his case remarkably well, if I may be permitted to say so to an old member of the House, and his premises were sound and unanswerable ; but I am afraid he is mistaken as to the legal purport and meaning of this section of the Railway Act passed in 1904. As I understand it, that Act speaks for all future legislation on this point, and applies to this Bill if it were necessary that it should do so, or to any pension fund or anything of a similar kind that could be passed subsequent to that enactment. I have spoken of the two schemes provided by the Grand Trunk Railway Company for its employees, the one of 1874 and the one of 1878. We come down to the present session, when another pension scheme is provided of a different character, and you will notice that these Acts are all differently intituled. The one was a superannuation, the other was an insurance and the Bill now before the House is called a pension fund. It provides that the company may for the purpose of making provision for the payment of an allowance to employees after leaving the service establish a fund to be known as the 'Grand Trunk Railway Pension Fund.' The former funds were not for employees leaving the service, but for employees actually in the service. That is a clear distinction, in my mind. The others were for persons suffering injury while in the service of the company and for the widows and children of those who suffer death through the negligence of the company ; but here we have another class of employees leaving the service of the company. In Ontario we have no pension fund for the civil service, but we have a rule which is usually followed when any person in the service is unfit for further service or anxious to leave the service for some good reason; he can do so with the understanding that a gratuity shall be paid him out of the revenues of the province in consideration of his term of service. This is what this proposed pension fund is intended to be, to a certain extent. I can understand the case of middle aged employees who might wish to cease their connection with the Grand Trunk Railway and who had made no contribution to the superannuation fund or the insurance fund, and under these circumstances, as the law is now, the Grand Trunk Railway Company could not pay anything to them no matter how valuable their services had been. If I understand it, the Grand Trunk Railway Company wants to be in a position to be more generous with its employees now than it has been before. Should this House stand in the way of that Act of generosity? There is no contribution on the part of the employees; it is voluntary. It is the money of the Grand Trunk Company, just as the other moneys I spoke of in regard to the civil service at Toronto is the money of the province of Ontario and it is given; and the company want to be simply put in a legal position to take so much of the revenues of the Grand Trunk Railway and apply that towards a contribution, a gratuity, an honorarium, or you may say a reward for services which it could not reward otherwise. Are we to stand in the way of the Grand Trunk Company doing a generous thing? In the second place, shall we say to the employees who are not on the other funds of the company, we will not allow the Grand Trunk Company to do the handsome or generous thing by you. From whatever standpoint we look at this question, it seems to be something that we ought to allow the Grand Trunk Railway Company to do if they are so inclined and we could put ourselves in a position to compel them to do it. I think it would be a reasonable thing to do. But when they come forward of their own motion with a proposition to award their old servants in a way they could not otherwise do, we should assent to the Bill. But my hon. friend from Marshfield raises the question of the possibility of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, by making regulations to so involve its employees that it may not fulfil the conditions of this Bill. Clause 7 provides:—

7. The directors may make and adopt all such rules, by-laws and regulations not inconsistent with law as they deem proper and necessary for the due and efficient management, administration and disposition of the said fund.

If hon. gentlemen will notice the words 'not inconsistent with law.' Under the law of 1904, the Grand Trunk Railway Company cannot by any tortuous process, if law has any powers of restraint, prevent its employees getting the full benefit, either of the funds already referred to, that is of 1874 and 1878, or of this fund. That law of 1904 stands in the way at the present moment of the Grand Trunk Railway Company doing anything that would bar its employees or require them to contract themselves out of the provisions of this statute, or in any other way deprive them of what the parliament of Canada think they should have. The Grand Trunk Railway Company cannot do anything inconsistent with law that would place its employees in a worse position than they are at present, and the law says no employee can be placed in an unfavourable position. The Privy Council has held that as to the province of Quebec, and parliament of Canada says it applies to the whole Dominion. Assuming that the Grand Trunk Railway Company has the perverse idea—and why should we assume that it has anything but good intentions—of having some provisions smuggled through this House whereby, on the one hand, it appears to be doing a generous thing to its employees, and can by, the 7th clause of the Bill, put itself in a position to deprive its employees of the fund thus created, is it likely that such a thing would occur ? I see no reason to assume that there is such a bar sinister on the face of this Bill. On the contrary, the Grand Trunk Railway Company says it shall not, and we say it cannot do anything inconsistent with law, and if it does not do anything inconsistent with law, I see no reason why the Bill should not pass in its present form.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—A great deal of misunderstanding or misconception on the part of many hon. gentlemen has arisen with reference to the purport of this legislation. Owing to the expression which fell from some hon. members yesterday, the inference must necessarily be drawn that the Railway Committee was very remiss in its duty in reporting this Bill without adopting the amendment proposed by the hon. senator from Marshfield. This matter was very fully considered in the Railway Committee. It was discussed in at its various phases, and there could be only one conclusion, namely, that the amendment is entirely unnecessary. Now the whole question is this—is it necessary in the passage of this private legislation to tack on to the end of this Bill what now is the general law of Canada ? The adoption by the principal railway companies of Canada of a pension or accident or provident fund, and funds of that character, has become quite general. Up to 1903 a doubt existed in some minds as to whether an employee could contract himself out of the liability of the railway company to himself or to his representatives in the event of accident or death. In the first place under the common law, as the hon. senator from Marshfield yesterday very properly said, the employee had a remedy against the railway company. I venture to say that there is no judicial authority, in any of the provinces, which has held that an employee has the right to contract himself out of such liability. It is a well known canon of construction with reference to over-riding the common law, that there must be express language abrogating the common law. Or it must either be expressly implied, and, I think in all our body of statute law no legislation can be found which would warrant a railway company entering into a contract with its employees by which an employee could contract himself out of liability.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What about that case in Ontario ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no such authority.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Judgment was given that way.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It has not been held by the courts of Ontario, so far as I am aware. The history of the matter is this ; in 1903, when the General Railway Act was being passed, it was suggested to do away with doubts on the subject by an amendment to the Railway Act expressly stating that an employee should not be permitted to contract himself out of this liability. In 1904 the parliament of Canada placed on the statute-book an amendment to the Railway Act, providing in the broadest and strongest language that could be expressed in the statute, that under no conditions could a railway employee contract himself out of the liability referred to. If hon. gentlemen will look at chapter 31 of the statutes of 1904 they will find that provision.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Why was it necessary to put that on the statute-book ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—To remove all doubt on the question. Now the question arises are we to re-enact this general legislation to every Bill of this character that comes to parliament hereafter ? The hon. member from Marshfield, yesterday, referred in his argument to the fact that the Intercolonial Railway had embodied in its superannuation fund Act a provision of a similar character to that which he is proposing to insert in the present Bill. My hon. friend over-looked this very important consideration, that the Railway Act does not affect the Intercolonial Railway, and, consequently, it became necessary that there should be special legislation in connection with the superannuation fund of the Intercolonial Railway to provide for this condition of things ; but so far as the other railways of the Dominion are concerned, they are absolutely bound by the legislation of 1904. It might occur to hon. gentlemen to ask who is urging the adoption of this amendment proposed by the hon. senator from Marsfield. Is it the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway or of the other great railway corporations of the Dominion? No, there is not a tittle of evidence before this Chamber, nor was there before the committee, to indicate that a solitary employee of any of those large railway corporations had indicated any disatisfaction with the legislation for which the Grand Trunk Railway Company asks and which had been passed by the Commons. But there came before the committee Mr. Lennox, a member of the House of Commons, and he expressed before the Railway Committee a doubt as to whether the Act of 1904 really applied. Mr. Lennox himself would not venture, as a legal gentleman, to say that it did not apply, but he said simply to remove a doubt which was in his own mind he desired to have the provision of the general law re-enacted in the Bill which is now before us. The question was put to Mr. Lennox, will not the logical sequence of passing such an amendment be that whenever, in the future, legislation of this character comes before the parliament of Canada, it will become necessary to re-enact the same general law ? Mr. Lennox had to answer in the affirmative. Now I venture to say so far as the interest of the railway employees is concerned it would not only be embarrassing, but it would confuse the subject of the general law if we added this general Act to the private Bill now under discussion. Should that be done, the courts might very well say if parliament amended this special Act by the addition of the general law, there must be some doubt as to whether the legislation of 1903 was as general in its character as is claimed. Consequently, I say without any hesitation that it would be legislation of a most confusing character to amend a private Act by attaching to it a general Act which confessedly and admittedly must apply to all railways. So far as the character of the fund is concerned, I do not see that that necessarily enters into the consideration of this question. The Act of 1904, which prohibits railway employees from contracting themselves out of liability, will apply to every condition of fund which may be established.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Will the hon. member be kind enough to read clause 1 of the Act of 1904.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The title of the statute is 'An Act to amend the Railway Act, 1903,' and clause 1 of chapter 31 is as follows :

Notwithstanding anything in any Act heretofore passed by parliament, no railway company within the jurisdiction or legislative power or control of parliament shall be relieved from liability for damages for personal injury to any workman, employee or servant of such company, nor shall any action or suit by such workman, employee or servant, in the event of his death by his personal representatives, against the company, be barred or defeated by reason of any notice, condition or declaration made or issued by the company, or made or issued by any insurance or provident society or association of railway employees formed, or purporting to be formed, under such Act ; or by reason of any rules or by-laws of the company or rules or by-laws of the society or association, or by reason of the privity of interest or relation established between the company and the society or association, or the contribution or payment of moneys of the company to the funds of the society or association; or by reason of any benefit, compensation or indemnity which the workman, employees or servant, or his personal representatives, may become entitled to or obtain from such society or association or by membership therein; or by reason of any express or implied acknowledgment, acquittance or release obtained by the company or the society or association prior to the happening of the wrong or injury complained of, or the damage accruing, to the purport or effect of relieving or releasing the company from liability for damages for personal injuries as aforesaid.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—The Act says, 'heretofore'—would it apply hereafter.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is the gist of it—will the judges agree?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The phraseology employed in the Act was evidently used to cover two conditions of things; namely, a condition heretofore existing and a condition hereafter existing. The first line and one-half was put in to cover a condition of things heretofore existing—'Notwithstanding anything in any Act heretofore passed,' &c. Every gentleman should know that according to the Interpretation Act, an Act of parliament is always speaking; that is to say, 50 years hence this Act if unrepealed, is speaking just the same as it does to-day. This question was put to Mr. Lennox, when he was before the Railway Committee—supposing the first line and one-half were left out, would not the Act be equally effective? Mr. Lennox had to admit that it would be. The clause would then read:—'No railway company within the jurisdiction or legislative power or control of parliament shall be relieved from liability for damages for personal injury to any workmen, &c.' So that it is simply a play upon words to apply it otherwise, and it is a misconception on the part of hon. gentlemen who fancy for one moment that there is any other limitation in the first line and one-half to which I have referred.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. gentleman guarantee to this honourable House that the same difference of opinion which exists in the Senate shall not exist in a bench of seven judges? If he can guarantee that the judges will agree with him, I am with him.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman from Marshfield, in presenting this matter before the Senate yesterday, said it had not received much consideration in the Commons. This Bill was very fully discussed in the Commons and in the Railway Committee of that House. There was a division in the Commons and in the Railway Committee of that House. There was a division in the Commons on the subject, and in addition to that, I say on very good authority that the Minister of Justice and the Deputy Minister of Justice have since both expressed themselves in unmistakable language that this Act of 1904 applies in its entirety and in all the fullness and strength of its language to the condition which we are discussing to-day; and I furthermore say, that owing to the very great consideration which it received in the House of Commons, any amendment which might be tacked on to this Bill by the Senate would not be concurred in by that House. Furthermore, the opposition which is being given to this Bill is not for the benefit or advantage of the employees. Even though so ably represented by the hon. gentlemen who have been urging this amendment. So far as I can learn, a feeling is being generated which will inure against their advantage, by reason of the attempt which is being made to frustrate a gratuitous act on the part of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in making provision for its aged employees. It must appeal, I think, to the reasonableness of every hon. gentleman present that if a provision of this kind, which is absolutely unnecessary, and bearing signs of hostility, were tacked on the Bill, it certainly would inure to the disadvantage of those employees who, on the establishment of the fund, would be the first to participate in its benefits. I therefore venture to say that this Senate would be doing an act which would reflect upon its intelligence and upon its ability in revising legislation to adopt the amendment now before the House.

The SPEAKER—I would draw the attention of hon. gentlemen, as a reminder, to the fact that no reference should be made to debates in the other House or discussions in committee. This rule has been somewhat infringed on during the present debate, and therefore I call attention to it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Unfortunately this ruling has come a little late. A reference has been made to what took place in the committee by the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, which certainly is entitled to be dealt with, and after that reference has been made, I think it would be almost unfair to rule that it could not be replied to.

The SPEAKER—I draw attention to the fact that after having allowed the hon. gentleman to refer to what took place in the committee, that I did not preclude those that followed from referring to it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In answer to His Honour the Speaker, there is very good authority for demurring to that conclusion. I think it is very plainly laid down in Bourinot—I cannot now place my hand upon the page—that that rule does not apply to a reference either to a debate in the Commons or to a debate in committee upon the subject under discussion. If it relates to some other debate, then, of course, a member is prevented from making reference to it; that is during the present session. But with all due deference, I beg to take issue with the ruling that it applies to the debate in question.

Hon. Mr. POWER—On the question of order, I did not understand the hon. gentleman from Calgary to quote a debate in the House of Commons. He referred to something which could be found in the Votes and Proceedings of the House, that there had been a division on this subject, and that it had been considered in committee and in the House, but he did not undertake to quote the language there. Further, with regard to the discussion in our committee, the hon. gentleman who moved the amendment referred to what took place before the committee.

The SPEAKER—Bourinot at page 478 says:

> It is a part of the unwritten law of parliament that no allusion should be made in one House to the debates of the other Chamber, a rule always enforced by the Speaker with the utmost strictness. Members sometimes attempt to evade this rule by resorting to ambiguous terms of expression—by referring, for instance, to what happened 'in another place,' but all such evasions of a wholesome practice should be stopped by the Speaker, when it is evident to whom the allusions are made. It is perfectly regular, however, to refer to the official printed records of the other branch of the legislature, even though the document may not have been formally asked for and communicated to the House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend pardon me if I refer him to page 479 where Bourinot states:

> The rule, however, does not apply to the different stages of the Bill.

And further on the question is dealt with, and I think a little reflection will indicate that it does not apply to the same question that has been before both Houses.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My reference was not intended so much to what took place in the House of Commons as to what took place in committee, and I had considerable difficulty, when I was addressing the House, in steering clear of making reference to what took place in the committee. I used words by which I avoided the violation of the rule. My only exception is that at a later stage, when I may find it necessary to say a few words, I might desire to say something about what took place on this subject. It would be a mere allusion, but I should not like to have the rule interposed at that particular point when it has not been invoked heretofore.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I referred to an Act in committee, but I did so in order to set the statement right, that a certain thing had not occurred. I knew it had occurred, because the gentleman behind me made the statement.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Rule or no rule, I think it is doubtful form to tell us we should not adopt a motion or an amendment because the other House will not concur in it. We are not here to be guided exclusively by what the other House may or may not do, and what the other House may do should not I believe be thrust before us in a threatening manner. We should be guided in our discussions and in our votes by the merits of the measure, and not by what may happen in another place.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—It is with great reluctance I make this attempt to address the House. I should not do so, were it not that I hold a decided opinion on this subject, and for my own reputation, and as explanation to those whose opinions I respect and regard, I think I should make a few remarks. I am exceedingly surprised at the warmth and eloquence and enthusiasm that this measure has produced in the House; but the Bill is of such a simple nature that it might be easily and calmly discussed. I was reminded last night of the celebrated Warren-Hastings trial. Hon. gentlemen will recollect when Sheridan had concluded his speech, one of the members proposed to adjourn the House immediately, such was the dangerous effect of his eloquence. We had that repeated last night, and I think it is as great a compliment as could be paid to the hon. gentleman from Marshfield that such was the perilous nature of his eloquence that the House was adjourned to prevent the carrying of his amendment. Now, with regard to railways in this country, they are always treated by me with the greatest respect. I recognize the influence and power these institutions have on the progress and prosperity of this country. Any man who has travelled to the coast will be struck with admiration of the extraordinary discipline of the raliway and the great advantages which it bestows on this country. Therefore, I think any measure from these great corporations—and I trust it is not truckling in any way to them to say so, because it is from a deep conviction, should be treated with the greatest respect, and every deference paid them. Their wishes should be gratified as much as possible, if it be consistent with the duty we owe the people. I felt it was my duty to vote for this measure, because the Grand Trunk Railway Company sought it. But there is one power given in this measure which I contend is wrong, and which should not be given, except with extreme caution. I have every confidence in Mr. Biggar, and also in Mr. Wainwright the manager, and I should not have the least hesitation in trusting them with anything, but they will not live for ever, and they will have successors, and the example would be bad—because it would be a precedent—to grant such powers to every other company without any restraint. In the constitution of these companies, we have the shareholders who are the owners of the road, and the employees, and I confess that as between the shareholders and the employees my sympathies strongly gravitate towards the employees. The heroism, devotion and zeal of these men is beyond question. We read day after day of cases where they die standing at their posts doing their duty—an engineer telling a fireman to jump to save his life while he stands there with death inevitably facing him. To my mind the men are of superior intelligence to ordinary workmen, and I think it my duty to show my respect for them as much as I possibly can. I do not oppose this measure. I only wish to have it modified so as to secure safety for all concerned, and I do so because I know from experience of cases where this power given to a company has been of the greatest injury. It has been stated here that this fund is to be a gift of the company. That is all very well. The company do in a measure donate a certain amount, whatever it is, a pension or money to their employees after they have left the service. That should read 'Before leaving or on leaving.' I suppose it is given on the merit they have shown in the service of the company, and I can understand what the hon. gentleman from Belleville has said, that there have been a very large number of valuable men in their day, who have grown old in their service, and the company with a humane desire that ought to actuate all companies as much as possible, wish to create this fund out of which to give them a reward, so that they would not be dependent upon the charity of any one. That is a laudable desire if it can be done without any danger. The Bill provides that it is to be given to them after they leave the service, and therefore it cannot interfere with any vested rights, but there is nothing in the world to prevent the company from paying it, just as a boy is rewarded at school by a prize. He does not get during the school hours, but he receives his prize when he is leaving or on a special occasion. The employees are to get this when they leave, but what is to prevent the company from saying 'You will not get this pension or allowance unless you comply with the rules and regulations of the company.' Now there is the whole difficulty to this matter. The company has power to make by-laws, regulations and rules. Are they to have such a tremendous power placed in their hands? Are they going to exercise that power, or are they going to use it for the benefit of the employees and not in favour of themselves? No, they may use it to prevent strikes. They may use it to make the men subservient, and obedient to them. Because what appears to be a merit in the Bill, may also be used as a lever. It is not stated for what this money is to be given; no purpose is stated. It is simply given to employees after leaving the company. The Bill gives the power to the company to use this bonus as a weapon to hold it over the men. I do not say that they will so use it, but they get the power to use it, and make regulations to that effect. There is no use going back to any laws. Take the Bill as it stands and the remedy is simple. I believe in this way; not according to any law or rule, but the law which God has implanted in every man, the law which teaches him to avoid evil as much as he possibly can, and which teaches him to do what is just, right, and honourable. If there was ever a place in this world where justice, truth and honesty should be manifested it should be in the Senate. I am sorry to see there should be any dispute when the remedy is easy and simple. It is said it is in the law; what harm will it do to make assurance doubly sure? I do not offer this as an amendment but I merely suggest the following:—

The directors may make and adopt such by-laws as they deem proper, &c., but no legal right of any employee possessed previous to the passing of this Act will be affected thereby.

I would add a provision of that kind to this Bill. I do not see any harm in it, and I do not know how it will affect past or present laws. There are many men in this House, like me, who are unable to follow all the intricacies of the law, and it is for them to take a common sense view of it. That is the view I take of it, and why do I take it? I have had experience of it. I know of a company who were supposed to pay a man $200 at the end of ten years by a payment of $15 a year for that term. After nine years they offered to return his money and 10 cents for the use of it for the nine years. He had no redress because this company had the power under the seal of the Dominion to make regulations. The contract under which the $200 was to be paid was to be subject to any by-laws made by this company previous to it, during the time it is in force, before and after it is in force. That applied to the past, the present, and the future, and it would take a long time to get over that difficulty. I do not think there is any one who could avoid it. Seeing that is the nature of the case, you will not consider it at all irregular on my part, or that I am too fastidious or too particular when I offer my only objection to the Bill. I have not read closely the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, but I should be inclined to vote against this measure, unless it was modified in that way, thus giving security. The fact of an employee only receiving it after he leaves is no security at all; or the fact of the employee not contributing to it is no security. The employees do contribute to it indirectly. What constitutes the wealth of this company? Where would the company be if it were not for them? They contribute to the company as much as the equipment, the ties, rails or the other assets of the road. It requires a combination of all to make the road. It is the old story of the face fighting with the stomach and the other organs which are comprised in an organic body; they all work together and are productive to its health. Therefore, when it is said the company can do what they like with their money, I say so they can, but they cannot do what they like with it to injure any one else. It may be asked, 'Where is your justification or authority for taking this stand?' I have no brief or authority from any society or individual. I take the stand I do, because my conscience tells me it is right. I think it is the duty of the Senate to listen to such warnings, and be indifferent to party feeling or what political feeling may be on one side or the other, or even what the House of Commons may do. It is the duty of the Senate to give an honest, conscientious vote and do it without fear, favour or affection. I am naturally inclined to favour this company. I respect these institutions as well as any other man in the country. I appreciate their great value, and any measure which relates to them shall always receive the highest consideration and the highest effort of my limited ability.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I beg pardon for interrupting, but the hon. gentleman referred to an amendment which he would support. I did not catch it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I was simply suggesting to insert in this portion where the by-laws and regulations are provided for the following words :

But no legal right of any company possessed previous to the passing of this Bill shall be affected thereby.

It may be that the Act provides for it, and if so there cannot be any harm in repeating it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—How could any employee have a legal right under this measure before it is passed ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Because he is mentioned in this. He is a part of the Bill, and surely he is affected thereby. It is all with reference to the company and the employee, and I am voicing the sentiments of the employees so far as I can. I have no authority to do so, but my own wishes compel me to take this course.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I think this question has been well and ably debated by the hon. gentleman from Belleville, first, and afterwards by the hon. gentleman from Toronto and then by the hon. leader of the opposition. I think every point has been covered. Although I have listened to my esteemed friend, the hon. senator from Marshfield, I do not think there is a single point that he has raised in connection with the amendment he proposes that has not been throughly answered. I do not think it is complimentary to the Grand Trunk Railway nor would it be to the Canadian Pacific Railway making insinuations or professing to read between the lines, that these companies by some overt act are endeavouring to secure a position by which they can take advantage of their employees. I have known the solicitors of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have sat on the Railway Committee for some eighteen or nineteen years. I never knew any one of those men to attempt by a veiled effort to secure power either from the other Chamber or from this, that would enable them in any way to take advantage of their employees or to get something that, possibly, if it were in the open light of day, they could not expect to get. I knew Mr. Bell, who was the very respected solicitor of the Grand Trunk Railway for many years, when he came before parliament and made statements, as a rule his statements were accepted. He was a man of high honour and good ability. I was also acquainted with Judge Clark, solicitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway. When he made a statement to the Railway Committee as to what the company was seeking, it generally was taken as an honest, candid statement of what they ought to secure. I believe the men that now occupy the positions that were so ably filled by the men who preceded them, are just as honourable men as their predecessors. We know that on the present occasion, before a committee of the Senate, Mr. Biggar, Grand Trunk Railway solicitor, stated squarely and pointedly, to the entire satisfaction of that committee what the company were seeking to do. It was well and ably outlined by the hon. gentleman from Belleville. The company have in their employ a number of old men who are worn out perhaps in the service of the company. They feel that it is necessary, notwithstanding the fact of the two systems they already have by which they can assist their employees, one passed in 1874 and I think the other in 1878, do not cover these men that they wish to part with, and whom they will be glad to get out of their service. They feel that it is necessary in order to place them in a position that they can grant something to these men on leaving the service, they come to parliament and ask for the passage of this Bill. That is virtually all they ask. I think it is a most generous thing to do. Instead of our challenging the honour, sincerity and fairness of the Grand Trunk Railway in doing this, we should compliment them for it. I can see nothing at in the provisions of the law that will warrant any intelligent man in coming to the conclusion that the company are, by a veiled method, trying to take advantage of their employees. I dare say my hon. friend from Marshfield may have been under the impression that there was a veiled attempt, that there was some intention by an underhand way of securing a position that they could treat with their men to their disadvantage. I am sure that he has come to a wrong conclusion, intelligent as he is, but I give him credit, as the hon. gentleman from Toronto did, for the manner in which he presented his case. But, after all, I think it is clear on the face of the Bill what the object of the Grand Trunk is in asking this legislation. If they do not get the legislation, they could not do what they propose to do, and why? Because there is not one single bondholder of the Grand Trunk that could not bring the company to task for misappropriation of the funds of the company, if they did not obtain legislation to enable them to provide this fund. I think they are justly entitled to it; it was a most creditable move on the part of the Grand Trunk and for my part I am willing to vote for the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I do not oppose the object of the Bill, which is a commendable one.

Clause 7 of the Bill reads as follows:

7. The directors may make and adopt all such rules, by-laws and regulations not inconsistent with law as they deem proper and necessary for the due and efficient management, administration and disposition of the said fund.

I think that opens the door to any kind of possibilities, and to guard against any of these possibilities I will vote for the amendment. I would be satisfied with a clause such as the one we find to-day in the Bill with regard to the Intercolonial Railway. Consequently I will move in amendment to the amendment:

But nothing in this Act and no rules, by-laws or regulations made, action taken, thing done, or payment made by virtue thereof shall relieve the company from liability in the event of damage arising from the negligence, omission or default of the company or any of its officers, employees or servants, other than the negligence, omission or default of the person injured.

This is exactly the law as we find it in the Intercolonial Railway law.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is to be substituted for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Yes, I am willing that it be substituted for the other.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman from Marshfield has given a great deal of attention to the subject, and I think his intention is to protect the workingman. I should like to give an intelligent vote on this question, but as far as I can read and understand the Bill, I cannot see that it interferes with any of the workmen who have been pensioned before now, and that it is entirely a voluntary act on the part of the Grand Trunk Railway. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman from Marshfield if he can see anything in the Bill which affects injuriously the employee hitherto pensioned and also whether the Bill contains anything which gives the company power to rescind or repeal any by-law formally passed by them, affecting pensions to their employees? If he can show that, I will vote for the amendment, but if not I would not do so.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In speaking to the amendment, I will deal first with the very pertinent question asked by the hon. gentleman from British Columbia. My view is that the Act of 1904 is, without any doubt, operative regarding anything that has happened up to the present time. I cannot think that there is the slightest doubt on that point. The doubt entirely turns as to whether the Act is more than retroactive or a measure affecting previous legislation only on account of the unfortunate use of the word 'heretofore.' That may be only a doubt; at the same time there is a doubt, and it is not entertained by laymen alone, but it is entertained by lawyers just as eminent as those who have expressed the contrary opinion in this House, and for that reason I believe that something can be done in the establishment of regulations which would injure the interests of all pensioners for the future under the operation of this Bill. The debate has been a very interesting and somewhat protracted one, and having had the honour of introducing it to the House, I may be permitted to say a few words at the conclusion. I have to express my great thankfulness to hon. gentlemen who have taken part in the debate both for and against my amendment for the very great fairness and courtesy which they have shown. I have no intentional misrepresentation of any position I took or anything I said to complain of. Of course, some hon. gentlemen speaking on the other side have not understood me as I intended to be understood, or I think I am entitled to be understood, but I make no complaint of wilful misrepresentation. Reference was made by the hon. senator from Calgary to what he called the very full and ample consideration which this measure received in the committee. With regard to that, if I were of my hon. friend's opinion, and if I thought that ample consideration had been given to the Bill in committee, I might have been satisfied with the result; but I have been a very long time on committees of the Senate and I have never had any experience equal to my experience in connection with this Bill of the manner in which discussion was actually choked off in the committee. We had one of the most respectable members of the House of Commons, and a very eminent lawyer, who took an interest in this question, as the champion of the railway men in court and in parliament and he was listened to with the greatest impatience. He was cut off and interrupted in his arguments, and was, I might say annoyed with the manner in which he was treated. In endeavouring to bring out some points in connection with it, I was interrupted again and again, and finally the vote was actually put while I was on my feet and looking at a paper to see what answer I could find in the Bill to a statement made by some member of the committee. I had that complaint to make, that the Bill did not receive fair consideration, that the committee was stampeded, and on account of that it was due to myself and the important interests involved in this Bill, that I should appeal to the House in order that the question should be fairly and fully ventilated. Many opinions have been expressed about the Act of 1904, and I have, just incidentially, in replying to the hon. member from Victoria, made a reference to that point. The hon. gentleman from Middlesex (Hon. Mr. Ross) thinks that the Act of 1904 is conclusive and ample. The hon. gentleman from Calgary is very strongly of the same opinion, and my hon. friend said that he noticed that Mr. Lennox as a lawyer would not venture to say positively that the Act of 1904 was not effective. I know that Mr. Lennox was carefully in that respect, but he has a doubt on that subject, and his contention and my own is that there should be no doubt. When we find a man of Mr. Lennox's standing and many other lawyers in the other branch of parliament equally eminent, having a doubt on the subject, that fact supports the contention I made to this House that we should not leave that doubt existing. What is the effect of a doubt, supposing litigation arises between the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway and the company? A woman whose husband had been connected with this pension fund is killed by accident. She finds that the Grand Trunk Railway has made by regulation a by-law such as it made under the old fund which would shut her out. She goes to a lawyer who looks at the Act of 1904 and sees that unfortunate word 'heretofore' there, and possibly other defects. He looks at by-law No. 15 and he tells her, as an honest lawyer would tell her, 'I think your case is very good, but I am not sure of it. There is some doubt about this statute of 1904. I am not altogether sure of how it will be interpreted.' As a matter of fact he would tell her that judges differ very much, and one court will decide one way and another court will reverse the decision. What would be the effect? She would give up the case. She would not have the money to prosecute, and nobody would put up the money to litigate a case on which there was doubt. The Grand Trunk Railway Company, possessing ample funds and able lawyers, would be prepared to defend the case because if they could succeed in one such case they would save the expense of defending fifty cases. That being so, we should remove the doubt. What harm can there be in doing so? We have been told all through of the splendid reputation of the Grand Trunk Railway Company and I do not doubt a word of it. I have always received courtesy from their officials, but it is against just such fine men as those that we are making good and firm laws. We cannot assume that they are going to live for ever and will always manage the Grand Trunk Railway system; therefore, no matter how good we think them, we have a right to make the law firm and solid so that it will be understood, and since there is a doubt about the Act of 1904, and since there is power in this Bill that enable the Grand Trunk Railway to establish a pension fund and make regulations, the danger is there just as much—no matter what good professions the Grand Trunk Railway Company may make to members of this House—and on that account we will not be doing our duty unless we adopt this amendment. Some hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House seemed to be of the impression that this pension fund is something altogether different from a superannuation fund, and suppose they will be still more strongly of the opinion that it is altogether different from a provident fund. Now I find the following definition in Worcester of what 'superannuation' means. I said the difference was only the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. Worcester defined it as follows:

> Superannuation is to give a pension to on account of old age, or infirmity, to cause to retire from service on a pension.

That is the meaning and the sense in which we are using it, as given by Worcester. If I am mistaken I am in very good company. We have established a provident fund this session for the employees of the Intercolonial Railway, and the payments are called allowance; but they are pensions all the same, and just such a pension as the Grand Trunk Railway proposes to establish. Under section 7 of this Act we give the Grand Trunk Railway Company power to make regulations. These regulations are not subject to the approval of the Governor in Council or anybody else, but to the sweet will and judgment of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and the Grand Trunk Railway Company alone. One of these regulations might be, as regulation No. 5 in their old provident fund, to this effect, that every employee of the company should become connected with this fund. There is nothing in this Bill to prevent the Grand Trunk Railway Company making payment of a pension contingent on the employees of the company putting up a proportionate amount. They would connect them with the fund just as they did with the old fund, and they could make a by-law such as by-law No. 15, which has been quoted, providing that, in consideration of their contribution to the fund, the company be relieved from liability for accident or death of employees in the service of the company. If it were an insurance provision, instead of a pension provision we were having, there would be some reason in the arguments addressed to this House against the amendment. If the Grand Trunk Railway Company were proposing to grant an insurance to every employee, payable at the time of his death they might with some reason say 'In consideration of our assuring you the payment of this amount when you die, we shall be exempt from liability for injuring or killing you through our negligence'; but the taking away of a man's life is too serious a matter to be compensated for in that way, or in any way except on the payment of an amount fixed by a jury. We should not, in such an important matter as this, leave any doubt or possibility of the company making a regulation of that kind. They have an excellent reputation, but, notwithstanding that reputation they establish by-law No. 15 and saved thereby I venture to say, hundreds of thousands of dollars in damages in cases that they won in court or cases which they prevented going into court because of that by-law. Notwithstanding that, I do not say they are not respectable men; but they come to us with the record of having done that, and having done that once, are we as sensible and conscientious legislators justified in passing a Bill in which there is the least possibility of their being allowed to do it again? I ask hon. gentlemen if we were to take that by-law No. 15 providing that no servant of the company, because of the subscription of the Grand Trunk Railway to this fund, shall be entitled to damages in consequence of accident or death through the negligence of the company, and put it as a clause in the Bill, is there any member of this House who would vote for it, and are you now doing anything different? I would give the Grand Trunk Railway power to do the same thing by a bylaw. You may tell me you are not sure of that. I am not sure of it; but the doubt is there, and that is the reason why we should not allow it to remain. I say with due deference to those who do not agree with me, we should perform our duty and remove the doubt. Hon. gentlemen have put the extraordinary view before the House that this is only to take effect when an employee leaves the service of the company. The fund is to be established immediately, as soon as the company can organize it after this Act receives the royal assent. The fund is then established, and the rules and regulations will be made, and the men will be connected with that fund, and the company can do as they did before, compel their employees to be connected with the fund. An employee who has been with the company thirty or forty years may be killed by an accident, and the only hope of his widow and orphans receiving a pension would be destroyed. After having been attached by regulation to that pension fund, if the employees happen to meet death by accident their wives and children may be left unprovided for unless we remove this doubt. We have a right, in view of what has been done in the past, to consider the possibility of the same thing being done in the future. If there was no doubt about the Act of 1904, I would have no word whatever to say; but as there is a doubt on that point, the doubt ought to be removed, and the Senate ought to do it now that the Bill is in their hands. Some hon. gentlemen have said that we should not frustrate the Grand Trunk Railway Company. How are we going to frustrate the Grand Trunk Railway Company by making a provision of that kind which no man will say is wrong? Who will say it was wrong to put that clause in the Intercolonial Railway Act? The government did it itself. They did not mistrust themselves. It was to bar themselves and their successors from doing anything of that kind, and thus to give confidence to the employees on the road. Parliament put it in the Bill, and it was a very reasonable thing for parliament to do, and if the Grand Trunk Railway Company do not want to do anything underhand they ought to be ready at once to accept the amendment I have submitted to the House. We have been told 'ad nauseam' that the company are finding this money themselves. If so, it would be a very easy thing for them to say that in the Bill. Around the corridors either themselves or through others instructed to speak for them they say, 'we are going to do that.' I said to Mr. Wainwright when he made that statement to me 'If so put it in the Bill. You say we will contribute.'

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, may contribute.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Their contribution may be very small or very liberal. I have no doubt it will be liberal. It ought to be liberal. Such a great and important corporation with so many men in its employ, who have been working for it so long, should be liberal, and the men who will draw from this pension fund will be getting no more than their own money when they become old after a long and valuable service rendered to the company. But the company do not put it in the Bill. If they said in the Bill that they would contribute half a million, or a million dollars, and that no contribution would be asked from the employees of the company, yet from the very fact that they ask power to make these regulations, one of which might be to connect every man with the fund, and another to bar the company from liability in case of accident, it is a matter of very little difference whether the contribution is small or large, or whether they put in the whole of the money or part of the money, they have no right to oppose the reasonable amendments we ask for, especially in view of the past history of the company in connection with this question. I must retain the position that I took when addressing the House before, that the responsibility of this legislation be it good or bad, must rest on the shoulders of the government and every member of the Senate has some degree of responsibility for the vote he is to give if disastrous consequences should arise and difficulty should come up in the administration of this fund. The government is more responsible than any one else, because, under our constitution, whether legislation is private or otherwise, the government is responsible in a certain sense for all legislation passing through parliament, and after their attention has been called to this measure they will have to take a serious responsibility in conection with it. They discharged their duty manfully in connection with the Intercolonial Railway; they did their duty fully in 1904. To their infinite credit they took a suggestion, although it came from a member of the opposition, and amended the Act of 1904 with the very best intentions of declaring the same policy that is contained in both amendments before the House. This year they passed the pension Bill for the Intercolonial Railway, and made strict and strong provision against themselves and their successors, so that there shall be no mistake there. Why do they not go further and say it is a good policy that we have adopted and we ask the Grand Trunk Railway Company to submit to that same policy, not as a reflection on them, because it can be no reflection on them to ask them to accept a provision which the government imposed on itself. I will say this to the acting premier, that the amendment submitted to the House by the hon. member from St. Boniface is exactly the provision that is found in the Intercolonial Railway Pensions Bill of this year, with just such modifications as are necessary in order to make it applicable to the company, reading in place of 'His Majesty' 'the company,' and if my hon. friend the leader of the House, or those who represent the Grand Trunk Railway Company are willing to accept that amendment I will withdraw mine. Either of them would be effective, and there is this to be said in favour of the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface, that it would be uniform legislation. The Intercolonial Railway Bill would have furnished a precedent for future legislation in the event of any other corporation coming to parliament for authority to establish a pension fund, and to establish regulations respecting it. If there is a disposition to do that, I shall ask leave of the House to withdraw my amendment and to allow the amendment of the hon. member from St. Boniface to be adopted instead. Of course, if not, the matter will have to be proceeded with and the vote taken first on the amendment of the hon. member from St. Boniface.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The demonstration of the fact I laid before the House last night is complete—there is a doubt with regard to this Bill. There are several hon. senators who have been conscientiously speaking on this Bill for two days, half on one side and half on the other, and when I put the question to the hon. leader of the opposition if he would guarantee that no such difference of opinion would exist among the judges, he would not take the responsibility of saying yes or no. Is he here in the interest of lawyers to bring cases before the court to have them interpreted? Is he here in the interest of unnecessary litigation? I am a lawyer, and I am not here for that purpose. I am here to make laws as plain as they can be made, so that he who runs may read; and it will not be necessary to go to a lawyer to have them explained. Every citizen of this country should have the same right as a lawyer to understand the laws that govern him. With regard to the subamendment I felt, after the debate of yesterday, that further light ought to be thrown on the subject, and I made it my business to consult the Minister of Justice, not with a view to persuading him that I am right or wrong, but to get his opinion in regard to this amendment. I went to him with the Bill and the amendment, and asked if that clause meant what we said it meant. He had to read it two or three times before he could come to the conclusion that there might be a doubt. As to himself I guess his mind was made up that there was no doubt, but as to others he said 'no.' Then what is to be done Make it clear and plain. To-day I had occasion also to see the Minister of Justice and he did not take the same view as the hon. leader of the opposition, who said that we should submit to the House of Commons or to other members who think because the Railway Committee have decided the matter the Bill should pass the Senate without amendment. The hon. minister, in the presence of other cabinet ministers, said it was for the Senate to take the responsibility of the decision of this matter. We are not here subject to what the House of Commons has willed. Members of that Chamber came to me and said, 'Kill the Bill; we knew nothing of its passage through the House.' So there are divisions of opinion in both Houses. With such doubt in the matter, why not make it plain? I am in favour of the Bill. As I said last night, nobody went further than I did in congratulating the company on the establishment of a pension fund. I said it was Christian, charitable and generous, and an Act that might well be followed by other companies and employers. The hon. gentleman from South Wellington said, 'Are we to suspect the honesty of purpose and the intentions of the managers of the Grand Trunk Railway Company?' No, I do not wish to suspect them, but we all know that corporations have no soul; that when they obtained the legislation whereby a pension fund was established in 1874 and 1878, parliament gave them no right, directly or indirectly, to pass a by-law forcing their men to waive their legal and civil rights; but they did it and that condition of things existed nearly thirty years until overruled by the Privy Council on a case applicable only in the province of Quebec. I do not wish to challenge the honesty of purpose of the company, but, as has been well said by other senators, the men who understand the situation to-day may not be in the control of the company to-morrow. We cannot tell what class of men may eventually get control of the system, and manipulate that fund, not in the interests of the men, but in the interests of the company. That is what we want to guard against. There is not an hon. gentleman here to-day who would want to vote for the Bill if he thought a by-law to that effect would be passed under it. All we want to do is to prevent either the company or its employees from entering into an arrangement of that kind, and then there would be no appeals to the court to decide what we ought to decide here to-day. Now, since the Minister of Justice himself is not opposed to the amendment and says it lies in the hands of the Senate to decide his question irrespective of the action of the House of Commons, why not take the matter from that point of view in the interests of all and prevent the company doing wrong, or the employee doing wrong to his widow or orphans, if either he or the company wanted to do it. There is the whole question. It does not destroy the Bill to add a few words to the clause of the Intercolonial Railway Act, or to add the words suggested by the hon. gentleman from Kingston in the seventh clause. That is that all by-laws passed by the said company shall not in any way interfere with the legal or civil or natural rights of the employees. That is a very easy thing. It will not destroy the purport of the Bill. It will not make it any heavier and will not cost any more to print it. Under these circumstances, and under the advice and opinion of the Minister of Justice, I will support the amendment which he sanctioned in my presence last night.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am willing to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from St. Bonifice.

The House divided on the subamendment which was lost on the following division:

The amendment was declared lost on the same division.

The motion for the third reading was carried, and the Bill was then read a third time and passed.

HAMILTON RADIAL ELECTRIC COMPANY.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG (in the absence of Hon. Mr. Gibson) moved the third reading of Bill (MM) An Act respecting the Hamilton

Radial Electric Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Gibson.)

Hon. Mr. KERR—I move that the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that the same should be amended by adding the following to section 1 thereof :

And all rights, privileges and immunities which the company has heretofore been entitled to under its Act of incorporation and amendments thereof not inconsistent with this Act are hereby continued and confirmed.

There is a slight difference in this from the wording given by the hon. gentleman from Lincoln in his notice. The words 'And otherwise,' are struck out and the following words inserted in their place : 'And not inconsistent with this Act.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—I object to this amendment. I object to the Bill in toto, but I object to this amendment at the start. This is a case where the parliament of Canada undertakes to take over a corporation which has been constituted by the provincial legislature of Ontario. That is the original Bill. There are certain advantages, I suppose, in getting an incorporation from the parliament of Canada, instead of from the provincial legislature; and I think that the company might have been satisfied with those advantages ; but they want to add more. They want not only to take over the corporation, but they want, as shown in the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, under their Dominion Act of incorporation, all rights, privileges and immunities which the company has heretofore been entitled to under its provincial Act of incorporation and amendments thereof, not inconsistent with this Act. Of course, no legislation giving privileges to this company would be inconsistent with this Act. They want to take over everything which the provincial legislature in any shape or way has given to them; and I am opposed to that action. Then look at the Bill substantially. Here is a company which, as I understand it, is carrying on the business of a street railway in the city of Hamilton, and which has lines of electrical railway running out from Hamilton in different directions. I suppose it must have, because it is called a radial railway. There may be some question as to a steam railway company, inasmuch as it may be questionable whether it is a practical policy to say that any steam railway does not come under the jurisdiction or should not come under the jurisdiction of this parliament ; but when we come to deal with electric railways and street railways, I think there is no difference of opinion. The almost unanimous feeling is that those roads should be under the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature, and should not come to parliament. It is true that there is a paragraph in this Bill to the effect that the company propose to build a road to Niagara, and they also take power to build to Windsor. I do not wish to be uncharitable, but I am very much of the opinion that these powers are asked for the purpose of bringing this company under the jurisdiction of this parliament. Whatever might be the case with a steam railway, this is purely a provincial undertaking that we should not deal with here. I know there has been a good deal of feeling in Ontario about it, and there has been, I think, some more or less—well, not complimentary language applied to this House in Toronto, in connection with this Bill. I am not influenced by that fact at all. I think that any criticism that is bestowed on us by a provincial legislature or by the friends of provincial legislatures should not influence us, but I have come to the conclusion, without being influenced by any company or person with regard to this measure, that it is not one that I should support. I shall vote against the amendment.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It is quite true that this company was incorporated originally as an electric road, but by subsequent legislation power was given to operate it with steam. It is perfectly true that its original incorporation was limited as to the length of its operation as a radial road, but by the subsequent amendments which are referred to in the clause that I have just drawn, its powers, both as a steam and an electric road, were extended very much by addition to its line, and by the Bill which is before us authority is given to extend it to the Niagara river on the one side from its terminus as it would be under the Acts that have been already granted ; and to extend it further to the Detroit river on the other side, making it practically a trunk road—I mean a large and extensive railway, and with power to be operated by steam or electricity just as any of the existing trunk lines are now authorized to be operated. So that it stands on a par, as far as its condition is concerned as a railway, and as we have it by the Bill which is presented here, precisely as any railway existing already authorized to be operated by steam or electricity, and as a road of very great dimension to be constructed and operated through a very large section of the province of Ontario and one where more railways are needed and where it will be built with advantage to the public. Then we have the fact that it is a road that was incorporated by the provincial legislature. This very session we passed half a dozen Bills at least, in which we have granted powers to railways which were incorporated by the province of Quebec, and have given to them, as is done in this case, an extension of line, which extends them over a greater length and greater area, so that for every reason on which any legislation has been adopted in this House before, it should be followed in this case. So far as the company is concerned, there is this to be said about it, that from the day it was incorporated; from the time that it was authorized as it was in its original Act of incorporation, to cross Dominion lands, the railway has become by virtue of the Act of 1883 and the Revised Statutes of 1888, a Dominion railway entirely under the legislative authority of this parliament.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—For the crossing only.

Hon. Mr. KERR—No, for the railway itself. I will read the section so that there may be no misapprehension. It is perfectly true that the section of the Act to which I refer has been amended since, and that in our Revised Statutes in such a case it would apply only to the railway crossing, but under the Acts of 1883 and 1886 each such railway—that is the language of the Act—that is each railway which crosses any line of railway already under the jurisdiction of the Dominion, is a work for the general advantage of Canada. The Act of 1883 reads as follows:—

Whereas, it is, in and by the British North America Act, 1867, among other things in effect enacted, that the exclusive legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends to such local works and undertakings as, although wholly situate within a province, are before or after their execution declared for the general advantage of Canada, or are for the advantage of two or more provinces, and whereas not only the main line of the Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, the North Shore Railway, the Northern Railway, the Hamilton and Northwestern Railway, the Canada Southern Railway, the Great Western Railway, the Credit Valley Railway, the Ontario and Quebec Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, but also all branch lines or railways connecting or crossing with them or any of them, are works and each of them is a work for the general advantage of Canada; and whereas for the better and more uniform government of all such works, and for the greater safety, convenience and advantage of the public it is desirable that parliament should so declare; therefore, it is hereby declared that the said lines of railway, namely, the Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, the North Shore Railway, the Northern Railway, the Hamilton and Northwestern Railway, the Canada Southern Railway, the Great Western Railway, the Credit Valley Railway, the Ontario and Quebec Railway, and the Canadian Pacific Railway are works for the general advantage of Canada and each and every branch line or railway now or hereafter connecting with or crossing the said lines of railways, or any of them, is a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER—At the time the Act was passed did that include street railways?

Hon. Mr. KERR—This is not a street railway. It always has been an electric railway radiating from the city of Hamilton in many directions.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Has it not been built on the roadway?

Hon. Mr. KERR—In part it has and in part it has not. In part, it owns its own road-bed. The Grand Trunk Railway itself passes through three streets coming through Hamilton. The roads from Dundas pass along the main street of Hamilton and the Grand Trunk Railway, in Toronto, passes along Esplanade street and many others.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Do you contend that this law made that road a federal one?

Hon. Mr. KERR—I say as far as this road is concerned, it has been determined that it is under the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of this parliament, and that is the result of the decision of Mr. Justice Street, a judge whose opinion will be recognized as being one of distinct authority. The case of the Grand Trunk Railway versus the Hamilton Radial Railway, 29 Ontario Reports, page 145, where the question was brought up expressly as to whether this road was one which had the right to cross a railway, and that depended entirely on where the legislative authority was. Mr. Justice Street in that case said:—

The defendants are incorporated by 57 Victoria, chapter 88, Ontario, to construct a line of railway crossing the plaintiff's line of railway at Burlington, but are forbidden by section 19 to cross or intersect the line of any railway operated by steam, at grade. Proposing, however, as they do, to cross the plaintiff's line, they are brought within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada by sections 306 and 307 of the Dominion Railway Act of 1888, 51 Victoria, chapter 29, and by section 4 of the same Act the provisions with regard to crossings are made specially applicable to them.

And his opinion was, and it was argued there, that notwithstanding the repeal of that Act—and the fact that the present Railway Act was then in force, he held that the road continued to be under the legislative authority of the Dominion of Canada. And the company claims that by virtue of the British North America Act there was no power to remove it under any other jurisdiction. This is a large and important work, not a small street railway at all, not a railway operated as such, local in its character and operation, but one standing on a par with any other line of railway through Canada, and one which has been determined by judicial authority to be within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. We have the legislative authority and we have the judgment, and I think there should be no difficulty in asking parliament to assent to the passing of the Bill.

The amendment was adopted. The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THIRD READING.

Bill (EEE) An Act for the relief of Arthur Leon McPherson.—(Hon. Mr. Perley.)

Bill (60) An Act to regulate the exportation of electric power and certain liquids and gases.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (72) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company, as amended.—(Hon. Mr. Jones.)

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Second reading Bill (FFF) An Act respecting Juvenile Delinquents.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said : This Bill has been introduced for the purpose of eliciting opinions upon it, and not with any view of bringing it into operation during the present session. The Bill has not been distributed, and I therefore move that the order be discharged, and that it be placed on the orders for Thursday next.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend intend to refer the Bill to a Committee of the Whole House ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it would be well to elicit opinions from different quarters, and wherever the Bill can be best considered is where it should be discussed.

The motion was agreed to.

THE RULES OF THE HOUSE.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Power :

That the four rules following be inserted after rule 31, that is to say :

Any substantive motion which has been adopted by the Senate, other than a motion relating to a Bill, may be reconsidered at the next sitting of the Senate: provided, that notice of the proposed reconsideration is given during the sitting of the Senate at which such motion is adopted. Such notice may be given at any time during such sitting.

The motion to reconsider must be moved after 'notices' and 'inquiries,' and before 'motions' on the next sitting day, unless postponed to some certain time by leave of the Senate.

When a motion for reconsideration is decided, that decision shall not be reconsidered ; and no question shall be twice reconsidered.

An order, resolution or other vote of the Senate, not being a motion for a stage of a Bill, may be rescinded; but no such order, resolution or other vote shall be rescinded during the same session, unless seven days' notice be given and at least one-half of the whole number of senators vote in favour of its rescission: provided that, to correct irregularities or mistakes, one day's notice only shall be sufficient.

3. That the following be inserted after rule 102 : A public document quoted from by a minister of the Crown may be ordered by the Senate to be forthwith laid upon the table ; unless it is stated by the minister to be of such a nature that its production would be inconsistent with the public interest.

4. That the changes in the numbering of certain rules, made appropriate by the foregoing additions, be duly made.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

The SPEAKER—The motion which is before the Senate contains four clauses relating to three different matters. If it is the desire of any hon. member that these matters should be voted upon separately they can be the subject of three motions instead of one.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I spoke with the impression that we were not dealing with the matter contained in the last motion. I thought we were dealing with the question of reconsideration and rescission only, I think it is very proper that they should be divided and treated separately.

The SPEAKER—We shall take the motion before the House to be limited to the first three clauses.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When I moved the adjournment of the debate, I had in view the discussion of the proposed amendments relating to reconsideration and rescission only. It was not my intention to address the House at length on the subject except to say that I recall during last session, when those rules were under consideration, that my view was that the rule then proposed for rescission was entirely unnecessary inasmuch as the same purpose could be effected by the rule dealing with the reconsideration of a subject, and I have seen no good ground to alter the opinion which I then entertained, and which I entertain now. Therefore, I would suggest to my hon. friend that he should give some consideration to the point which I then raised, and which I feel equally strong upon to-day, that the two would only lead to confusion, and that one would be quite sufficient. Under the rule dealing with a reconsideration of a matter, any subject can be as effectively dealt with by reconsideration as by rescission. I simply desire to indicate my opinion upon that line to the Senate, and to suggest that my hon. friend should withdraw his proposed amendment as to rescission, and rest entirely upon that of reconsideration.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have no objection to take the course indicated by the hon. leader of the opposition.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend from Marshfield has expressed a desire that the rule for rescission should remain instead of that for reconsideration. It is entirely immaterial to me. My opinion is that one or the other will answer the purpose.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Rescission is the British practice, and the nearer we keep to that the better.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If I were to give up either, it would be the rule with respect to rescinding. Under our present practice we can rescind, but we have nothing in our present practice which offers the same advantages as the proposed rules with respect to reconsideration do. In a thin House on a Friday afternoon, where there are not one-fourth of the members present, an important action might be taken and there would be no means of undoing it the following Monday with a full House. I just take that as an illustration. Reconsideration is a very necessary and desirable thing. With respect to rescinding, while I have not changed my own opinion as to the desirability of the change, still you can rescind under the existing practice—the English practice.

The SPEAKER—The hon. member has expressed his willingness to drop the rule with respect to rescinding.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should like to hear the reasons for preferring reconsideration, to rescinding.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The subject was discussed at considerable length two years ago, and I also endeavoured to express my views on the subject a couple of days since when I made the motion. If something is done in a very thin House, or if a motion is adopted with very little consideration, a thing which sometimes happens even in this House, it is very important that a member, by giving notice on the spot, can have the House when it meets again reconsider its action and then finally dispose of the matter. When you decide to reconsider, you can either modify or rescind the motion which has been adopted, and that is a very much more important thing than the rescinding, which means a complete obliteration of the motion on a subsequent day. Under the English rule, you can rescind a resolution at any part of the session by giving two days' notice and having the passage in the journals read and then vote to rescind or expunge.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I favour reconsideration, but with some safeguard. What guarantee have we that when a resolution has been adopted by a full House it may not be reconsidered and changed in a thin House to-morrow ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The notice of reconsideration will have to be given in the full House.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—But the members may not be present, and you may have a motion which was adopted in a full House reconsidered in a House of 20 or 30 members. This is the American system. In England there is no reconsideration. Experience has shown that public men in England know what they are doing. In America they have modified the system and accepted the principle of reconsideration, but with many restrictions and limitations, as you will see by looking at the rules of the different legislatures in the United States and almost everywhere on the continent. They have accepted the principle of reconsideration, but with certain safeguards. I have here Bourinot's hand book on public meetings, and I find on page 301 the rules of city councils in Canada relating to reconsideration. The rule in London, Ontario, is that any member who voted in the majority may at the same or at a subsequent meeting move for a reconsideration thereof. The same rule prevails in Hamilton as in London. In Kingston, a majority of the members present may pass a vote of reconsideration, but the subject cannot be reconsidered unless a majority of the whole council vote therefor.

These quotations illustrate what I have said, that the right to reconsider is restricted in such a way that a resolution adopted by a full House may not be reconsidered and reversed in a thin House. In Montreal city council we have reconsideration, but to carry a motion of reconsideration, two-thirds of the members of the council must approve. The hon. gentleman might amend the rule in some way to provide for either an absolute majority of the Senate, or some certain number ; otherwise you may have a resolution which was adopted by a full House reversed the next day in a thin House. I move that the following words be added after 's'tting of the Senate' —' Provided the reconsideration is adopted by an absolute majority of the members of the Senate.'

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Of all the members of the Senate present?

Hon. Mr. DAVID—The whole Senate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—You would never get a reconsideration that way.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think we might take the motion as it stands.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I may say that I should feel it my duty to drop the rule altogether if that amendment were adopted, because it would be practically rendering the rule nugatory. We rarely have a majority of the House here.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—When we are reducing the Senate to the level of ordinary councils, it is only reasonable we should take ordinary precautions which the councils take, and while my hon. friend asks merely for half the number of the Senate voting in favour of it, yet in the very procedure it is suggested that we should adopt, as high as two-thirds of the body in some cases as necessary before a matter can be reconsidered. So that when we are getting down to that level, for consistency's sake let us have at least the safeguard which the level requires, and we are taking the minimum, practically, when my hon. friend suggests only half, when in many councils they insist upon two-thirds of the members of the body voting in favour of a reconsideration before a matter can be reconsidered. Here we have a proposition without any safeguard at all, and while my hon. friend from Halifax has given us a picture of a full House passing a resolution and a thin House rescinding it he must see that the rule works both ways, and he will find that he is opening the door and making a departure from a safe principle.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Does he not give notice of reconsideration ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Supposing I give notice in the thin House we have now for to-morrow—this is not a full House, and I give notice at a late hour to-night that I am going to ask the House to reconsider a thing to-morrow, how are the members to know ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—How are they to know anything ? It is their business to attend.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Are they expecting or looking for it ? We have committee meetings in the morning, and members are busy all forenoon, and the first thing they know of it perhaps, is when they come into the Chamber and find the motion has been carried, and then the door is locked completely, because the question cannot be reconsidered twice. I think the good sense of this House will rely on the time-honoured and well-tried British practice and leave the rules as they are. We threshed this matter out with a full House and came to a decision, and I ask any hon. member if this House has been in the slightest degree inconvenienced since or before by the fact that our rules are based on rules adopted and followed by the British practice. Not once. Yet we are asked to make a departure, to come down, without any disrespect, to the minor body, to the lower level of a municipal council and adopt rules without the safeguards that are found in the minor governing bodies throughout the land. I do not think the Senate will entertain it—at least I hope they will not entertain it——

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—In the first place, I object to my hon. friend's observation that we are coming down to a lower level.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I said without disrespect to the minor body.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—After all, the elective institutions of this kind are perhaps superior to the appointed institutions of this country ; but I do not wish to draw that comparison. My hon. friend is illogical, I think. He says we should not come down to the level of those bodies ; then he proposes that if we carried the amendment at all we should have such an amendment made according to the nature of some of these bodies, as will not be satisfied with an ordinary majority of the Senate, but will require two-thirds majority to do a certain thing.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I did not say that at all.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—My hon. friend did say so in the commencement of his speech, but he did not say it at the close.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I may not have made myself clear. I said that the hon. senator for Mille Iles proposed a bare majority, which was objected to by the hon. gentleman from Halifax on the ground that it was unworkable, and I called the attention of the House to the fact that in the lesser or minor bodies of councils, in which this practice was permitted, that they even required as high as a two-thirds vote of the body in favour of a reconsideration. I was pointing out that while the hon. gentleman from Halifax objected to a bare majority being required, that in these minor bodies they went even further, and required two-thirds. As I said before, I am not speaking of them with any disrespect at all, and I think my hon. friend from St. John will do me the justice to say that when I spoke of minor bodies I spoke of them as being smaller in numbers, and dealing in matters of less importance, as a rule, than the questions that come before us.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I wanted merely to make the observation that it never seems to me to be correct or fair that the majority who are present should be controlled by the majority who may be absent. The gentlemen who come here and attend to business from day to day are the persons who should control the action of the assembly, although I do not say that there might not be special cases when it would be desirable to have a majority vote of the whole body ; but the provision to reconsider is a reasonable, proper and fair consideration in any society or organization of men who are charged with deliberations of any kind, because it may be that, under certain circumstances which I need not at all enter upon as an illustration, because they are within the scope of every man's knowledge, there might be times when it would be advisable to reconsider what has been done and to change the action of the previous day by a more considerate action founded upon observations of what has taken place, or founded upon a knowledge of what would follow from what might take place. I think the Senate might very well agree to that. Although I have seconded the motion of my hon. friend for the whole, I do not discuss the propriety of a form of rescission, for I concur in his idea to drop that part; but I do not think the Senate might very fairly and properly agree to a proposition to reconsider a motion, due regard being had to notifying every member of the Senate. The fact that the notice may be given in a small House, is not of so much importance, because we do not stand so much upon rules as we do upon the order paper itself. Every member consults the order paper and knows what is coming up, and he is guided in his actions in regard to how he shall vote, by what is on the order paper before him. I just say that in support of the proposition I make. I would point out that the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles has not placed his amendment in the proper place, because the first paragraph of the motion provides for the form of giving the notice. It should come at the end of the second paragraph.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—This Senate has been in existence forty years, and the experience of the past should be a proper guide as to what would be proper for the future. I never heard of there being any hasty decision or a necessity for reconsideration, or that there was any trouble about our decisions. The Senate is advised of its business by the order paper, and every one can see it.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—It seems to me that a rule providing for a majority of the whole body to reconsider a decision would be equivalent to having no reconsideration at all. Supposing an hon. gentleman had given notice for a reconsideration to-day, you could not get a majority to-night and the whole matter would be dropped.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would the Speaker kindly inform the House what it is proposed to leave out by the substitution of that amendment ?

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman made his motion covering the whole of the second clause, which left to be proposed the third and fourth.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The rescission has been dropped.

The SPEAKER—He has now limited his motion to the first clause covering the reconsideration only.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—By an absolute majority.

The SPEAKER—He has now limited as printed. The motion to rescind will be dropped when we have disposed of the present matter. The hon. gentleman from Mille Iles has moved an amendment that a motion for reconsideration should only be adopted if carried by an absolute majority of the whole House.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I think the remarks of the hon. gentleman from St. John are right, that the amendment would be in a more appropriate place at the end of the second paragraph.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In my opinion the procedure by reconsideration is illogical. The motion to reconsider does not mean to reverse. It only means the opening of the door. That is all it means. It would be a very regular way however to give a notice to reconsider, and then we could use the English practice if we wanted to reverse or to modify. We could then use it, but I really think, with the hon. gentleman from Halifax, that we would be almost as well without any rule at all as to have a rule that would require a majority of the whole House to consent to the opening of the door for a reconsideration. I think it will be found in practice that it would be almost impossible to do it in that way, but I apprehend that although we have this notice of reconsideration, that does not make any rule that would debar us from using the British practice for rescinding. The British practice for rescinding would still remain. There is a strong logical difference between the two things, and the British rule would still remain, and were it not for that, an amendment such as the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles suggests would make our laws like those of the Medes and Persians, so that they could not be altered at all. That is what it practically would be, but I think in adopting the motion for reconsideration we would still have the easier practice of the British parliament of rescinding available, which would be the only method by which we could take up a motion a second time and reverse our action, because we could never do it if it was obligatory to have a majority of the members of the whole House present. I noticed in some of the United States parliamentary manuals that nearly all of them have this reconsidering method. They require that no man can move a motion of reconsideration who had voted in the minority, and it seemed to be a logical rule. One who has voted in the minority cannot move for a reconsideration, but one who has voted in the majority can, showing that there is a change of opinion on the part of somebody.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Or that he has been bought up.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That he made a mistake, which many men would be quite liable to make; therefore a right to move a reconsideration is only given to those in the majority, which shows that they wanted to reverse their action.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The object of the amendment which has been moved appears to me to avoid the possible danger, I do not think it is a probable danger, of a resolution being adopted with a full attendance of senators in a large House, and some hon. member at the close of the sitting giving a notice that he will move a reconsideration on the following day, and that reconsideration being taken up and possibly carried when there was a very small attendance, thus a small number of senators reversing the decision of a larger number on the day previous.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—That is the point.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—That is the object of the amendment. If there is really such danger to be apprehended, it appears desirable that there should be some precaution taken to prevent an occurrence of that kind, and I think that the objections which have been urged to the proposition of the hon. member are met with this answer: that if the amendment which is proposed is adopted that, of course, could not occur; a reconsideration can only be had when there is a larger attendance of senators than there was when the original proposition was adopted. For instance, suppose a resolution is adopted on Thursday, and that on the understanding that there was unimportant business for Friday, a large number of senators, as frequently happens, leave on Thursday evening, not expecting to be here on the Friday session. Some one on that session gives notice of a reconsideration for Friday, and in a very small House, by a majority vote, carries that reconsideration. That would be an undesirable thing to happen. Now if this amendment is adopted, what will be the effect? On a Friday there would not be a majority here to vote for that—that is one-half of the whole Senate, and as a necessary result, those who were present in the Senate with that small number present would postpone the consideration of the reconsideration until a future day, when there would be a large number of senators present. It does not appear to me that any harm would result from adopting the motion which is proposed, and it might be a means of avoiding the difficulty which the hon. gentleman has in view.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am opposed to the motion altogether, and I think the rule as it stands, is quite sufficient for the purpose of legislation in this Senate. It has been the practice under our rules for a great many years, and I do not see any reason why we should depart from it; but if we are to have a vote, I shall vote for the amendment which has been proposed, and I do so for the reason that I think it would render the Bill absolutely nugatory if it were not adopted.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Objection has been taken to the fact that a House, not larger than one in which the original vote was passed, may rescind or reconsider their vote and set it aside, and that has been held to be a very serious objection, particularly by the hon. gentleman from Killarney. That hon. gentleman, and some other hon. gentlemen who are opposed to this measure, are all in favour of the British practice. The British practice allows the vote to be rescinded by a bare majority of the members present in the House. There is no qualification as to a majority of all the members of the House being present, but a bare majority of the House can, on two days' notice, rescind any resolution passed by the House. Hon. gentlemen should not be unfair in dealing with this matter. They should not uphold this alleged British practice as being so far superior to the practice proposed here. The truth is, with respect to the British practice, that the English parliament apparently started with the idea that once a thing was decided it was decided for good and all. In the course of time it was found that that was impracticable. It involved absurdities and difficulties which had to be got over, and then this practice was introduced of reading the journals and then moving that a certain resolution be rescinded or expunged.

Hon Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Could the hon. gentleman tell us when that new law was passed ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I cannot tell when the practice was introduced, but I think it was about two hundred and fifty years ago. The old rule laid down that when a resolution was adopted by the House of Commons that was an end of it. It was supposed not to go any further; but it was found in practice that that would not work. The hon. gentleman has laid special stress on the fact that this practice was used in city councils, and with respect to the councils, he said it was very often a two-thirds vote that was required. Hon. gentlemen must see how totally different the case of a city council is from the case of the Senate. In a town council the members all live within a radius of a mile or two of the place where the meetings are held. Taking my own city, the total number of aldermen is 18, and two-thirds of that is 12. As a rule, there is no difficulty in getting two-thirds of the town council together. There is a larger proportion than that present; but hon. gentlemen know very well, as the hon. gentleman from Belleville has said, the requirement that a majority of the members of this House shall vote for a reconsideration practically means that there shall be no reconsideration. It is true that this practice prevails in town councils, city councils and county councils, because it has been found a valuable one to follow. But the hon. gentleman forgot to mention also, that it prevails in every legislature of the United States from the congress at Washington down to the legislature of the newest state which has been admitted to the union; and you may say what you please about the United States, but there is no country in the world in which parliamentary practice has been carried to a higher degree of perfection than in that country. Any hon. gentleman who has gone into a United States legislative body and seen the manner in which the business is transacted there cannot have come away without a strong feeling of admiration for the skill and ability with which they do their legislative business. It is true, in some cases there is that requirement spoken of by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield—the notice must be given by one of the majority, but that is not the general rule. In some cases they have that provision. The rules here are taken chiefly from the Massachusetts legislature, which is one of the most conservative, and at the same time one of the most up to date legislatures in the United States. I repeat that, inasmuch as I do not wish to see the body of the rules burdened with a thing which is perfectly nugatory and useless, if the amendment is carried, I shall ask the House not to adopt this particular rule.

The Senate divided on the amendment which was rejected, contents 15, non-contents 18.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I would suggest to take the British practice for our guidance in this matter, and instead of having reconsideration at the next sitting that two full days notice of a reconsideration be required. The matter has been pretty well thrashed out, but if at twelve o'clock there are fifteen or twenty members in the House, and notice is given that the reconsideration will take place at the morning sitting next day—and it sometimes happens that the Senate has three sittings in a day—then a majority of the members will have no opportunity to know that reconsideration will take place, so, under these circumstances, as a matter of fair-play which the hon. member has at heart in carrying out the object of the rules, he should accept the amendment and not try to secure reconsideration by too sharp a practice.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Too short a notice, you mean.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is the same thing. The practice of sharp lawyers is to give short notice. If a Bill is to be reconsidered, it should not be at a time when the members will not attend. The British practice is to give two days' notice.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is to rescind ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the hon. gentleman's idea is simply to give an opportunity to talk the matter over again, then an hour's notice would suffice ; but as I understand it, reconsideration gives the power not only to discuss but to change or amend the Bill in any direction. If that is the case, the hon. gentleman should not ask parliament to adopt a rule whereby a small minority can control the destinies of the House, and of its legislation. He ought to accept the British practice, and provide for two days' notice of reconsideration of a motion whereby that motion can be rescinded or amended. If he says that reconsideration will not involve rescission or amendment of the measure, it is immaterial how short the notice may be ; but if there is to be rescission or amendment, the members of the House should be given a chance to be present. I therefore move that the rule be amended to provide that two days' notice of reconsideration be given.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am afraid that amendment as worded by the hon. gentleman would hardly fit in.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then fit the idea as the hon. gentleman thinks proper.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman wants to adapt the British practice to a practice of our own, which they have not in England at all. I call his attention to the fact that under the British system you could not reconsider at all. The objection was taken to reconsidering, that in the first place it hindered the action of the Senate from being final, and would unduly postpone the action of the House going into effect ; consequently the shortest possible notice which would give a fair chance of reconsideration was best. If a resolution were passed here this evening for the adoption of a report of the Internal Economy Committee, and I gave notice of reconsideration, it would not be desirable that that question should be kept hanging for several days. It is desirable that it should be settled at the earliest possible date consistent with the matter having fair consideration. No one, as far as I am aware, when the matter was discussed before, objected to the notice as being too short. It would be objectionable to keep the action of the Senate in suspense for any length of time, and the general rule is that a matter must be reconsidered at the next meeting of the body where the recommendation takes place. That is the wisest rule, and certainly the most convenient.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. gentleman tell us the distinction he draws between reconsideration and rescission?

Hon. Mr CLORAN—That is what I want to know ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is a very great difference. We will suppose that a resolution is adopted by the Senate this evening, proposing that the Senate should take certain action with respect to old age pensions. The hon. gentleman from Killarney moves this resolution. It is adopted and I give notice of reconsideration. The matter comes up to-morrow. The effect of reconsidering is that the question is left just where it was before the resolution which is to be reconsidered was adopted. It does not mean that the House is going to completely rescind that resolution ; it leaves the subject open, and it is open to the Senate to amend the resolution of the hon. gentleman from Killarney in any way he pleases or pass a different resolution, but it does not follow that it is to be rescinded entirely. The ground is cleared away and things are left where they were before the resolution was carried. You can modify the resolution as you please. In one way you do rescind, but it is done at a time when no serious inconvenience arises.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We rescind, but we call that reconsideration.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That just shows what sort of a muddle we would get into. If the House has a right to consider, what benefit is that right unless in its second judgment, if it differs, it has the right of rescinding or amending or may be confirming its judgment of the day before? Therefore, you have included in this practically, to my mind, rescission at short notice, and with the door absolutely locked, because you cannot again consider the question, let the decision be against the will of the majority as much as it possibly can be. When the hon. senator from Stadacona asked the meaning of reconsideration, my hon. friend said it was reopening the questions and giving the House an opportunity to arrive at any conclusion it likes, anything the majority may decide.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If I were of opinion that reconsideration logically gives the House power to reverse or rescind its previous action, I would certainly agree with the hon. member for Victoria that we ought to have two days' notice; but I contend it will not logically give you that right at all. It only opens the door, unless you go further and say so in your rule. If this rule is adopted as it is now, I wish it to be distinctly understood that that is the sense in which I hold it. I give notice that I hold it means just an opening of the door, and that notice will have to be given then to rescind, according to the British practice, and I shall invite the decision of the Chair on it some day before long as to what it means. The rescinding proposed here would be so difficult you would have to give several days notice and have all the members present, and it would be practically impossible to do it. My sober conclusion is the same as that which I arrived at last year: you will find in the tenth edition of May, pages 286, 287 and 288, the British practice, and I think it would be good enough for all our cases. It would be better for us to fall back on that and work on it than be bothering with rules. You will find a great variety of cases cited here.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I must confess I cannot take the same logical view of it that my hon. friend from Marshfield does. His position is wholly illogical if I understand the meaning of reconsideration. It is simply as explained, not so fully as perhaps I would like to have it explained, by the hon. senator from Halifax. If you carry a motion to reconsider what you have already affirmed, it simply opens the door, leaving the question precisely as it was before you passed the affirmative motion, and the logical conclusion of that is that once you have opened the door for reconsideration you can reaffirm the action you had taken or you can amend or rescind it. There is no necessity for any notice of motion after you once have carried the motion for reconsideration, because the moment you decide to reconsider you are in precisely the same position as you were before you passed the resolution. I do not think the Speaker will have much trouble in coming to a decision when an appeal is made to him on the questions. It is only as the hon. member from Killarney said making the confusion greater and there are so many opinions on the subject that we had better leave the rule as it is.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I agree that when the reconsideration is carried, it puts the House in the same position it occupied before adopting the original motion; but in the position the House at that time was it could not proceed without notice. You give notice to reconsider, and when you reconsider you may have something sprung on you of which you had no notice at all. Is that logical? That is not the position you were in before you first took action, because then you had notice. A motion to reconsider that did not imply what action would be taken, would be a motion to do something without notice. However, it will be time enough for us to split hairs over this matter when we reach it, if the rule is passed as proposed, and which I think it would be better not to pass at all.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Let us leave the rule as it is and work it out, and if a difficulty arises we can deal with it then.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think the amendment is an improvement, but as it does no particular harm I am prepared to accept it.

On the third motion:

3. That the following be inserted after rule 102: A public document quoted from by a minister of the Crown may be ordered by the Senate to be forthwith laid upon the table; unless it is stated by the minister to be of such a nature that its production would be inconsistent with the public interest.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This does not alter the practice at all, but it puts it in the rules and makes it clear. I am not at all keen about it. If the House think it better to stick to the old practice I have no objection, but I think it should appear in our rules for the information of members.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—The members should be convened to consider this.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This proposed amendment of the rules is, to my mind, infinitely worse and more objectionable than the one we have just voted down. The practice has been in the past that when a question arises and a public document is asked for, the minister may say, 'I cannot produce that because it is not in the public interest that it should be made public at the present moment.' Occasions very often arise in which negotiations are pending with foreign countries or questions may be the subject of correspondence with the imperial government, and it is not advisable that the full text of the correspondence should be disclosed. This proposed rule would give the minister power to quote such portions of a document as would suit his particular purpose, when, if the whole facts were laid before the Senate, it might change the minds of nine-tenths of those who heard them. The minister, under those circumstances, should have no right to quote from a public document without laying the full text of it before the Senate. He is quite justified in rising and saying, 'I cannot produce the document'; but to permit him to quote a portion of it might mislead the House. It may be said that no minister would be dishonest enough to quote a portion of a document only. I am not prepared to say that any minister would, but the principle is wrong, and the temptation to do a thing of that kind should not be offered, no matter what government is in power. Advantage might be taken of such a rule to mislead the House. Some of us have not that confidence in ministers that we should have, and therefore, this proposed amendment to the rules should not be adopted. The hon. member from Killarney, when addressing the House the other day on this subject, paid the hon. gentleman from Halifax a deserved compliment on his industry and the assiduity with which he had applied his mind to the framing of these rules. I would add another quality which he possesses, and that is perseverance and a determination never to surrender. I have come to the conclusion that he has been reading the siege of Derry, and has adopted the motto of the prentice boys—'no surrender.' We have it exhibited on almost every occasion. Two or three years ago when this question was considered by the committee, he urged it with all the pertinacity that he possessed. Not satisfied with that, when it came to the House he did the same thing. He was defeated by a very large majority for the reasons I have mentioned. Two years have rolled round, and no surrender crops up again, and he is trying to enforce his views. That is a commendable characteristic for any one to possess, but those who differ from him on that subject should be just as persistent in adhering to the opposite view. To my mind it is a dangerous power to place in the hands of any minister. If you lay down the doctrine that a minister may quote from a public document without laying it on the table, the same privilege should be accorded to a private member who is supposed to be actuated by the same high principles as a minister. These are my reasons for objecting to this amendment and I think upon reflection as to the abuse that might arise from the adoption of this rule, it should be rejected. We have felt no necessity for it in the past. If a minister desires to read from a public document to sustain his position I have no objection, but if he takes the responsibility of doing so, let him lay the document on the table so that all may see what it contains. If, however, the Senate think it advisable to give a minister that privilege, let the same privilege be extended to every senator.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With the permission of the House I ask leave to withdraw this rule.

The rule was withdrawn.

YUKON ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (109) An Act to amend the Yukon Act.

He said: The object of this Bill is to allow the Governor in Council from time to time to appoint an acting commissioner in the Yukon, and it confirms the validity of past appointments. The Yukon is a long way off, and not very long ago the commissioner wandered down to Ottawa, and while here he resigned. The commissionership has not been filled, and the comptroller, Mr. Lithgow, has been appointed temporarily in his place, no addition being made to his salary.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—No doubt this Bill has been rendered necessary by the number of vacancies and resignations in the Yukon. What the cause of these vacancies and resignations is I do not know, but there must be some reason for it, and perhaps the Hon. Mr. Ross, who has been in that country, will tell us the reason why. There have been five commissioners in that country, and there must be some reasons for so many resignations. Whether they are not well enough paid, or it is the climate, or whether they have filled their pockets with gold I do not know, but we will agree that the government of the Yukon has been most unsatisfactory. The revenue at one time was very large. The government charged at that time a royalty of ten per cent, and now the revenue is very small, and the royalty is only two and a half per cent. A small royalty would be all right if the gold and products of that country came into Canada, but it is a notorious fact that nearly all the gold, or a great part of the gold in that country, has gone to build up the rival town of Seattle in the United States. No effort has been made by either the provincial or federal government to retain the gold in the country by having assay offices and buying the gold to keep it there; whereas on the other side they have these assay offices and all the gold is absorbed and people find a ready market for it. It would be in the interests of the Dominion that this Yukon district should be attached to one of the provinces, I do not say British Columbia but it might be attached to Alberta. It would then be governed much more economically and more directly. It is well known that in British Columbia the mining regulations have been extremely well administered. They have been adapted to the country; the miners never found fault with them, and everything has gone on smoothly for years. The Yukon joins British Columbia at the mining district of Atlin, and it would be a matter of economy and good government if the government were to hand that country over to British Columbia, and let them carry on their mining under British Columbia regulations. A great change is going to take place in the Yukon. Wealthy United States capitalists are now buying out all the interests in that country. The Guggenheims, millionaires of New York, are in and their agents are buying everything in that country. Whether that will be a benefit to the Dominion or not I do not know, but I would ask the government to consider the smallness of the royalty. Two and a half cents is not enough. If the product remained in our own country it might be enough, but that is not the case. The gold goes to a foreign country, and it would be a wise precaution to take to make the royalty sufficient to pay the expenses of the country, and I hope the hon. Secretary of State may consider that suggestion. I know that ministers have Bills placed in their hands, and they do not consider them very much and pass them as a matter of routine, but there are questions that people know of that ought to be taken into serious consideration.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was going to refer to section 2 of the Bill, which I notice is necessary to validate some things which have been done in connection with the office of commissioner some time in the past. I presume that has been during the past three months. We are aware that the commissioner, Mr. McInnes, resigned and came down here, and after taking instructions from the government he went to British Columbia to take part in the general elections there, with the results which we all know. It appears, however, that the filling of his place was not legal, and that all that has been done consequently has to be made valid by an Act of parliament. The clause reads as follows :—

2. The validity of any appointment of an acting commissioner heretofore made by the Governor in Council or the Minister of the Interior, or of any instructions heretofore given by the Governor in Council or the Minister of the Interior to any person to act as or for the commissioner during his absence, illness or other disability, shall not be called in question on the ground that there was no authority in law to make such appointment or give such instructions at the time such appointment was made or such instructions were given.

Really considering the broadness of this clause it must be that everything nearly that has been done in the Yukon for the last three months has been illegal. It is most extraordinary that political exigencies should be so great that the government should put themselves and the affairs of the Yukon in such a position.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my hon. friend explain with reference to this clause validating what has been done by the acting commissioner whether any claim has been made upon the government on account of this section ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I have not heard of anything at all.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does the hon. gentleman know in what way the attention of the government has been directed to the fact of the validating these Acts being required.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because the duties usually discharged by the commissioner had to be carried on during this interragnum, and it was only proper and right that they should be validated. I know of nothing that has happened prejudicial in any way to the public interest that necessitated this. But it is only proper that whatever has been done, assumed to be properly done, should be confirmed. Mr. Lithgow, the comptroller up there, has a great deal of power outside the position of acting commissioner.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my hon. friend say that the probabilities are of a commissioner being appointed at an early date, now that Mr. Ralph Smith, the member for Nanaimo, has announced through the press that he refused to accept the office. The government should at once be at liberty to make the appointment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the appointment will be made before the end of the month.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I hope the government did not experience any difficulty in paying the salary of an acting commissioner during this time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Would that be illegal also if that were done ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Mr. Lithgow is an official of the government, and he is discharging a double duty. In regard to the observations of the hon. gentleman from Victoria, there is a good deal of force in what he said. It seems to be obvious that the Yukon ought to be able at least to pay the expenses, which it is not at the present time. I have no doubt that the action in reducing the royalty to the figure at which it now stands was unwise. I always thought so.

It seems to me a concession that ought not to have been made, and I shall be glad to bring it to the attention of my colleagues.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend know if British Columbia has indicated any desire to extend its boundaries northwesterly so as to include the Yukon?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think so. I have heard nothing in that direction.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (143) An Act to amend the Immigration Act. He said: The Act has been found from experience to require enlargement. The first provision is in regard to stowaways. Frequently stowaways are found on vessels and under the law there was no way of sending them back. This Bill enables the Minister of the Interior to have stowaways deported just as he would other objectionable persons. The Bill also enlarges the powers for deporting objectionable immigrants who have come into Canada. Those are the principal features of the Bill. The provision in regard to stowaways is, first, a definition and then the authority that is given to a minister to compel the vessel that brought him to Canada to take him back to the country from which he came.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I observe that there is rather a heavy and serious charge imposed upon the municipality, although the immigrants are brought in for the benefit of the whole country. The policy of supporting them itself might be questioned, but then if they have failed as citizens in any particular place why should the burden of returning them be thrown on the municipality? Why should the city of Winnipeg or the city of St. John or Victoria be compelled to pay for the return passage of those people, when they are innocent with regard to the matter? They are brought here by the government in the operations of the department for the general purposes of the country. It does not seem to me to be fair.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. Secretary of State is a humane gentleman, and I appeal to him on the score of humanity in regard to allowing immigrants to leave the old country in the middle of winter, to come out here badly clad and fed and housed, housed like cattle in large immigrant sheds at a great expense to the country. That is one of the things that ought to be stopped. The Secretary of State will remember that last year I called attention to the fact. It is the greatest cruelty that these people should be brought out here. They do not know where they are going, and when they are herded together in this way no doubt that is a cause of immorality and vice. I will not refer to the remarks made by a member of the other House the other day, because it would be out of order, but the House was informed that there were thousands of immigrants stalled in banks of snow with no shelter but what third-class cars gave them, and the fuel and food is scant. Such conditions should be taken into consideration by the government, and the immigration agents in England should not be allowed to induce men to leave their homes at this time of the year. Look at the cruelty of poor men coming into this country with a few dollars in their pocket and, perhaps, having disease in the eye or in the body, they are deported. After they have disposed of their little effects they are turned back from our shores with empty pockets and without friends. I cannot find words enough to express my idea of the cruelty of such a policy. An immigrant leaves England. He is a strong, lusty fellow. He is not guilty of any crime. He is put into an immigrant shed for three or four months. There he contracts vice. Perhaps he has been guilty of theft, and at the end of two years he is taken out of the penitentiary and sent back to Europe, to Germany or Belgium or some other country. It is a monstrous thing. If that man had been left at home he might have been an honest man, but conditions made him dishonest and immoral. I do not think the Act is workable. You cannot ascertain the steamers that brought these men out. The shipping agents are not going to give the information. Men do not wish to be dumped on the shores of a new country with nothing in their pocket, no employment, no food. I hope the hon. Secretary of State will not press this Bill now, but will call the attention of his colleagues to this matter. Suppose Great Britain or Germany or any other country said : ' We will not have those men ; they cannot land here. They have been deported as convicts taken from the penitentiary.' Why, it is monstrous. Supposing convicts from the prisons of England landed on Canadian shores, the whole country would be in arms. Formerly the English convicts went to Australia, but the Australians objected; they would not have them and they do not go there now. They are kept in England. They were honest people when they left, and they became dishonest or immoral in this country, and it is improper for us to deport them. The great cruelty, however, is allowing them to come out in midwinter, and I hope the government will consider that. I have no party object in view in presenting this matter, and it is for the benefit of the country that I am urging it on the notice of the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No doubt it is extremely regrettable that vast herds of immigrants should be leaving Europe for Canada in the month of February, but the government cannot control it. Once the movement sets in, the people are ready to come. Steamboat agents, who are not under the control of the government, encourage it. What is the government to do? We cannot say that any of our immigration agents are responsible for the bringing of people into Canada at too early a period. We all recognize the difficulty. Of course, it is extremely regrettable this year on account of the lateness of the winter and spring. In reference to the criminal class, it is quite patent that in many parts of Europe they get rid of their criminals by sending them to Canada. Surely we should be in a position to deport them. They are deported by thousands from the United States. We do not deport them to the extent of one-twentieth of the deportation in the States. We are very much more considerate than they are, and it is only where the men become pronounced criminals that they are deported. Of course, we have perhaps 150,000 men—this year upwards of 500,000—coming into Canada, and there must be grievances, and there must be terrible mistakes. Men come here who ought not to have come, who are not fitted for the conditions that exist here, so that we have to make proper allowances. It is impossible that everything can be run smoothly, and that only such people as are adapted for the conditions here should come. You do not find any trouble with men coming from the United States ; they understand the conditions which exist here, and they adopt the habits necessary to make themselves comfortable in Canada. It is only those unfortunate immigrants coming from Europe—the British Isles, Germany and Scandinavia—who find the conditions here so entirely different from those in their native country that they suffer, no doubt, very, very severely, particularly those who come at this period of the year. I shall be glad to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to it to see if it can be stopped in any way. It has been repeated every year, and this year they came in February, which is earlier than usual.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is it not possible to have an Act passed to prevent ships carrying immigrants at certain periods of the year ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, you cannot do it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Supposing the immigrants from the United States become convicts, would they be sent back to the United States ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Supposing they would not have them?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The section proposed to be substituted for section 33 appears to be a very strong section, and, to my mind, goes very far. I do not know how far we went in the section we are repealing, but it seems to me two years is a very long time, and that we should scarcely take the right to ourselves to deport a man after so long a period as two years from his arrival in the country, merely for the fact for instance that he might have to take advantage of the hospital. Of course, I notice that it is at the discretion of the minister.

A person who would become ultimately an excellent citizen might become injured or broken down in health within the two years and might be obliged, as a stranger in the country, without family or friends, to go to the hospital.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no change in the law in that respect. The section of the Act provides that in such cases they shall be deported.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

SECOND READING.

Bill (134) An Act respecting the Duties of Customs.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

EXCHANGE OF LANDS ACT.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on Bill (114) An Act to authorize the Exchange of certain lands.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend was to ascertain, if possible, whether any price had been agreed upon for the lands in question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The lands in question are, I understand, about 66 miles from Winnipeg. They are not agricultural lands, but are what are called rock. One of them, lot 29, is flooded. The price paid for the 640 acres in lot 11, is $10 per acre ; for lot No. 29, which is under water, altogether, the amount is five cents per acre per year. They pay a perpetual rental on the flooded land.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Senate adjourned until Three o'clock to-morrow.

SENATE.

OTTAWA, Wednesday, April 10, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

AMENDMENT OF DOMINION ELECTION LAWS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) inquired:

Is it the intention of the government this year to amend the law regulating the election of members to serve in the parliament of the Dominion?

He said: It may be too late in the session to call attention to this very important subject, but I feel certain that hon. ministers on the floor of this House, and all members of this Chamber, desire clean and honest elections, something which we have not had for some time. I do not intend to dwell at all on the scandals which have been developed throughout the country recently, but I would advise the government, and I hope they will at an early day, take steps to have the most stringent law passed so as, if possible, to close all the loopholes by which corruption and dishonesty are at present practiced. I think the first step towards honest elections would be the abolition of the ballot system. The ballot system invites deception, corruption and dishonesty. No doubt about that. A voter can take money from one candidate and promise him his vote and then vote for another candidate, so that the system leads to downright dishonesty. Then the courts of law should deal more strictly with controverted election cases. Candidates should be compelled to answer every question relevant to the charges, whether they be elected or defeated. There are a number of things which the acumen of gentlemen of the legal profession would discover, with which I am not now going to deal ; but I think every one in this House will admit the necessity of something being done before long to secure honest and pure elections. Candidates should be bound as to the number of agents they have, and to the money that has been spent, and poll clerks and returning officers should be sworn, and they ought to give security for honest and proper behaviour. I trust the government will promise, if not this session, at least before long, to introduce a measure dealing with this matter.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A committee was appointed this session in the House of Commons to consider what changes could be made in the election law. I think they had several sittings, but as it was not intended there should be a general election before another session, it was dropped. No doubt the subject will be brought up next session. My experience is this ; that we have a very good ballot now, but unless you have honest men to administer the law, of course, forgery and fraud will occur. That is the only thing you have to fight against. If you can only get honest men to administer the Act, you can have fair-play and honest election; but the most essential part is that the instruments must be fair, just and honest.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understood the hon. gentleman to say that there will not be an election this year ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, not this year. The subject was referred to a joint committee of both sides of the House, and I think they had one or two sittings, but nothing came of it practically. When it was understood that no election would be held before another session, the matter was dropped.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the Governor General chooses to exercise the royal prerogative and dissolve parliament, what would become of the understanding ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We would have to use the best of materials at or hands. It is all we could do.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Did I understand the hon. leader of the House to say that it was the intention of the government to bring down a Bill at the next session of parliament to deal with this question ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not say so positively ; but I think the opinion expressed on both sides of the House was that material changes might be made with advantage in the election law, and it was in contemplation to have a Bill presented this session; but the matter was dropped and nothing was brought down this year.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Have we a reasonable assurance that it is the intention of the government to deal with the matter next year ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I can only express my own individual wish that it will be.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There should be no hesitation in giving an assurance on that point.

THE KING'S REGULATIONS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Is there a consolidation of the regulations concerning the militia of Canada and known under the name of The King's Regulations and Orders for the Militia of Canada ?
2. Has it been adopted, and by whom ?
3. Have these regulations been published, or will they be soon ?
4. Is there a French version of these regulations ?
5. Has it been published, or will it be published soon?
6. Will the officers of the militia be put in possession of these regulations before the next annual training ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer to the first question is, yes. King's regulations and orders for the militia of Canada, 1904.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It was made in 1904, but since that time there have been voluminous amendments ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand from the deputy minister that they were now being codified and printed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Under the same head—1904 ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. They have been approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, and promulgated in the 'Canada Gazette.' These regulations have been published and there is a French version which has been published. Copies have been issued to those authorized to receive them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think that really is playing a game.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As I am not very familiar with those matters, I shall ask the deputy minister to see my hon. friend and explain to him the real position, if there is any mystery about it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As the hon. gentleman is acting Minister of Militia, I want to bring to his notice the following facts : In 1904, militia regulations were made. Since 1904 every year there have been amendments to the regulations, and lately there has been an English edition of the consolidation of those regulations, including all the changes since 1904, and striking out of the King's regulations all that pertains to military pay. This is not published yet. I know it is printed, and has been distributed to some people for their approval ; but the French version has not yet been printed, and when I am told that it has been printed since 1904, and published in the 'Gazette' and that it has been translated and distributed to the officers, they are speaking nonsense.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall be very glad to look into it and get the information for the hon. gentleman.

PROTECTION OF LOCAL JURISDICTION.

MOTION.

The Order of the Day being called :

By the Hon. Mr. David :

That he will move that it is expedient to resolve that :

1. The Senate will insist upon the application of section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, in accordance with the spirit and true intent of that section, to the end that the exclusive powers of the legislatures of the provinces of Canada may be protected and preserved.

2. The Senate will not consider the mere insertion in a Bill of a declaration that a work is for the general advantage of Canada to be in itself sufficient foundation for the exercise of the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

3. The Senate will not pass any Bill containing a declaration that a local work or undertaking is for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces, unless the truth of that declaration has been proved.

4. The Senate will not consider the presence in a Bill of a clause relating to subjects within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada to be in itself sufficient reason for the enactment of other clauses relating to subjects not within that authority.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—My resolution having been postponed many times, and being convinced that I do not interfere with the work of the House, I think proper to put my resolutions to-day before the Senate with a very short speech of about ten minutes. It is fortunate for the Senate that I am obliged to speak in English ; if I were to speak in French perhaps I would be longer. I would have preferred to move my resolutions after having obtained copies of the correspondence which I thought had taken place between the provincial government and the federal government, but so far I have been unable to get any such correspondence. We have been informed of the views taken on that question by the provincial government of Ontario. They have expressed their views in a very energetic way, especially when they went so far as to say that all the powers which have been granted by the provincial legislature to a person or to a company would be abrogated if that person or company applied to the federal parliament for further powers. There are some who consider that those views are perhaps a little aggressive, and perhaps also unconstitutional, but whether constitutional, aggressive or not, it makes no difference ; I think that they reflect considerably the public feeling not only in the province of Ontario, but also in all the other provinces. And they justify to a certain extent the predictions of those who were opposed to confederation, and who contended, and have always contended, that the invasion of the provincial domain by federal legislation would be sooner or later a source of trouble. I have hopes that by my efforts I may induce some of the hon. members of this House, and also some of those who have high positions in provincial legislatures, to throw light on this question. There is no doubt that the framers of our constitution were divided upon the question of federal and provincial legislation, and there is no doubt that while Sir John and his friends were coasting near the rock of legislative union, Sir George Cartier and his friends were sailing close to the shores of confederation. There was a marked divergency of views on the question. There is no doubt the distribution of power between the federal and provincial legislatures has been done with a great deal of care, and that those powers are defined pretty well by sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act ; but the authors of confederation have introduced in that federal Act two very important clauses which were destined to be a cause of trouble. They enacted that the federal parliament would be invested with all the rights and powers which were not attributed specially to the provincial legislatures, and that parliament would have the right to assume jurisdiction over all the works which were declared to be in the general interests of Canada. No doubt they were influenced more or less by the example of the United States. They were influenced by the depression caused by the terrible war which had taken place a few years before between the north and south. The report of the conference which took place in Halifax, shows that they wanted to avoid the same difficulties by establishing the supremacy of the federal parliament. The application of the clauses of the Act delimiting the powers which were given to the federal and provincial legislatures, respectively, have given rise to all kinds of interpretations and decisions by the courts of justice and by parliament. I do not want to go over the whole of the battle field where Sir Oliver Mowat fought so gallantly for provincial rights and won so many brilliant victories; but I want to call the attention of the House especially to the effect of the subsections (a) (b) (c), of section 8, especially subsection (c) which gives power to parliament to assume jurisdiction over works which parliament may declare to be in the general interest of Canada. I have always contended, and will contend as long as I am in this House, that this clause is very dangerous, and that it is not sufficient merely to insert such a declaration in a Bill, to give jurisdiction to this parliament; that the declaration must be confirmed by facts, must be proved. It is not sufficient merely to say that a work is in the general interest of Canada; it must be proved that it is so.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Otherwise that declaration would be the means of bringing under federal jurisdiction all the works which are situate in or constructed in a province. The effect of that declaration would be to wreck provincial rights, and to convert the Dominion into legislative union. In order to give a sound interpretation to section 92 of the federal Act, to subsection 10, and paragraphs (a), (b) and (c), we must consider them together. We must first read with a good deal of care, section 10, which declares that a work situated in the province shall be within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature, and then come the exceptions (a), (b) and (c). Those paragraphs must be construed as exceptions in such a way as not to break or destroy the general rule, and to make the exception the principal rule. That was the view which was entertained by Hon. Mr. Mills, who was a member of this House and leader of this Senate at one time. A discussion took place exactly on the same subject in the House of Commons, and I call attention to the views expressed by the Hon. Mr. Mills, which were the views also of many other statesmen and advocates. He said:

> It seems to me that we greatly abuse the provisions of the 92nd section of the British North America Act, subsection 10 of which authorizes us to declare that certain works are for the benefit of Canada, and that by such a declaration we may bring them within our jurisdiction. I confess that although this parliament has for some years, at all events since 1883, committed itself to the principle of making every work or undertaking which it chooses to declare to be for the benefit of Canada, a work coming under the jurisdiction of Canada. I must say that I think that is a misinterpretation of subsection 10 of the Act.... It seems to me that you are obliged to give such a construction to subsection 10 of section 92 that there will be something left under the jurisdiction of the local legislatures; for it is obvious to any one who will reflect for a moment that the assumption upon which we have been proceeding for the past eight years is an assumption which places no limitation upon our powers in reference to local works and undertakings. Now, is that a true construction of this Act? Was it intended to be so construed? I do not think so. There are certain classes of work here mentioned in subsections (a), (b) and (c), and it appears to me that the rule, ejusdem generis, applies to the whole. Not to those mentioned in section (a) alone or in section (b) alone, or in section (c) alone, but to the whole of these subsections taken together. If that is so, then I think that all these tributary railways that are situated within the limit of any province are under the exclusive jurisdiction of that province, and cannot be brought under the exclusive jurisdiction of this parliament by a simple declaration on our part.

If hon. gentlemen will compare Mr. Mills' speech with the resolutions that are before the House, they will see that they are about the same. Since the Hon. Mr. Mills expressed those views, the federal wave has continued to invade the provincial domain, and to infringe upon provincial rights to a great extent. This is a very complicated question, and I admit that it is very difficult to avoid making some error in discussing it. The greater difficulty is with regard to the railways, and why? Well, because when promoters of railways want to have a charter they naturally apply to this parliament; they think—and I admit with good reason—that a federal charter will be more valuable to them than a provincial charter in the financial world. That is exactly the reason that is given to us many times when we have considered such appeals. They come here with very good reasons, and they succeed in convincing members of the Senate that they are right, and that their project is to the general interest of Canada. When a man is intelligent, as the promoters of these railways generally are, it is easy to show that an enterprise is in the general advantage of Canada. The consequence is that after having obtained the powers which they wanted to get from the federal parliament, for what they call the main line, they come back with Bills loaded with branch lines, connection, traffic clauses and so on, and they obtain their incorporation from the federal parliament, and the federal parliament gives them power to build those branch lines because those branches and the main line form the one system, and members of parliament and members of the Senate, myself included,—I do not pretend to be without fault in this respect, because man is weak—grant them these powers because they are too easily convinced that the interest of the country requires it. But I contend that all these declarations about the connections and through traffic, &c., must be considered with care, must be proved conclusively and corroborated by facts. It is exactly the position taken by the courts of justice in many cases, and especially in a case which is reported in Mr. Clements' work a page 274, Clements' Canadian Constitution, second edition. The citation reads as follows:

> It appears to me that the connection between the two provinces required by clause (a) is a real and physical one and not a mere paper one created by a charter, the works under which may never extend to the limits of the single province in which they are begun or may never be begun at all. The word 'undertakings' would be satisfied by the actual operation of a line of steamships, leaving the word 'works' to the other objects mentioned or referred to in the section. And it is to be borne in mind that any inconveniences which might otherwise arise under this construction could always be avoided by a declaration in a Dominion charter that the words contemplated by it were for the general benefit of Canada.
> A provincial legislature was held by the New Brunswick Supreme Court to be entitled to legislate with respect to a provincial railway running only to the boundaries of the province, such railway being a local work and undertaking within this class No. 10, although, as appeared by the facts of that case, legislation had been procured in the state of Maine incorporating an American company to build a railway in that state to connect with the provincial railway in question.

So that you see, hon. gentlemen, it is not sufficient to say that a railway will connect or will amalgamate with another railway, or will go beyond the boundaries of the province, but it must be proved and well proved, that it is true, and the courts of justice went so far as to say that although the facts had been established, that in the state of Maine, a United States company had built a railway to connect with a certain railway it was not considered sufficient. Hon. gentlemen must not forget that the Railway Act has been amended, and that the Railway Act as contained in the Revised Statutes, vol. I, section 8, has settled that question of connection. It has been settled in such a way that although formerly it was considered sufficient that the connection was to take place to make the whole railway a federal railway and bring it under the jurisdiction of parliament, in virtue of section 8, that has been changed, and it has been changed by the Senate itself.

Among the good things which the Senate has done, it has done this. Section 8 provides that every railway, whether federal of provincial, steam or electric or tramway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by a special Act of the legislature of any province and which connects with or crosses or may hereafter connect or cross any railway within the legislative authority of parliament, although not declared by parliament to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, shall be subject to the Act 'in so far as concerns the said connection or crossing.' Therefore I say when railway promoters intend to connect with or cross a federal railway, they need not come before this parliament to obtain the power which they think necessary for that purpose, because the law acts automatically. When a railway connects or crosses a federal railway it fails under the jurisdiction of the federal parliament as regards that connection or crossing. But section 8 further says that through traffic on a railway or tramway and all matters pertaining thereto, also come under federal jurisdiction. So not only does this clause apply to the connection and crossing, but it applies also to the through traffic; therefore the proprietors of a railway in a province need not come before this parliament to obtain the rights they think necessary relating to through traffic. Under section 8 the railway falls within the federal jurisdiction, not only as regards the crossing and connecting there with a federal railway, but also with reference to through traffic. A document has been circulated among the members of this House relating to a Bill which created a good deal of interest in the Senate. The object of the circular is to show that the Dominion parliament, by the Act of 1883, has declared that branch lines of certain railways therein specified had been declared to be within the jurisdiction of the federal parliament the same as the main lines; but this statute applies only to the railways mentioned in the statute. But what difference does it make? That statute has been repealed by laws which have been passed since that time, and especially by the Revised Statutes, where the powers in connection with those branch lines have been well defined. Section 221 of the Railway Act provides:

> The company may for purposes of its undertaking construct, maintain and operate branch lines not exceeding in any case six miles in length from the main line of railway or from any branch thereof.

Then sections 284 and 285 also deal with the subject, and give power to the Railway Board to act in such cases, so that my conclusion is, that as regards the branch lines and crossings and connections, the law is very clear and gives jurisdiction to the federal parliament. Another objection which is very serious and deserves attention, is the question of double jurisdiction. Promoters of railways come before us and say, 'We have obtained a charter incorporating the main line; we want to have powers in connection with the branch line, as we do not wish to be under double jurisdiction, federal jurisdiction for the main line, and provincial jurisdiction for the branch lines. But, hon. gentlemen, the principle of double jurisdiction has been accepted by this House in section 8, which I have just cited, since that section declares that a provincial railway comes within the jurisdiction of the federal parliament as regards connections, crossings and through traffic. That means, consequently, that outside of the connections and crossing the railway remains provincial if it is in its nature provincial. From the citations which I have read, I draw the following conclusions: first, that when a railway is situated in a province the jurisdiction of the federal parliament is limited to the crossings and connections. Second, that when a branch line of railway, situated in a province, is more than six miles in length it remains under the jurisdiction of the local legislature; and third, the promoters of such railways must apply to the provincial legislature in order to get the powers which they require, if they want other powers which are within the jurisdiction of the parliament, they must apply to it. I am expressing not only my own opinion, but the opinions of great jurisconsults as related in Bourinot, page 715. He says, referring to a Bill to permit one Mr. Clements of Nova Scotia, and such other persons as might thereafter be associated with him, to be incorporated for the purpose of making dykes across two rivers in the province. The Premier and others took strong objections to the Bill on the ground that it was a matter properly within the jurisdiction of the legislature of Nova Scotia:—

> It was simply a Bill to enable a single person to dyke two rivers in Nova Scotia; and was so completely of a provincial character that the last clause provided that the consent of the marsh owners in writing should be deposited in the office of the Provincial Secretary of Nova Scotia. It would be a novelty in Dominion legislation, added the Prime Minister, if any single person could apply for a charter as a corporation to be formed of any parties whom he might subsequently induce to join him. All matters relating to the granting of lands reclaimed from the waters clearly fell under the head of property and civil rights which should be dealt with exclusively by the local legislatures. On the other hand, more than one speaker, including the Minister of Justice, thought there was some ground for the application to the general legislature since it had granted powers in other cases for the construction of works on navigable waters; but the difficulty appeared to be the fact that the main object of the proposed legislation was the obtaining of the possession of a large tract of land which would be reclaimed, but which parliament had no authority to convey. The proper course, no doubt, was, as suggested in debate, to obtain an Act of incorporation in the first instance from the local legislature, and then apply to the Dominion parliament for any additional powers that it could constitutionally grant.

I beg hon. gentlemen to remember this citation, which I think is very important and will enable us to decide many cases. On the occasion of another very important Bill different opinions were expressed by many members of the House. Bourinot refers to it as follows:

> In the session of 1883 a very instructive discussion took place on the question how far the general legislature may go in legislating in the case of companies already incorporated under provincial Acts. Among the Bills before the House was one to grant certain powers to the Acadia Power Company, already incorporated by special Acts of the province of Nova Scotia. The Bill asked for power to extend the business of the company throughout the Dominion; and, from the debate on the measure, it is evident that had its promoters been content with asking parliament to grant this general power, there would have been little objection to its passage, except from those who had doubts as to the right of the Dominion legislature to interfere in any way with local legislation (d). But the Bill went still further, since it contained provisions with respect to the capital stock and directors, which were a clear infringement of the powers of the provincial legislature which created the company. The following summary of the views of some of the principal speakers on the points at issue will show that there was unanimity of opinion as to the principles that should guide the House in similar cases.

Mr. Ouimet said that it was quite clear that corporations created by the local legislatures might come to the general parliament to have their powers extended; that is to say, to obtain powers, which could not be granted by the legislature of a province. For instance, the House had that session given power to the Credit Foncier Franco-Canadien (e) to impose certain charges of interest, which were not within the power of the provincial legislature. No doubt the parliament had power to create corporations whose operations would be general or federal, but in cases like the Bill under consideration it should only grant such powers as the legislature could not grant. Application should be made to the latter body for such powers as it could give.

I insist on those principles because we should apply them here in many cases, and, if they had been applied in the past, many Bills which are now on the statute-book would not have become law.

For my part I entertain not the slightest doubt that we can give increased powers to a corporation, although it may owe its existence to one of the local legislatures, just as we give powers to English and American companies. But we should stop there; we should not interfere with such details of the organization, as were wholly within the jurisdiction of that sovereignty which has created the corporation. The legislature which had in the first instance made provisions with respect to the capital stock, had it now in its power to increase the same on such terms and conditions as it might deem expedient; and it was clearly from that body alone such power should be sought.

I have not cited the views expressed by other members of the House, Sir John Macdonald, Mr. Weldon and others, which were about to the same effect. I may be asked, 'But what about the question of expediency? Do you not admit that in many cases which have come before us it has been more expedient very often to grant the legislation than to refuse it?' That is what has often embarrassed me. Frequently it appears more expedient to bring all those railways under the same jurisdiction; but, hon. gentlemen, expediency is not law. The constitution is there and expediency cannot prevail against the constitution. If the framers of our constitution had been influenced by the question of expediency they would have established a legislative union. Confederation was the result of a compromise between the partisans of legislative union and the partisans of provincial autonomy, and you must respect that compromise which is the foundation of our constitution, and which secures the wood working of that constitution. I admit that it is very difficult to draw the line at times between what is provincial and what is federal jurisdiction, and that is why there has been so much inconsistency in the decisions of the Senate and the House of Commons. I am not surprised that the Senate has been reproached with being inconsistent, but I contend that that inconsistency is more apparent than real, and I would here apply to the situation the remark that Macaulay once made respecting Lord Halifax. Speaking of that celebrated statesman Macaulay says:—

He was called inconsistent because the relative position in which he stood to the contending factions was perpetually varying. As well might the pole star be called inconsistent because it is sometimes to the west of the pointers.

Applying those words of Macaulay to the Senate, I would say that the apparent inconsistency, which is reproached to the Senate, was the result of the change of facts, of the situation. But I must admit that there are certain cases where it is difficult to explain the contradictory decisions. The question and the complaint are not new. Fifteen years ago Bourinot ascertained that the time had come when something should be done to put a stop to those contradictory decisions, and he suggested that a rule should be established.

But I must be frank and say that Bourinot made the remark that he was not sure that that would be the best way to decide such questions. He thinks they should be decided by the courts as far as possible. For my part I repeat what has been said by some of the most eminent statesmen of this country, that a rule should be established in order to put a stop to legislation which infringes on provincial rights, and I contend that the Senate should take the initiative.

Why? Because nobody can deny that the intention of the framers of the constitution was to make the Senate the protector of provincial rights. Clements in his work on the Canadian constitution, citing the words of Sir John Macdonald and some of the principal members of the time, says:

> By the fathers of confederation the Senate of Canada was announced as answering both purposes; as affording a check on hasty or ill digested legislation, and also as protecting local interests and the autonomy of the provinces. The attainment of the former purpose was supposed to be made secure by the mode of appointment, the life tenure of the senators being held out as a guarantee for independence in the exercise of their legislative duties; while the equal representation, in the Senate, of each of the distinctly differentiated portions of the Dominion would make that body the guardian of provincial rights, or at least of local, as distinct from general, interests.

The Senate has done much in that line. Section 8 of the Railway Act has been modified in such a way that now the jurisdiction of the federal parliament applies only to crossings and connections, in cases where before the fact of a railway connecting with a federal railway was sufficient to bring the whole under federal jurisdiction. For this protection the country is indebted to the Senate, and if the provincial governments and the municipalities are notified now by promoters of railways that they intend to make use of the general interest declaration it is due to the action of the Senate. Let me say here that I am surprised that they have not taken more advantage of that legislation which was designed to protect their rights. With the exception of the province of Ontario no province, and if I remember correctly no municipality, has made representations to the federal parliament when Bills affecting their rights were under consideration here, and, before blaming the federal parliament, and the Senate, those provincial governments and municipalities should first admit that they have sinned themselves and have not done what they should have done to protect their own rights. I must say also that I am surprised that in the conferences which have taken place lately between the representatives of the provincial governments and of the federal government there was no discussion of the question of provincial rights. The premiers representing the different provinces did not think proper to come to an agreement on this question with the federal government. It was the time and the place to show that the provinces were not indifferent to their rights. I am surprised also that in the discussions which have taken place in the legislature of the province of Ontario, the Senate alone has been blamed, and that because of one Bill only, because on the occasion of the introduction of a certain Bill the Senate did not do what the provincial government thought they should have done. They should have taken into consideration the fact that if there are a few cases in which the Senate did not do what they should have done, there are many others where the Senate refused to pass Bills coming from the House of Commons, rejecting some and amending others in order to protect provincial autonomy. My conclusion is that a rule should be established. The public and the promoters of railways should be informed that in future the Senate will be less inclined to assume jurisdiction in matters where provincial rights might be affected. That would be in the interest of the Senate and in the general interest of Canada. It is under the influence of that opinion that I have drafted the resolutions that are now before the House. I do not contend that they are perfect. They may be amended, but I think that these resolutions as framed are broad and liberal. They do not prohibit the use of the general interest declaration, but they will restrict and limit its application within reasonable bounds in accordance with the spirit of the constitution, and the intention of the framers of our constitution. They must be considered as a declaration of principle and as a warning. I am sure anyhow that they will give satisfaction to those who believe, like myself, that the best means of securing the welfare of our country and the good working of our constitution is to preserve its federal character and to protect provincial and municipal authority.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Middlesex) moved the adjournment of the debate.

CONGESTION OF TRAFFIC IN THE NORTHWEST.

Hon. Mr. LOUGLAS—Before the Orders of the Day are called, permit me in the interests of our common humanity to call the attention of this honourable House to a special telegraphic despatch from Winnipeg to the 'Globe' office, Toronto, yesterday, in reference to the congestion of traffic on the Canadian Northern Railway. I feel especially interested in it, because a number of these people have been stranded in the country immediately north of where it is my privilege to reside. The despatch reads as follows :

Winnipeg, April 8.—Traffic congestion on the C. N. R., coupled with the blockades, has assumed a most serious phase, so serious indeed that it threatens to greatly retard and hamper immigration and settlement, if irreparable injury to the country is not done. The condition of affairs has been known here for some time, but has been kept quiet with the hope that the company would be able to cope with the situation when the spring opened. But, instead of improving, things have been rapidly going from bad to worse. To-day there are 178 cars of settlers' effects in the west yard here, where they have been for nearly a week, and the company is unable to move them out. It is a great hardship on the settlers, for in addition to being prevented from reaching their destination their expense for extra feed for animals is a severe tax on those of slender resources. Horses have died in the cars through confinement and lack of food, and the owners are powerless. These unfortunate newcomers are likely to be held here for at least another week.

To-day they met and decided to ask the Railway Commission to intervene, but before doing so sent a deputation, consisting of James A. Morrison, Campbellford, Ont.; Dr. Elliott, V. S., and J. T. Fleming of Huntsville, Ont., to interview the board of control and interest them in the condition of affairs. These gentlemen met the board by appointment, and General Manager Jones of the Canadian Northern Railway was also present.

Mr. James said his line had been blockaded west of Humboldt for five days and almost every siding between here and that point, hundreds of miles away, was filled with cars of settlers' effects, and those in the city yards were better off here than they otherwise would be. There was no place to send them, but he gave assurance that all would be sent to their destination as soon as possible. He also promised to relieve any hardships.

To-night messages from the west indicate that four trainloads are blockaded at Kamsack, and many of the settlers are without money. There are between 700 and 1,200 people in the party, and almost all without food. Another train has been held at Dauphin for twenty-four hours, and the passengers have been almost famished, while the company refused to handle telegraphic messages describing their condition or informing relatives of those on board of what was actually occurring.

My reason for bringing this question before this honourable House is that the government might make some pronouncement and inform the railway company that greater care must be exercised in knowing that their line is clear before they leave such points as Winnipeg, and that they must be fully assured that the passengers can reach their destinations. It is no small matter to land 1,200 people without any immediate notice upon the good wishes and kindness of our people in a small village, and as this government has provided protection for these people at various points, they should be retained, and detained in these places, the immigration houses, and at points where, if they have money, food can be procured and supplied, and our people, I am sure, are kindly enough in their nature to see that at certain points, through their own generosity, the wants of immigrants will be supplied. I hope that the Canadian Northern Railway will not be behind the other companies in their kindness and liberality. When the Canadian Pacific Railway find themselves in such circumstances that loss and delay is caused by the condition of the road, they do not hesitate to provide for their passengers and to maintain them until such time as they can pass them on to their destination. I hope that the government while they may not be able to do much, will not overlook this condition of things, and that they will, if possible, emphasize the importance of the Canadian Northern Railway exercising greater care in time to come.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is this blockade from snow ?

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I suppose so. I do not know. It is not stated. I fancy it is perhaps more from the lack of motive power.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It says they have been five days without any trains passing west of Humboldt.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—Yes, it may be storms.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It may be for both reasons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Calamities of this kind often happen in other countries besides Canada, as we all know. In the first place it all arises from the immigration coming from Europe to Canada too early. In speaking to the Minister of the Interior to-day, he said he has always been opposed to it ; but the movement begins and people make a rush. Hon. gentlemen will have noticed that steamships have applications for larger numbers of passengers than they can carry. What are you to do with the people on the other side insisting on coming into Canada? The notion has gone abroad that the lands are being taken up rapidly, and that the first that comes gets the advantage. Those blockades in the Northwest are unavoidable, and would occur under any conditions, even if they had superior locomotives to those they now possess. Blockades of that kind occur in older portions of Canada. I was stormbound for four days on one occasion coming from Toronto to Ottawa. The then leader of the opposition was on the train at the time. Fortunately we were in a country where roast beef could be had, and we made ourselves comfortable; besides that we made a raid on the express car and got all the oysters, eggs and luxuries that could be had without asking for them. We lived there like fighting cocks, I was going to say, but certainly in regal style. I issued a carte blanche for the whole neighbourhood, that the farmers were to roast all the beef they could and send into the car. A feast of that kind could not be procured in the newly settled portions of the Northwest. I further asked the Minister of the Interior, whether his officials at Winnipeg and other points had carte blanche to deal with cases of that kind as they arrived. I said, 'It is useless communicating with Ottawa.' I said that the persons on the spot ought to have discretion and judgment to deal with such cases whenever they arose. He said, 'They have the fullest authority, and if any complaint is made that immediate action is not taken, I am prepared to act vigorously.' So that everything that could be done has been done. The hon. gentleman made a suggestion which I think is worthy of further consideration, and that is to communicate with the management of the various railways that they should not allow trains to be sent out when they know that a storm is impending, or that there is likely to be a blockade. I know that is very often done, even in the older portions of Canada. Trains leave at a particular hour, and go ten or twenty miles out and there they stick. That should not be allowed. They can always foretell when a snow blockade is likely to occur. The weather probabilities advise us of what is likely to happen in the way of snow storms, and the management should take cognizance of this. I shall be very glad to bring the subject before the notice of the government, and if anything further can be done to relieve the situation, I am quite sure we are prepared to do it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I believe that from North Wellington, the district where I live, not less than 1,500 people have gone out from the different towns, villages and rural districts, to the Northwest within the last month. People have a craze to go out there, simply because for the last two or three years some of those that went out and took up land have made double and treble what it cost them. People have a speculative craze and will go, and in some cases they are actually renting their farms, taking whatever they can get for them and going to the Northwest. I am satisfied that 1,500 people have left the constituency which I used to represent, and have gone out there this spring. Supposing we take that number from 150 constituencies you have 225,000 people who have left Ontario to go to the Northwest owing to the reports with regard to the advantages of taking up land, and selling it or holding it. Considering the enormous immigration coming into this country, it is a wonder to me the railway companies have been able to provide as efficient a service as they have done. It is simply amazing that they have done so much. It is quite clear that the trains are over-crowded. They have an enormous influx of immigrants and their outfits which have to be provided for. From the station at which I live, a whole trainload of people left with horses, cattle and utensils of all kinds. If people will use their heads and rush madly into the west in that way, they have to take the consequences.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is there anything before the House?

The SPEAKER—No.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (3) An Act in amendment of the Railway Act, 1903, as amended.—(Hon. Mr. Perley.)

Bill (114) An Act to authorize the Exchange of certain lands.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

CUSTOMS DUTY ACT.

THIRD READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (134) An Act respecting the duties of Customs. He said: This measure differs in some particulars from former Bills that have been submitted for the consideration of parliament, inasmuch as there are three columns of rates instead of two as on the last occasion. The first column refers to the British preference and applies to the manufactures of goods coming from the United Kingdom—

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understood yesterday that the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Jones) desired to speak upon this measure.

Hon. Mr SCOTT—I told the hon. senator from Toronto that I could not hold it beyond Wednesday. The representative of His Excellency must come down to-morrow to give his assent to some Bills.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is very much to be regretted that this Bill has been rushed in the manner it has.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no, it has not been rushed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The second reading was rushed through last night without a word of comment. I did not know of it at the time; but I was made aware afterwards that the second reading of it had taken place. I think probably in the past the practice has been not to refer a Bill of this kind to committee, but there are so many changes in the Bill and in the principle of the customs, and also in the regulations in the first part of the Bill that it should require some little explanation from the minister—that is if the senators are expected to understand really what they are doing. Let me call my hon. friend's attention, before commencing any discussion upon it, to schedule B, I should like to know what that really means. Under the old system of drawbacks, they were allowed on certain articles which entered into the manufacture of other articles. There was also a special provision made for a drawback when articles were manufactured for exportation. I find at the head of schedule B these words 'goods subject to drawback for home consumption'. If that read for exportation the provision would not apply to goods manufactured for home consumption. Are we to understand that this includes raw material which enters into the manufacture of the completed article—that it is to be confined to the articles which are to be manufactured for home consumption? The specific wording is 'for home consumption.' Could an article manufactured for exportation receive the drawback which is provided to be repaid when manufactured for home consumption? If such be the case, why it is a total reversion of the whole principle that has been adopted for years. Personally, I should very much like to hear the hon. gentleman from Toronto, for the reason that I know he is deeply interested in this question of drawbacks, and more than that, in the tariff itself. If I understand the wording of the tariff, while the demands that have been made by the agricultural portion of Canada for a reduction of the duty upon agricultural implements that are imported into this country, from twenty to seventeen and one-half per cent, the drawback which is given much more than compensates the manufacturer for the reduction which has been made, or, in other words, he is in a better position than he was before. Hon. gentlemen will understand that I do not object to that, but it is a system of framing a tariff to humbug the people. Perhaps I should not use that word but it certainly has that effect. Perhaps my hon. friend would call the attention of the Minister of Finance to clause ten, which confines the drawbacks to articles manufactured for home consumption. Surely it could not have been the intention of the government to adopt a policy of that kind.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am willing to allow this Order of the Day to stand till to-morrow.

The Order of the Day was discharged and placed on the Orders of the Day for to-morrow.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

DEBATE RESUMED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Honourable Mr. McMullen: That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of all correspondence in the hands of the government, or any department thereof, on the question of old age pensions to aged residents of Canada, or retiring allowance in any form.—(Hon. Mr. Ross, Middlesex.)

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Middlesex)—This question is a very important one, to be sure, and I feel as if I were under an obligation—and perhaps the House feels the same—to the acting First Minister for having brought our attention to a question of such great interest, and which, if acted upon on the basis of the draft Bill which is submitted, would reach many thousand people in Canada. I think it is quite appropriate that while we are spending very generously for the development of Canada and for the purposes of transportation, and for filling up our western lands, that we should look behind these larger questions to those on whom the burden of maintaining the government must ultimately rest—that is the wage-earner and the workingman—and see that in the midst of these larger developments and this widening of our national horizon we do not forget those who are the toilers and on whom the ultimate prosperity of the country must depend. If I might be allowed to be reminiscent, I might say that thirty-five years ago, when I entered public life, there was a maxim then very much in evidence, namely, that no government should do anything which could be undertaken profitably or properly by private enterprise. Since that time, the converse of this maxim seems to prevail, and now the rule appears to be that no private individual or corporation should undertake anything which the government can do, or would like to do, or was disposed to do. Whether we subscribe to that principle in its latter form or not, we are face to face with the fact that it prevails, that it is uppermost at the present day in public opinion, and, therefore, when the acting Prime Minister calls our attention to a means whereby some provision may be made, in addition to the provision which is already made by private corporations and insurance companies, for the wants and necessities of many thousands of the people of Canada, we are in exact harmony with the prevailing opinion to-day on other questions. The world over, paternalism seems to have full force and sway. All the great railway systems of Europe, except those of Great Britain, are largely controlled by the governments of the day. This is the case in Germany, in France, in Italy and in Russia, and one of the candidates for the presidency of the United States has recently declared that he believed it would be in the interest of the United States republic if the federal government assumed control of federal railways. We have under our own control as a government in Canada a vast railway system. The province of Ontario has in a smaller way the control of a railway system. The government of Great Britain has taken control of telegraphs and also proposes to take control of telephones. This is a system of government administration which nobody thought of some 25 or 30 years ago, particularly as far as Canada was concerned, except in the case of the Intercolonial, and certainly was not thought of so far as the United States or the province of Ontario were concerned. In fact, when we were considering the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, so anxious were we to avoid government control that both sides of the House at that time insisted that that great enterprise should be handed over to a private corporation. Perhaps we made a mistake; it may be debatable whether we did or did not make a mistake, but we showed the domination of this principle. Now what has been done in matters of transportation, has been done all over the board. Labour leaders in England have brought about a public revolution in labour laws. I can remember when as philanthropic a statesman as John Bright declared that there should be no regulation of hours of labour, that it would interfere with the right of contract between capital and labour, between the employer and the employee, and the Earl of Shaftesbury, in his great efforts to reform the laws with regard to child labour, had to fight for many years both the House of Lords and the House of Commons. There is scarcely a session that passes of the parliament of Great Britain without some ameliorating condition encroaching upon this old maxim that government should not interfere; that governments should not be paternal, and as a result we have great amelioration of the condition of the working classes and much legislation of which Britons are very proud. That has extended also to Canada. We have civil service Acts whereby civil servants receive pensions to which they are contributors partially themselves, and civil service Acts under which judges receive pensions to which they are not contributors. We have similar Acts with regard to great corporations. Indeed we discussed carefully for a couple of days here a pension fund for a great railway corporation, the object of it being to protect those in the employ of that corporation. Insurance companies have done a great deal, perhaps, to relieve the condition which otherwise might exist unless there was some legislative or local means of providing for the wants of those dependent upon men who had become unable to provide for them. Our savings banks have reached forth a helping hand in the same direction. I understand that we have $61,000,000 on deposit in our savings banks at the present moment, contributed by about 200,000 depositors. This is a means of relief, but does it go far enough? Our insurance companies carry $630,000,000 insurance covering 671,000 lives, which contribute an average of $30 each for their insurance, the amount of premiums received amounting to twenty-two million odd dollars. There is a source of revenue and help in the case of those who are depending when the necessity arises which must go a great way towards meeting the conditions. But, as I asked a moment ago, is that sufficient? The acting First Minister thinks it is not sufficient. With him, I for one agree. I have no doubt the whole body of this House, if not in harmony with the details of the scheme, will be in harmony with the principle and in pursuance of that principle we are only following in a similar direction a principle that is conceded elsewhere. There is a material difference between the scheme of the acting First Minister and old age pensions. While not absolutely saying that old age pensions are faulty in principle and inadequate in their results, I would prefer as between the two a fund whereby those who sought to benefit from it ultimately would be joint contributors with the government to that fund. Old age pensions exist in their purity in New Zealand, New South Wales and Victoria, where those who are ultimately to benefit by those pensions contribute nothing themselves. In Germany, the old age pension is a joint contribution between the pensioners and the government, the sum that they are to contribute being fixed and the maximum that they are to receive ultimately, being fixed also. As to old age pensions, there is just one substantial objection in my mind, and that is that it is a good deal like the workhouse, that is where the pensioners are not joint contributors. It is not an incentive to thrift, but the very opposite. The individual in this case, let his income be small or great, feels that he is not placed on his own resources, that he is to be ultimately a pensioner on the state, that he has a claim on the state for his maintenance in his old age, and, therefore, the natural obligation which rests on him to contribute for himself and his family during his years of vigour and industrial activity is not binding, but that the state owes him a living at least at the time he has assumed to be unable to provide for himself. Now, if this idea gets into the minds of working men it would be fatal to thrift, and being fatal to thrift it would strike a fatal blow at one of the fundamental elements in the development of character. The first reason, and perhaps one of the strongest reasons whereby the system proposed by the acting First Minister is worthy of our support is that it encourages thrift, and thrift lies at the foundation of national wealth. It is an element which enters into the development of character and independence. The glorious privilege of being independent is largely based upon thrift, and it is extraordinary in what way inducements to thrift operate and produce great results. Let me give a case in point; just before I retired from the position of Minister of Education in Ontario, we set in motion penny savings banks for the children of our public schools. The city of Toronto took up the scheme with considerable enthusiasm, led by a very efficient inspector of public schools, Mr. Hughes. In nine years the savings collected in the childrens' savings banks at Toronto amounted to $90,000, and ten thousand children contributed. There is a kindergarten lesson which the children have learned which encourages them to avoid self-indulgence when self-indulgence might in other cases be modified, and which sometimes affords to their parents a little shelter in financial stress, for where the earnings are small a very few dollars will carry a family over some little crisis, and perhaps homes are brighter, and so it is said of Toronto because of those paltry savings of the children in the public schools. What has been done by the encouragement to thrift in the public schools, carried all around, would have an immense influence if the whole of the people of Canada participated in it. I feel that we are now in the days of sunshine and industrial prosperity, and I fear that with the abundance of wealth and abounding and increasing prosperity, and with increasing earning power, we may fall into the habit of personal and domestic extravagance, which, should a financial crisis come, will press very hard upon many homes. And if that habit of extravagance is once cultivated, and grows, the wage-earners and bread-winners may find themselves late in years penniless and dependent, and, as a consequence, the credit and honour of the country will suffer and the status of Canada will be affected accordingly. So if this scheme, simple and elementary as it is, and economical in its outlines, and within the reach of the most moderate wage-earner, whether male or female, is taken hold of by the people of Canada, I would expect it to induce thrift, I would expect it to brighten the future of many citizens, male and female, and I would expect it to promote the independence and self-reliance of thousands of people. Indeed, it is said that a system of thrift such as this is would go a good way to modify if not to prevent, strikes, which too frequently occur. Whether that be true or not, I would feel certain myself that a man with an annuity in prospect, with a few hundred or a few thousand dollars in the savings bank, would be a more efficient workman, would be more contented in his home, would be more contented indeed with the government of the country, would feel the family relation even a little stronger, if he were assured that when old age overcame him, and physical disability prevented him from indulging in his usual industrial pursuits, he would have an income for his maintenance. He would feel better, and we would have in him a better citizen. I have spoken principally of the advantages the scheme might present to the individual, but I might go even further, for not only would the individual be benefited, but those dependent upon him might also be very much benefited. I have here a quotation from an article which appeared lately in the 'Outlook,' published in the city of New York, in which it is pointed out that in the case of death or accident, not only is there a loss to the citizen, but there is placed on the charity of others a number of dependents, at least equal to the number of lives lost. The 'Outlook' says :

> In a special study in 1899 of 1,386 persons injured in the factories of New York state there were found to be 1,629 dependent wives, children or others, a ratio of 1·18 dependents to one injured person. By the 1,123 killed in coal-mining in Pennsylvania, 604 widows and 1,419 orphans were left, a total of 2,023—nearly two for each man killed. If only one dependent were affected by each of the half million annually killed and injured, it means that another half million are temporarily or permanently suffering with the wage-earner himself.

How many of these had their roof-tree torn from over their heads no one can tell. There may have been no provision for them at all. If in the case of those killed or injured provision had been made, such as it is proposed by the acting First Minister, there would be much more brightness in these desolate homes and the dependent children would find some sustenance when, otherwise, they might have to depend on the cold charity of the world. The scheme, therefore, is not only far-reaching, not only does it reach the survivor, making the savings due and payable to him at the age of 60, but should he in the meantime suffer an accident, or be incapacitated for labour or taken away by death, those who are dependent on him would have some slight provision made for their wants in the meantime.

But there is another point. To the individual himself the advantages I have stated are to my mind self-evident. There is an advantage to the state also. Poverty is a great burden to the state. Take the rich province of Ontario—and I may be pardoned for saying 'rich.' I do not intend it to be invidious to the other provinces—but take the province of Ontario, we have taxed ourselves for about 40 houses of refuge, commonly called poor houses. In England they would be called work houses, containing on an average say 70 persons. These cost on an average $50,000. A couple of millions have been invested by the ratepayers of the province of Ontario in these houses for the protection of poverty stricken people in their old age. It is a small contribution, but it is a contribution that does a great deal to keep the vagrant from the street and to provide comfort for those who would be dependent upon relatives. The province of Ontario pays out of its treasury $4,000 for each house of refuge. That is our burden. Over and above that, there are other sources of charity, public and private, innumerable. The amounts paid in Ontario for charitable purposes no one can ascertain directly, nor can it be ascertained in any other country. That is our burden, small but, so far as it goes, effective. In older countries the burden is greater. I find by the last statistics on the subject, that the number of paupers in England in 1905, on the poor rate, was 871,765, equal to the population of two or three of our largest cities, maintained at a cost of £11,373,220, about $55,000,000.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In the work houses ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS—In the work houses. In Wales there were 46,627 paupers maintained at a cost of £54,976, and in Scotland 108,643 paupers maintained at a cost of £1,402,354. I have no record for Ireland; perhaps there are no poor there, but for these three divisions of the United Kingdom, the aggregate charge was £13,242,202, for a pauper population of 1,035,384. The average charge was eight shillings and two pence halfpenny, or $2.05. That is a heavy tax.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does that include outdoor relief ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS—No, that is the work house alone. In addition to that, no doubt there is abundance of out door relief, and then the overflowing charity of private individuals might aggregate a sum nearly as large as that, which is the direct tax under the poor rate. That is a burden to be borne only by such a powerful and wealthy nation as Great Britain. Should we anticipate the future ? Should we provide now in the early stages of our national growth for such a contingency as that which prevails there? I do not look forward in a pessimistic frame of mind, nor with any dread as regards the future, yet we know the poor we have always with us. We know there are men living on the verge of poverty, men whose earnings are small, and whose families may be large, men who suffer from accident and physical disability, who are stranded, men who have been unfortunate in business and failed at an age too late to recover themselves. These are to a certain extent the wards of the state. We cannot cast them into the street to die. We cannot see that their wants are unsupplied. Charity, though cold, cannot be cold enough to do that in this great rich country of Canada; but, in the meantime to head that off, let us endeavour to get those in the vigour and prime of their life to make some provision for their old age, and if need be—and it is only required in this case in a small way, let the state supplement these contributions so that the state in its sovereign capacity, and the citizen in his humble capacity, will be joint partners in protecting the unfortunate citizen against the accidents of old age. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman has said that in England there are 12,000,000 of the population living on the poverty line. There may be some but I am very sure there are very few people living on the poverty line in Canada. It should be our duty, as far as we possibly can, to see that they are kept as far away from the poverty line as possible. What does this draft Bill propose? It offers first to the wage-earner an absolutely safe investment. The workman is suspicious sometimes of those who proffer charity or provision for him. The government of this country is an absolute security and any fund managed by the government he will feel sure is a fund that will not be squandered. Insurance companies may come, and insurance companies may go, and benefit societies may be organized, and may be dissolved, but a government goes on for ever, and in that government he has the strongest security that can be given. That is one corner stone of this scheme, and a substantial corner stone it is. Then his contributions are non-forfeitable. Whatever money he gives there, he cannot lose it, there are no lapsed policies in this great company of which the government is a director. Whatever it may be it stands to his credit until he has a right to apply for it. It is non-transferable. No creditor can reach out to it. The hon. senator from Wellington took exception to this provision of the draft Bill. I think it is one of its very best provisions. I like to see money put somewhere that a creditor cannot get at it, if it is put there for the protection of an individual in an emergency. It is not the law upon the statute-book yet, but creditors know that it will be there. They are warned that they cannot put their hands on it. We protect the individual now in regard to many things. For instance a landlord cannot sweep away all the household goods and put them up at auction, and sell them at three or five cents on the dollar. A workman is protected in his tools and implements of his trade to a certain extent. If the wage-earner puts away for this purpose a certain portion of his earnings,—and the amount is very small for an annuity of $120—let that money so consecrated remain so, and let it be beyond the reach of creditors and beyond the reach of the cupidity and avarice of landlords. That is a good feature, and the fact that an individual knows that the fund is so secure will induce him perhaps even more vigorously than he otherwise would to put money in that safe way. He is laying up treasure if not in heaven, he is laying it up where moth and rust will not corrupt and where it will gain some interest from year to year. Then the management is cheap. The complaint against our insurance companies is that the management is high and the premiums are large. Whether the complaint is well founded or not, I am not going to discuss. The management is cheap, assuring him of the largest possible results from his minor investment. These are features of the scheme which cannot be overlooked, and which commend themselves very much to my mind, and which I hope will commend themselves to the country. Then to the state there is an advantage, and that should not be overlooked either. We get from the use of money in our savings bank large amounts of money for industrial purposes. Banks are the largest monopolists we have in this country ; the strongest combinations we have for the purposes of trade. They start with a moderate capital, expecting that the deposits which they receive, and for which they pay three per cent, will furnish them with capital. We have over six hundred million dollars on deposit in our banks now. That money is the life blood of our industries. Sixty-one million dollars of that comes by way of the savings bank. A large part of this money is on call. A large part of it is drawing interest, but that money flowing into all the industrial arteries of the country turns the wheels of commerce, from one end of the Dominion to the other. If you draw in any more, would you not by this system add to the arterial current which is so indispensable to the industrial activity of this country, and add to it at the moderate rate of interest of three and one-half per cent. A few months ago the government of Ontario, in order to complete the construction of the government railroad, asked for three millions of money from the people of Ontario and they received the three millions. Where does the interest of that go? Abroad to the United States or Great Britain or France or Germany ? No, these are Canadian investments by Canadian investors, the interest of which flows back into the pockets of those who originally made the contribution. England receives about one hundred million pounds sterling a year in the shape of interest from her foreign investments. This country of ours is drained to the extent of ten millions a year to meet the interest on our bonds and debentures floated in the English market. Could we get, as the British government gets for its own national debt, the money to meet our obligations from our own people, then the interest would be spent at home. It is the principal of encouraging home manufactures, the principle of spending your own money where that money is earned, and, to that extent, it is an advantage because it is still revolving and in every revolution producing wealth and bringing comfort to somebody. When the great Franco-Prussian war was over, France was penalized to the extent of 2,000,000,000 francs because of having gone to war with Prussia. Did that debt hang long over the French republic? Just a very short time, and the money came from the peasantry of France, from the eight millions of land owners of France, owners of small holdings, from the industrial peasant, who had perhaps stored it away at home, or put it on deposit in some government bank. France shook off with one gigantic, vigorous effort the terrible incubus of that war debt and becomes free through the industry and through gallantry of her people. We do not expect any such crisis in the history of Canada. But France in that way paid for war, a terribly destructive war at that, involving loss of territory and loss of life. What France paid for carrying on that war we may contribute for carrying on the greater industries of this country, and instead of going abroad to borrow money for the necessities of the government we perhaps if our people were encouraged in greater thrift we might find that money at home. I do not know that I need develop this subject at any great length. Long academic speeches might be made on it and statistics read, but the fundamental principle is stated in the Bill—we are to become joint partners with the wage-earners of this country to contribute to their maintenance in old age, or to their support should adversity overtake them If that view commends itself to the judgment of the House, as I am sure it will, then the draft Bill will be prepared and submitted as the policy of the government, and will, I hope, command the confidence of the House, and I am sure it will be welcomed by many who, out of their paltry savings, will not be able to take out a policy in an ordinary insurance company, or who would spurn an old age pension because of the humiliation it involves, and would be accepted by them as a means whereby old age may be protected and their families made comfortable should adverse circumstances overtake them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved that the debate be adjourned until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

YUKON PLACER MINING ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved the second reading of Bill (135) An Act to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman if he knows the intention of this Bill ? Is it to meet a special case before the courts, or a case to come before the courts? Because it gives with one hand certain rights to a miner or a company to preserve their rights if they neglect to register at the right time. The Bill is also retroactive—it mentions dates of last year. Then in the last part, it is provided that this section shall not prejudicially affect the rights of another company. That is to say that one company has a certain mining grant, and neglected to register it at a certain time; then another company comes in and takes up the same claim and their rights are not to be affected by the reservation made to preserve the rights of the first party. It seems to me the Act is contradictory.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It will be more convenient if we discuss this matter in the Committee of the Whole. I have here explanations of the various matters that my hon. friend has suggested, but they can be given more conveniently in the Committee of the Whole than in speeches with the Speaker in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—So long as my right hon. friend will reserve right to discuss the principle in addition to the details of the Bill, I have no objection.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Certainly, it would be on that understanding only that I would ask the second reading of the Bill now.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

MILITIA PENSION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (144) An Act to amend the Militia Pension Act. He said: In the permanent force the officers contribute 5 per cent of their pay, which will entitle them to a superannuation allowance when they leave the force. There is no provision, however, for officers who are what is called seconded—where they are transferred for a time perhaps to serve in India or England or even in the civil service for a time. There are cases of that kind. The object is to enable an officer, although not then in the permanent force, if he continues his pay of 5 per cent on his increased salary, to become entitled at the proper time to the superannuation allowance. By continuing to pay he would get his superannuation although he might have left the permanent force for a time, or he may go back to it again or may not. But if he continues to pay the five per cent under this Bill he will be entitled to the superannuation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In what way has such a principle as that originated ? Primarily the object of the Pension Act would be to reward those who have served a period of years in giving service in a particular channel or along a particular line, to the country. If a break would occur by which the individual in question would enter into more remunerative employment, and cease to perform that service to the state which was in contemplation, seems to me to be a very wrong principle to embody in a pension Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Take the case of a man who has been contributing to the superannuation fund for fifteen years, and he goes out of that particular service and enters the civil service. He receives a very much larger salary and continues to pay his five per cent. He should not forfeit the fifteen years he has paid while in the permanent force. If he continues to pay the five per cent, although he may not then be in the permanent force, when the time comes for superannuating him, he will then be entitled to a pension. Take the case of a deputy minister who has been a long time in the permanent force ; he is no longer in the permanent force because he is deputy minister. He continues to pay the five per cent, which is a very much larger sum than he was paying before, so that the fund is not starved in any way ; it is rather benefited by the fact that he is getting a larger salary. The Bill is for the purpose of giving him the benefit.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—He participates in the advantages of the civil service superannuation as well.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the superannuation, under the military pension, is altogether different from the civil service.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will that prevent him from participating in the advantages of any fund in the civil service ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—He has to make his election.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Does the hon. gentleman know how the pensions in Canada compare with those of the imperial army of the same rank ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They get thirty-five fiftieths for a number of years.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I may say to my hon. friend that they receive one-fiftieth for each year that they have served. If a man has served twenty years he would get twenty-fiftieths of the salary he enjoyed at the time he was to retire. If he had served thirty-five years, which was the maximum, he would receive thirty-five fiftieths of the salary he was drawing at the time of the retirement. I am speaking from recollection, but I think, on the whole, ours is more liberal than the imperial pension. Our officers who retire after thirty-five years' service receive a little more than two-thirds of the salary that they were getting upon retirement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that word 'seconded' used in a peculiar military sense or how is it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Where a man is retired temporarily from the service, they call it 'seconded.' It is a technical term.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

INSPECTION AND SALES ACT.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (AAA) An Act to amend the Inspection and Sales Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend the leader of the opposition desired some information with regard to the size of fruit baskets used in the United States. The Department of Agriculture had that question under discussion, and find that there is no uniform standard in the United Statees. As I mentioned the other day, several states appear to be allowed to regulate these things according to their own measure. In the case of the importations from California, to which my hon. friend specially called our attention, the department advised me that the baskets from California are, as a rule, smaller than the size prescribed in this clause, and furthermore with respect to the importation of fruit, it may be imported, but in such cases the baskets must be marked 'short.' Being of a smaller size than our standard. Those if I remember right were the chief points that my hon. friend desired to be advised upon.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—From the inquiries which my hon. friend made, can he say whether the exporters in California have familiarized themselves with the conditions which obtain in Canada ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—This trade has been going on for some time. They are getting familiarized, but the department advised me that up to the present moment, the provisions of the law have not been very strictly enforced, particularly in the Northwest. By this time I think they must be all pretty well notified of the provisions of our law.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will appreciate the difficulty of conforming to a law of this kind, where in fact all the fruit imported into the Northwest, practically, comes from the Pacific states.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—If my hon. friend noticed, I mentioned that the size of the basket is not imperative. All that is imperative is that they should mark it short when it is a smaller basket.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me the only way to carry out the regulation is to mark the baskets on Canadian territory, because it is not likely they will be marked in the United States.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I specially called the attention of the department to the statement made with respect to the Northwest, because I quite see that for the present—and I suppose until British Columbia is able to supply people of the Northwest with all the fruit they want, it would be a very great hardship on the settlers that any interference should take place with regard to fruit. In our climate it is a wholesome luxury to the settler to be able to obtain fruit, and we desire as much as possible to facilitate the obtaining of it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the government had taken power to itself to apply this Act by proclamation to any of the different provinces the difficulty might have been overcome, because, as my right hon. friend informed the Chamber, this legislation is being asked for at the instance of the Niagara fruit-growers.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Chiefly.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is well known that they do not ship this fruit west of the great lakes to any extent.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I see no objection to some such provision being made, and I would suggest that we might as well put the Bill through the committee stage, and before the third reading is moved I will speak to the Minister of Agriculture, and possibly my hon. friend the leader of the opposition might find time to draft a few words in the direction that he desires.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I suggest a provision that the Act should not come into force in any province declared by a proclamation not within the operation of the Act.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Reserving for the Governor in Council the right to exempt any province.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The remainder of the Bill is from myself. This is a communication from the Department of Agriculture. Therefore I should like to consult the Minister of Agriculture, before unreservedly committing myself to it. It appears to me there would be very little objection to that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When the Bill was before the House on a former occasion, I asked my hon. friend if it applies to foreign fruit. He was then of the opinion that it did not. I have looked over it very carefully since that time, and I find, of course, that it does apply to foreign fruit. I must say that I think the provision in the Bill making it applicable to all the country is right, with the provision for having the baskets marked 'short' as it applies to fruit coming from foreign countries. I think that would be quite sufficient provision.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Of course that exists as it is.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It seems to me that that is ample, and I find that all the change that is made with regard to the baskets, is simply to give a more ample description of the basket and vary the size in some slight degree, and which I have no doubt it is the result of experience, it meets the views of those who are interested in the trade both as buyers and sellers. I have looked over the provision which refers to baskets, and I have come to the conclusion—and I have had some means of communicating with Mr. McNeill of the department—that it has been very well thought out.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I entirely differ from the hon. gentleman from Marshfield as to the desirability of applying this to the districts west of the great lakes. From Washington, California, and in fact from all the Pacific states the fruit that we consume very largely comes. It comes in at all points along the crossings of the road, as well as along the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and if restrictions of this kind are to be placed upon the importation of that fruit I can very well conceive an indifference as to the shipping of this fruit to Canada arising on the part of the exporters in the United States. If it were interfering with fruits being shipped through Canadian ports, I should appreciate the desirability of protecting the Canadian producer, but this is not the case. I quite appreciate what my hon. friend has said with reference to British Columbia, that the day will doubtless come when British Columbia will be able to produce enough fruit to satisfy our demands, but that time has not yet arrived, and there should be no deprivation of these advantages in the meantime.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I will call the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture to the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, who is a gentleman having had some experience in these matters.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—At some seasons of the year, fruit from California and other portions of the United States even comes into the Niagara peninsula and towns in Ontario, and all parts of Canada.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—You will see the recommendation suggested by the hon. leader of the opposition in the Senate would not affect that case.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, but if there is a good argument for excepting the west, there would be an argument for preventing foreign fruit coming into Canada at all when our own fruit is not maturing.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think that borders on putting a penalty on sunshine. They have a warmer climate to the south of us than we enjoy just now, and I would not like to deprive the people of Canada of the right of enjoying the advantages of getting their fruit from a climate where it ripens earlier than it does here.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No one wants to deprive them.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Some people do. The market gardners meekly suggested a duty of ten cents a bushel on tomatoes grown with the aid of foreign sunshine to compete with the home product.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—For the last three weeks we have had strawberries imported from the United States. Certainly they are not in the market to any extent in Eastern Canada, and they can be purchased very cheaply in our western district, and there is no reason why there shall be any handicap placed on a trade of that kind.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does the Bill impose any new disability against importing foreign fruit ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The word 'short' belonged to the old law.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am advised it does not impose any disability further than it did before.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not think it does.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—But that does not affect the point raised by the hon. gentleman from Calgary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is very true, but as has been intimated by that hon. gentleman, he knows that the great complaint of our market gardeners and the fruit-growers, particularly in Western Ontario, has been the introduction of the early fruits and vegetables from the southern parts of the United States, and therefore destroying the market in Canada, when the same articles are grown and produced in Canada, and it is for that reason that I think the present government, having looked closely into the tariff, had increased the duty on the products of the garden. It is very difficult to frame a Tariff Act in this country, where the climates are so varied, and where the markets are open to products of the southern portions of the continent at different periods of the year. I very well know that in British Columbia the fruits of Australia are introduced into these markets at a period when the trees are not budding in the Northwest or in British Columbia, and that was one of the reasons advanced for subsidizing the Australian line of steamers, that an interchange of commodities would take place at a period of the year when they would not interfere with the product of either country. That was one of the arguments used at that time, and, as my hon. friend says, in earlier portions of the season strawberries and other fruits are brought from Delaware, Baltimore and Washington markets, and from still further south. The facilities offered for transportation at the present time by means of railways are such that you can obtain fruits from the south and have them laid upon your table in two or three days. My hon. friend has not seen any strawberries this year. A week or two ago I had them for breakfast. Those are just the difficulties that present themselves to any government in framing a tariff to meet the requirements of this country. The difficulties pointed out by the leader of the opposition in reference to the western provinces—that is Alberta and Saskatchewan, and even Manitoba—of having fruit-baskets when coming from the United States marked as 'short' is one that I do not well see how you can surmount; unless, as my hon. friend suggests, you enforce the marking at the port of entry. So far as the Bill is concerned, I fancy it is about as good a measure as could be framed. There may be good reasons for the suggestions which my hon. friend has made, but it seems to me highly objectionable to have a tariff upon the statute-book applicable only to one portion of the Dominion.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I wanted to understand what the hon. gentleman from Calgary suggested was not any interference with the tariff, but simply an interference with the regulation as to the size of the baskets, which is quite a different thing.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That it should not be enforced in the western provinces, except by proclamation.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend's reference was simply to the size of the baskets.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Supposing that exception is made in the case of the Northwest provinces, how would that affect the importation of this class of goods into Winnipeg, and then the shipment of them down to Ontario?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think the rates of freight that prevail on the Canadian Pacific Railway would pretty effectually protect the Ontario fruit-grower in that respect.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The right hon. minister thinks that is sufficient protection?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes. I do not think anybody will bring fruits from Winnipeg to sell in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It seems to me the marking of baskets 'short' would throw no difficulty in the way of fruit coming in. That has been the practice in the past.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Practically, I suspect that the law has not been enforced in the Northwest. I think that is about the English of it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is nothing that would call for such enforcement. If it were admissible to use the short basket it might be marked 'short'; but my hon. friend means that they will not mark them short, but will put them on the market without being marked at all. I think the law should be enforced, then Canadian producers would have some show of protection, which they would not have if the smaller United States basket was allowed to come in without being marked 'short'.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not think that would interfere with the Canadian producer in any fashion at all. Whatever duty there might be would be continued to be levied just the same.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not speaking of the matter of the duty, but I am speaking of the legislation which is before us. We are not imposing a duty or settling anything in connection with the revenue; but we are regulating what the basket should be. I think that if the provision required the American basket, which is smaller, to be always marked 'short', not prohibiting its being put on the market at all, and used for the sale of fruit, it might have some effect ultimately in leading up to a uniform basket; but if you remove that protection by proclamation and allow the United States short basket to come in without any mark upon it at all, and have it on a perfect equality with the Canadian basket at seasons of the year when there is no competition, in the Northwest there will be a good many seasons when there will be no difficulty, but seasons will come when there will be competition, and when the American producer will be competing with the home producers, and I think it would be only fair to our producers that this provision of the law, compelling the United States producers to mark the baskets short should be enforced. It would not prevent the United States smaller basket being sold, but it would retain that distinction, and it would ultimately lead to a change, and perhaps our adopting their basket. It might lead to a uniform package.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I suppose we can refer to this question again on the third reading. Clause one was the only clause which was permitted to stand, and I move that it be adopted now.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

YUKON ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (109) An Act to amend the Yukon Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is a very short Bill, authorizing the appointment of an Acting Commissioner in the Yukon.

Hon. Mr. JAFFRAY, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

AMENDMENTS TO TARIFF BILL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the House adjourns, I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State how far, in considering the Tariff Bill, the House will be permitted—or will have authority to change or alter any of the items in it, or the resolutions regulating the carrying into effect of the provisions of the tariff.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The House could strike out an item altogether, but I think that is the only alteration that could be made. I think the question arose on what is called the paper duties, in the Imperial Parliament some years ago, where the House of Lords struck out an item relating to paper duties, and it was held that they were within their rights. That is the only thing they could do.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The reason I asked the question was because the government permitted the hon. senator from Beamsville to introduce a Bill which changed, altered and amended certain articles in the tariff, and I suppose if this were permitted in one case, we might change, alter and strike out some of the items in the Bill before us.

The Senate adjourned until 3 p.m. tomorrow.

SENATE.

OTTAWA, THURSDAY, April 11, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

ROUTES OF NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY THROUGH NEW BRUNSWICK.

INQUIRY.

The Order of the Day being called :

By the Hon. Mr. Ferguson :

1. Which of the two routes back from the St. John river proposed for the National Transcontinental Railway through the province of New Brunswick, has been approved by the government or the National Transcontinental Railway Commission ?

2. What is the length, respectively, of the two routes aforesaid, between Grand Falls and Moncton ?

3. What length, stated in miles, of the route, approved as aforesaid, has a grade exceeding four-tenths of one per cent per mile, and what is the maximum grade of the railway between the aforementioned places ?

4. What length, stated in miles, of the approved route of the said railway, between the east end of the Quebec Bridge and Grand Falls, N.B., has a grade exceeding four-tenths of one per cent per mile, and what is the maximum grade of the railway between the said places ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I can answer the first part of the hon. gentleman's inquiry. It is the central or back route that has been adopted, within the last day or two.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There are two back routes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is the central or back route and there is the river route. It is the central route that has been adopted. The hon. gentleman will have to wait a few days for the other information, because the order has only been approved within the last few days.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It will be very desirable to know if that route will be the shortest.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My recollection is that it is the shorter of the two routes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It will be the shortest of the three routes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know about the three routes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It must be if it is the centre route.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is the centre route, and it is shorter than the other by 29 miles.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Shorter than the St. John river route ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. When it goes to the department I will get fuller information.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is all my hon. friend can do now. I would be very much pleased if I could get this information as soon as he can obtain it from his colleagues. I would ask my hon. friend whether the defects in the answer which I received some weeks ago with regard to my question of contracts on the Grand Trunk Pacific between Winnipeg and Quebec have been remedied. My hon. friend will remember I called his attention to the matter, and I wrote him a note to point out that it was almost impossible to make the answers that I received intelligible. Has he received that information yet ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I have not been able to get it. I hope to get it within a few days. I will try to get it. The present motion will be postponed until Tuesday.

The motion was allowed to stand until Tuesday.

THE ROSS RIFLE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

On what dates were the different orders for rifles given by the government to the Ross Rifle Company ?

For how many rifles was each of these orders given ?

How many rifles of each of the marks I. and II. did the government receive during the month of March ?

How much did the government pay the company during the month of March—

(a) For rifles acepted ?

(b) For rifles not yet accepted ?

On the 31st of March, how many rifles was the company bound to deliver to the government in execution of the orders received ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers to the hon. gentleman's question are as follows :—

1 and 2. March 27, 1902, by the terms of the contract, 12,000 rifles ; November 22, 1904, 20,000 rifles ; September 24, 1906, 10,000 rifles.

3. Mark I. none ; Mark II. 815.
4. (a) Nothing ; (b) nothing.
5. 16,185.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I desire to ask the leader of the House if he inquired from the Militia Department what answer could be given to the question I put yesterday releating to the King's regulations of 1904.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I brought down an answer, but the hon. gentleman said there were some changes or some amendments made to the regulations and that the amendments, he thought, were printed. I communicated with the department at once, and have received no further information from them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call the attention of the acting Minister of Militia to this fact, that some time ago I asked if there were any additions or modifications, or a revised edition of those regulations to be printed, and I received the answer 'yes.' It was sent to the Bureau, and I asked if the French edition was correct, and the answer I received was that as soon as that edition was completed that they would proceed with the French edition. Yesterday I put my question and the answer was not given to this second edition, but was given with regard to the first edition of 1904 which was not the object of the question at all. I would ask that my question be restored to the order paper as a notice of motion for to-morrow, it will give the hon. gentleman an opportunity to furnish me with an answer.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (127) An Act to amend the Adulteration Act.—(Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright.)

Bill (128) An Act respecting the Winnipeg Terminals of the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

THE PAY OF MILITIA OFFICIALS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I will ask the hon. acting Minister of Militia if anything has been done yet with regard to the payment of the salaries of the officials in the militia branch of the department. The civil branch has been paid, but the militia branch has not been.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I brought the matter to the attention of the deputy minister, and he did not know what it referred to. I told him that some balance of salaries due had not been paid, and he said he was not aware that there were any. Could the hon. gentleman give me anything more definite, and I will make further inquiry ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When the Minister of Militia was here and something of the kind occurred, he just gave an order to the bank to pay the salaries.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But the deputy minister does not know that there is anything in arrear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The salaries of the officials in the militia branch are in arrear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Can the hon. gentleman give me any clue to it ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have given a clue. The officers in the militia branch of the Militia Department have not been paid for the month of March last.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The militia employees at headquarters ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—At headquarters.

THE SEAL FISHERIES IN BEHRING SEA.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to direct the attention of the government to a telegram published some days ago from England, in reference to the position taken by the government on the question of the fisheries in Behring sea. It will be remembered that when the British Ambassador was about to visit Ottawa, the Washington correspondent of the New York 'Post' mentioned some twelve or fifteen subjects upon which he was to consult the government of this country. A telegram from London, based upon that report to a certain extent, makes the following statement :

The despatches form Washington, containing Secretary of State Root's proposal for a settlement of the questions in dispute between the United States and Canada are the subject of considerable comment here. With the exception of that in regard to the tariff the suggestions have been favourably received although it is admitted that Canada is the best judge of how the various questions should be settled.

It is officially pointed out that contrary to the statement made in the despatches an agreement in principle has not been reached with respect to sealing. It is true that Canada has agreed to accept a monetary recompense for the loss of the industry but other considerations must be discussed.

I remember seeing the statement some time ago, but it has never been confirmed. This despatch from London, of the 24th of March, states distinctly that Canada had agreed to accept a monetary consideration in lieu of abandoning the sealing industry in the open sea. I cannot conceive it possible that the statement is true, and I bring it to the notice of the government in order that it may be either denied or confirmed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That report has been repeated time and again in the last two or three years. Nothing has ever been done since the breaking up of the former convention some years ago—nothing whatever. It just stands where it did before.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—May I ask whether any proposition of the kind has been made to the government?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No proposition or counter proposition. The matter may have been informally discussed by the parties—probably it has been, but no proposition has ever been made.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (63) An Act to incorporate the Protective Association of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Mitchell.)

Bill (DDD) An Act to incorporate the Prudential Life Insurance Company of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Mitchell.)

DUTIES OF CUSTOMS ACT.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (134) An Act respecting the Duties of Customs. He said: In making this motion I simply repeat the remarks I made when the Bill came up for the first reading and for the second reading, that it is framed somewhat on lines different from the former Duties of Customs Act, inasmuch as there are three distinct columns. It varies also from the former Act inasmuch as the British preference, as it is known, heretofore depended on a regular percentage. Now each item has a fixed rate opposite to it, as hon. gentlemen can see, making it more definite and easier of comprehension than under the former Act. The intermediate tariff is intended to apply to such British colonies, or foreign countries as may give us favourable terms in regard to our exports. As hon. gentlemen know, the British preference does not extend to all parts of the empire. Australia, for instance, has not come in. The West Indies and part of South Africa are not included. The third column is made up of the general tariff, which is applicable to all countries outside of, practically, the British preference or the intermediate. I might say there is no application at present, nor is it in immediate contemplation to bring the intermediate tariff into operation. In regard to the schedules, my hon. friend yesterday called my attention to the possibility of exports from Canada not receiving the full benefit of the drawback, because schedule B is headed 'goods subject to drawback for home consumption.' I may say to him that the Act which governs the drawback in regard to goods exported, depends on the statute which authorized the Governor in Council to make regulations with regard to the drawback on goods exported. That is now contained in the Customs Act, which is to be found in the first volume of the revised statutes, section 288. The hon. gentleman will find full information there. I quite understand how he would have been misled by the headlines in schedule B, which seem to refer to goods subject to drawback for home consumption. No reference need have been made to goods exported, inasmuch as the policy in regard to those goods is provided for in the Customs Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In the clause repealing the different Acts, I confess I had overlooked that point; that clause of the Customs Act is not repealed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the drawback on the export duty applies as formerly?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. There is no change.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can the hon. genteman tell me to what extent? Is it the 99 per cent?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is the 99 per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Of course the tariff Bill before us is, as the hon. gentleman said, vastly different both in principle and in detail to the former Tariff Acts. We propose now to place upon the statute-book a Tariff Act, the result of a year or two, in fact two years consideration. The committee of council consisting of the Minister of Customs, the Finance Minister and others devoted a good deal of their time in travelling over all portions of the Dominion, and not satisfied with that, they visited the ports on the Pacific coast, at a cost to the country of some ten or fifteen thousand dollars. I have no doubt it will be remembered by those who have paid any attention to this subject, how the hon. gentlemen opposite, and more particularly the members of the government, used to condemn the former government for taking what they called 'Junketting trips' around the country, when one or two members of the cabinet thought proper to go as far as Montreal, or perhaps to Halifax, to consult the importers and the merchants and the manufacturers upon the working of the tariff as it then existed. It appears to have been considered a crime on the part of the predecessors of the present government to do in a very minor way, that which they themselves have adopted in endeavouring to arrive at a conclusion as to what the new tariff should be, and what is the result? After two years' cogitation and some months in 'junketting' about the country, and trying to obtain information, a tariff Bill was laid before parliament, and after the manufacturer and the importer and those who understood the question had had a few weeks to consider the matter, the finance committee had to come down with a revised tariff remodelled, to a very large extent. If we are to take the statements made by those who are promoting the Bill, they represent it to be, as the Bill calls itself, a general tariff, while other members of the government declare it to be a free trade tariff, as far as circumstances would permit them to go. Then if we take the protective section, if I may use that expression, of the cabinet, they declare that it is protective in its character, more so than the old protective tariff introduced by the late government. They will tell us next that it is a preferental tariff, and in addition to that a new tariff, new altogether to Canada modelled to a certain extent on the existing tariff in France. What is called there a more favoured nation clause, with us is termed an intermediate tariff. That is a tariff which can be extended by an order in council to any country that will reduce its tariff to a basis similar to that upon which our tariff is fixed. And then again, in one of its features, it can be termed a reciprocity tariff, because power is given to the Governor General in Council to extend to a certain extent reciprocal relations with other countries which are prepared to respond. Then there is another clause in the tariff that is termed in the regulation 'a dumping tariff', and, in addition to that, there is a still more important provision, and that is, it is really an order in council tariff. If you look at the regulations guiding it, you will find that the power is given in these regulations, no less than nineteen times, to the Governor in Council to change, alter and amend the tariff in certain particulars. Or, in other words, relegating to the Governor in Council a power which should be exercised wholly and solely by parliament itself. We remember the denunciations which were hurled against the previous government when parliament inserted a clause in the old tariff giving power to the Governor in Council to do and perform certain acts. Here it is not only duplicated but the power is extended ninety-nine per cent by placing the power in the hands of the Governor General to deal with the tariff and the collection of the revenue, more than ever was contemplated by the late government. So that looking at the tariff as it is proposed now, we have a general tariff, a partial free trade tariff, a partially protective tariff, a revenue tariff, a preferential tariff, an intermediate tariff, a reciprocal tariff, a dumping tariff, and a Governor in Council tariff, all embodied in one measure. That is what we are asked to consider at the present moment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A good money-making tariff.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No object can be obtained in my detaining the House by going into the details of this Act.

I was, as the hon. gentleman properly pointed out, misled last night looking at the Bill without investigating the power which is given to the Governor in Council in the Customs Act, and could come to but one conclusion, and that was, that the tariff imposed upon articles imported, and which entered into the manufactures of Canadian products, was confined to those articles which were manufactured for home consumption. Some misapprehension has occurred in reference to the actual meaning of the word 'home consumption.' In reading the Customs Act, and in reading all the tariffs which have been upon the statute-books for years, you will find that 'home consumption' is interpreted to mean an article that is sold in the market from whence it is exported. Hence the tariff provides that the duty levied upon an article must be the fair market price at which it is sold in the country from whence it is exported. That principle having been violated so often, a dumping clause was introduced in the tariff which imposes a duty of fifteen per cent additional upon an article which comes within the meaning of the dumping clauses, or, in other words, after it is sold for export in the country of production at a price which is lower than it is sold for home consumption. But there is something in these regulations which puzzled me, and I should like my hon. friend to explain it. I find that this dumping clause is not applied to articles that are on the free list. Why there should be any reference to a dumping clause in connection with an article which is upon the free list I am at a loss to understand. Take for instance binder twine: That is placed upon the free list. If it is bought in the United States at a sacrifice price, how and in what way does the dumping clause apply? The object in placing an article, whether it be the raw material or not, upon the free list, is to enable the manufacturer in this country to manufacture his wares for home consumption and sell them as cheaply as possible, and consequently it matters not to the revenue, if an article which goes into the manufacture of binder twine, or binder twine itself, if he could buy it at 50 or 75 per cent less for exportation, whether there is a dumping clause or not. I have read this regulation once or twice, and I must confess I have not been able yet to form an opinion as to the reasons why it is made to apply or why it should apply under the circumstances. But there are other things in these regulations—I do not propose to enter into a discussion the tariff itself—to which I propose to call attention. While power is left with the Governor in Council, under the Customs Act, to regulate the rebates of duties paid upon articles which go into the manufacture of goods which are exported, a new principle has been adopted in this proposed tariff, and that is to give a rebate of 99 per cent upon articles which are imported into Canada, and which enter into the manufacture of certain articles as they are mentioned here. Why, instead of putting a clause of this kind in the tariff, could you not have said that the duty on the articles mentioned in this schedule should be one per cent, because that is really the rate which they pay? The answer, I presume, would be this: that if you import, for instance, oil, fuel and other articles, not machinery, that enter into the cost of manufacturing binder twine in Canada, 99 per cent of the duty is given as rebate; but if oil, fuel and other articles, not machinery, are imported into Canada for any other purpose, then the party using them would have to pay the duty. Now in this particular item, without going through the whole of them, oil and fuel—that comprises everything else that is required in the way of raw material in the manufacture of these articles. This would admit into Ontario, from Pennsylvania and into the oil regions all the bituminous coal that they would require, or wood fuel for that matter, though there is very little of it imported—for the manufacture of binder twine. I do not know if the coal oil fields down in the province of Quebec have ever been successfully worked or not, but if they were in operation then the importation of coal would be made free there for that purpose and come in competition with the Nova Scotia coal fields; but if imported for any other purpose it would be dutiable. Let me put it in another way; this rebate of 99 per cent upon articles mentioned in schedule B, when used for the manufacture of the articles specified there, is introducing the principle of drawback, altogether beyond the principle which had ever prevailed in the past. Let me give an illustration. We know of the agitation that arose in the Northwest, and also in certain portions of Ontario and other provinces in favour of free trade in agricultural implements. The government has reduced the tariff 2½ per cent upon certain implements that are used by the farmers in the carrying on of their industry, such as reaping machines, &c. In doing that they met, to the extent of 2½ per cent, the demands which had been made by the agriculturists; but they turn around and more than compensate the manufacturers of agricultural instruments by a rebate of 99 per cent on the articles mentioned here that are imported into the country, and used in the manufacture and completion of those implements, so that it enables the politician when he goes on the stump to say, 'Oh, have we not relieved you of $2½ per cent on the price of every implement that cost you $100?' But I venture the assertion that they will forget altogether to tell them that they more than compensated the agricultural implement makers by the reduction of the duty upon articles that go into the manufacture of these implements. It strongly reminds me of a little incident that occurred some years ago with an Ontario politician, when the issue at the elections was in relation to the usury laws.

My right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce will remember when there was an agitation, principally in Ontario, against the repeal of the usury laws, in the old parliament of Canada and the question arose as to whether there should be free trade in money, or a fixed rate. I found in looking at the Votes and Proceedings that one member had voted to fix the rate at 6 per cent, that during the same session he had voted to fix it at seven per cent, and a little further on to fix it at eight per cent, and then, to cap the climax, he voted to throw out the Bill altogether. This enabled him when attacked by an elector to refer to his vote which met every phase of the question. It is the same here. You may go to the people and say we have done so and so to meet your requirements, but they forget to say they have given the manufacturer, whom they condemned so vigorously, more than a compensating price for decrease in the tariff. I have under my hand the figures showing the drawbacks which the manufacturers would receive on certain articles such as reaping machines, mowing machines, and I find that they are actually better off under the present tariff than they were under the twenty per cent tariff. I notice in a statement made in another place that the government have reduced the duty upon agricultural implements two and one-half per cent, yet the manufacturers increased the price of the article five dollars per machine. The Minister of Customs answered that statement, to my mind, in a childish way. 'Why, he said, if that be the result of reducing the tariff two and one-half per cent, if we reduce it further you will have to pay ten dollars more, on each machine.' Anybody knows very well that the prices of manufactured articles depend to a very great extent upon, first, whether they have an actual monopoly and second on the price of the raw material which enters into the manufacture of the article, or the wages which prevailed, and not upon such a childish idea as that to which I have called attention. This home consumption drawback is tantamount to making free trade in articles which will assist the manufacturer. I have seen in these articles the difference in the preferential tariff. I find that paragraph 1, of section 3, reads as follows :-

1. The rates of customs duties, if any, set forth in column 1, 'British Preferential Tariff,' shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of the following British countries when imported direct from any British country :—

(a) the United Kingdom ;

(b) the British colony of Bermuda;

(c) the British colonies commonly called the British West Indies, including the following:—the Bahamas, Jamaica, Turks and Caicos Islands, the Leeward Islands (Antigua, St. Christopher-Nevis, Dominica, Montserrat and the Virgin Islands), the Windward Islands, (Grenada, St. Vincent and St. Lucia), Barbados, Trinidad and Tobago ;

(d) British Guiana;

(e) British India;

(f) Ceylon ;

(g) Straits Settlements;

(h) New Zealand ;

(i) Cape of Good Hope ;

(j) Natal;

(k) Orange River Colony ;

(l) Transvaal;

(m) Southern Rhodesia;

(n) any other British colony or possession admitted to the benefit of the British Preferential Tariff in Canada, in the manner hereinafter provided ;

What constitutes a direct importation? It evidently does not contemplate by that wording the importation of the article from a British port direct to a Canadian port, by a Canadian or a foreign vessel. I presume this has been interpreted that an importation, if made through the United States or any other foreign country, is a direct importation if it is carried through in bond.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend is correct. That is the interpretation I believe.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the interpretation the late government put on it.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think that interpretation has never been disturbed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But my hon. friend will remember that in order that that interpretation of the law should not apply to sugar, there was a special provision in the old Act that the sugar must come direct and not through in bond. That only establishes the interpretation which I put on that clause, confirmed by my hon. friend; but I notice the fifth paragraph is the result of a motion which was made by the hon. gentleman from Cumberland in the lower house by which he desired to confine the direct importation to goods brought from England or those portions of the empire that enjoy preferential tariff, by British or foreign ships to a Canadian port. The feeling in the House was in favour of that proposition and it is one I think that ought to have been adopted. In order to side-track that motion this proposition was made by the Minister of Finance and added to the clause:

5. On and after a date to be named the Governor in Council, in a proclamation published in the 'Canada Gazette,' the British Preferential Tariff shall apply only to goods brought into Canada by ship direct to a Canadian seaport.

The motion of the member from Cumberland was side-tracked by giving power to the Governor in Council to declare that the direct importation should be as is indicated in this provision. Now that is a very serious and important power that is vested in the Governor in Council. I question very much whether the hon. gentleman will ever put it in force, but they accomplished their object, which was to get rid of the difficulty in the House of Commons when they found a majority of that House in favour of the principle embodied in the resolution. My own hope is that they will enforce it. It would be, first of all, an incentive to shipbuilding, and a great assistance to our shipping interests. Then there is another clause which provides that the article must be the product of those portions of the British empire which enjoy the preference. The words are 'must be manufactured, or a substantial portion manufactured'. Under this clause, articles can be and are brought in an unfinished state from Germany to England and there finished, and sent to Canada as the product of British industry. The law says that at least two-thirds of the value must be the result of British industry, yet the law is constantly violated. If I were in the other House, I should deal with this matter more minutely. I could give many instances in which articles manufactured in Germany are imported under the preferential tariff on the pretense that they have been partially manufactured in England, when in fact all that has been done to them in England has been of a very minor character. So long as there are dishonest importers that clause will be taken advantage of, and it is opening the door to a very dangerous practice. There are a good many other objectionable features in this tariff that I shall not occupy the time of the House in discussing, since there is no object in doing so. There are features of the Act which the Minister of Customs will have difficulty in carrying out. What I object to is the extraordinary power given to the Governor in Council, by which they can set aside the operations of the law, by its repeal. The Governor in Council have the power to abrogate the preferential part of the tariff. They have the power to declare what countries shall be entitled to the benefits of the intermediate tariff, and, if it is ever exercised, it will result in materially affecting the manufacturing industries of this country, because no manufacturer who has invested his money in any industry in Canada will feel safe so long as the Governor in Council has power to put this intermediate tariff in force. The tariff may be reduced to such an extent as to destroy any industry.

However, I am very glad to know that the present government, notwithstanding the fact that some of its members have been strong free traders, disciples of Mill and other political economists of the same stripe on this question, have so far surrendered their convictions—I have every reason to believe they were honest in the views they expressed in opposition—have so far reformed as to become to a very great extent ardent protectionists. 'Oh,' they say, 'we are obliged to continue a protective policy for the reason that you so involved the country in debt that we must have a tariff. I remember when my hon. friend opposite used to preach the doctrine that a high tariff lessened the revenue, and that a lower tariff would increase the revenue by stimulating importations. If the late government left the country in debt to such an extent as to render it necessary to continue the protective policy, what will be the result of the present increased and constantly increasing indebtedness, and what will the tariff be in a very few years? If protection is to be the saving of the Dominion in the future, based upon the debt of the country, then when it goes up a few hundred million dollars more our tariff will have to be higher than that of the United States. If the spirits of our former selves could haunt us, the spirit of the Minister of Trade and Commerce would follow him night and day reminding him of his former utterances on the subject of free trade. This tariff is such a departure from the principle which the right hon. gentleman once professed, such an abnegation of principles which were professed by the Liberal party before they came into power, that I felt myself justified in dwelling at some length upon the subject to-day.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Last night the hon. Secretary of State said that only upon one occasion had the House of Lords exercised their prerogative in dealing with the Tariff Bill, and that was with respect to the paper duties. I was very glad to hear the hon. gentleman mention that one exception, because it gives me an opening to lay before the representatives of the government here, and the members of this House, a few facts in connection with the paper duties in this country. It is well known that paper has become a very important factor in the construction of buildings, especially in the newly settled sections of the country. It is used as sheeting between the lumber on the inside and outside of houses, and in the roofing of buildings for the purpose of protecting the slate or shingles. It not only protects houses from frost, but it reduces the cost of insurance, because it is a safeguard against fire. I bring up this matter in the hope that the acting Prime Minister will exercise the power vested in him under this tariff, either by order in council or otherwise, to put a stop to a paper combination. The subject which I wish to call attention to is one of a very important character. Through amalgamation and the protection given to the paper manufacturers of Canada, they have formed themselves into a combination for the purpose of controlling the manufacture of this sheeting, and tarpaper. The headquarters of the combination is in Toronto, and its agents are Jenkins & Hardy. These gentlemen have so manipulated the business that they have secured the admission of coal tar free of duty. The government, heedless of representations made to them to put a duty on tar produced from the manufacturing of coal gas, admit it free, though our gas companies have to pay duty upon the coal they import, whereas the gas companies of the United States pay no duty on their coal. Consequently, the United States manufacturers can afford to sell their tar at prices that the Canadian manufacturer cannot touch. The Canadian producers of tarred paper can get from the United States all the tar they require for the purposes of their business, and with what result ? Coal tar at one time was worth $3.50 a barrel. I am not in a position to say what the combine pays for it in the United States, but I know that they ask the Canadian manufacturers of artificial tar to supply them with coal tar at from 80 cents to $1.50 a barrel, while the roofers, carpenters, slaters, and contractors who require to use that tar have to buy it through Jenkins & Hardy at $3.50 and $4 a barrel. Then they cannot import felt paper, because there is a duty upon it, and they cannot buy that paper from the manufacturer because he is in the combination, and a dealer cannot buy it in the trade unless he procures it from the combination. He has, at the end of the year, to take a cast-iron oath that he has not bought one single article embraced in the schedule, which I am about to read, outside of the combination, and in consideration of that he gets a reduction of 10 per cent on his invoices at the end of the year. I wish to point out the unfairness with which our Canadian companies are treated. Now this combine have got to be very audacious; they simply tell the trade what they have to pay, and where they must get the different products, and there is no redress. I am glad to know from the hon. Secretary of State that the government can deal with the paper duties, and, if they can, here is their opportunity. I will now read the communication to which I have referred :—

Re Tarred Paper Maunfacturers Association.

Gentlemen,—We beg to advise you that the association now consists of the undersigned and that for the year 1907 the same quantities and premiums subject to the same conditions as were in force for the year 1906 will apply.

Kindly acknowledge receipt on the inclosed form to Messrs. Jenkins & Hardy, Toronto, and oblige.

Yours truly,

Carritte Paterson Manufacturing Company, St. John, N.B., and Halifax, N.S.
Dominion Paper Company, Montreal.
W. J. Findlay & Company, Strathcona.
J. Ford & Company, Portneuf.
Hamilton Tar Distilling Company, Hamilton.
Lockerby & McComb, Montreal.
A. McArthur & Company, Montreal.
Merrick, Anderson & Company, Winnipeg.
Northumberland Paper and Electric Company, Campbellford.
Paterson Manufacturing Company, Toronto and Montreal.
St. Croix Paper Company, Halifax.
Sault Ste. Marie Pulp and Paper Company, Sault Ste. Marie.
Sanderson Manufacturing Company, Sydney, N.S.
The J. C. Wilson Company, Montreal.

These are the people who have combined into what they call the Tarred Paper Manufacturers' Association, and they hold up the trade and the people of the Northwest where this article is used in large quantities in the construction of buildings. Through this combination the settlers of the Northwest are obliged to pay 30 to 50 per cent more than the articles are worth. Surely in the face of what I have pointed out, the hon. Secretary of State might move in this House with regard to the paper duties. I have here a statement respecting coal tar, which has been supplied to me by Mr. John Bain, one of the most careful men in the Department of Customs. For the year 1900 the importations of coal tar and pitch into Canada amounted to 1,615,492 gallons, valued at $73,000; in 1901 $88,000 worth, in 1902 $98,000 worth; in 1903 $61,000 worth; in 1904, which is the latest return I have, $122,598 worth of coal tar and pitch was imported for the purpose of manufacturing tar paper. The total amount was 1,931,027 gallons of tar. In addition to that there was imported of coke the following amounts :

In 1900, $506,000; in 1901, $680,000; in 1902, $842,000; in 1903, $1,222,000; in 1904, $765,123.

Now these gentlemen have so regulated their business that at each point they give to the trade a list of prices free on board of cars. I have read to the House the increase in prices that has been made in the schedule of this year over the schedule of last year. They are feeling so confident in their power that they have taken the liberty of seizing the people by the throat and increasing the prices of what are actual necessities of life, and I have only to appeal to hon. gentlemen who have spent the best part of their days in the Northwest to say what a necessity this very article of tarred paper is to the people settled in that part of Canada. Yet, by an Act of parliament, and by want of care on the part of the government, a combination of this kind is allowed to force the people of the Northwest and everywhere throughout the country to pay two prices for a necessary article.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—To what item in the tariff does my hon. friend refer?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The Secretary of State said last night that we had no precedent for the Upper House changing the tariff, except one, and I say that precedent gives this House an opportunity to make a change with respect to the paper duties.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman did not understand the Secretary of State correctly. He said we have the power to strike out any one article, as they did in the House of Lords in reference to the paper duties. So that if my hon. friend desires to strike out the item of which he is complaining, all he has to do is to move to strike it out.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Surely the hon. gentleman would not ask me to go on and make bald motions without giving some reason for it ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has given a first rate reason why it should be done.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am trying to convince the House—I may not be successful—that there is a combine of the paper trade, and how the tariff has been manipulated by these gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to explain how, by putting a duty on coal tar and other by-products, you can reduce the price of those articles to people in Canada ; and how putting a customs duty on these articles will render the combine less powerful ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—There is a duty on paper; the combine simply make the paper, and because of the coal tar coming in free from the United States they give the Canadian gas companies any price they like for it. The result is that whereas coal tar was sold for $3.50 per barrel by the gas companies some years ago, this combine now offers the gas company in the city of Ottawa something like 80 cents a barrel for it. Practically speaking there is very little of the tar that is the product of the Canadian gas companies, being brought by the tar paper combine. They imported in 1900 coal tar from the United States to the extent of 1,931,000 gallons. If there were no duty on the paper everything would be equal. It is on account of the peculiar conditions that these men have gone into a combine, and they have allotted to each part of the country a certain class of paper to make ; as a result no one can buy any of this paper except through the combine. When there is anything in the shape of a combine in restraint of trade, I know that it is the policy of the government, and it should be the duty of the government, to absolutely destroy any arrangement that is made to compel people to pay two prices for an article which is an absolute necessity in the country. The document I shall now read to the House is a schedule which was issued by and on behalf of the tar paper manufacturers, and signed by Jenkins & Hardy, the agents of the combine in Toronto. They are not manufacturers. They are only the men who manipulate the combine, and get all the companies together. This is dated January 4th, 1906, and reads as follows :

No. 723. January 4, 1906.

Tarred Paper Manufacturers' Association Schedule of prices, &c.—Prices and discounts subject to change with or without notice.

Gentlemen,—We beg to give you notice of the following prices, &c.:

Tarred felt, per 100 pounds—

$2 f.o.b Quebec, Montreal, Campbellford, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Halifax, Nova Scotia, and St. John, New Brunswick.

Two and three-ply ready roofing—

2 ply, per roll, not under 45 pounds, 95 cents f.o.b. Quebec, Montreal, Campbellford, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Halifax and St. John, New Brunswick.

3 ply, per roll, not under 65 pounds, $1.20 f.o.b. Quebec, Montreal, Campbellford, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Halifax and St. John, New Brunswick.

Wire edge, 10 cents per roll extra.

Special wire edge, 2 and 3 ply ready roofing—

2 ply, 55 pounds to roll.

3 ply, 80 pounds to roll.

30 cents per roll extra f.o.b. Halifax and St. John, New Brunswick.

Squares of ready roofing, complete, provinces of Ontario and Quebec—

Consisting of 1 roll, 3 ply, 2 gallons roof coating, 1 pound tin caps and 1 pound wire nails, $1.60 per square.

Consisting of 1 roll, 2 ply, 2 gallons roof coating, 1 pound tin caps and 1 pound wire nails, $1.40 per square.

F.o.b. Quebec, Montreal, Campbellford, Toronto, Hamilton and London.

Wire edge, 10 cents per square extra.

Roof coating—

In barrels, 17 cents per gallon with no charge for packages.

In small packages, 25 cents per gallon. No charge for packages.

Four gallon packages to be the minimum.

F.o.b. Quebec, Montreal, Campbellford, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Halifax, N.S., and St. John, N.B.

Shingle varnish—

Standard barrel, 40 gallons imperial measure, nothing less than this to be used, $4.50 per barrel, f.o.b Quebec, Montreal, Campbellford and Toronto.

Tar—

Standard barrel, 40 gallons imperial measure. Nothing less than this to be used.

Refined tar, $5 per barrel f.o.b. Quebec, Montreal, Campbellord and Toronto.

Coal tar, $4 per barrel f.o.b. Quebec, Montreal, Campbellford and Toronto.

Coal tar in less quantities, 15 cents per gallon f.o.b. Quebec, Montreal, Campbellford and Toronto.

Coal tar, $4 per barrel f.o.b. Halifax, N.S.

Roofing pitch, for province of Quebec and city of Ottawa—

80 cents per 100 pounds or blast furnace, Scotch pitch less 15 per cent off invoice.

60 cents per 100 pounds for gas pitch. No allowance off invoice.

For province of Ontario except city of Ottawa, 80 cents per 100 pounds for any kind of pitch.

No freight equalization will be allowed except upon direct shipments by manufacturers.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, is not a free delivery point, nor is freight equalized thereon. Upon shipments from Sault Ste. Marie freight will be equalized on the cheapest of the f.o.b. points enumerated above.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) JENKINS & HARDY.

I think I have been able to prove to hon. gentlemen that this combine ought to be severely dealt with by the government, and should not be allowed to go on as they have been doing. There is no other way in which they can bring them to task, except to allow the people of this country to import tar paper or felt from Great Britain or anywhere else, free of duty. The duty should be removed on all paper of which these people now have a monopoly. No one is allowed to buy a single pound unless he is in the trade, and the retail dealer has simply to pay the price that the combine dictates to him. He is not allowed to sell it at one cent a pound less than the combine decides upon in the schedule I have read to the House. If a dealer sells any article that these people control at a price under the schedule, then the combine refuses to give him any more business to handle. That is the state of affairs that exists at the present moment, and I think it is one worthy of the attention of the right hon. leader of the government for the time being, and while I will not go so far as to suggest to my hon. friend to remove the duties from the paper, I earnestly call the attention of my right hon. friend to the condition of the trade, which I have endeavoured to do in as brief a manner as possible.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do the hon. gentleman's remarks apply to paper of all descriptions or simply to tar paper ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—All kinds of paper used in the construction of houses, dry paper and tar paper of every kind.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not newspaper ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has evidently made a study of this question, and if he had instructed some member of the legal profession to take up the matter under the criminal law, he could have had those parties prosecuted. There is no reason why that state of affairs should exist. It does not rest with the federal government to put in force the laws of the country. The law says that a conspiracy in restraint of trade is an agreement between two or more persons to procure or do an unlawful act in restraint of trade. The penalties are very serious, and the parties are easily reached. It did not want one-tenth of the evidence that my hon. friend has exhibited to this House, in order to convict these persons and penalize them in large sums. The clause of the statute reads as follows :

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a penalty not exceeding $4,000 and not less than $200, or to two years imprisonment, or, if a corporation, is liable to a penalty not exceeding $10,000 and not less than $1,000 who conspires, combines or agrees with any other persons, and so on, 'to restrain or injure trade and commerce in relation to any such article or commodity,' &c., or unduly prevent or limit or lessen the manufacture of any such article, or unreasonably enhance the price, or to prevent competition in the supply of any such article.

There is the law of the land, and it is open to my hon. friend to institute legal proceedings on a matter in which he seems to have taken for some considerable time a very deep interest. I would like to know if my hon. friend has brought the subject to the attention of the government ? I had not heard of it, certainly, and it does not rest with the federal authorities to enforce the criminal laws of the land. That is a duty of the province. It is open to any individual. Any person can lay an information and go before the grand jury at any of the assizes and have a stop put to this combine. It is idle to blame the government of the day because the combine exists. Wherever we have known combinations to exist, proceedings have been taken. If the hon. gentleman had brought this to the attention of the government, they would have taken action in reference to it. When complaint was made that a combine existed amongst the manufacturers of newspaper, the government at once made a public announcement that paper would be placed on the free list unless they came to a reasonable figure, and it of course broke up the combine. Naturally the federal government cannot be aware of all the criminal laws that are being broken throughout the country, and I presume there are other combines. Every one is so engaged in making money in his own business, and the country is in such a state of intense prosperity, that the demand for goods cannot be supplied, whether it be metals, cottons, machinery or any other line of industry. Manufacturers will tell you that they cannot supply the demand. There is the law and it is open to any one to take proceedings against a combine, and any one who does so will be doing a benefit to the people of Canada, even by disclosing the facts without taking any action.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I have found the item under which this whole thing is framed. Item 199 of the tariff.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Without having any intention of discussing the tariff I should like to take exception to the principle laid down by the hon. Secretary of State with reference to the obligation of private individuals in enforcing the law as to the violation either of the Criminal Code or of the provisions of the Tariff Act. I would ask my hon. friend why has the government taken power—and it has taken power for sometime—to place upon the free list any item regarding which there may be a combination ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before the charge is made, you should say how the government are to be advised of it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the hon. gentleman will look at the Act he will see that the most effective machinery can be set in motion by clause 12.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The government is better able to do that than the individual.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I must certainly take exception to the views expressed by the hon. Secretary of State. My hon. friend might as well say 'Why should not a private individual set the law in motion for a violation of the Customs Act, or of any of the other laws of the Dominion ?' The government is here to administer the laws of the Dominion and to see that the spirit of the tariff is not violated by any combination or trust such as that referred to by the hon. gentleman from Lincoln. I take exception to the general principle laid down.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—But the government must have their attention called to it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite conceive that. But the Secretary of State laid it down emphatically that the duty devolved upon the individual of setting the criminal law in motion, and overlooked the fact——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said it was open to any individual.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—This is certainly an exceedingly important discussion, and I think the hon. gentleman from Lincoln deserves credit for bringing the question before the House. While I admit that the law is as represented by the Secretary of State, everybody knows that any private individual that wants a few dollars worth of tar paper is not going to put the law in motion in order to punish the combination. He knows that he has to struggle with a very formidable organization when he assails that combine, and it will take money, time and trouble to bring these men before the court and have them punished. I give the government credit for the provision they have made. I think they have taken many steps in the right direction, and a step in the direction of providing for the punishment of people who are guilty of forming combinations to rob the consumers of this country is commendable. They have appointed an inspector to protect the farmer in the measurement of binder twine. Why did they do that ? Simply because they wanted to see that the agricultural interest is not robbed, is not cheated in the purchase and use of binder twine. If it is right to protect the farmer from being robbed by a shortage in the binder twine he purchases, would it not be right also to appoint an inspector that would carefully look into all such questions as this and see that information is lodged against the guilty, and that they are punished ? I agree with the leader of the opposition. It is the duty of the government to protect the people of this country from being fleeced by organizations of that kind. The government has done well, and I give them credit for what they have done, but I want them to go a step further and appoint half dozen men if necessary, one for each province, who will quietly and secretly look into these combines, and the moment that he discovers that any combine, such as the one that my hon. friend has called attention to, exists he would take steps to punish them, as the inspector of binder twine endeavours to punish those who sell short weight twine. I give them credit for the appointment of the binder twine inspector. He has rendered good service to the government and to the country in punishing those who try to palm off twine which does not contain the regulation length. Let us have more such appointments. Let us have men who will look after the interests of the consumers of this country. We want to see that our manufacturers get a fair chance, and we want to see them live. I myself want to see every manufacturer in Canada that can reasonably hope to live, get a fair opportunity ; but where men will combine together in an organization such as has been described by my hon. friend from Lincoln, for the deliberate purpose of robbing the people of this country under the operation of the tariff, I say that the article on which they have formed a combine should either be placed on the free list, or a man should be appointed to secretly inquire into the methods and ways of the people who have formed these organizations, and see that they are punished.

Subclause 2, of clause 12 reads as follows :

2. Whenever the Governor in Council deems it to be in the public interest to inquire into any conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement alleged to exist among manufacturers or dealers in any article of commerce to unduly promote the advantage of the manufacturers or dealers in such article at the expense of the consumers, the Governor in Council may commission or empower any judge of the Supreme Court, or of the Exchequer Court of Canada, or of any superior court or county court in Canada, to hold an inquiry in a summary way and report to the Governor in Council whether such conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement exists.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—That is the government, not the individual.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—But I am not disposed to overload the government with so much work. All that I want is that they should do their part and see that the people are protected from thieves who combine to restrict the output or enhance the price of any necessary of life.

I say that we should unitedly endeavour to do that, because there are too many of them in the United States. That country is honeycombed with organizations of this kind. The people there have been robbed —have been pauperized. They are becoming more and more pauperized by a law that permits this condition of things. The combine system is obtaining a footing in Canada No doubt the government, in many cases, passed laws to prevent it, and I give them credit for what they have done in that regard, and want them to go on and do more. I want them to see that the consumers in this country are not made the victims of combinations. I want them to see that the laws which have been enacted to protect the poor man, who is struggling to keep the roof over his head, are enforced. The settlers of the Northwest require tar paper to make their buildings warm to keep them from freezing. They must have it, no matter at what cost, and here you are allowing a combination to load them down so that it is almost impossible for them to procure that necessity. I feel strongly on this question. I hope that some step will be taken to destroy these combinations. No doubt the law permits any man to prosecute a combine, but there are very few among the great mass of consumers who can afford the time and money to take a combine into court. Very few can cope with an extensive organization that is loaded up with ill-gotten wealth taken out of the pockets of the people. Most men would rather submit to the imposition than undertake to put the law in motion against a combination. But the government can afford to do it; they have the country at their back, and the Dominion purse to pay it, and they should do all they can to break up these combinations. I give the hon. member for Lincoln credit for what he has done to expose this tar paper combination.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman tell us what tar paper is made of ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—There are many ingredients I dare say, among them coal tar, but whatever the ingredients are, the product is tarred paper. Coal tar is admitted free of duty, but tarred paper is protected. The duty is heavy, but the materials of which it is composed are admitted free. Being able to import it from the United States free of duty, they cut down the price of coal tar in Canada to a very low figure, while the duty on tarred paper is about 35 per cent.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The leader of the opposition asks whether the government have done anything to prevent these combines. We know full well that they have. They have placed a law on the statute-book under which those who are aggrieved can bring these combinations before the court. Would the hon. member from Wellington have the government act as detectives for the purpose of preventing these things being done ? If they are to appoint inspectors to carry into effect all the laws upon the statute-book, they might employ the whole people of Canada. A more unreasonable charge than that made against the government of the day by the hon. member from Wellington I never heard on the floor of parliament. They are doing everything they possibly can do, and deserve the credit they are receiving at the hands of the majority of the people. If my hon. friend from Lincoln and my hon. friend from Wellington are not satisfied with what is being done by the tar paper manufacturers, we cannot help that. They may suffer ; if they suffer sufficiently severely, very likely they will bring an action in court, and in that way obtain redress.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The government did take action on the question of the paper duties. The publishers of newspapers and other consumers of paper in Canada brought to the notice of the government the fact that a combination existed and the government in that case acted under the provisions of the twelfth section of this Tariff Act. I do not think the hon. Secretary of State was correct in saying that they placed news paper on the free list.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They reduced the duty.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They reduced it, acting under this clause. That is the point, I take it for granted, that the notice of the government having been called to the fact that a combination exists they should have taken power under the 12th section of this Tariff Act to punish the parties by placing the article on the free list, and if the combine goes beyond that, then the criminal law steps in to prevent them. I am not going to argue the question of the combine in tarred paper. If I know anything about it, tarred paper is manufactured of straw principally, with the addition of the tar which is imported from the United States free. Whether the combination to which the hon. gentleman refers has increased the cost of tarred paper, I do not know, but the government have full power to act. Let me ask the government this question : When that odious combine to which attention has been called, in connection with the leather trade, was brought to the notice of the government, why did they not act ? Was it because one of their colleagues was largely interested in it ?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Would my hon. friend tell me when, and under what circumstances, a tariff was imposed on articles coming into the country whereby combination could be formed ? Was it under this government or was it under the government which the hon. gentleman had control of ? He is the last man who should find fault or raise such a point on the present occasion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not like to be personal, or to appear impertinent, but the hon. gentleman does not know what he is talking about.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is one very important feature in this tariff as to which I seek a little light. Clause 3, subclause 2 provides that :

(2) The rates of customs duties, if any, set forth in column 2, 'Intermediate Tariff,' shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of any British or foreign country to which the benefits of such intermediate tariff shall have been extended in the manner hereinafter provided, when imported direct from such foreign country or from a British country;

Then we come to clause 4, paragraphs (c) and (d) :

(c) from time to time, in consideration of benefits satisfactory to the Governor in Council, extend the benefit of the intermediate tariff, in whole or in part, to any British or foreign country the produce or manufactures of which have previously been subject to the rates of customs duties set forth in the general tariff, and from and after the publication of such order in the 'Canada Gazette,' the rates of duty set forth in the intermediate tariff so far as they are mentioned in the said order, shall apply to goods the produce and manufacture of such British or foreign country, when imported direct from such foreign country or from a British country, subject to the provisions of this Act ; and

(d) withdraw the benefit of the intermediate tariff from any country to which it has been extended, and from and after the publication of such order in the 'Canada Gazette,' the rates of customs duties set forth in the general tariff shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of such country, subject to the provisions of this Act.

My difficulty is that no indication is given of the nature of the benefits which are to be conferred by the foreign country. Is it to be in a reduction of their tariff against Canadian products or what? We hear about the intermediate tariff, and we are legislating about it, and I am anxious to know just what it means.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—We will take the case of a country like Belgium. Belgium has a low tariff, probably a good deal lower than the Canadian tariff, taken all round. It would be reasonable that as Belgium admits Canadian products at a very moderate rate of duty that Belgium should get the benefit of the intermediate tariff, and in all probability if Belgium applies for it—we want to be asked, of course, because there may be something to be said on the other side—she would get the benefits of the intermediate tariff after very little negotiation. They have these three grades of tariff as well as ourselves, and in such countries, if they gave us the benefit of their lowest or intermediary tariff, we might find it expedient to give them the benefit of our intermediate tariff either in whole or in part. Speaking unofficially as I might say, and subject to correction, I think it very probable it will be found in the case of these negotiations which will take place between ourselves and other countries, this will occur not infrequently, that proposals will be made to us that certain classes of Canadian goods will be admitted free or at lower rates if we will admit certain classes of their goods on the same terms. Party politics apart, I think both sides will agree that it is as well, looking at the position of these tariffs in other countries, that the government should have this power to negotiate. Of course, it is always in the hands of parliament to deal with these questions, and either condemn or approve of the action of the government after it has been taken ; but that is the object of the clause to which my hon. friend refers.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman for the explanation he has given.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can the hon. gentleman say when the government will probably negotiate for the extension of the intermediate tariff to those countries having such a low tariff as he has indicated? I might say in that connection, it seems to me very essential, in the interests of Canadian industries and the establishment of future industries, that this question should be determined at a very early day, owing to the uncertainty which at present prevails as to what the tariff really is. One can appreciate the desirability of that. For instance, a manufacturer desires to enter upon a particular line of industry to-day. He takes up the tariff and he is bound to calculate the worst against him, namely, his protection is no greater than it appears in the intermediate tariff, and if the matter is left open for a period of years it will operate, in my judgment, against the establishment of industries. If it is to be corried out in the limited degree mentioned by my hon. friend, the sooner it is done the better.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That matter is engaging the attention of the government at present, and with respect to several countries with which we more immediately deal, the opportunity is likely to be taken at the approaching colonial conference of negotiating with the several countries which we think are likely to avail themselves of this offer. As to the case of the manufacturers, we may know that while the intermediate tariff would give these countries certain advantages, the greatest amount of reduction in the case of the intermediary tariff is not very large. I speak from recollection, but I think it rarely exceeds two and a half per cent which is not a very heavy sum on a general tariff ranging from probably twenty-five to thirty per cent on the average. If it were a very large reduction that was proposed by the intermediary tariff, there would be much force in the hon. gentleman's remark, that manufacturers might be seriously embarrassed; but I hardly think they could be said to be seriously embarrassed by fear of the introduction of the intermediary tariff in most cases. My own impression is that these powers which are granted will lead, in many cases, to reciprocity treaties affecting a few articles of importance on either side, rather than to the adoption of the intermediary tariff in general, unless it might be in the case of some country—I gave Belgium as an illustration—where the general tariff is very low, and where they ought, in reason, to be entitled to the benefit of our intermediary tariff. In some cases they might be fairly entitled, I think, to a preference as great as we give to Great Britain; but those cases are very few. The House will do well to remember that the trade of Canada is to a very great extent confined to two or three countries. The vast bulk of our trade, as everybody knows, is done with Great Britain and the United States. I have not the exact percentages at the moment with me, but I should suppose, speaking roughly, that probably eighty-five per cent of our whole trade is done with those two countries, and the remainder of our trade is confined to almost three or four other countries, so that the number of countries that would be affected is not large. Then there is another consideration that has to be borne in mind, that we are still, to a certain extent, hampered in our negotiations by the fact that there are some countries though, I think, not many countries—with which we do a large trade where the most favoured nation clause comes into effect. My hon. friend will see that we have to consider not merely how a particular concession will affect our trade with one country, but how it will affect the trade with all those countries to which the favoured nation clause applies, and that it sometimes requires a good deal of consideration before we can decide whether we should apply this tariff or not. Speaking, as I say, under correction, and not wanting to pledge anybody but myself, I am of opinion that the American interpretation of any reciprocity treaty is the sound one and not the English interpretation. The English interpretation, as my hon. friend probably knows, is this: that if you make a reciprocity treaty with any nation on any number of articles or on any particular article, whether other nations give you the same advantage as the one with which you are concluding a reciprocity treaty or not, you are, by the favoured nation clause, bound to extend to them the same consideration. The Americans hold a much more logical view through their supreme courts deciding that the most favoured nation clause can only apply, as I understand their ruling, to the case of nations which, possessing the most favoured nation clause, give you a reciprocity equal to that enjoyed by the nation with which you conclude a reciprocity treaty. That appears to be fair and reasonable, but the English authority—I do not believe the English judges—but the English Foreign Office have put a different interpretation on the matter, and it is possible that among other things the premier may have to deal, will be the conversion of these English gentlemen to a more rational view of that particular question than they have hitherto been able to take. But John Bull is a tough gentleman to move in any of those matters, and although we have induced him to abandon his position on one or two matters, I am not over sanguine as to what can be done on this question. It would greatly free our hands, however, if we were able to negotiate reciprocity treaties on the basis I have indicated, and I think the reason in the case is wholly in our favour.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does not the interpretation placed upon the favoured nation clause which guides the British government, depend in a great measure upon the language and terms of the provisions of the treaty ? The hon. gentleman knows that under the old treaty, where you found the difficulty in negotiating for better trade conditions with other countries, the British government had in their former treaties included the colonies in the favoured nation clause, and it was the abrogation of that treaty, so far as it affected Germany, Belgium and other countries, that enabled the present government to enact what they called the preference.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That is correct.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My own opinion is that the interpretation, whether by the United States or the British government, depends in a great measure upon the wording of each of these treaties, some of which bind the colonies while others do not, some leaving it optional with the colony to accept or reject the provisions of the treaty.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That is true, but I am speaking practically of the difficulty that occurs in consequence of there being in existence a certain considerable number of treaties containing this most favoured nation clause and, incidentally, I mentioned what, of course, is subject for a fair argument and difference of opinion, that in this one respect and this one alone probably, I might say, the decision rendered by the United States Supreme Court on that rather interesting question was more common sense and far more business like than what I understand to be the obiter dictum, of certain English law officers, on which, I believe, the British government base their refusal. I do not think—and here my legal friends may correct me if I am wrong—that any English court of high standing equal to the Supreme Court of the United States, has ruled against us on the point. I do not think it has ever come before them. Perhaps it cannot come before them in the same way, owing to the peculiar constitution of the United States ; but, undoubtedly, I think it would be largely in our interest, to say the least of it, as something very like a sovereign state, that we should have a free hand in dealing with these matters, and I should be pleased to know that both sides of the House coincided in that opinion. In old times we have had discussions, and I have had occasion, and gentlemen on the opposite side of politics from me had occasion, to express our view that Canada should have a free hand to deal commercially with other countries, and we hope to attain that one of these days ; but we have of course to move slowly, bearing in mind that we are still in a semi-dependent condition in some respects.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But it is a fact that the Law Lords of the Privy Council gave a decision that the Canadian government had no power to enforce their preferential tariff during the existence of the treaties containing the favoured nation clause, the result of which was that the Canadian government had to pay a considerable amount to certain parties who had been taxed at a higher rate for goods imported from Germany.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Is my hon. friend alluding to what happened under his government or our government ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What I mean is this : the present government introduced a Tariff Act in which they enacted what is termed the preferential clause. It was contended I know, by myself here in the Senate, and by some members of the House of Commons, that you had no power to do that so long as the treaties existed with Germany and other countries containing the favoured nation clause, for the reason that the favoured nation clause which was agreed to by England bound the colonies as well as the mother country, or, in other words, it declared that any privilege or concession which was given by Great Britain to any other country had to be given also to those who were parties to the favoured nation clause of the treaty. The colonies were included in that treaty, and the consequence was what I have stated. In the end, the British government denounced these portions of the treaty, and one result of it was that Germany imposed the surtax on goods imported from Canada.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I hope the hon. gentleman will enlighten me on two points. He said, for instance, the intermediate tariff might be applied to imports from Belgium. Belgium has no tariff. Does he mean that the government will wipe out the tariff altogether so far as it relates to imports from Belgium, in order to be on the same basis as Belgium ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Then you apply the intermediary tariff. The second point was this : the hon. gentleman said we may make arrangements with foreign countries, that if they receive goods from us free of duty we will admit their goods free or reduce the tariff : has the government power to make a reduction below the intermediate tariff ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The hon. gentleman said if any country admits some of our goods free, we will admit theirs free.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend did not quite understand what I was referring to. I was referring to the probability, that we would, in making reciprocity treaties, have to do something of that kind, but I did not say that the government have the power. The treaties would have to be ratified by parliament before they would go into effect. All the power we would have is, we could grant to any country whose tariff was sufficiently favourable to us, the intermediate tariff in whole or in part. That is all the power that this particular Customs Act confers on the government. The other matters I was referring to were, the probability, in my opinion, that not much use would be made of the intermediary tariff except in the case of a few countries, of which I gave Belgium as an instance. We would have to deal with them in the fashion of the old reciprocity treaties ; but there, I pointed out, was the considerable inconvenience that when we made a reciprocity treaty with one country, under the English construction of the favoured nation clause, we would have to extend it to a number of other countries, although they gave us no concession at all.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I regret that I stand almost alone. The only gentleman from whom I might expect any support at all, the hon. gentleman from Rockland (Hon. Mr. Edwards), is not here, and we appear to be really the only two who have in our minds not only free trade principles, but free trade memories. I can remember the Liberal party carrying on a vigorous fight for many years for such freedom of trade as is possible for us to get by a low tariff. We were all in favour, pretty much, of a very moderate tariff. While I appreciate very much the intermediate tariff, I regret to observe that this tariff, as a whole, is one which will produce quite as much, if not more revenue than the tariff which it now supersedes.

I have gone over a good many items which I have compared with the tariff in existence. I find that there are a great many more items in this tariff subject to a particular taxation, and I would cite one instance, although one hates to bring up his own profession. I hoped when my hon. friend raised the question about paper, that he was going to refer to the heavy duty on printing paper, which I think should be reduced one-half. The other day I desired to purchase a new machine. The price of it was $3,700. I found that I would have to pay the government under this tariff a tax of over $700 on that machine. That is a very severe tax, and it is particularly heavy upon the printers who are living in small communities and who have to purchase such machines. In larger communities, such as Toronto and Montreal, I presume $700 is nothing ; but I come from a part of the country where we have to look closely at these things, and I regret very much that there are many such items in this tariff, and that it has been framed not so much with due consideration for the general conditions of trade, as to suit in too many cases the special interests of manufacturers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What would the duty have been under the old tariff ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I do not think there would have been any duty at all. I think it was not included.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Was it a linotype ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—No, a monotype. It is an entirely special machine, the like of which is not in general use, and not made in Canada, and it is considerably different from the linotype. I do not propose to go so much on that line as to express my own view that there are two great items of consumption which should be free from duty. One is flour, and the other soft coal. It is really heartrending to read the accounts of the distress which has prevailed during the present year in the Northwest country. We have to pay a heavy duty upon the soft coal which is imported for consumption into this country. It is put on for a special and particular purpose, to help the producer of that article in one part of the country, and it bears particularly heavily upon the province from which I come, inasmuch as we are not able and do not raise coal in any quantity. I find that we imported last year coaldust from Great Britain, 725 tons, valued at $1,719, which paid a duty of $62.88. This is not anthracite. From the United States we imported 746,526 tons, of the value of $487,461, which paid a duty of $83,752, making a total of $83,789.90. But the particular item I desire particularly to refer to is bituminous coal which is used for both manufacturing and heating purposes We imported of that from Great Britain 19,667 tons, of the value of $44,199, on which the duty paid was $6,978. From the United States we imported 4,475,885 tons of the value of $8,366,150, on which there was paid duty to the extent of $2,372,217.99, the total, taking the dust and bituminous and the round coal was $4,495,550 tons, value $8,360,349, and the total duty paid on it was $2,462,992.23. Of that coal 493,351 tons were landed at Sault Ste. Marie, 971,569 at Toronto, 745,449 at Windsor, 57,535 at Brantford, 326,371 at Hamilton, 246,025 at London, 108,020 at Montreal, and at Ottawa 174,171. You see Nova Scotia coal, in the interest of which this duty is largely imposed, cannot be brought at any rate further west than Ottawa, or perhaps further than Montreal, even with the low rates of freight given by the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—It comes by water.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—A great deal of it.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—All of it.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Does not the Springhill coal come by car ?

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Yes, but that is not very much.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—So that this heavy burden falls upon the consumer of coal, who uses it to warm his house, and upon those who are engaged in certain classes of manufacture. I wish very much that the government could have seen its way clear to remedy that grievance. I have also another grievance, and that is the duty upon small fruits, a few cents upon grapes and upon strawberries, and a great variety of fruits. We produce our own fruit late in the season. We import United States fruit, probably more than Ontario fruit earlier in the year. We are always subject to the duty put down for the purposes of the province of Ontario. The government ought to allow that article of food, coming into general use, to come in free of duty. In our own province we send a large quantity to the United States late in the year. Strawberries and all the smaller berries, an article very generally consumed when it is fresh, and when you put a high duty upon fruits it prevents the poorer people from using them. In fact, with regard to tariffs generally, there is a principle in the mind of the tariff maker that he is doing a good thing if he puts a high tax upon luxuries. It always seems to me that that is unfair. The poor man is endeavouring to enjoy the best luxuries he can. The more difficult you make it for him to get them, the less he can enjoy them. My hon. friend from Hastings made the remark that he concurs in the idea that the preference should be limited to goods brought in to our own ports. I admit that the Liberal party, and probably the Conservative party, is of that opinion, but I do not share that view, although the carrying out of it might be of great advantage to the place where I live. But, after all, a man is not bound perhaps to think of himself and his own place ahead of others, and I belive it is for the general advantage of the country, it is for the general advantage of the consumer, and of everybody interested in the extension of trade, to use every place and port at our command, whether it is through a foreign country or otherwise, in order to get our goods as expeditiously as possible, and I do not think it is advisable for us to adopt any policy which might shut off our goods from coming in through the territory of our neighbours. I do not say that confining the preference to our ports would have that effect, but there would be a danger in it. It would be an unfriendly act, on the whole, for which we would have to answer; but looking at the condition of the west, having regard to the fact of how far goods are to be carried, having regard to the fact that goods are sometimes very quickly wanted, I think sometimes it would be better to use every available advantage while we have it in our power, to help our own ports, and I always recognize the willingness and readiness of the government to help the eastern ports, yet I feel that to carry out that policy would not be a good thing, and I am not in favour of it. The hon. gentleman from Wellington pictured a dreadful condition of things in the United States with regard to combinations. Are you not in the way of encouraging the same evil in our own country by the opportunities which we create by our tariff to bring about the same condition of things? May be not, but it appears to me there is always that danger, and that our best course is to avoid that difficulty. As a believer in free trade, I think we are going too far away from that idea in our present tariff.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I must congratulate the hon. gentleman from St. John on the fact that he is a consistent free trader and that his utterances to-day are in accord with his former utterances, something which cannot be said of his friends.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Has the government still the power to remove the duty on coal, if the United States do the same?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No special power was given.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was for some years a standing order, but that was annuled.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—According to what the hon. Secretary of State has said, and what the hon. Minister of Commerce has said, I understand if we came to an understanding about a certain article, supposing that coal was the article, you could do it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When my hon. friend put the question to the government, one minister said yes, and the other said no, and the third minister comes in and decides who is right and who is wrong.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

INSPECTION AND SALE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved the third reading of Bill (AAA) An Act to amend the Inspection and Sale Act. He said: I may say to my hon. friend opposite, that if he particularly desires it, and his friends particularly desire it, and if they have agreed among themselves, I have no objection to insert these words after the clause that he refers to:

'Provided that the Governor in Council may, by proclamation, exempt any province from the operation of said section.'

That is the section which fixes the size of fruit baskets. I desire to be accommodating.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think it would be greatly appreciated in the western provinces, and would enable them to import fruit from the Pacific coast without being handicapped by regulations.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Of course the government reserves the right to see that the hon. gentleman's ideas are correct.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Then I will move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be amended by adding the words suggested by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I enter my protest against extending that power, because it is giving power to the Governor in Council to nullify the provisions of that clause, and by proclamation, by decision of the Governor in Council, the result would be you would have one law in Ontario and another law in the western provinces.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes, we have not infrequently done things of that kind.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am opposed to the principle of having a law apply to one section of the country and not to the other.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—As a general principle, the hon. gentleman is right, but we have half a continent to deal with, and circumstances may and do arise in which it is desirable to exempt at particular times, particular sections of the country from the operations of the law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So has the United States, and a more extensive and varied climate, and I know of no tariff that does that in the United States.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Would the hon. gentleman apply that to coal?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I would like to very much, but I have not the power.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—You are taking the power now.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The government is taking power now to admit something under certain conditions.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It does not interfere with the tax. It is no question of revenue. It is simply a provision as to the size of the basket. It is not a matter of revenue.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Still the same provisions could be made, as intimated by the hon. gentleman, in the Tariff Act as well as in this. The Governor General in Council could take the power to remove the duty on an article imported in certain parts of the country.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—West of Montreal.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I will mention that idea to the Minister of Finance and see how he takes it.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (69) An Act respecting the Quebec Oriental Railway Company, as amended.—(Hon. Mr. Tessier.)

Bill (109) An Act to amend the Yukon Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

It being 6 o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

OLD AGE ANNUITIES.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. McMullen: That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of all correspondence in the hands of the government, or any department thereof, on the question of old age pensions to aged residents in Canada, or retiring allowance in any form.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In the admirable speech which we heard yesterday afternoon from the hon. member from Middlesex, he pointed out very truly the progress, or the change rather—some might not call it progress—in public sentiment with regard to the responsibility and duty of government in reference to a great many things. It is absolutely true that what would have been called a revolutionary programme fifty or a hundred year ago, and what would have been characterized as paternalism or even socialism ten or a dozen years ago, is now within the domain of practical political science. This shows the movement of the present generation, the trend of opinion upon public questions. As an evidence of that, I refer to the question of state ownership of railways. Germany owns all the railways in that country, and for a long time the railways of Germany have been well managed and have resulted in large revenues to the state.

We have often been told when we talked of government ownership of railways, that that might do very well for a semi-despotic country such as Germany is, but in a democratic country like Canada, the principle could not be worked to satisfaction. The Australian commonwealth owns its railways, and up to a recent date, we were told that the principle of state ownership was not working satisfactorily there, and that there was a very considerable deficit in the earnings of the railways of Australia. Only a few days ago, the monthly report of the Department of Trade and Commerce came to my hands, in which we have a report from J. S. Larke, the agent of the department in Sydney, wherein he gives the figures in reference to the working of the Australian railways for the year recently closed. From it we find that in the last year the railways of Australia paid working expenses, interest upon about $600,000,000 expended in construction, and yielded a net revenue to the state of over $2,000,000. Public ownership of railways must be conceded as working well in Australia.

This is not the first instance in which the parliament of Canada is asked to sanction the principle of state insurance, for that principle is certainly involved in the draft Bill that we are considering in this academic way ; in 1893, a system of civil service insurance was adopted by the parliament of Canada, and though we have not the complete returns on the subject—at least I have not had time to consult them—we have reason to believe it is working satisfactorily. The proposal now before us, is only following on the line that was then laid down.

I cannot agree with the right hon. gentleman who has submitted this draft Bill, when he said that it has no connection with state insurance, good, bad or indifferent. Section 3 provides that contracts may be conditional upon the continuance of human life, and section 4 says that government annuities shall not be payable to any person under sixty years of age. Very few persons would purchase term annuities which could only take effect after the age of sixty. The main scope of the Bill is to provide a certain kind of life insurance by the state.

The right hon. acting Premier stated in this discussion that he had looked very carefully over the returns of the various insurance companies of Canada, and had found that absolutely nothing was being done by these organizations in the way of selling annuities. My hon. friend did not look into the matter with sufficient care or he would have found that there is a very considerable business done by the Canadian insurance companies in selling annuities. I find that at the close of the year 1905—for that is the latest return available with regard to insurance—the reserve held by the Canadian companies for annuities sold is $2,569,196.

We turn to England, and there we find that the business of selling annuities by government has been long in operation, a practice differing not very materially, after all, from the measure that is now before us, except that in it, the attempt is made to introduce the principle of old age provision in an annuity Bill. I find by a reference to Whittaker that the latest returns show that there are £13,975,821 value of annuities outstanding in England at the present time. Some are life annuities, and some terminal annuities, but they are beig greatly reduced year by year. The British government, for one purpose or another, took that method of raising loans. I find that in England annuities are sold by fifty-three insurance companies, and sold to a very large extent, and two of our Canadian companies, the Sun and the Canada Life, are in the list of the fifty-three companies that are selling annuities in England.

I shall now say a few words on the draft Bill that has been submitted. After giving it a very careful consideration, I am ready to admit that there are some provisions in it that may be found to be worthy of incorporation in any legislation on this subject that we may enact in the years to come. I do not expect to see any such legislation enacted in a great hurry, but there are some provisions in this Bill which I have no doubt will find their place in such an Act. There are others, however, which I think would be very objectionable and not suited to our purposes.

The gravest objection to the Bill is that, in my opinion, it would not benefit to any great extent the class which, by its title and the description we have had of it, it is intended to serve—namely, the poorer people. It will prove, on trial, to be a system of annuities for the middle class, and I believe it will not reach the class we have more particularly in our minds to help, and whose interests we are most anxious to advance. My reason for thinking so is, that without some pressure or compulsion very few would take advantage of it, and the opportunity which it offers over that already given by the insurance companies is very slight indeed.

Furthermore, an attempt to combine in one measure the sale of annuities which would be advantageous to the investing public and provisions for the purpose of selling deferred annuities to wage-earners, cannot be made to work satisfactorily. In order to point out why I do not think this can be done, I will illustrate.

Imagine the case of two men, one of whom, from maturity on by small annual payments contributed money which compounded, would yield him in his sixtieth year an annuity of $400. He pays his money year by year until he reaches the age of sixty. His neighbour on the other hand never pays a dollar to the fund, but at sixty years of age comes with a sum sufficient to buy an annuity of $400. The two are precisely on a par as far as their contributions are concerned. The poor man who pays by small instalments throughout his life, has by the accumulation of interest, got enough to his credit to buy a $400 annuity, while his wealthy neighbour with four or five thousand dollars can do the same thing by a single payment; but still the two may not be in the same position. The poor man's health may be broken, and it may be almost certain that he will not live long enough to receive one single payment. He has no option, while the man who has his money in his pocket at the time will only buy an annuity if he is in first class health. That shows the difficulty of dealing with the two classes of people under the one provision.

These are the points that tell against what I may call the principle of the Bill. There are several matters of detail that I need not dwell much upon, because we know that in attempting legislation on such an important question it is impossible for any government or minister to hit upon a measure that does not require, when it comes before a deliberative body, to receive serious amendment. I think the fourth clause of the Bill is not adapted to the sale of annuities; it must have been copied from Australian of New Zealand legislation which, unlike this draft, provides for a pension without contribution. I cannot see any meaning in the reference to an annuitant in that section.

I said a moment or two ago that I doubted whether the government, under a proposition of this kind, could do very much better than the insurance companies. My reasons for thinking so are that the government is bound, under this plan, to invest the money in government securities, or at least to give a preference to the securities of Canada or the provinces of Canada and the United Kingdom. Of course, there is a discretion to invest otherwise, but they are not given the same freedom of investment as the insurance companies have. The insurance companies earn, on an average, four and a half per cent on their investments. That is a rate, which the government could not earn in the present state of the money market.

My right hon. friend, the acting Premier, said in discussing this matter that he thought the rate allowed to annuitants would be three and a half per cent. I presume the government would allow interest at that rate, and compound it on behalf of those investing their money, while they would probably have to invest the money in such securities as would not yield much more than three per cent. There would probably be a loss of one-half per cent, counting nothing for profit and management. My reason for thinking the government could not do much better for the people than the companies are doing at present, is that while they would not have the expense of commissions, and would not require profit, on the other hand the insurance companies are able to earn more on investments. Hence the advantage to the government would disappear.

However, that does not say the government should not do it. The government will be at a disadvantage in another respect; they could not have canvassers; if they had, I fear they would not be of very much service, for this reason, that agents who would require to earn commissions would give their attention more to wealthy people where their transactions would be nearer the $400 mark and where they would receive larger commissions, and less to poor people, where the commission would be smaller.

I am not wedded strongly to any proposition on this subject, and as I advance in the discussion of it, hon. gentlemen will see that the number of schemes which have been elaborated in other countries are now so numerous that it would be a venturesome thing for any one, at this stage of the discussion in Canada, to indicate what the plan should be, but it does seem to me that it would be necessary to have a little compulsion behind it, and that all should be required to contribute, let it be ever so little. Only in that way can we bring a large number of people under the operation of the law who could pay at most a very small sum during the earning portion of their lives, and who, by the payment of these very small amount, should, at the age of sixty or sixty-five, or seventy, receive their insurance I need not say that the government and employers of labour should assist.

I have made an analysis of this Bill. My reason for doing so is in order that my understanding of it may go on record. My analysis is this :

1. Any person may purchase an annuity, if the minister approves, to take effect at the age of 60, for a sum not exceeding $400.
2. Such annuity may be for a term of years or for life.
3. Payment may be made for such annuity by single premium or may be distributed over an indefinite period of years.
4. The actuarial basis for the payment of such premium shall be settled by the Governor in Council.
5. The Governor in Council may discontinue the sale of annuities without reference to parliament.
6. Should the administration of the annuities fund result in a loss, such loss may be made good by the issue of a Governor General's warrant without reference to parliament.

This is the substance of the draft Bill submitted for our consideration. To criticise in detail a hypothetical scheme would be in large part wasted effort. It will serve a better purpose, more forcibly emphasize the direction in which future legislation must go, if I bring before the House the precedents already established, not simply in bureaucratic Germany, but also in our sister colonies New Zealand and Australia, not simply in progressive Denmark but in conservative England.

Then, I come to say a few words upon the German plan. The genius of the German people is, in my opinion, nowhere better shown than in the system of old age insurance which they have adopted and carried, I might almost say, to perfection, and under which 16,000,000 people are now insured.

The German scheme is :

1. Compulsory assurance of all working people, including clerks (excepting infirm persons and those entitled to official pensions), who are over 16 years of age and earning not more than $500 per annum.
2. The pension fund is drawn from three sources:—
(a) An imperial contribution of £2 10s. per person.
(b) The employers of labour.
(c) The employed.
The contributions of the employers and employees are in equal amounts, and are on a scale corresponding with the earnings of different classes of labourers.
3. The pension age is 70.
4. The period of contribution is 30 years, or 1,200 weeks.
5. Transitory provisions were made to allow the effects of the law to be felt as soon as possible.
6. Voluntary assurance under the law is allowed to small employers.
7. Pensions are also given for sickness under the law.

I may say, in a general way, that the amount of the contribution is very small. At sixteen, every wage-earner becomes liable to pay, and the law is very fairly applied. For forty weeks in each year contribution is required to be made. Of course anybody can make the contribution for fifty-two weeks in each year if he is able, but twelve weeks are allowed for sickness or lack of employment. Consequently, when anybody makes 1,200 payments he has then got his pension earned, but it does not take effect until he is seventy years of age. The amount of the pension is small, the largest quota not exceeding $1.25 per week, but, of course, the cost of living is less in Germany than in Canada or the United States, and, probably, the insurance is as valuable as a payment fifty per cent greater would be in this country.

As already indicated there was a transitory provision incorporated in the German law which provided that persons who, when the law come in force were advanced in age, could come in and get a status under the law independently of contribution. In other words, when the Act came into effect in 1891, all persons who were seventy years of age, and who had paid municipal taxes for a number of years, were admitted to participate immediately, and the same principle was applied to all those down below that age, until an age was embraced which admitted of thirty years of contribution. By this means, a considerable number of people became at once entitled to insurance. I may remark that hand in hand with old age insurance goes invalidity insurance, which is proving a great advantage. After paying to the fund for five years, or two hundred weeks, a person on becoming an invalid is permanently entitled to the pension. Hence the entire questions of invalidity and old age insurance are covered by the German plan.

Many people think, and I know such has been the opinion in England, that British people would not stand compulsion. All I have to say is, that the German contribution is so small, and such a vast amount of good arises from it, that I see no reason why any people, living under a legislature which they choose themselves, should not be willing to submit to compulsion in the matter. The goal being to attain the happy position that Germany is in now, where every man who earns not more than five hundred dollars a year is insured against old age and invalidity. There are, as I have said, sixteen millions of people in Germany insured, so that when they reach seventy years of age, or become invalid, a living is provided for them for the rest of their lives. The burden on the state is only two pounds ten shillings per annum for each person who reaches the age of seventy. The burden on the wage-earner and his employer begins at sixteen and ends at forty-six. Between the ages of forty-six and seventy his little contributions are compounding so that when he reaches 70, he receives the amount due him, with the state contribution added, and has what is considered in Germany a nice pension.

New Zealand has a pension scheme and we might think New Zealand a better example for us to follow than Germany. The preamble of the New Zealand law indicates exactly what it is. The preamble affirms that :

> It is equitable that deserving persons, who, during the prime of life, have helped to bear the public burdens of the colony by the payment of taxes, by their labour and skill, should receive from the colony a pension in their old age.

That indicates that no contribution is called for from the individual. The Act was passed after a long struggle. It has been amended from time to time, but the authorities to which I have reference—and the library has a great deal of information on the subject in the shape of official documents, as well as other very ably written books show that the controversy is practically over in New Zealand, and there is now scarcely any difference of opinion on the subject.

In Australia two of the states, New South Wales and Victoria, before the establishment of the Commonwealth, had an old age pension scheme very like that of New Zealand, only that the pension was larger. Since the establishment of the Commonwealth, other states have come in which had not an old age pension scheme, and, as a consequence, the question has been taken up by the Commonwealth, and only within the last few days a report has come through the news columns of our papers that the Royal Commission appointed by the Australian Commonwealth on the subject has reported in favour of an elaborate scheme, to have application to the entire Commonwealth. This is an extract copied from an Ottawa paper :

> The royal commission recommends a scheme of old age pensions for the commonwealth of Australia, to be paid out of the consolidated revenue, with a maximum of $2.50 a week, payable at 65, or at 60 in cases of permanent incapacity. Payments are to be made fortnightly through the post office, and the total income, including the pension, must not exceed $260. The cost is estimated at $7,500,000 a year, and the pension is to be granted as a matter of right and not as a charity. Restrictions are imposed as regards persons of drunken or disreputable habits, the allowance may be suspended on cause and a penalty is proposed for supplying any pensioner with intoxicants. The commissioners do not consider that the grant of pensions will discourage thrift, and suggest that a spirit of independence will be encouraged by the establishment of an assurance system enabling those who work to provide for old age, to do so under the assurance of a government guarantee.

I gather from this extract that the insurance scheme is in part, perhaps, like the German plan of old age insurance and is intended to supplement the pension provision.

Then we come to Denmark, and this is one of the countries in Europe which has in operation a scheme of old age pensions for many years. The Danish scheme is embodied in the description I am now about to read :

> Any person who, having completed his sixtieth year, is without means of providing himself or those immediately dependent upon him, with the necessaries of life, or with proper treatment in case of sickness, on condition that he is in enjoyment of the rights of a native born subject, shall, in accordance with the regulations set forth below, be entitled to receive old age assistance.

The system differs from nearly all others, inasmuch as it makes provision not only for the person himself, but for those dependent upon him. It calls for no contribution, but it is only those who are necessitous that are allowed to take advantage of it. I have a short analysis of the Danish system which I have made out from the description given of it in various publications, and it reads in this way :

> 1. The Danish law makes the needs of the person and those depending on him the sole ground for receiving a pension.
> 2. No contributions are required.
> 3. Private income of the beneficiary must not be more than $27.50 per annum.

4. Pensions are paid one half out of national and one half out of local taxation.
5. The State contribution not to exceed £130,000.
6. The pensioner must not have been the recipient of poor law relief for ten years.
7. He must not be less than 60 years of age.
8. He must not be a vagrant or convicted of a dishonourable offence.

British statesmen have been wrestling with this question for a great many years. The first tangible plan put before the people of Great Britain is called the parliamentary scheme, and the genius that stands behind it is Joseph Chamberlain. His proposition has not been carried out. In fact it has been superseded, temporarily, I think, in popular favour by some other schemes more radical than it is, but it has the benefit of great simplicity, and it would seem to me that if it had compulsion behind it, it might prove as good for England as the National Old Age Assurance has proved for Germany. The main provision of the Chamberlain scheme is as follows :

(a) A cash deposit of £2 10s. at 25, and an annual payment of 10 shillings a year up to 65. The state to credit the depositor with £10 at the date of his deposit. Interest would be allowed upon the total at 2½ per cent. This would work out a pension of five shillings a week at 65.

That is the Chamberlain scheme. You will notice that it differs from the German plain in giving a very much larger amount from the treasury than the German government gives, and it provides that the amount given by the government shall be contributed at the time of the deposit by the wage-earner himself, and shall go on accumulating in the same way. The German plan provides that £2 10s. (twelve dollars and fifty cents) be added to the pension when it becomes payable and the money of the government does not come into the fund at all, but is paid direct to the insured when he reaches the age of seventy. There are two other plans embraced in the Chamberlain programme, one of which is similar to the above, except that the cash deposit is set at five pounds. It is as follows :

(b) The same except that the cash deposit would be £5. This would admit of other benefits beside the five shillings a week at 65, the chief being a provision for widows and children.

I may say, as hon. gentlemen who give the subject much examination will ascertain, that there have been many commissions appointed by the British government to deal with this question during the last twenty years. The first important investigation was what was called Lord Aberdare's Commission, of which the present king was a member. This body made a very exhaustive examination of the question and reported in favour of leaving things as they were; that is, of continuing the present care for the poor by outdoor and indoor relief. On the presentation of that report, a perfect storm of disapproval was heard from one end of England to the other. I have looked over some of the speeches that were delivered at that time by many of the public men of England, and these speeches were met with cries of 'shame,' and hisses of disapprobation whenever they described the finding of that commission, which had in fact come to the conclusion that there was no remedy for the deplorable condition that exists in England with regard to the relief of the poor.

That led to Rothschild's Commission, but this inquiry was hampered by parliament, by the terms of the reference, so that there was no really good and workable scheme which had recommended itself strongly to the public in England that was not shut out in advance. The consequence was that this commission reported that while they had a hundred schemes before them, no one which they were free to entertain, commended itself to them, and it was a second commission without any result.

Then came what is called the select committee of the House of Commons, of which the Hon. Henry Chaplin was chairman. This committee recommended a scheme which corresponds, in the main, with the Danish plan. I have gone over the report and find there was a great deal of evidence submitted before that committee with regard to the working of the scheme in Denmark, where state pensioning had been in force for many years. This is an analysis of what is called the Select Committee scheme, which, up to a very recent time, held the field in England. The provisions require that the recipient :

1. Is a British subject.
2. Is sixty-five years of age.
3. Has not within the last twenty years been convicted of an offence and sentenced to penal servitude or imprisonment without the option of a fine.
4. Has not received poor relief unless under exceptional circumstances during twenty years prior to the application for a pension.

5. Is a resident within the district of the pension authority.

6. Has not an income from any source of more than ten shillings a week, and

7. Has endeavoured to the best of his ability or by the exercise of reasonable prudence to make provision for himself and those immediately dependent on him.

The report of this plan elicited, as I have said, a great deal of interest and approbation. It was followed by a Departmental Commission, to ascertain how much it would cost. This was under the chairmanship of Sir Edward Hamilton, and its report is a valuable contribution to the history of this question. It reported that there were about two million people in England over sixty-five years of age; that 650,000 would come under the provision of the Chaplin scheme, and that from ten to thirteen million pounds sterling would be required to carry it out. Another candidate for public favour in the form of a scheme came from the organized workmen. It was backed mainly by the labour circles, and it may be said to have absolute possession of the field at the present time. It is called the Universal Endowment plan, of which Mr. Chas. Booth is the principal advocate. This statement is a fair analysis of the scheme as propounded by Mr. Booth :

It is, however, not too much to say that while the demand for pensions remains in full strength, it is the non-contributory schemes that now hold the field. The stones which the builders rejected had first to become the corner stones of the new building if there is to be a building at all.

The plan usually associated with the foregoing argument is the granting of a pension of 5 shillings a week to all who, being English born and having had their working lives in the United Kingdom, reached the age of 65 years.

It means that every man from Rothschild down who reaches the age of sixty-five years would be given five shillings a week, the argument being that while the wealthy people got this annuity, they paid its equivalent in taxes, and that it would relieve the government of difficulty in determining who were entitled to relief and who were not. They would be sure to catch the poor, and if they caught the rich it would not matter, because they simply got their own money already paid in taxes. It was a very captivating proposition, and, naturally, it might be expected to carry the field among the labouring classes in England, as it has practically done.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The labour people paid no money into that scheme.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No. It would increase the taxation enormously, but the well-to-do people who would pay the taxes would get the major part of their money back. This question cut a very important figure in the recent elections in England, although about it we knew or heard very little. While the question of fiscal reform was prominent, and whilst other questions of which we have heard a great deal were also engaging public attention, the labour people were led by their leaders to support the free traders on account of their approval of this scheme. Chamberlain had originated what is called the parliamentary scheme, and which was very popular for a time, but others had gone farther, and what was called the universal endowment scheme, which had the support and approbation of the labour party and also the support of a great many others, became popular. It was said by the well to do classes, 'Well, it makes no difference; they will call on us for increased taxes, but it will come back to our own pockets, and all that will be lost will be that which is left in the hands of the absolutely poor.' Finally I refer to the following resolution : Moved by Mr. O'Grady, of Leeds, in the House of Commons, and passed unanimously May 15, 1906:—

That in the opinion of this House a measure is urgently needed in order that out of the funds provided by taxation, provision can be made for the payment of a pension to all aged subjects of His Majesty in the United Kingdom.

That is, therefore, the position of the question in England. Public opinion is almost unanimous on the necessity of making old age provision, but there are so many schemes, and the advocates and supporters of these schemes are pressing their views with such pertinacity, that it is very hard for statesmen to make a selection. I presume it will only be a question of time in England, because there is no country under the sun where some provision, better than they have now, for the care of their aged poor is more necessary than it is in England, of which I will have something to say at a later stage. The question is forcing itself on public attention everywhere. I refer the House to what Mr. Asquith said, speaking on Mr. O'Grady's motion :

This is one of the subjects few and rare, I am sorry to say, as to which I believe there is no difference of opinion in any quarter of the House . . . To my mind the most tragic things in our modern social condition are the figures of the man who wants work and cannot find it, and of the man who is past work and has to beg for his bread and his bed.

Not only has state provision for old age the warrant of practise, and unanimity of opinion in other countries; in this country too we have not far to seek for precedents. For what it is now proposed that the state should do for its aged citizens in general has already been done for various classes, partly by public action, partly on the initiative of private associations, and partly on the volition of wise and generous men. Of this I may cite a few instances.

The great fallacy of the United States Declaration of Independence was the statement that all men were born free and equal. Some men are born with perverted moral natures. Others through environment become perverted ; there are persons in every country—and we have our share of them—who are possessed of perverted moral natures, and they become the criminal class. We have to provide for them. We do not call it a pension, but we create courts for the purpose of settling the degree of their guilt, and we create reformatories, jails and penitentiaries for the purpose of disciplining them and keeping them out of harm's way and from doing harm. We practically pension them at our expense, although we do not call it by that name. Then, there are other people that are born with physical or mental weakness. For them we provide hospitals, infirmaries and lunatic asylums, and that is the way we tax ourselves to care for them. I am not now discussing what will have to be considered in the settlement of this question, the determination of federal, provincial and municipal obligations.

I am simply speaking about the obligation of the state, as we would call it, leaving the obligation to be determined as between the state, the province and the municipality. Then, we have men whom we set aside as defenders of our country on the field of battle ; we pension them. There is no discussion over the propriety of our doing so. Then, we have other classes. We have judges. As the hon. gentleman from Middlesex says, we not only pay the judges of our land very good pensions after retirement, but, in certain circumstances, after reasonably long service, and, reaching a certain age, we pension them at the full amount of their salary without any contribution whatever.

Only two years ago the government now in power in Canada adopted the system of pensioning the Ministers of the Crown. It is true, it has been abandoned, but, as stated by the Minister of Finance, only temporarily, he believing that it will certainly be re-enacted before very long, because it was, as he claimed, founded on principle and right. That pension was not dependent upon any contribution whatever by the parties interested. The parties to be pensioned were not to pay a contribution of any kind, not even as they do in the civil service.

We know what we have been doing with the civil service in Canada. We have had a Superannuation Act. Abuses of it rose under both parties. Instead of manfully removing the abuses, we changed the law, and we have a measure at the present time which still provides for retirement, but which is not as good as the old law was.

Then, our banks and our railways pension their employees. Some banks require their officers to contribute, and others do not. We know all about the pension scheme of the Grand Trunk Railway. We have had it discussed very fully during this week, and it is not necessary to enlarge upon it. Only this session this parliament has provided an elaborate pension scheme for the Intercolonial Railway, out of a fund provided by joint contributions of the railway and the employees. Many of the United States railway companies have well considered pension systems, and no great railway can go on very long without such provision. I have been told—and my hon. friend from Middlesex can put me right in a moment—that the province of Ontario has a system of pensioning its aged teachers.

Hon. Mr. KOSS—It has been abolished.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Because, I assume, few persons make teaching a permanent profession. I have looked into the Carnegie system of pensions at Pittsburg. To the infinite credit of Carnegie, he established a system of pensions many years ago and has worked it out in the utmost detail. That pension system, is one of the results of Carnegie's work, wherein he sets an example to the employers of labour on the continent of America. There are many instances of the kind in Great Britain at the present time.

I see that a measure was introduced in the legislature of Nova Scotia only a couple of weeks ago providing for a commission to outline a plan of pensioning the coal miners of the province. I am told that they have already provident associations amongst themselves, through which the coal companies make some contribution, but it is proposed in the measure that is now before the legislature of Nova Scotia that there should be a government plan. The scheme contemplated so far as it is now outlined is simply this, that the government shall furnish two cents, the men two cents, and the company two cents each per day. At the age of sixty-five, the men are retired on a pension equal to what this money accumulating by compound interest, will earn. The men are required to come in at seventeen and to go out at sixty-five, and if they contribute the premiums during that time, two cents a day from three sources would work out a very handsome pension.

My hon. friend the right hon. acting premier, in the very interesting address which he delivered to the House on this subject some weeks ago, drew a sharp line of distinction, as he claimed there was such a line to be drawn between paying pensions to the wage-earners and paying pensions to public officials, and the line of distinction he drew was that in the case of public officials it might be claimed that they were only getting what was their own; that they had not received sufficient remuneration while they were in the employ of the government, and therefore, they had a right to be taken care of in their old age.

For my part I cannot admit the fairness of the distinction at all. The wage-earner of the country contributes to the growth and wealth of the country, and he contributes to the taxes of the country, and any provision that is made for him in his old age may just as rightly be claimed as money he was fairly entitled to for the service he has rendered, the fortune he has enabled his employer to make, and the taxes he has contributed to the government of the country, as in the case of the public servant. In opposition to the view of the right hon. gentleman I submit the words of Bismarck:

> The state must take the matter into its own hands, not as almsgiving, but as the right that men have to be taken care of when, with the best will imaginable, they become unable to work. Why should the regular soldier, or the public official, have a right to be pensioned in his old age, and not the soldier of labour?

Now, there are many classes who are not included in this enumeration of those who already receive pensions in some way or other. In fact, the great body of mankind are the persons who follow low humble pursuits, and they are to be found in the workshop, on the farm, in the mine, behind the desk or counter, on the deck, in the lumber camp, in the teaching profession and in the performance of the duties of the sick-room. They do not engage in the wild scramble for wealth ; they are not to be found on Wall street, or around the stock exchange. They are not interested in railway corporations or banks. They are working their way along the cool sequestered paths of life; their sober wishes have never learned to stray from these path-ways, and when old age overtakes them, they are not generally to be found in the possession of any considerable fortune. They are indeed often found in a deplorable condition when that ill-matched pair of disagreeable visitors, age and want, come knocking at the door.

There still remains another class, not a very large one, but very important. It is composed of those who, animated by an inordinate love of gain, devote their lives almost wholly to the accumulation of money. These great accumulations are made mainly through watering stock, combinations in trade, and control of public utilities. I hold that it would be fair and reasonable, especially in this country, to levy a tax on this class in order to provide means to keep the aged poor from want, to levy a tax which would fall fairly and evenly upon the wealthier classes of the country.

In Canada that would be equitable, for this reason : that incomes are not reached by our federal system of taxation. Our taxation in Canada, as we all know, is mainly produced from Customs and Excise duties, which are necessarily imposed in order to give a reasonable, or what my hon.

friend the acting premier would have called once in his life, incidental protection. At all events, we are pretty well agreed that it is necessary in this country to raise the major part of our revenue in that way, first because it is an easy way of doing it, and secondly because it furnishes protection to our industries.

In England they have few duties of that kind, and consequently the poor man is not taxed as heavily in proportion as he is in Canada. I think it would be only fair for the wealthy classes of the country to contribute in the way of a moderate income tax. By that means the people of Great Britain raise the greater part of their revenue, and the burden does not fall very sensibly on the poorer people. In Canada the burden falls upon rich and poor almost alike. There are a few exceptions, where the wealthy are larger contributors to the revenue; but where the poorer classes use liquor and tobacco—and unfortunately in our country they do so largely—they are, in many cases larger contributors to the revenue of the country than the millionaires are.

I do not think there could be the slightest complaint in Canada if a system of old age pensions was established which would not come into effect to-day, but would begin to be payable twenty or thirty years after this. That would be making hay while the sun shines. There should not be any complaint if a reasonable tax were placed upon the incomes of the country, in order to provide whatever contribution the government might make to that fund. I do not think that contribution need be large. A moderate tax would be sufficient, for I believe firmly that the wage-earners should contribute also and that there is a heresy in the doctrine of the labour party in England in advocating a scheme by which the beneficiaries should not contribute. Both the labourer and the employer should contribute, and probably the employer would contribute sufficiently and the burden would be fairly distributed if the tax were imposed upon the wealthier classes. In this connection I have turned up the opinion expressed on a kindred subject by Edmund Burke many years ago. He said:

> Not only so of the state and statesmen, but of all the classes and descriptions of the rich; they are the pensioners of the poor, and are maintained by their superfluity. They are under an absolute, hereditary, and indefeasible dependence on those who labour.

Nobody can deny that. It is as true as any axiom that can possibly be laid down, and in view of what the rich owe to the poor, and the inadequate amount that comes to the labourer out of the result of the joint exertion of labour and capital, there could be nothing wrong in requiring the rich to contribute out of their abundance, towards putting our country in the same position as Germany occupies, and I doubt very much if the wealthy people in Canada would stand in the way on account of the small amount they would have to contribute.

Many objections have been offered in the course of this discussion to a proposition of this kind. One of these was stated by the acting premier in his introduction of the question, when he said that conditions are very different in Canada from what they are in other and older countries. If that is true—and we all admit it to be true—we would have so much the less to do, so many the less to provide for. But there is nothing better established to-day by students of political science, than that progress and poverty go hand in hand, and just in proportion as you increase the millionaires and multi-millionaires of the country, so you increase the amount of poverty at the other end of the social scale.

Let me point to the argument with which the opponents of Mr. Chamberlain have met him in England. He says that England must take care of herself and adopt fiscal reform, or other nations will get ahead of her. He has been answered by his opponents that statistics show that England is adding to her wealth in these very years two hundred million pounds annually. There can be no gainsaying the force of that answer, but at the same time it is demonstrated equally well, that the number of unemployed and of people who are taking relief in the workhouses and in other ways, is increasing year by year, and increasing faster than the increase of population.

My hon. friend from Middlesex showed the House yesterday that workhouse relief, alone, cost England last year about thirteen million pounds sterling, and he said, although he did not put the figures before the House, that other sources of charity would about double that amount. I think I would be perfectly safe in saying, and my hon. friend, who has evidently given the subject a great deal of consideration, would fully bear me out, that at the present time the relief of the poor is costing Great Britain and Ireland about twenty million pounds annually. My hon. friend said that perhaps there were no poor in Ireland, but the figures I have been looking up show that there is about the same amount of poverty there as in the other portions of the United Kingdom, and the most alarming feature of it is, that the number of poor people who are found to need relief is increasing year by year, and public contributions for their maintenance are also increasing in the same proportion. These statistics are alarming, and one is reminded of the words of Goldsmith:

> Ill' fares that land to hastening ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates and men decay.

Sometimes I feel concerned lest England is in the position which is described by the poet, for there is no question, that while wealth is accumulating in England in the hands of those who had it before, the number of poor people, and the necessities for public relief, increase in greater proportion than the population of the country. There are those who make this subject a ground for attack upon her institutions, and it is very necessary that England should settle this question in order to create stability in the institutions of the country. There was a time after the close of the Napoleonic wars when England experienced great social troubles, and it was feared at that time that revolution would overwhelm the mother country. It was at that time that Bryon said:

> Gaunt famine never can approach the throne.
> Though Ireland starves, Great George weighs twenty stone.

The people in high life were rich, and King George was in good health, while Ireland was starving, and writers like Byron, turned these circumstances against the established usages of society. That is one reason why the solution of such problems should not be delayed, especially in an old country like England no delay should be allowed putting this question in such a shape as to defeat those who would try to destroy the political equilibrium.

In Canada to-day we are making millionaires and multi-millionaires. Our wealth is accumulating as fast, perhaps, as that of any country under the sun. The strides we are making are known to all within the range of my voice; but I say, and say without fear of successful contradiction, that at this time, when the progress of the country is so great and undoubted, the wage-earner, notwithstanding a reasonable increase in wages, is not in a better position than he was years ago when his wages were twenty per cent less than they are now. The expense of living is going up, and the consequence is, to-day, that the wage-earners of Canada find it as hard or harder to make ends meet than years ago when the times were less favourable and wages lower than they are just now.

Hence I conclude that conditions in England, our own observations in Canada, and indeed universal experience, show that in these days when money breeds money, and capital has such great inherent advantage, no state can begin too early to safeguard the interests of those who are working for wages in the service of wealth.

Another strong reason for some provision of this nature is found in the effect it would have in retaining our people in Canada. That was a powerful argument in the mind of Bismark when he commenced the advocacy of old age insurance in Germany. Elderly, middle aged or even young people would not be so apt to leave their country if they had an interest in a fund which made provision for their old age.

I have made some inquiry as to the number of people we have in Canada who are over seventy years of age, and find that as shown by the census of 1901 it is 163,715, while the number of those over sixty-five is 269,388. There is a very interesting study in connection with those figures, showing how the old people are distributed. Many would think, perhaps, that they are divided evenly over the country, but that is not by any means the case. The trend of population is towards the city. The young move and the old and infirm remain behind, and it is found that the cities contain a much smaller proportion of old people than the country does.

In Ontario, the number of persons over seventy years of age to the thousand, excluding Toronto, is thirty-four, while the number in Toronto is only twenty-three in every thousand. In the province of Quebec, outside of Montreal, the number over seventy is thirty-one, while in Montreal it is only nineteen. But there is still a greater discrepancy to be found in other directions. In British Columbia the number is only 11 to the thousand, and in the Northwest Territories 12; in Manitoba 13, New Brunswick 35, Nova Scotia 42, and Prince Edward Island 43. Many, on first blush, would conclude that the places where the most old people are to be found enjoy the most salubrious climate or that the people lead more regular lives; but I do not think these influences contribute in any way to the result.

The movement is from the east to the west and from the country to the city; the young move, and the old people are left behind. There is no province in the Dominion of Canada suffering so much in that respect as my own province—Prince Edward Island. The trend of emigration for years was to the United States, but it is not so now. There is a great movement from Prince Edward Island to the west, such as my hon. friend opposite described as going on from the county of Wellington. Consequently, the burden of providing for the aged falls more heavily on the people where there is a drain of this kind, and, on that account, the burden is heaviest in the country parts of the eastern provinces, and of Ontario and Quebec. It is heaviest in the province of Prince Edward Island, and almost as heavy in Nova Scotia.

The question has, therefore, more than an academic interest for me. I contend that the Dominion should give of its abundance for the encouragement of the old men and women in our country sections who have sent their natural supporters to do pioneer work in the west and to add to the strength and wealth of our cities.

Another objection which was urged very strongly by the hon. gentleman from North Wellington, arises from what we are doing now for our poor. He told us there are many well-equipped and well-managed poor-houses in Ontario. The hon. member from West Middlesex gave us the number, and stated that the province contributes to each of them about four thousand dollars per year, and that is supplemented by the municipality. No doubt there is provision made of the same kind in Quebec and the West, as there is in the lower provinces. In the new Provinces they have not had time to settle this matter, but in the older provinces we have made these provisions.

The hon. member from Wellington seemed to think that this is about all we are called upon to do. I do not agree with him in that matter. What we are doing, although meritorious, is not done in the right way and in the right direction. 'Over the hills to the poorhouse' are light words on many lips, but the portals of the poorhouse are scarcely more inviting to many who are compelled to enter them than the pauper's grave, which lies a little beyond. Poorhouse conditions have been greatly improved since Dickens wrote Oliver Twist, but no applied humanitarianism can remove in the minds of many of the most deserving the strong sense of shame in being obliged to accept that form of relief.

The improvement that has been effected in our poorhouses in the last fifty years is not, perhaps, any greater than the improvement in jails and penitentiaries. When John Howard took up the reformation of prison management, not only in England but all over Europe, we know, who have gone over the story, the desperate state of things then prevailing. It seemed to be the policy of the nations to treat the criminal as harshly as he possibly could be treated, to surround him with such sternness and severity, as, in many cases to allow him to want, and often to become so filthy and unattended that the very description of the conditions then existing caused humanity to revolt. That is not the case to-day. Our jails and penitentiaries are brought up to a condition almost as good as our poorhouses, yet our poorhouses are not bad or badly managed. The humane feelings of the people have demanded that prison conditions should be at least reasonably good, and on that account the poorhouse is not very much better or more comfortable than the place to which we send our convicted criminals. I have no sympathy with the view that the poorhouse is a desirable ending for what may have been a virtuous life. But there is another view in connection with that subject which must not be lost sight of : not only does the iron of conscious pauperism enter the soul of the person who is sent to the poorhouse, but the community is deprived of the work of many who are still, notwithstanding their poverty, good, and though aged, to some extent useful citizens. The community is deprived of this service when, by the receipt of a reasonable pension, personal pride would be maintained, and in this way the poor could hold their heads erect with a feeling of self-respect. The aged and indigent would not have difficulty in satisfying themselves that the money they were receiving was not alms, but a right. They got it from the state in recognition of the services they had rendered during the days they were able to work, and there would be nothing in their state or condition to make them hang their heads.

> Is there for honest poverty would hang its head and a' that,
> The coward loon we pass him by and dare be poor for a' that.

But there are ways in which both old men and old women could remain useful to the community if they were not immured in the poorhouse. I can imagine cases—I know of them myself in the place from which I come—where poor old women are nothing less than blessings in the community in which they live, in comforting their old neighbours, nursing the sick, and taking care of the children, and there are ways in which poor old men in receipt of a small pension could, while maintaining their self-respect, also make themselves useful duties they could fulfil, such as chopping fire-wood and weeding gardens. Both men and women could look after themselves in the matter of preparing their own food, and attending to their own cleanliness, and every day as the shadows of life lengthen and they approach their end, they could find something useful to do, and would lay their heads on their pillows at night with the reflection that they had, during the day, undertaken and accomplished some useful thing.

The right hon. acting premier rather emphasized the idea that the granting of pensions to old people would discourage thrift. I cannot see that it would discourage thrift to any such extent as poorhouse relief. On the contrary, I believe when some substantial help of that kind is vouchsafed, men are encouraged to make more strenuous efforts in their own behalf. The shipwrecked sailor seeing the light on the shore is encouraged to redouble his exertions, and so the son of toil finds hope growing in his heart when he understands that there is something of this kind being done for him, and is thereby encouraged to lay aside savings of his own. In that way, the incentive to thrift is real. I heard an old friend of mine, who had accumulated money, say that the hardest money he found to get was the first hundred pounds ; after that he made his money easily. I know that the experience of a great many is that the first ten or twenty dollars they put in the savings bank was the hardest money they had ever attempted to scrape together, but after getting that much, and seeing the interest it was gaining, they were animated with an ambition to increase it.

There is nothing like holding out hope to the wage-earner and giving him an absolute certainty that he will have some relief in old age. It encourages thrift rather than otherwise. There are no more hard-headed men in the world than bank and railway managers, and they do not think that pensioning their employees would discourage thrift, for they adopt that system. Their practice is against the belief that thrift is discouraged.

If old age insurance, to the securing of which the wage-earner contributes, would promote indolence and extravagance, the same result must follow the pensioning of bank, railway and government employees, to say nothing of judges and cabinet ministers.

Then, we have the example of Denmark. Any one who will look over the evidence taken by Sir Henry Chaplin's committee will find that, the testimony of the experts they sent to Denmark to study the Danish system, shows that old age provision has proved a stimulus to thrift. That is the Danish experience, I have read to hon. gentlemen the report of the Australian commission, which takes exactly the same ground.

But the question arises, what is thrift ? The best and truest theory of thrift is, to my mind, that a man should make the best of his environment; that he should perform faithfully and well the duty that came nearest to hand for the time being. In the early years of life, many a poor man has the care of his aged parents on his hands. That duty lies nearest to him, and he is a very poor type of a man, if he does not discharge it, and discharge it well. A little later on, perhaps overlapping the same period, comes his duty to his wife and children. What would hon. gentlemen think of a man who would allow his children to grow up in ignorance and rags, while he was hoarding up money to provide for his own old age which he might not live to enjoy? It would be a form of selfishness which would be condemned on every hand.

Therefore, a true definition of thrift, as I understand it, would be getting the best that can be got out of existing circumstances and performing faithfully the duties of the hour. The average wage-earner in Canada receives about three hundred dollars a year. We know that the cost of living is pretty high in Canada at the present time. Any person who will tell me that a man can pay rent, provide fuel in a rigorous climate, such as this, and food and clothing, and education for his children, and lay up enough money to maintain himself and his wife in their old age, must have some method of calculation that I cannot understand. The duty of the hour is—

> To make a happy fireside clime for weans and wife.
> That's the true pathos and sublime of human life.

There are many who have done this faithfully, and yet having been bereft of their children, or neglected by them, pass their old age in want. That they are allowed to do so is, in my opinion, a national disgrace.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I was not aware of the existence of this draft Bill until this afternoon, and I could not get a copy until about an hour before the sitting opened. I am most anxious to show my regard and respect for the right hon. gentleman who introduced it, and, having some acquaintance with the subject, which would enable me to speak on it with satisfaction to myself and some interest to the Senate, I move that the debate be adjourned until Monday next.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Nothing practical will come out of the discussion this year, or probably the next fifty years, in Canada, and it might as well stand aside until the more important measures of the session are disposed of. It would be better to let it stand at the bottom of the Order Paper. It is a very interesting subject, but a practical result is not in sight.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think that is governed by our rules. I do not see why we should suspend our rules for that.

The order of the day was allowed to stand.

THIRD READING.

Bill (ZZ) 'An Act respecting the Standard Life Insurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Power.

MILITIA PENSION ACT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole on Bill (144) An Act to amend the Militia Pension Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill speaks of an officer being seconded, which means being retired to some other service.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—To what extent does this differ from the present law?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It provides particularly that if an officer in the permanent force is placed in the Civil Service, or if he is sent to Aldershott, and spends two or three years there, and he pays his five per cent regularly while he is temporarily out of the militia, his superannuation will go on.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is an entirely new feature.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The object is especially, at the present moment, to meet the condition of the Deputy Minister, who has been for many years paying into the permanent fund. He is now outside. While in the Department of Militia he is not in the permanent force.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Surely the hon. member does not justify the passage of an important measure of this kind by reason of an isolated case such as that of the Deputy Minister of Militia ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But other cases will arise. The policy of the department is that officers may exchange into other services from time to time, to give them knowledge and experience. Nothing suffers, because the officer pays the 5 per cent, on a larger amount, while he is outside of the service, than the sum he would have paid if he had remained in.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Where is the clause referred to by the right hon. first minister ? He said yesterday that the officer could elect whether to accept this pension or to accept the pension which might be provided by another fund, instancing the case of an officer who left the militia to enter the civil service, and who also contributed to the superannuation fund of the civil service. Of course it would be manifest, unless some provision is embodied in the Act, that he might be a participant in two pension funds.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think there is any provision made for that. It refers altogether to an officer being seconded.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In the explanation given yesterday, I think it was my hon. friend who said that an officer might be seconded and enter upon a position in the civil service, contributing his 5 per cent in the meantime to the militia pension fund, and at the same time being a civil servant and entitled to any benefits arising under the superannuation fund. However, we might go through the committee stage on the Bill and my hon. friend can obtain the information to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think that subclause 9 must be the one to which the acting leader of the government referred. That clause reads :

9. If, by reason of the position in the public service of Canada to which any officer is seconded, he becomes subject to the provisions of Part II of the Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Act, the reservations out of the salary of such officer by the said Part II required to be made shall, instead of being transferred to the credit of the Retirement Fund, form part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, and be treated in all respects as deductions under section 8 of this Act, and as satisfying the contributions which such officer is by the two last preceding subsections required to make.

That is the only thing which could give rise to the remarks of the hon. leader.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend from Halifax understand the application of that section ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not saying that I do. Perhaps it is because that subsection is hard to understand that the right hon. leader of the government said what he did about it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE from the committee reported the Bill without amendment.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock to-morrow.

SENATE.

OTTAWA, FRIDAY, April 12, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved :

That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it do stand adjourned until Monday next, at eight o'clock in the evening.

He said : I was asked by a number of hon. gentleman last evening to make the adjournment until eight o'clock, and I waited to see whether there was any negative proposition, and no one objected to it, so I let it go.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It strikes me that the meeting at three o'clock will be more convenient and satisfactory to those who are detained here. Let those who wish to go home do so. I am not speaking for myself, because I intend to go home, and will not be back in Ottawa until Tuesday; but there are some members stopping in the city who remain here all the time and it is most unreasonable to expect them to attend in the evening. If the adjournment is until eight o'clock, some hon. members who remain in the city will be deprived of that day.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—I do not oppose the motion, but I hope those hon. senators who have the advantage of holidays on Mondays during the session, when the time for prorogation arrives will be in their place, and that those hon. members from a distance who have remained in Ottawa all the time will be allowed to go home. If prorogation takes place on Saturday, most of those living at a distance will have to leave on Thursday, so that these hon. members who have been having so many holidays might remain here to have a sufficient number present to form a quorum.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not going to object to the motion, but I take this opportunity of saying that the public business this session has been very seriously interfered with by these adjournments at week ends and week beginnings. I have never, in my experience in parliament, encountered anything like the experience we have had this session, and the result has been that for the last five or six weeks there has been a congestion of work. Perhaps people outside would hardly credit that statement; but it is nevertheless true there has been a congestion of work, especially in the committees, and interesting and important questions have had to suffer. The motion submitted by the hon. gentlemen from Mille Isle, we are told by the hon. leader of the House, would have to go to the foot of the order paper, which meant that it would have to stand its chance of not being discussed any further this session, and why? Because there was no time to discuss it, and that is the sequence of week end adjournments during the session. The work has accumulated. At one meeting of the committee there was something like twenty Bills on our order paper, consequently there was a great deal of railroading of Bills through. The effect of these short adjournments has been to operate very unfairly against members from a distance. Such adjournments are admirably suited to hon. gentlemen living in Toronto and Montreal, but are fatal to the chances of members from a distance visiting their homes. We had a week adjournment at about the end of January which was no benefit to any member living further away from the capital than Toronto or Montreal. We also had an adjournment at Easter, which was a disadvantage to those living at a distance. We must have reciprocity and fair-play about these things, if we live to come back for another session. The system of taking long adjournments is reasonable, notwithstanding what the press says. There has been more notice taken by the press of the short adjournments than of the long ones. When we make a reasonably long adjournment, and the public business does not suffer, it is all right; but when we take short adjournments at the end and beginning of each week, the work is confined practically to two sessions in every week. I hope there will be some desire to show fair-play to members living at a distance in future.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I want to enter a most emphatic objection to this adjournment for a special reason which I think ought to have weight with the House. Last evening we had before us a Bill on which the hon. senator from Marshfield had just delivered a very interesting speech, a speech to which we all listened with a great deal of pleasure. I had not seen this very important Bill until an hour before the meeting, and I thought it was only reasonable that the further consideration of it might be postponed until Monday or Tuesday next. You may think it is a Bill that is not of much importance. I am glad the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce is not here, because it gives me this opportunity to say that I think it reflects an immense amount of credit on him. It is one of those Bills that ought to engage the attention of every man in the Senate. Old age pensions stand only second to the savings banks in their value to the country. The establishment of those banks was a decided benefit to the community, and the subject of providing old age pensions is one that could be discussed more advantageously here than anywhere else. Is there any member of this House who can say it is not a pertinent subject, and one that should command the attention of every intelligent man? Yet when I asked to have the order set down for Monday, the hon. Secretary of State manifested great irritation and said it would not do, that it was too long on the orders, and must go to the bottom of the list. Of course I could not say anything, and as nobody offered to speak in my behalf I did not push the matter any further. Now, I do not think I have been treated fairly. Except on one occasion, I have not appealed to this House to get any measure postponed. There have been items on the order paper of this House for months that did not amount to anything, and yet this measure of transcendent importance is put aside as of no consequence. It was not to me alone that the affront was offered; it was to the measure—a measure which should have been treated with more respect. I therefore am determined, if I can to prevent the proposed adjournment because I would be a veritable coward did I not manifest some objection to the treatment I have received. I want to point out another thing, and that is that an adjournment until Monday at eight p.m. is very objectionable. Members who have to travel some distance to return to the capital are too fatigued to attend to any business when the House meets in the evening, and so two days are lost by these weekly adjournments. I have not objected, because I had no special reason to object, on the contrary I have supported them—but this thing has gone too far. You are planting the germs of degradation in the Senate when you push this so far. I wonder that any gentlemen would have the unblushing effrontery to ask for such adjournments in their own selfish interest. If the good nature of the hon. Secretary of State is shown to certain persons, his good nature and benevolence ought to be manifested in the same way to every member. We are all under the aegis of his protection, and there is no reason why I should be made a stepchild of. I say, therefore, it is a degrading proposition to this Senate which will, if persevered in, sap its foundations and lead to a movement which may hurl the gentlemen who are the cause of it out of public life altogether.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED MAILS AT SASKATOON.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to draw the attention of the House to a telegram I received this morning from Saskatoon. The people of that town complain that they have not had any mail since the 31st of March. They are complaining very seriously.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman will send me his telegram I will hand a copy of it to the Postmaster General.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—What railway is in default?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The Canadian Northern, the only railway that is there yet.

MILITIA PENSION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (144) An Act to amend the Militia Pension Act. He said: In moving the third reading of this Bill, I desire to answer a question as to the meaning of clause nine. It means that when an officer is transferred or retired from the militia to the civil service, his five per cent is paid into the consolidated revenue fund instead of into the retirement fund. It is a mere change in the payment of the money.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Do militia officers contribute to the fund?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The officers of the permanent force pay five per cent into this fund, and they are retired in the ordinary way.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Does this refer to transfers to the imperial service?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The object of the Bill is that when an officer belonging to the permanent force in Canada is retired, whether to the civil service or to the imperial service, or the India service, that he will not lose the five per cent he has already contributed while in the permanent force. If he is transferred to the civil service of Canada then his five per cent goes into the consolidated revenue fund instead of into the militia pension fund, and, when his retirement comes, he gets the benefit of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does it affect imperial officers transferred to the Canadian service?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has no reference to imperial officers at all. Of course, if they enter the Canadian permanent force and contribute the five per cent, they get the benefit of the fund when they retire, to the extent of what they have paid.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does not that apply only to the Canadian officers ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It applies to officers of the permanent force ; but if an officer enters the Canadian permanent force he can contribute the five per cent.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He begins the roll.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What he has paid to the imperial fund does not count here ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

INTERNAL ECONOMY AND CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

REPORT ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the adoption of the second report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not objecting to the adoption of the report, but I think the wording is somewhat objectionable. I do not think it would be advisable for the committee to set a precedent of the kind which could be cited for future action. It is in reference to the granting of a gratuity to Theodore Paquette. The report says 'in lieu of the sum which he has paid into the superannuation fund and the interest thereon.' He has been in the service as a messenger for twenty-seven years. He has been paying into the superannuation fund during the most of that time, since the superannuation Act was made applicable to the servants of this House. Then you will have to compound the interest. What I would suggest to the chairman and members of the committee is, that you word it in the same way as you did the recommendation in reference to Mr. Myrand, the ex-postmaster, and grant him a specific sum as a gratuity for faithful services as messenger for twenty-seven years. I understand that if you adopt this mode of granting the amount paid by him into the superannuation fund and interest of 5 per cent thereon, that you will have constant applications from those entitled to any sum to be paid from the superannuation fund. My suggestion is that you make it a simple gratuity, equal to that amount, if you like. On a moment's reflection, hon. gentlemen will see the precedent which will be set for us and the difficulties which will arise every session when we want to retire one of the servants.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have no doubt there is something in what the hon. gentleman states. It might be a bad precedent. Mr. Paquette contributed into the superannuation fund something about $194, for which, of course, he received no benefit, and I am informed by Mr. Gibb, the clerk of the committee, that the interest would amount to somewhere about $50. I have no objection to amend the report so as to grant him $250.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That he be granted an annuity in consideration of his services for the amount of $250.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I will move that the report be amended accordingly.

The motion was agreed to, and the report, as amended, was adopted.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (143) An Act to amend the Immigration Act.

On clause 2,

2. Section 23 of the Immigration Act, chapter 93 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

33. Whenever in Canada an immigrant has, within two years of his landing in Canada, become a public charge, or an inmate of a penitentiary, jail, prison, or hospital or other charitable institution, it shall be the duty of the clerk or secretary of the municipality to forthwith notify the minister, giving full particulars.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Perhaps my hon. friend, who has charge of the Bill, would explain what are the changes that are made as compared with the existing law ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The only change is making the clause more definite, making it more clear, and giving greater facilities in carrying it out, by the Minister of Justice interfering where the party is confined in a jail or penitentiary. It requires an order from the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is this to be said about the clause now before us for consideration : The duty is apparently cast upon the clerk or secretary of the municipality to forthwith notify the minister upon ascertaining certain facts. There is no penalty attached to the non-performance of the duty. Furthermore it seems to me that it should not be left voluntarily with the clerk of the municipality to notify the government of this fact. Some government officer should be charged with the enforcement of this Act. I might say that there are immigration officers of the government, and there are other officials of the government, who could very much better carry out the spirit of the Act than to throw the duty upon themunicipal officer, who has to do it gratuitiously.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No doubt it would be the municipal officer. It is only in these cases where there is no officer of the federal government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is nothing to indicate or outline what the duties of the officials of the department may be on a question of this kind.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is only to provide for the possibility. I do not suppose there are twenty per cent of the municipalities where there is an officer connected with immigration, and, therefore, the municipal clerk is named. It is in the interest of the municipality as well as the interest of the public that the communication should be sent to the Minister of the Interior. I do not see that any possible difficulty can arise.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It simply relieves the federal official of the performance of a duty which should devolve upon him ; that certainly would be the result of the clause going as it is.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman desires, I can add the words 'In the absence of an immigration agent there.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The Secretary of State will see that, without any fault of the municipality, the burden is by this Bill cast upon them. Unfortunately the man who is to be deported goes into a municipality, he may be there a day, a week or a month, and the expense of deporting that man is placed upon the municipality. Surely that would not be fair or proper. The deportation is not made at the instance of the municipality, but at the instance of the federal government. It is an important point I should think. It would not be fair to burden the municipality with a duty of that kind.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not intended to do so. The presumption is that it applies where there is no other official.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The clerk of the municipality is not always aware of those who go to jail or penitentiary. The penitentiaries are under the control of the government, and, in many instances, the clerk of the municipality would not know what parties are sent to the penitentiary. Would it not be well to have it made the duty of the warden of the penitentiary ? He would be in a much better position to know whether a certain man came to Canada during the last two years. I point that out as a suggestion, to facilitate the work. I think this clause is one of the best that could be put in the Act ; but it is difficult to get at the pedigree of the men who are condemned, and who become a charge on the public. The clause is all right as far as it goes, but does it go far enough ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think it would be desirable, and the Secretary of State will pardon me for saying so, to make the amendment which he proposes. If the immigrant becomes a charge on the municipality, then it should be the duty of the clerk or the secretary of the municipality to give the notice.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It would be to his interest, too.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Then if you look at subclause 3 of this Bill, it is provided that when the immigrant is an inmate of a penitentiary or prison, the Minister of Justice may, upon the request of the Minister of the Interior, issue an order to the warden of such penitentiary. In the cases where the immigrant is not in the penitentiary or other prison, it should be the duty of the municipality upon whom he becomes a charge to make the application ; it should not be the duty of any officer of this government. It should not be the duty of an immigration officer to find out whether an immigrant had become a charge on the municipality or not.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Simple residence makes the municipality liable, but it does not state how long the residence must be, perhaps it may be only a week or two.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is it the meaning of the Bill that they should take any man who is in a hospital, say for month or two ?

The CHAIRMAN—If he has become a public charge.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—They are admitted to the hospital as pauper patients, although respectable people, that is, so far as being of good moral character is concerned. A man might be there with a broken leg for three months, and he would be a public charge, and I do not know whether that would necessitate deporting him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—After the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Halifax, will the House consent to allow the clause to stand as it was. I do not think there is any possible chance of difficulty arising.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But the object of the legislation is to make it effective, to promote as far as possible the deportation of undesirable immigrants. May I ask my hon. friend how the clerk of the municipality is to know who the inmates of this class in the penitentiary are ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—They are a public charge.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The clerk of the municipality will have no knowledge of that. How is the clerk of the city of Toronto to know what immigrants are sent to a penitentiary ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—He does not need to know.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How is the clerk of Kingston to know what immigrants are within the walls of the penitentiary there ? They are a charge upon the country, and not upon the municipality.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not intended to apply to a case of that kind. It is simply where they are a charge.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The machinery is not at all effective for carrying out the object of the Act.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The man who is an inmate of the penitentiary of Kingston will not be a charge upon the funds of the city of Toronto, and under paragraph 3 it is provided that when a man is an inmate of a penitentiary, jail or prison, the Minister of Justice may, on the requisition of the Minister of the Interior, issue an order to the warden or governor of such penitentiary, jail, prison, and so on.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But the duty must devolve upon some one to direct the attention of the government to the fact of this man being within the class, and being a charge upon the country. It is on account of his being an undesirable citizen that he is deported. It is not simply that he has become a charge upon some particular institution.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No doubt the charge on the institution will be on the municipality, and no person will know sooner than the clerk of the municipality.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is for a small town.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It does not matter what town you take. Name the official if you will, but they are the people who are complaining about immigrants becoming a public charge on the municipality, and this provides that when they become a charge on the municipality the clerk shall notify the Minister of the Interior.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The idea is to get rid of the criminal classes that come into the country and not to feed and house them after they are here. A poor immigrant may come here and be at a public institution a month or two until he gets work. I do not suppose there is any intention on the part of the government to drive that man out of Canada ; but there should be the intention on the part of the government to drive the criminal class away. To my mind the most competent man in the municipality or in any department of the public service, to find out whether the man before the bar of the court is a criminal, is the clerk of the court. The police court clerk or the clerk of the criminal court, because his first duty is to ascertain the name of the man, his residence, age and where he came from. If we want to make this Act effective, the clerk of the criminal court, as far as jails, penitentiaries and prisons are concerned, is the same officer, and that same officer would not be competent to obtain information with regard to charitable institutions no more than our hon. colleague, Senator David, who is clerk of the city of Montreal, would be able to furnish information in regard to public institutions, much less jails and penitentiaries. So that the competent man to communicate to the department as to the character of these men, where they come from, and whether they are criminals or not, is the clerk of the police court. It is his business to find out. I do not see that we could force the police clerk to do it, but it would be a very proper thing to pay him and it would not cost us very much. They could be paid pro rata if they sent in the names every month, and reported to the Minister of Justice that such and such a one has been found guilty and has been sent to such a jail or such a prison. Let the country pay the clerk for that work, so much for every name, and he would make it a point to keep the government informed as to the class of criminals, whether they were our own or foreigners who were condemned. I know as a matter of fact, in the city of Montreal—and it should be the same in every large centre—we are sending hundreds of foreigners to our penitentiaries, costing hundreds of dollars every year, when we have enough to do to take care of our own people. That is done in every town, and I suppose it is the same in Toronto. I observed that no later than yesterday some inspector in Ontario has taken action to have an immigrant sent back to the old country. Col Denison, the police magistrate of the city of Toronto, has given public notice to the press—I do not know whether he has given it through official channels to the department—that if the department does not take action in the matter, he will liberate this criminal, who was sent over by the Prisoners' Aid Society of London, and who has been confined for three weeks in the Toronto jail. The case has come up, and his counsel is pleading for his liberty on the ground that he is held without any charge against him. The only charge is that he was sent from the old country as a criminal, to get rid of him. This proves that the people who are most competent to find out the criminal class are the clerks of the courts. This clause is all right, but the question is how to make it as effective as possible.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I think that the most effective way is that when a man becomes a charge on a municipality is to inquire whether he is a criminal or not.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause 2,

2. On receipt of such information the minister may, in his discretion, after investigating the facts, order the deportation of such immigrant at the cost and charges of such immigrant if he is able to pay, and if not then at the cost of the municipality wherein he has last been regularly resident, if so ordered by the minister, and if he is a vagrant or tramp, or there is no such municipality, then at the cost of the Department of the Interior.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—It seems to me it is quite unfair to put this charge on the municipality. The municipality is not responsible in any way for the man coming in to the country, and taking the two sections together, the gist of it is that if a man is in the hospital or any charitable institution through any accident which may have happened to him within the period of a year after he has come to this country, he comes within the operation of this clause. He may be a good citizen, so far as a man can learn citizenship in that length of time. He meets with an accident and is laid up. He can be deported at the expense of the municipality. Why should not the government, who is responsible for his coming into the country in the first instance, at any rate as much responsible for his coming into the country as any other agency, bear the cost, instead of the municipality? There in another point; if it is found that the charge is made against a municipality, the officers of the municipality will not deport the man at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I spoke to the minister in reference to this question, and he said it was not the intention of the government, except where a man had become a resident, and had resided in the municipality for over a year, and was identified with the municipality, to enforce this provision. It is not likely to arise at all events in a great majority of cases, because I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman from St. John, and I so stated to the minister, and he said it was rather a precaution to get those municipalities interested so that they would call the attention of the government to the matter. If they were not interested in some way or other they would not call attention to it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman from St. John, more particularly because of an undesirable class of immigrants who are coming into Canada and who eventually have to be deported. They are a great tax on the municipalities, particularly of the western provinces. I am quite within the mark when I say that the policing of the municipalities west of the great lakes has been increased at least three-fold within the last seven or eight years by reason of a very undesirable class of immigrants brought in from continental Europe. And to provide that, owing to this class of immigrant being dumped upon municipalities, in addition to the excessive cost now borne by the municipal authorities in maintaining peace and good order within their boundaries, they should be called upon to pay the cost of deporting such immigrants, is certainly adding insult to injury. It is entirely indefensible. The responsibility rests entirely on the government, and if the government have opened the doors of Canada to such an extent as to admit the most undesirable classes that come from continental Europe into our municipalities, the least they could do is to pay the cost of deporting them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would direct the hon. gentlemen's attention to the fact that it would require a special order of the minister to make a charge. It struck me, when I read it, as being an unusual proposition, and I so represented to Mr. Oliver. He said the department is not likely to impose the charge on the municipality unless the person has become identified with the municipality and contributed in some way as a resident. I have no strong views on the subject. I quite agree that it would be improper to charge the municipality in all cases, though there might be cases in which it would be but right. If the House is not satisfied to leave the discretion with the minister, the clause will have to be struck out.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I hardly agree with the leader of the House and the hon. members from Calgary and St John. There are two sides to the story. While there are many undesirable immigrants coming to the country, there are a great many more who are most desirable, and every municipality is anxious to get them. The municipalities have a right to take the bad with the good, and if there is only one in every ten, or one in every hundred——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—One in every thousand.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Only one in every hundred that will be a trouble; the municipality has a right to pay for it and not the country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me to be a rather inhuman proposition to a certain extent. There is provision here that if at any time within two years an immigrant becomes a public charge or an inmate of a hospital or other charitable institution, he is to be deported. There are plenty of cases where, through accident, an unfortunate immigrant is unable to earn his living, and if he had to be placed in some charitable institution, power is given under this Act to have him deported at the expense of the municipality. I do not look upon imposing the burden upon the municipality as being so strong an objection as I do to giving power to the government to deport a man who becomes an object of charity through accident, or something that is not his own fault. It seems to me a monstrous proposition.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again.

The House was adjourned during pleasure.

BILLS ASSENTED TO.

The Honourable the Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, being seated in front of the Throne.

The Honourable the Speaker commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House:

It is the Deputy Governor's desire that they attend him immediately in this House.

Who being come with their Speaker,

The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery read the Titles of the Bills to be passed, as follow:

An Act to incorporate the Protective Association of Canada.
An Act respecting the Duties of Customs.
An Act to amend the Yukon Act.

To these Bills the Royal Assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words :

In His Majesty's name, His Honour the Deputy Governor doth assent to these Bills.

After some time the House resumed, in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (143) An Act to amend the Immigration Act.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again on Monday next.

The Senate adjourned until Monday next at 8 p.m.

SENATE.

OTTAWA, Monday, April 15, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eight o'clock p.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

WINNIPEG TERMINALS OF CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY AND GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (128) An Act respecting the Winnipeg Terminals of the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

He said : This Bill consists of only three sections. It confirms an agreement made between the Canadian Northern Railway, the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific. The terminals at Winnipeg that are intended to be used by the three companies lie between Main St. and Water St. and extend from the Red river to the Assiniboine. The cost price is $2,625,000, and the rental will be four per cent upon that sum, the Canadian Northern Railway bearing one-half, and the Grand Trunk Pacific and the government the other half. When we go into committee on the Bill I shall be glad to give any fuller particulars that may be desired, and will have a plan of the city showing the proposed undertaking so that hon. gentlemen will have an opportunity of more fully appreciating the character of the arrangement.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

DEBATE POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. McMullen: That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of all correspondence in the hands of the government, or any department thereof, on the question of old age pensions to aged residents in Canada, or retiring allowances in any form.—Hon. Mr. Sullivan.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I must ask permission of the Senate to let this order remain over until to-morrow, on account of the absence of the right hon. Sir Richard Cartwright, who, I suppose, would like to close the debate. Moreover, I have heard of the debate which took place on the same subject in the British House of Commons in March last, when the principle of the Bill was assented to by the government. I should like to have time to look at the figures submitted during that debate in order to make my own remarks more complete. I therefore move that the debate be adjourned until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection, but the hon. gentleman is rather unfortunate in comparing the conditions in England with the conditions in Canada. It never appeared to me that there was any necessity for this scheme in Canada. As a matter of fact there are no more poor people in this country than are necessary to keep alive the sentiment of humanity.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is the hon. gentleman going to proceed with the debate?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, what I am saying is more in the way of an apology to my hon. friend. I was sorry that he considered my observations the other day were personal. They were nothing of the kind, only I did think that an abstract question of this kind ought not to be discussed where there was any actual living business before the House. It was practically reducing the Senate to the status of a debating society.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The government must have been happy over this subject when the hon. Secretary of State has such an opinion of the measure, in contrast with the opinion expressed by the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not at all. The hon. gentleman will remember that Sir Richard Cartwright said: 'I am wholly and solely alone in this matter; I do not introduce it as a member of the government even'; but he had his views and wanted to lay them before the House and the country. I do not concur in them, and I do not know that any of his colleagues do.

The motion was agreed to.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (143) An Act to amend the Immigration Act.

(In the Committee.)

On subclause 2, of clause 2,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understood that this third clause was carried, and I promised to see the minister on the subject and discuss with him as to whether some other arrangements might not be made. My own view was that the only proposal to impose on the municipality the expense of taking part in the deportation was where the municipality, as is often the case, had been practically responsible for bringing the individual to this country. We know that associations and societies in all the cities and towns send requests to the agents in the United Kingdom, or it may be elsewhere, to forward to Canada as emigrants persons who are indigent, and sometimes criminal, and it is only in a case of that kind that the municipality is to become in any way responsible, but if hon. gentlemen will look further on in the Bill they will see that there will be really no expense, because the railway company that conveys such persons into the country are bound to take them back free of charge, and so is the steamship company that brings them into our ports. I do not, therefore, think it is a very important point.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Any one who considers this question for a few moments will find that the country is placing itself in a very, shall I say unfavourable position towards other countries. I can easily understand that if any of this class of people who are mentioned in clause two of this section, were known to have been inmates of penitentiaries or jails, or of the character that is described here, that they should be sent back; but what evidence would there be in a foreign country, for instance say in the United States? A man born in the United States comes to Canada and remains here two years and then steals something and is sent to a penitentiary, or jail or prison. Does the government suppose for a moment that the people of the United States would take him back if you sent him? Yet the clause says that whenever, in Canada, an immigrant has, within two years of landing in Canada, become a public charge or an inmate of a hospital, it shall be the duty of the clerk or secretary of the municipality to forthwith notify the department, giving full particulars, and then the minister is empowered under this Act to deport him, and send him back to the country from whence he came. Take a man coming from England, Scotland, or any portion of the British empire, or any foreign country, who has been, so far as we know, or able to know, a good citizen for eighteen or nineteen months, and then he commits a crime, and is sent to jail, or is taken sick and sent to the hospital and becomes an object of charity on the municipality, that man would be sent back. If a Canadian went to England, and after being for two years a resident in that country, commits some crime, instead of punishing him and sending him to jail in the country in which he committed the crime, he would be deported back to Canada. What evidence would you demand from the people of England that he had committed that crime? They would have to prove that he was a Canadian and you would have to be convinced before you would accept him in this country as a criminal that he was a Canadian. How much worse it would be if a man was unfortunate through illness, injury, or some other cause became a pauper or unable to earn his living, and was sent to the hospital and became an invalid? I think that clause is a monstrous one, and before it has been on the statute-book for many years the government will find themselves surrounded with a great many difficulties and negotiations and trouble; because if we sent him back to his own country the authorities there would say: 'We will not accept him, and will send him back to you again.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—And in that way keep him on the sea for years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me most extraordinary legislation. I could readily understand if a man was an invalid and become a charity upon any municipality or country upon his landing, or if it were known that he was of bad character, that he had been a thief or had been in jail and then sent to this country, we might refuse to accept him, and send him back. But I think this provision is totally impracticable and that the government will never be able to inforce it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—With reference to the remarks just made, and the contention that we should not make a change in the law, that will make it more plain, that the department have more power for deporting people, I desire to read a paragraph from the 'Evening Journal' of April 11, of this year. A Canadian Associated Press despatch, to that paper reads as follows:

> London, April 11.—Arthur Lloyd, aged forty-eight, an old offender, charged with housebreaking, was bound over by Judge Wallace, friends having provided his passage money to Canada.

Here is another paragraph which appeared in the Ottawa 'Citizen':

> The Justice Department here is blamed at Toronto for delay in having a notorious English crook, Isaac Isaacs, deported. He was dumped upon Canada by the English authorities.

That gentleman has been deported; it was found he was a criminal of the worst character. He had been sent out here as a ticket of leave man, and was bound by the authorities in England to report to the authorities in the city of Toronto. I think that we cannot give too much power to the immigration department to deport characters of that kind who come to this country. A question was raised the other day as to who should notify the minister, and it has been suggested by a gentleman who is familiar with the work of this department, that this clause might be amended by adding after the words 'or an inmate' in the 14th line, the words 'or has become an inmate of a jail, etc.,' and after the word 'municipality' in the 16th line—that is the clerk or secretary of the municipality—we should add the words 'the warden or governor of a penitentiary, jail or prison.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is provided in subclause 3.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I certainly think that we cannot give too much power to the government to deport undesirable characters. I understand from the commission on immigration that at the present time there are about a dozen immigrants of bad character being deported. I understand that last year something like 400 were deported, not because of any criminal act committed by them in Canada, but because the government were possessed of information of their sailing from the old country, and on their arrival here they were turned back. I understand about 400 were turned back at Halifax and St. John as not being desirable settlers. The authorities ought to be given to understand that we will not tolerate that class of people in our country. I have no doubt that a great many of them are sent out to the west in the sparcely settled districts, men of a criminal turn of mind who might do a great deal of harm in communities were there is no police protection, and I am strongly in favour of giving the government the greatest possible latitude to deport such people.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—There may be a great deal of propriety in deporting an immigrant, but where is the fairness of saddling the expense of it on the municipality?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Is the hon. gentleman aware of any case where the government has saddled the municipality with that expense?

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—No, but it is proposed to do it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—We have had that law before, and I am informed with regard to the cases of charity where immigrants are kept in a hospital, that the government do not deport them merely because of a short sickness. They may recover, but they do not charge the municipality with even the extra cost of keeping them. In the province of Manitoba where the provincial government allowed thirty-seven and one-half cents a day towards hospitals for the keeping of the inmates, the government paid the difference between that and the dollar a day which is the actual cost of keeping these people. The Bill provides for the deporting and for taking two years within which to deport them. One reason, I understand, is this; that a criminal is convicted in Canada, and the authorities do not feel that that man should be relieved from serving in the penitentiary. He is probably sentenced for two years, and a short time before his time has expired they petition to have him let out on ticket-of-leave, and he is then under charge of the government and they can do what they like with him, and during that period, when he is out on ticket-of-leave, they deport him to his own country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think anything that has fallen from my lips is at all at variance with the policy advocated by the hon. gentleman. I especially guarded myself by saying that all immigrants described by the hon. gentleman should be deported at once. I acknowledge that, and the evidence that the hon. gentleman has advanced only shows that we ought to have enforced the immigration law more rigidly than we do; but what I have pointed out is that a man may be in the country less than two years and commit a crime. We cannot tell under what circumstances he may commit it, or he becomes a pauper or a charity upon a municipality and is sent to jail. If he has been in Canada nineteen months, before committing that crime you can deport him, although there may not be the slightest evidence that that man has been of a criminal character before he came to this country. These crimes always have a beginning, and it is just as likely the beginning may have been in this country as in the old country. If a ticket-of-leave man comes to this country and he is found to be of the character described, he should be sent back at once. We adopted the principle of ticket-of-leave suggested by the late Minister of Justice in this House, by passing a law which has been acted upon in a very great number of cases. It has been shown that these ticket-of-leave men have returned to their former avocation of stealing, and have been not only an incubus on the municipalities, but a terror to the people. If such men were sent to us, the department would be quite justified in deporting them. The difficulty is in saying that because an unfortunate man has to go to the poorhouse after being in this country for some months, he must be deported, or if he commits some crime and is sent to jail he must be sent out of the country. There will always be a difficulty in enforcing such a law.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—This difficulty might be overcome by the clerk of the institution giving notice. Take the case of Kingston penitentiary, which is really not in the municipality. It is on the border of Kingston, and I do not see what the clerk of the city would have to do with the notification. In that case the warden of the penitentiary should notify the government.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie was about to move an amendment to this Bill, but on the suggestion of the hon. senator from Halifax, who said it was already provided for in clause 3, he refrained from doing so. On reading over clause 3, it will be seen that the intention of the hon. gentleman is not carried out. The warden is not bound to report to the department, but is bound to obey the order to hand over the criminal. Clause 3 reads as follows :

3. When the immigrant is an inmate of a penitentiary, jail or prison, the Minister of Justice may, upon the request of the Minister of the Interior, issue an order to the warden or governor of such penitentiary, jail or prison, commanding him to deliver the said immigrant to the person named in the warrant issued by the superintendent of immigration.

Now there are no instructions in this Bill to the warden to notify the department that among his guests there are certain people who have no right to be in the country. I do not think that wardens or governors of prisons or jails would make themselves over officious in this matter unless instructions were sent them by the Department of Justice. That department has no power to give such instructions ; it is simply at the request of the Minister of the Interior that the warden is to hand over the prisoner. So I regret that the hon. senator from Portage la Prairie did not insist on his amendment to include the words 'warden of penitentiary or jail.' We are not opposed to this Bill, but want to attain the object in view as fully as possible. The clause under which instructions are given to public officials to notify the department that certain prisoners are an undesirable class of immigrants will be ineffective, because the department is trying to exercise power over officials who are not within its jurisdiction. I would suggest that one of the most efficient means you can place in the hands of the minister to secure information with regard to immigrants of that class is to add the words 'clerk of the police court or clerk of the crown.' These are the men who come into contact with that class of immigrants. Undesirable immigrants are often arrested very shortly after their arrival in the country. They soon get into the hands of the police, and the first man to become acquainted with them is the man who arraigns them in the court. The clerk of the municipality knows nothing whatever of what is going on in the courts. If there is to be any amendment I would suggest that the clerk of the police court is the one more likely to have the information which should be given to the Department of the Interior. There is another point in this : you provide in one clause that the clerk of the municipality shall furnish this information to the department, and in the next clause you give him every reason why he should not do so. You say to him, 'report to the department that there are certain undesirable immigrants who are a burden owing to their criminality or incapacity to earn an honest livelihood,' and then you provide that the cost of deporting those people may be charged against the municipality, at the discretion of the minister. What clerk of a poor village or township council would be likely to furnish this information with the knowledge that the cost of the deportation of the objectionable immigrants would be charged to the municipality ? From another point of view, the municipality would not be responsible for the presence of these undesirable strangers within its borders. It is not fair on the part of the government to saddle upon a municipality the cost of carying out its own policy. It is for the government in the first place to see that no undesirable immigrant is admitted into the country. They should adopt the same precautions that are taken in the United States where they fully examine into the mental condition, pedigree and antecedents of immigrants from the old country .

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am afraid that if the department had to examine the pedigrees of all the immigrants coming into the country it would be a serious undertaking.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is done in the United States, and they have no trouble after the immigrant passes out of Castle Garden. Why should we not adopt the same policy in this country ? It would pay in the long run. It may be a little difficult and costly, but still the responsibility rests with the federal government, and they should bear it and not saddle the cost on innocent municipalities into which these criminal immigrants drift. The Bill is one which should pass, but measures of this kind should be submitted to people who have some experience in drafting laws, so that there will not be difficulty in enforcing them. Let us make the Bill, before it passes the Senate, as clear and effective as possible. If the Senate had a little time to redraft this Bill, they could put a better law on the statute-book than they are asked to sanction this evening.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The government have laid before this House a Bill which proposes to amend two sections of the existing law, which was passed last session. The hon. senator from Victoria Division wishes us to recast a large portion of an Act which has only been in existence one year. Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof, and we should be satisfied to wait until there is some necessity to recast the Act. When this Bill was before us last year I opposed the two years' clause. I thought that was too long a time, that one year would be sufficient and that an immigrant who lapsed in to evil ways after the expiration of one year should not be deported. However, this Bill makes no change in that respect. The first subsection of section 33, which the subsection before us is intended to repeal and take the place of, provides that whenever in Canada an immigrant has within two years of his landing in Canada committed a crime involving moral turpitude or become an inmate of a jail or hospital or other charitable institution, it should be the duty of the clerk or secretary of the municipality to forthwith notify the minister thereof, giving full particulars. Now, the only change made by the subclause before us is that instead of saying 'commit a crime involving moral turpitude,' it is 'become a public charge or an inmate of a penitentiary, &c.' The duty is put upon the clerk or secretary to notify the minister, giving full particulars in both cases; so the question really is whether there is any objection to substituting the words 'becoming a public charge' for 'moral turpitude'.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Can the hon gentleman say how many clerks of the municipalities have notified the department since that Act was passed?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I understand the immigration department has kept track of all those men, and the municipalities have not hitherto been put to the cost of deporting them or giving notice. But if a man has been living in a municipality, been practically domiciled there for a year and a half and becomes a charge on the municipality, it is only reasonable that the clerk of the municipality should notify the agent of the Minister of the Interior.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Must he be a charge on the municipality?

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is one of the conditions.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—That alters it.

On sub-clause 3;

3. When the immigrant is an immate of a penitentiary, jail or prison, the Minister of Justice may, upon the request of the Minister of the Interior, issue an order to the warden or governor of such penitentiary, jail or prison, commanding him to deliver the said immigrant to the person named in the warrant issued by the superintendent of immigration as hereinafter provided, with a view to the deportation of such immigrant; and the superintendent of immigration shall issue his warrant to such person as he may authorize to receive such immigrant from the warden or governor of the penitentiary, jail or prison, as the case may be, and such order and warrant may be in the form given in schedule two to this Act.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I think this will be quite unworkable. The government never can keep track of the railways and ships which bring in the immigrants and, even if they could, it would be a great injustice to return those men to Europe, when, perhaps, they were innocent men before they left home. This Bill concerns Great Britain as much as it does Canada. It proposes to dump on the shores of that country criminals that we will not have in Canada. This Bill will pass, no doubt, but it is unfair to the Senate that the minister should have placed in his hands a cast iron Bill to which he will not accept an amendment. The Bill ought to be reserved for the consent of the King in Council as it concerns Great Britain as much as it concerns Canada—in fact more so, because it proposes to dump on the shores of the mother country a criminal class. It will be well if the Bill can be reserved for the consideration of the imperial government before it is allowed to become law.

Hon. Mr SCOTT—This is not a new proposition. The practice has been going on for a number of years, and this Bill is the result of the experience of those who have had to do with it. There has been no protest from the public about it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Have any convicts been deported ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of course, there have been convicts deported. Did not the hon. gentleman mention the number, some 400, that were deported last year—persons afflicted with incurable diseases as well as criminals. Some hospitals in Europe make it a practice to send undesirable persons to this country to become a charge on the public. Deportations have been going on for several years, in fact since immigration has assumed its present size and importance. This Bill has been framed by parties who had to do with the working of it. The principle is exactly the same as that of the Act passed last year when the two years' term and many other conditions were enacted. In reference to the municipalities, when I spoke to the Minister of the Interior he said they had no idea of casting on a municipality the cost of deporting an undesirable immigrant except in a case where there was good reason for it, as in the case I gave. Persons and municipalities sometimes ask that a certain class of servants should be brought out. If individuals thus brought out become undesirable as immigrants it may be right that some of the preliminary charge should be imposed on the municipality, but the responsibility is really on the railway company that brought such persons into the country and the steamship company that brought them into port. For instance, if an undesirable person at Winnipeg had reached that point by the Canadian Pacific Railway, that company would be obliged to return him to the port of entry, so there is no charge, practically, except on the transportation companies that brought the person to Canada. That is set out clearly in clauses 5 and 6, which read as follows :

5. Every immigrant deported under this section shall be carried, by the same transportation company or companies which brought him into Canada, to the port from which he came to Canada, without receiving the usual payment for such carriage.

6. In case he was brought into Canada by a railway company such company shall similarly convey him or secure his conveyance from the municipality or locality whence he is to be deported to the country whence he was brought.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Hon. gentlemen will excuse me if I am a little insistent on some points. The hon. Secretary of State, a few moment ago, referred to those feelings of common humanity which sometimes animate us, and perhaps it is a bad thing to have those feelings when you are a legislator. Under subclause three, a man who has nothing against him may come to this country. He is here a year and commits some offence and is put in prison. He can therefore be deported out of the country without the slightest regard to his rights.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not necessarily.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Not necessarily, but he can be sent out of the country. I, perhaps, start off in my mind with a feeling against deportation, although I admit its necessity. It is a very hard thing, and I have been moved to compassion, so far as it is possible to move me, at seeing, for instance, a family held up because one of its members has some disease. What is to be done ? The officers are called upon to do their duty and they must deport that person. It involves so many serious consequences to the family that we do not like to look upon it. A man may have put all he can get in this world into his passage money from the place he lived in, some central or south of Europe country, to carry him to the port of Amsterdam or Liverpool, and he comes across the Atlantic with high hopes of what he may do in this new land. There is something against him and he is sent back. I remember the case of a man who came from one of the Danubian principalities. He was a man of some means but there was some objection to him, and he was rejected, either by officials of our government or of the United States government. He had money enough to pay his passage back, and the officers told him he had to go back. He went back, but in mid-ocean disappeared. I could tell the House a dozen sad and very pathetic things in connection with deportation. The hon. Secretary of State must excuse some of us if we do not take kindly to legislation of this kind. I remember a case of a man who was detained at St. John in the winter season. These people do not know what is before them when they come to Canada. Their experience is based on what they know of the countries from which they come, and they are children really in this country. The man of whom I speak was confined up stairs in the station. In the night-time he jumped out of the window and fell into the harbour of St. John. It was very severe weather, but the harbour never freezes and this man managed to scramble out. He had never been on the streets of the city before, and he ran until he saw a light, and burst into a house. His clothing was frozen on him, and he could not speak the English language. He was handed to an officer and I suppose was deported. It may be true that occasionally the English magistrates send out some tough characters to this country, but when you come to think that, so far as reported, four hundred people are all that have turned out bad out of 300,000 immigrants, the case does not seem to be so very bad after all. I observe that 10,000 people landed at the port of Montreal within the last week. There must have been some sinners amongst them ; we cannot have all saints. Therefore I say I would wish it were not found necessary to take the extreme measures which seem to be provided under this Bill against these people. Let hon. gentlemen think for a moment of the case of a man who has gathered his family and household goods together and spent a greater portion of his money to buy a passage out to Canada and for some reason, possibly illness in his family, the family has to go back to Europe, because it will happen that, if a child is ill the family cannot remain. The child cannot be abandoned. They go back, and the man is landed in the port from which he started. It may be in a country where he does not know the language. Nothing could be more sad. I am willing to believe that the immigration officials do all in their power to soften their troubles, but I deplore these stringent laws. I am not speaking so much on the Bill as the principle which underlies it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman must not overlook this fact, that owing to the peculiar policy adopted by the government within the last two years of giving large commissions to booking agents throughout continental Europe, they have with a muck rake very largely gathered up the criminal classes and sent them out to Canada. I mentioned the other day that owing to the importation of that class of people the municipalities of western Canada are paying at least three times as much as they formerly did to maintain peace and order. My hon. friend is a journalist and will be quite familiar with the fact that it is becoming fashionable in England, of late, to organize benevolent associations, for the purpose of assisting criminals, and those who have indicated a desire to do better after coming out of prison, to immigrate to Canada. They are sent out in very large numbers. There is scarcely a day that we do not find convicts with continental reputations landing on our shores, and while it may seem a hardship, and while it may appear that humanitarian methods are being excluded from dealing with that class of people, yet we have to consider our own interests as a country owing to the demoralization to society which the admission of those people must necessarily create. We also must take into consideration the fact that while we place on the statute-book legislation of this kind which may seem inhuman, yet the department of the government will be expected to administer it with a fair degree of humanity. I suppose there is no law of this kind but will be evidenced by its hardships ; at the same time one must take into consideration the more important element which we have in view in thus excluding from our borders a most undesirable and criminal class of immigrants. Therefore, I am in favour of giving very large powers to the government for the purpose of excluding those coming into the country who are found to be undersirable as citizens.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The difference between this Bill and the Act on the statute-book is this ; before you can make a charge on the municipality you must establish that the criminal has been a resident of that municipality. But, under the Bill, any one may be dumped upon a municipality and the people of the municipality must bear the burden.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 3 :

3. The said Act is amended by inserting the following section immediately after section 33:

33a. The master of any vessel bound for Canada, having on board thereof a stowaway, shall carry him to the port of destination of the vessel in Canada, and if it is a port of entry where there is an immigration building with an immigration agent in charge thereof, shall hand the stowaway over to the immigration agent, who shall detain him in safe keeping until the vessel is ready to leave the port, when the stowaway shall be placed by the immigration agent in the custody of, and shall be received by, the master of the vessel on board of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why should a stowaway who is not a criminal be deported ? Many a stowaway hides himself in the vessel for the purpose of getting out of the country in which he has lived, in order to do better elsewhere. I know when I was crossing the Pacific there were stowaways from Canada who secreted themselves in the vessel and were not discovered until we were some distance out. They were not criminals, but simply wanted to get away from Canada and make a fresh start in another country. There are always men of that kind who are not guilty of any crime beyond stealing their passage, and many of them are otherwise very respectable people.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite agree with my hon. friend as to the hardship of expelling from Canada a stowaway who may reach here under even the surreptitious circumstances mentioned in the clause. If that stowaway is able to pass the physical examination which other immigrants are subjected to, there is no good reason why he should not remain in Canada. It seems to me the very fact of his having become a stowaway indicates a degree of enterprise and confidence in himself.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—And a degree of honesty ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED— Which turned in the proper channel, might make him a good citizen. I think the very fact of the man's decision to come to Canada, and, when he has not any means, to resort to the very apt method of stowing himself away in the vessel and taking passage gratuitiously, is indicative of a certain amount of push, which in this country should be recognized.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The only explanation that I can give is that when we are compelling vessels to take back free of charge from this country undesirable persons, inasmuch as the vessel owners are always anxious to punish the stowaway, they bring him back if they can control him. They will not let him land but return him to his own country as a warning to others. I presume it would be the duty of the government to aid the steamship companies in their dealing with the stowaway. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it is very unfortunate that they should be turned back, but it is in accordance with the arrangements with the ship owners that this provision is made.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would venture the suggestion that it is in no way incumbent upon the government to assist the vessel owners if they fail to exercise the proper vigilance as to who may get on board their vessels at points of embarkation. There is no duty of this kind devolving on the government. If the vessel owners choose to take the stowaway back, I see no reason why the government should enact a provision of this kind to assist them in so doing. This is something new in the law. Am I correct in saying that there is nothing analogous to it in the present Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before another stage I will ascertain from the Minister of the Interior why this clause is inserted. My own view is that it is in accordance with some understanding with the vessel owner.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Probably the government has listened to the demands of the municipalities, and probably listened to the appeals made by this honourable House and on the floor of the House of Commons. Anybody who has had experience with the criminal courts and the seaports of this Dominion, will know that up to the present the steamship owners would bring up to the court three, four, seven or a dozen stowaways, and ask the police magistrate to sentence them for six months. I have seen it daily in the city of Montreal in the summer season. Many vessels that come in bring one or two or more stowaways, and I cannot altogether agree with the hon. gentleman from Calgary in his estimate of their character. As a rule a stowaway is one of the hardest cases which the police have to deal with in the country from which he comes, and they are no good example to our own citizens when they reach here. Up to the present in each municipality, especially Montreal, and I suppose the same thing happens in St. John,

Halifax and Quebec and other seaport towns—stowaways are brought in by the captain and simply dumped on the municipality. By an order from the police magistrate all that the captain has to say is 'these men did not pay their passage.' That is no crime against Canadian law. I pointed out two or three years ago that this country was punishing people who committed no crime against its laws, because if a crime is committed at all, it was when the stowaway, be he a lord or a poor man, hid himself in the hold of a vessel at Liverpool, London, or Amsterdam or any other seaport in Europe. The crime was committed at that very time; consequently it was a crime against the seaport from which he came. He committed no crime against Canadian law. These poor people had no means of defence, they were there an object of pity in our court, liable to go to jail for three or six months, depending on the demand of the captain of the vessel, and he wanted them punished as an example to others, just as if the punishment in Montreal, St. John or Quebec would have any effect on the hardened classes in European countries, to prevent stowaways from coming here, I urged that they had committed no crime against Canadian law, and the judges agreed with me, and they said 'What can we do? We know these poor men are objects of pity, they have committed no crime against our law, but the law says to punish them.' As a matter of fact they were not offenders against Canadian law, but all the captain had to do was to come into court and ask to have them sent to jail for three or four or six months and it was done, and the city of Montreal had to pay a part of the bill and the province of Quebec the balance, with the result that in summer-time our jails were often filled with a number of these people. I protested against that procedure for two or three years, and other gentlemen in the lower House did the same thing, and I have no doubt if my colleague, the clerk of the council of Montreal (Senator David) were here, and if the hon. Speaker of this House (Senator Dandurand) would express his views on the subject, they would say that I was right, that the city of Montreal should not be made to pay for the maintenance of these people during the six months of imprisonment; and the subsequent danger of having these unfortunates thrown on the charity of our citizens, having nothing whereby to earn a livelihood, always under the temptation of stealing the necessaries of life. This Bill will do away with that condition of things, and says to the captain of a steamship, 'You shall exercise due vigilance at the seaport from which you sail and allow nobody to go on board your ship unless entitled to do so.' The captain of the vessel is responsible for any entry into his ship. You may say, 'But it is a difficult thing for the captain to guard against.' We do not want him to watch individually, but he has watchmen on the ship. Sometimes the sailors act as watchmen; but it does happen that sailors are kind to these direlicts from the other side, and steal them on board. The company should be responsible and not the municipality. The government should not be held responsible for it, but the captain of the vessel which brings them here is the party to answer. The law provides that in future they shall not be dumped in Halifax, St. John, Quebec or Montreal or any other seaport, and there kept in jails or charitable institutions for six or twelve months, as the case may be; but as soon as they arrive the captain shall hand them over to the immigration officer, who shall detain them in safe custody till they are deported.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Why should they go back?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Because they had no right to come. I am quite prepared to accept the argument of the hon. gentleman from St. John, who has a very kind and soft heart, who says it is an awful thing to deport poor or sickly immigrants. It may be so in many cases, but it is absolutely necessary for the public health of Canada to deport incurables, people with contagious diseases. Sympathy is allowed no field in their case. Charity begins at home, and we have to protect our own people. We have enough contagious diseases in our own country, without allowing diseased people from foreign countries to plant themselves on our shores. It is not a question of being charitable to them but of being charitable to our own.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That has nothing to do with stowaways. They are coming to Canada to make a home and help build up the nation.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I was coming to that. The hon. gentleman from St. John said he considered it a hardship to have these people sent back. I am with him half way. I do not refuse the exercise of some mercy to these stowaways if they are capable of becoming fit and industrious citizens. I am prepared to have them accepted, but they should undergo a medical examination and should be under the surveillance of the police for a certain time, so that the authorities could communicate with the officials from the port whence they came. If a stowaway is able to establish by a medical examination that he is physically healthy, and if he is able to prove before our police authorities that his character is good; that he is able to secure a certificate of character, then I say keep that stowaway, make him a citizen. An hon. senator asked: 'How are you going to trace out the pedigree of an immigrant'? Why it is as easy as writing a letter—easier. All the police authority has to do, if he is in a hurry, is to cable to the authorities in the place where the immigrant came from. He asks the stowaway what is your name? John Smith. Where from? 'Liverpool, Dublin or Paris.' All the police officials have to do is to wire the authorities in that town and find out if his assertion is true. If the answer proves to be correct, and the official on the other side says that the man's character is good, keep that stowaway—keep every immigrant who has a body able to earn his living, and who can come here with a character, I will not say undefiled, but a character that will not be repudiated by his own people at home. That is the class of people we should encourage here. Under the circumstances, I think this clause is perfectly in order. It does away with the manifest injustice which has been in existence for numbers of years as against the great seaports of this country, and when a captain is asked to have these stowaways returned, he is only asked what he is bound to do, because he was the one responsible for permitting him to get on board his ship, and he should be compelled to comply with the law.

The subclause was adopted.

On subclause 2,

2. On receipt of such information the minister may, in his discretion, after investigating the facts, order the deportation of such immigrant at the cost and charges of such immigrant if he is able to pay, and if not then at the cost of the municipality wherein he has last been regularly resident, if so ordered by the minister, and if he is a vagrant or tramp, or there is no such municipality, then at the cost of the Department of the Interior.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—I decidedly object to this clause. The argument of the hon. gentleman from Victoria has convinced me the clause is a wrong one.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—The hon. gentleman from Halifax says 'hear, hear.' I do not know whether that is intended to be ironical or not, but hon. gentlemen will see that the hon. member for Halifax is just as much interested as the people of Cape Breton. An immigration agent was appointed in North Sydney in January last at a salary of $1,000 a year. No regular immigrant has landed there for the last twenty years as far as I know. The only people who can be classed as immigrants coming to North Sydney, will be stowaways from ships and steamboats and they usually come from American ports. Hundreds of stowaways come to North Sydney. It would be highly unjust that the town of North Sydney, or any municipality of Cape Breton, should be compelled to send these stowaways back at the expense of the towns or municipalities, and I object to this clause. I do not see why an immigration agent should be required at a port like North Sydney, which is closed from 1st of January, until perhaps the last of April. No regular immigrants come there, and there is no possibility of regular immigrants coming in these steamers to North Sydney; therefore, unless this immigration agent was appointed for the purpose of this Act, so that he might have stowaways returned at expense of towns. I do not know what he could be appointed for.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The reason the office is so attractive is that there is nothing to do.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—Yes, and the argument of the hon. gentleman from Victoria pointed this out to me very clearly.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I did not mention Sydney.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand my hon. friend the Secretary of State to say that he would defer urging this clause until he would further consider it. It seems to me some consideration should be given to adopting a qualifying clause, so that if a stowaway has complied with all the tests required of other immigrants the government should permit him to remain in Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I thought if we passed the Bill through committee, before taking another stage I would see the minister and discuss it with him. Of course we can easily go back to this clause if we see a ready solution of the problem.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If you substitute the word 'may' for 'shall,' you leave it discretionary with the authorities to act or not.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—'May' is just as effective.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There may be cases where it would be desirable that the stowaways should be allowed to remain, and we should say 'and may detain him.' Some such slight change would leave a discretion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The difficulty I see in making it permissive instead of mandatory would be that the officials of the government would probably accept the permissive form of the clause as indicating what the instructions of the department are, and would probably set the clause in motion. I think it would be very much better if there were a qualifying clause providing if the stowaway was able to comply with all the tests of the immigrant, that he should be permitted to remain.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should think that, on general principles, a stowaway is a character we do not want in this country.

Hon. Mr. POWER. Not at all.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—He may occasionally be a decent chap, but on general principles it will be a class we do not want. In the first place they have not the money to pay their passage, or they would pay it in the ordinary way.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would you not consider him as good as some immigrants sent out by the parish, or by the criminal authorities ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes, as good as some, but as a rule not a desirable class. We can easily understand that in many instances stowaways are people who are escaping from justice, and there are no means of examining them at the port they embark from, because they board the vessel secretly, and stow themselves away, and I think the fullest power should be given to the government to deport them. I fancy the hon. Secretary of State will be able to get the information to-morrow, and the superintendent of immigration will no doubt have a good idea of the class of people the stowaways are.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They are a pretty tough class.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think a stowaway is not necessarily the kind of person the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie thinks. I think a lad who has the energy and nerve to stow himself away on a vessel, to cross the Atlantic, has the necessary go-ahead character which will enable him to succeed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did the Secretary of State hear the remark made by the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton ? He states that there is an immigration agent at Cape Breton at $1,000 a year, although there has not been a regular immigrant there for the last twenty years. It is just as well the hon. gentleman should take a note of that and call attention of the minister to it. Surely it is unnecessary to keep an officer at a port where he has nothing at all to do, and where no immigrants ever come, and no probability of them coming, unless it be for the purpose of rewarding a political friend who has supported the party in some way or another.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If my memory is not at fault, I understood Sydney was one of the places that was aspiring to be the Canadian port for the Atlantic steamers. I think Sydney is mentioned in the contract with the Allans.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps the appointment was made on the same principle that the Customs Department very often appoints preventive officers where they fear smuggling will take place. I suppose the Minister of the Interior, who manages that matter, is afraid that somebody will be landed at that port and brought into the country so that they want somebody to watch him.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This clause does not call for the appointment of an immigration agent. It says that at a place like Sydney, where there is no immigration officer, the captain of the vessel shall report to the justice of the peace. There are the two classes, stowaways who come in through where there is an immigration agent and an officer ; there the captain shall report to the immigration agent, but where there is no immigration agent he is to report to the justice of the peace, so that the clause in the law does not require them to appoint an agent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, but he said there was one at the port of Sydney at $1,000 a year. He did not say the law called for one.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I did not hear the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton state that there were no emigrants coming to North Sydney in 20 years.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD— (C.B.)—Yes, I stated that not one, except from Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—There are many hundreds.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B)—Stowaways.

Hon. Mr McGREGOR—Are there not immigrants from Newfoundland ?

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—No, they are not immigrants, properly.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Why not ? They do not belong to this province. I cannot draw the distinction. They come there by hundreds every year.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (C.B.)—They come in the spring of the year and go back in the fall, backwards and forwards.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I am very much surprised to hear the statement made that no immigrants land at Sydney.

Hon. Mr. POWER—North Sydney he said.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I wish to say that I am president of the Colonization Society in Montreal, and we had no less than 500 immigrants that came from St. Pierre and Miquelon this winter and last fall. They landed at Sydney.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—How many does the hon. gentleman expect next winter ?

Mr. McDONALD (Cape Breton). Has the hon. gentleman official knowledge of these men coming to Canada via North Sydney ? If they did it would be the exception.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—There were about 6,000 people on those islands, and they are about deserting the island entirely, and would all come to Canada. That was the information we got. Dr. Brison was the agent of the society, and he made several trips down there to the islands and 500 of them were induced to come to Canada.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Where are they now?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—A great many of them went to the shanties and to the Northwest. There was a great deal of talk of some of them going back, but it appears only a small number of them returned.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are smugglers not to be considered criminals ? We know that nearly everybody in the island of St. Pierre is a smuggler.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I should like to put the hon. gentleman right about that. I do not see what interest they have to smuggle there. The smugglers were people living on the St. Lawrence who went down to the islands in schooners and smuggled in wine and liquors, &c., but the people of St. Pierre would have no reason to smuggle at all, because they were in a place where they would not require to smuggle.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman has been administering the Department of Customs for thirteen or fourteen years he would know better than to talk that way.

Hon. M. YOUNG from the committee reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again to-morrow.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

EXCURSIONS ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose

To call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the last days of the month of March, a special excursion, over the Intercolonial Railway, or over any other railway, was organized, which allowed certain senators and members of the House of Commons a visit to the ports of St. John and Halifax, in the maritime provinces, and that he will inquire :

1. Was a special train, or at least a private car, put at the disposal of the excursionists ?

2. Of how many senators, members of the House of Commons, and other persons, was the party of excursionists composed, and who were they, by name ?

3. On what day and at what hour did the journey begin, and whence did the travellers set forth ?

4. Where did they go to, and how many days did the excursion last ?

5. On what day and at what hour of the day did the travellers return to their point of departure ?

6. Whether in going or in returning, at what intermediate station did other travellers increase the number of those excursionists by joining them in their private car ?

7. How many of the excursionists paid for the use of their private car ?

8. Was there a buffet on board this train or were there on the private car any facilities to supply its passengers with proper meals, and how many of the travellers took free meals thereat ?

9. If the excursionists did not pay for the private car nor for their meals, who then did pay ?

10. Was the invitation to go and visit the winter ports of Canada restricted only to senators and members of the House of Commons of the ministerial party ? Why ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer sent me by the Department of Railways reads as follows :

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I rise to a point of order. These questions are all out of order. My point is that the hon. gentleman's questions are not addressed to anybody. It is a general fishing inquiry, not addressed to a minister nor to any person who has authority in the Chamber to answer. The questions are largely hypothetical. It is not a matter of legislation in any way, and contravenes the general principles under which questions are permitted to be asked in this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not think the point of order is well taken. The hon. gentleman states that I do not address the inquiry to any person. I am addressing it to the government. The government is the proprietor of the Intercolonial. It owns that railway and I want to know if on that railway any persons such as I have described were on board on such and such a day. The hon. Secretary of State can answer me ; the fact is that the government has the answers already prepared.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am rather surprised to hear such a point of order raised in connection with this inquiry. It is with regard to the use of the Intercolonial Railway, and we have a right to know whether a gratuitous service is given by the Intercolonial Railway to friends of the government or anybody else. I think it is a perfectly legitimate question, and one on which this House has a right to be informed, as to whether the Intercolonial Railway is being used for the purpose of granting favours to one set of men at the expense of the entire community. I cannot conceive for a moment that the point of order is at all reasonable.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I am afraid the hon. gentleman did not hear the way I put my point of order. I say the inquiry is not addressed to any minister or any person, that it is largely hypothetical and it is not in accordance with the practice of parliament, as put.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I did not notice that point ; but the inquiry must, of course, be directed to those who have charge of the Intercolonial Railway and the government has charge of the road. If the government object on that ground to giving an answer, my hon. friend will have to begin again; but very often our inquiries are made that way. The inquiry is made of the government who are responsible for the management of the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The inquiry can only be made of one particular authority, and that authority would, by implication, be shown by the wording of the notice. It must be manifest that it is addressed to the government, the only authority having to do with the Intercolonial Railway, and when any inquiry is submitted to this House it is well known that, without mentioning the government specifically, it is from the government the answer is expected. Therefore, the omission of the simple statement should not be taken to invalidate an inquiry of this kind. I therefore submit to the House that it must be taken to mean the government and no one else, and as my hon. friend the Secretary of State has apparently the answer prepared, it is quite evident that the government also assumed that the inquiry was addressed to it and to none other.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I did not ask the government specially, I asked in a general way.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—All the hon. gentleman has to do now is to direct his inquiry to the government.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I await the Speaker's decision.

The SPEAKER—I take the question to be in order, because it covers the operation of the Intercolonial Railway and I take it for granted that the inquiry is sufficiently indicative of a demand from a member of the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer placed in my hands is as follows:

The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, learning that a party of eight members of parliament, from the west, desired to visit the maritime provinces (with which they were wholly unacquainted) placed at their disposal official car No. 28. No invitations were sent by the minister to any one. The following gentlemen constituted the party: Hon. Mr. Watson, Hon. Mr. Young, Messrs. John Crawford, M.P., S. J. Jackson, M.P., A. J. Adamson, M.P., T. A. Burrows, M.P., J. Cyr, M.P., A. J. Bell.

The party left Ottawa Thursday morning, March 28, at 8 o'clock, visited St. John and Halifax, and returned to Ottawa, Tuesday morning, April 2. All expenses were paid by the gentlemen, who, being senators and members of parliament were entitled to transportation under the law.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What expense did that include—the hire of a special car?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of course I can only give the answer that has been placed in my hands. The department sent it over to me. I presume the statement is true. Members of parliament I presume travel free on the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They are free on the Intercolonial Railway, but they pay their sleeping car fares.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume the expenses were paid by the party. The statement is that the government did not pay any expenses.

THE NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY ROUTE THROUGH NEW BRUNSWICK.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON inquired:

1. Which of the two routes back from St. John river proposed for the National Transcontinental Railway through the province of New Brunswick, has been approved by the government or the National Transcontinental Railway Commission?
2. What is the length, respectively, of the two routes aforesaid, between Grand Falls and Moncton?
3. What length, stated in miles, of the route, approved as aforesaid, has a grade exceeding four-tenths of one per cent per mile, and what is the maximum grade of the railway between the aforementioned places?
4. What length, stated in miles, of the approved route of the said railway, between the east end of the Quebec bridge and Grand Falls, N.B., has a grade exceeding four-tenths of one per cent per mile, and what is the maximum grade of the railway between the said places?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The reply sent me is as follows:

1. What is known as the 'Back Route' has been recommended by the commissioners for the approval of the government.

2. The length of the 'River Route' between Grand Falls and Moncton is 240·71 miles, and of the 'Back Route' with the Pusher grade 194·27 miles.

3. The 'Back Route' has a grade of 1·1 compensated for curvature for a distance of 12¾ miles. On the remainder of the distance the maximum grade adverse to east-bound traffic 0·4 per 100 feet, and adverse to westbound 0·6 per 100 feet.

4. There is a proposed grade of 1·1 adverse to west-bound traffic 9-9 10 miles in length just west of Lake Pohenegamook. Elsewhere the maximum grade adverse to east-bound traffic is 0·4, and adverse to westbound 0·6 per 100 feet.

FRENCH VERSION OF KING'S REGULATIONS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Has there been lately a consolidation of the regulations concerning the militia of Canada which are known under the name of 'The King's Regulations and Orders for the Militia of Canada' ?
2. Has it been adopted, and by whom ?
3. Have these regulations been published, or will they be soon ?
4. Is there a French version of these regulations ?
5. Has it been published or will it be published soon ?
6. Will the officers of the militia be put in possession of these regulations before the next annual training ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The last revision of the Regulations and Orders for the militia was issued in 1904. Copies thereof were printed in the French language.

The Regulations and Orders are again being revised. As soon as the revision is completed it will be translated into French and printed. Neither the English nor the French edition will be issued before the next annual training.

PROVINCIAL SUBSIDIES.

MESSAGE FROM THE COMMONS POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Consideration of the message from the House of Commons, informing the Senate that they have passed an address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, humbly representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, to be made by Canada to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their governments and legislatures ; and requesting the Senate to unite with the House of Commons in the said address, by filling up the blank therein with the words 'Senate and'.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that this Order of the Day be discharged and that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will it be the first Order of the Day for to-morrow ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps we had better say Thursday, because there is a slight change to be made in it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should think there would be a slight change in it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my hon. friend say what the proposed change is ? The House should have some notice of it before being called upon to discuss it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The general provision with regard to subsidies is that the change takes place on the decennial census. In so far as Saskatchewan and Alberta are concerned, it was understood that a change was to take place at a quinquennial census for those provinces, and that an estimate of population should be made in the two and one-half years intervening ; that is the two and half years, five years, seven and one-half years and ten years. That is the only change.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—So that the change will be inconsequential.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The error is simply that resolution (c) agreed to at the interprovincial conference, has been left out of the address altogether. It seriously affects all the western provinces and involves probably millions of dollars.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know, of course ; I have not had an opportunity to examine it.

The Order of the Day was discharged and placed on the Orders of the Day for Thursday.

PROTECTION OF PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION.

DEBATE RESUMED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Honourable Mr. David :

That he will move that it is expedient to resolve that :

1. The Senate will insist upon the application of section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, in accordance with the spirit and true intent of that section, to the end that the exclusive powers of the legislatures of the provinces of Canada may be protected and preserved.

2. The Senate will not consider the mere insertion in a Bill of a declaration that a work is for the general advantage of Canada to be in itself sufficient foundation for the exercise of the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

3. The Senate will not pass any Bill containing a declaration that a local work or undertaking is for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces, unless the truth of that declaration has been proved.

4. The Senate will not consider the presence in a Bill of clauses relating to subjects within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada to be in itself sufficient reason for the enactment of other clauses relating to subjects not within that authority.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Middlesex)—In rising to resume the debate on the motion of the hon. gentleman from Mille Isles, I hope this House will not assume that I propose, either expressly or by implication, to censure the parliament of Canada, or either branch of it, because of the procedure in the matter of provincial rights, or because of either alleged or assumed encroachments on the jurisdiction of either of the provinces. I am altogether too young a member of this House to assume such a role. I do not know but that I could furnish some excuses—although I do not wish to excuse—the parliament of Canada for the advance, or rather the encroachments which I think it has made in the last few years upon the jurisdiction of the provinces. Those who are promoters of railway legislation, or of legislation in the interest of large corporations, naturally feel that a charter or an Act investing them with certain powers possesses a greater value if it emanates from this parliament than one obtained from the local legislature, and, naturally, as such charters involve the risking of large sums of money, and interests of a somewhat extensive character they would seek that legislation from a body having the larger jurisdiction and larger interest, knowing that on applying to financial corporations for money or for the issue of bonds whereby their schemes could be carried out, the authority of parliament would have greater weight. I think it was a motive like this that, to some extent, influenced the approaches made to this House and the other branch of the parliament of Canada for legislation which many members feel has been rather an encroachment upon the rights of the province. Besides, there has been projected into public opinion recently a feeling of misgiving as to the protection which vested rights receive from provincial legislatures, in fact on many hands we have noticed symptoms of uneasiness that power vested in corporations by provincial legislatures are subject to reconsideration, and that vested rights which have grown up under charters from these legislatures are not regarded as being so safe, nor do they carry the same guarantee they otherwise would. In fact, the movement in favour of municipal ownership, which carried with it rights of expropriation and, in the opinion of some, rights of confiscation, or privileges of confiscation, have created an uneasiness in certain quarters, and those that were in charge of the development of large interests felt that in going to the parliament of Canada they were going where the interests would be more secure, and it may be possible that the parliament of Canada, yielding to the importunities of these people, have gone further in the direction of encroaching upon provincial rights than it otherwise would. Whether that be the reason or not I cannot tell, nor do I present it entirely as an excuse ; yet it impresses me as one of the reasons why so many Bills have been submitted to this House and to the other Chamber, which, practically, involve an encroachment upon provincial rights as I understand them, and that in later days there has been a greater number of such measures submitted than perhaps a decade or a year or two ago. The question that we are about to discuss, which I hope to present to this House very briefly, is a very large question, a question which touches the very core of our federal compact. It is vital to the successful working of confederation. It has been so regarded ever since the British North America Act of 1867, and a brief survey of the history of Canada would show that, perhaps, no other question so disturbed public opinion in all the provinces as any alleged or attempted encroachment by the parliament of Canada on the rights conceded to the provinces by the federal compact. In fact, we began our history of confederation in a very serious storm of indignation on the part of one or more of the provinces, as to the alleged encroachment on the federal compact, even before it became an Act of the parliament of Great Britain. We can very easily recall the indignation of the province of Nova Scotia because the British North America Act was not referred to the people of Nova Scotia for ratification. The ground put forward was that they were taken in, that they were corralled practically into confederation, and under a new system in regard to which their opinion was not asked and in regard to which the people, as a people, had no word to say one way or the other. There was great indignation in New Brunswick, in 1871, because those who believed in separate schools felt that the privileges theretofore exercised by the provinces were curtailed by the British North America Act. In the province of Manitoba, we had a rebellion in 1869 and 1870 because the rights of the people of Manitoba—the major portion of them being half-breeds, as they were then called—were not respected, as they thought. In the Northwest Territories in 1885 we had an incipient rebellion which cost us I think $9,000,000 of money. In British Columbia there were threats of secession because the terms which were embodied in the Act of union in regard to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway were not carried out, subsequently modified by the Carnarvon terms, and there were doubts expressed as to the good faith of the government of the day in regard to the carrying out of these terms. In Quebec, we have had an agitation over the supposed violations of the union compact, notable at when the disallowance of the Jesuits Estate Act was a question before the House of Commons.

Perhaps my own province of Ontario has been the most restless of all the provinces. It may be that they had great reason to complain than any of the others, but, perhaps, of all the provinces it was more restive and put forth a severe struggle to assert its rights, expended more money and submitted to a more prolonged agitation than any of the other provinces on this ground. We had at first what was called the boundary award, when the province of Ontario thought the award agreed to by the arbitrators, appointed in 1877 or 1878, should have been ratified by the House of Commons and was not so ratified. We had it afterwards on the disallowance of the Streams Bill, and we had it in various forms after that, for instance as to the right of the Crown to own the timber and minerals on Crown lands. We had it notably in the case of the McCarthy Act, whereby the Dominion assumed the control and direction of liquor licenses in the provinces. We had it again in 1883, when there was passed in the Dominion parliament an Act under which all railways crossing certain other railways should be declared for the general advantage of Canada and in that way taken out of the provincial jurisdiction; and in the session of 1882, under Sir Oliver Mowat, a series of resolutions was moved declaring the rights of the province in regard to this matter. In order to make it clear, let me refer to those resolutions. I shall read two of three of them:

First, that subject to the power of parliament of Canada to declare any work situate within a province to be for the general advantage of Canada, or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces, the right to incorporate railway companies for local and provincial purposes is, by the British North America Act, vested exclusively in the respective legislatures of the several provinces.

That the provincial legislatures ought not to be deprived of this rightful authority save where it is absolutely necessary for the general advantage of the Dominion or of more than one of its provinces.

That many railway companies have been incorporated by the legislature of this province for the construction and operation of railways of a local and provincial character, and the province and local municipalities have, by money bonuses, largely aided in the building and completion of these railways.

That the best interests of the people of Ontario require and demand that the provincial legislature should not without absolute necessity to be deprived of its authority and control over these railway companies.

That is order to escape from the proper controlling power and supervision of the legislature of this province, and not because of any benefit or advantage which would result to the Dominion or any of the provinces, some of these companies are seeking to have their respective railways declared by the Dominion parliament to be for the general advantage of Canada.

And that this House respectfully, but firmly insist that where a company whose railway has been constructed under a provincial charter seeks to escape provincial control by procuring its railway to be declared to be for any such general advantage as aforesaid, the company ought to be compelled to first procure from the provincial legislature by which it was incorporated as assent to its railway being so declared, or at least to show that such assent was applied for, and if, refused, had been so refused on improper or insufficient grounds.

These resolutions traverse the whole point of the control of the parliament of Canada over provincial railways. It was passed unanimously by the House in 1882, when it was first mooted that the parliament of Canada proposed taking control of these railways. In 1903, resolutions in somewhat similar terms were passed by the legislature of Ontario, during my own term of office, and similar ground was taken. In fact we went a little further than we did in 1882 :

That this House protests against the tendency of late years on the part of the Dominion parliament in the matter of legislation whereby companies are being incorporated by special Acts though such companies have purely provincial objects and come within the purview of subsections 11 and 16 of section 92 of the British North America Act.

That the expedient which it has become customary to adopt or inserting in Bills the mere assertion 'that the works of the company being incorporated are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada' afford no reasonable protection against encroachment upon provincial jurisdiction, the Bills, being entertained and passed apparently in ordinary routine and without reference to any serious consideration of the question of jurisdiction.

That there is involved in this growing tendency towards encroachment on the provincial field of legislation, an invasion of the rights of municipalities, which this House regards as of serious importance.

That the provincial laws relating to electric railways have been designed to safeguard in many respects the rights and interests of the municipalities through which these railways run, or, are chartered to be constructed, and the protection to municipalities thus afforded will be prejudicially effected, if not entirely removed by the assumption and exercise of the right to legislate regarding these local railways on the part of the Dominion parliament.

This House, therefore, respectfully urges the Dominion parliament not to pass legislation of this nature pertaining to matters heretofore generally understood to be within provincial jurisdiction, and which, in their nature, are matters of purely local concern.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Will the hon. gentleman tell me when those resolutions were passed ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS—That resolution was passed by the House in 1903, unanimously, and forwarded to the Speaker of the House of Commons in the usual routine, and was subsequently courteously replied to. I need not say any more to place before this House the attitude of at least the province of Ontario. In fact, we would be false to the whole principle of confederation, not only in the province of Ontario, but throughout the Dominion, if we allowed the fundamental principle on which confederation was founded to be violated wantonly, unnecessarily, and unconstitutionally, as I think it has been sometimes done. Perhaps I should not say wantonly, but constitutionally I think it has at least sometimes been done, and if in any way we could fortify the provincial legislatures in their rights in this regard by safeguarding provincial legislation such as I have indicated from passing either House of parliament, we would be contributing to the security of the federal compact under which the parliament of Canada exists, and without due respect to which, so far as the provinces are concerned, there cannot be that constitutional peace and well-being which we desire. That there is unanimity on this point need not further be discussed. In fact, it was laid down at the time confederation was discussed as the particular duty of the Senate to safeguard provincial rights. Here is a short quotation from Sir John Macdonald's speech which will be found in the confederation debates (page 38) :

To the Upper House is to be confided the protection of sectional interests, therefore is it that the three great divisions are there equally represented, for the purpose of defending such interests against the combination of majorities in the assembly.

That was the watch word of confederation. Afterwards Sir Alexander Campbell, referring to the constitution of the Senate, said :

The main reason was to give each of the provinces adequate security for the protection of its local interests. A protection which it was feared might not be found in a House where the representation was based upon numbers only as would be the case in the general assembly.

It would seem that this House was invested with a special prerogative ; that, perhaps, one of the crowning glories of the Senate was that it would stand guard upon the whole federal compact from the Atlantic to the Pacific as it is now; although its boundaries were more limited at that time, and if this House should fail in fulfilling the conditions, or should fail in the functions designed for it by the fathers of Confederation then the failure would be very much to the discredit of those who had succeeded to the constitution then provided for us. So that if we have regard to the traditions of the constitution, or to its fundamental principles, we shall see that the line laid down for us by those who drew it in 1867 is faithfully followed by us. Nor need I dwell here upon the absolute integrity of the constitutions or of the rights of the provinces under the British North America Act. There are those who say that the provinces are subordinate to the Dominion. That is not true as a constitutional principle. We derive our power from the same source as the Dominion government. It was an Act of the imperial parliament bearing the sign manual of Her Majesty, passed with all the solemnity with which Acts of the Commons and Lords temporal and spiritual are passed in the great mother of parliaments, and the parliament of Canada is no stronger constitutionally within its sphere than are the legislatures of the provinces. The local legislatures are not subordinate by any means. They derive their authority not from the Dominion but from the parliament of Great Britain, and, in that respect, their authority has as honourable an origin as the authority of the parliament of Canada itself. Here is what the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council said on that very point in the case of 'The Queen vs. Hodge :'

When the British North America Act enacted that there should be a legislature for Ontario, and that its legislative assembly should have exclusive authority to make laws for the province, and for provincial purposes in relation to the matters enumerated in section 92 (of the Act), it conferred powers not in any sense to be exercised by delegation from or as agents of the imperial parliament, but authority as plenary and as ample—within the limits prescribed by section 92—as the imperial parliament in the plenitude of its power possessed and could bestow. Within these limits of subjects and area the local legislature is supreme, and it has the same authority as the imperial parliament, or the parliament of the Dominion would have had, under like circumstances to confide to a municipal institution, or a body of its own creation, authority to make by-laws or resolutions as the subjects specified in the enactment into operation and effect.

Now, if it be true what the Privy Council has said, that the authority of the local legislature is supreme and that it has the same power as the imperial parliament what power has either branch of the parliament of Canada to encroach upon that right? We are encroaching upon that which is, within its own sphere, as full in the plenitude of its power as the parliament of Great Britain ; and any encroachment on those rights of the province would be as serious an offence in the words of the imperial Privy Council, as encroachments on the rights of the imperial parliament itself. So that the exalted position which the provincial legislatures hold is another reason, apart from the constitutional confusion which would arise, why the parliament of Canada should respect that position in the same way and in the same sacred regard of its rights as the Privy Council has set forth in the quotation I have just made. But, apart from that, we have on this side of the water a very strong authority to sustain the view I have set forth. Bourinot, in his short history of the constitution of Canada, in the edition of 1901, page 138, refers very concisely and clearly to the functions of the provincial legislatures. He says :

The exercise of legislative power by the parliament of Canada in regard to all matters not enumerated in section 92, ought to be strictly confined to such matters as are unquestionably of Canadian interest and importance, and ought not to trench upon provincial legislation with respect to any of the classes of subjects enumerated in section 92. To attach any other construction to the general power which, in supplement of its enumerated power, is conferred upon the parliament of Canada by section 91, would not only be contrary to the intention of the Act, but would practically destroy the autonomy of the provinces.

That is a very strong expression : 'Would practically destroy the autonomy of the provinces,' and if I might be permitted to interpolate between those admirable sentences of Bourinot a word of my own, I would say if there is one offence more serious than another, which the parliament of Canada could commit, than to destroy the autonomy of the provinces, then I would like to know what it is ? He continues :

If we only conceded that the parliament of Canada has authority to make laws applicable to the whole Dominion in relation to matters which in each province are substantially of local or private interest, upon the assumption that these matters also concern the peace, order and good government of the Dominion, there is hardly a subject enumerated in section 92 upon which it might not legislate, to the exclusion of the provincial legislatures. No doubt some matters in their origin local and provincial might attain such dimensions as to affect the body politic of the Dominion and to justify the Canadian parliament in passing laws for their regulation or abolition in the interests of the Dominion. But great caution must be observed in distinguishing between that which is local and provincial, and, therefore within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures, and that which has ceased to be merely local or provincial and has become matter of national concern in such sense as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada.

Here we have from a very high constitutional authority a word of warning as to two things: first, the destruction of the autonomy of the federal compact, and secondly an encroachment upon the jurisdiction of the provinces, which would practically absorb, as he says it is quite possible—and that must be apparent to everybody—all the powers of the local legislatures on the ground, on the simple declaration, that they are for the advantage of Canada. I am sure that the fathers of confederation never intended, when they inserted that free and easy expression, or that generic, expression 'for the advantage of Canada,' in the British North America Act, that it should be used to encroach one iota upon the specific powers enumerated in section 92, conferred upon the various local legislatures. So there you have an additional confirmation of my contention, that to encroach upon the jurisdiction of the province is a very serious matter. I may say that provision is further fortified, if I took time to investigate the matter fully, by the principles laid down in the disallowance of provincial Acts. They are precisely the principles that should guide this House in enacting legislation which might encroach on provincial rights. Sir John Macdonald, as far back as 1868, in the volume of orders in council, stating the grounds on which he proposed to consider the disallowance of provincial legislation then submitted to council, laid down the following:

In deciding whether an Act of a provincial legislature should be disallowed the government must not only consider whether it affects the interests of the whole Dominion or not, but also whether it be unconstitutional, whether it exceeds the jurisdiction conferred on local legislatures, and in cases where the jurisdiction is concerned, whether it clashes with the legislation of the general parliament.

Now, if Sir John Macdonald was a court of review for Dominion legislation, and if you read into this statement his position as a court of review, he would simply say, in deciding whether an Act of parliament should be disallowed, the imperial government must not only consider whether it is in the interest of the whole Dominion or not, but, also, whether it be constitutional, and whether it exceeds the jurisdiction conferred on the local legislatures. But we are, fortunately, in the somewhat sovereign position that our legislation is not open to similar review. If the legislation of the parliament of Canada were submitted to some officer of the Crown, with the right which the Minister of Justice has of considering the legislation of the provinces, I do not know but sometimes Bills we pass here with all the solemnity of the parliament of Canada might fare somewhat badly. In fact, I am of the opinion that if the question could be brought before the Privy Council—I am not giving that opinion as if it were of any great importance—if some of our legislation were brought before the law officers of the Crown, and examined on the principle laid down by Sir John Macdonald, a good deal of it might be disallowed; and I am further of the opinion that if the question of law were raised on some of those Bills where the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada has extended beyond what I believe is its proper field, before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, a good deal of that legislation would be declared ultra vires. The constitution must be considered as a whole. The provinces have certain rights. In regard to railways and canals extending through two or more provinces, or extending from one province to another, these works are evidently within the jurisdiction of the Dominion of Canada, but unless they fulfil that condition, I do not believe myself that any declaration of the parliament of Canada will of itself bring them within the jurisdiction of Canada. It cannot be that our constitution is based upon an ipse dixit; it cannot be that the declaration of a law makes that law which is not law, and which the constitution, by its various clauses, declares to be something else than what the parliament of Canada declares it to be. I think it would be within the power of the Supreme Court—in fact any court—to declare any law of the parliament of Canada unconstitutional, but it would be evidently within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to declare any part of that legislation ultra vires which cannot be shown to come within that clause of the Act which says that public works must lie within two or more provinces to be strictly within the jurisdiction of the Dominion of Canada. That was Sir John Macdonald's view of the constitutionality of the provincial legislation. When the Act uniting the provinces was before the imperial parliament, in 1867, Lord Carnarvon laid down this principle as to the constitution of Canada. He said :

> The constitution of Canada does not contemplate any interference with provincial legislation.

Any interference. Here is the distinguished nobleman who had the privilege of expounding that constitution when it was first referred to the parliament of Canada, declaring that the constitution did not contemplate any interference with provincial legislation. So we were told, and we accepted that constitution in good faith. We were told that there would be no interference with provincial legislation within the competence of the local legislature by the Dominion parliament, or, as a consequence, by the Dominion government. When we accepted confederation, we were told that that compact did not contemplate any interference with provincial legislation or subject within the jurisdiction of the local legislatures, and yet, if I am not astray in my analysis of some legislation of the parliament of Canada within the last two years, I fear very much that this fundamental principle, laid down by Lord Carnarvon at the inception of our constitution has been interfered with. I will trouble the House with one other quotation from Mr. Mills, in the discussion of the Jesuits' Estate Bill in 1889. He says :

> The assumption in our constitution is, that authority is vested in those who are most competent to exercise it. It is upon that ground that the union is established ; but it is also assumed in the reservations of certain powers to the local legislature that they are the most competent to discharge the duties connected with these powers. If they are the most competent upon what ground can we interfere? What right would we have to interfere ? Why the very ground upon which interference is asked in this case, would if it had been put forward when the constitution was framed, have been sufficient to have kept Quebec out of the union? Are you going to entrap them with a union by a form of a constitution which seemingly gives them exclusive control over certain subjects, and then after they have become members of the union exercise a meddlesome control over their domestic affairs.

I think that an admirable exposition of what the constitution was intended to bestow.

That brings me down to the next point which I wish to bring before the House, and that is the inception, shall I say, of this violation of the constitutional Act—the inception of it on a large scale. That was by the Railway Act of 1883. Now, do not let it be supposed that that Act was an intentional violation of the constitution. I do not think it was so intended, but I think, as it has been construed, it has led to violations which were easy ; that it has paved the way for legislation, for encroachment, which came very easy in later years. Let us see what that Act proposed. By the Act of 1883, the great railway arteries of Canada, such as the Grand Trunk, the Great Western, the North Shore, the Northern Railway, the Canada Southern Railway, the Canadian Pacific, and so on, were declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. There is no doubt that that declaration, so far as these roads are concerned, is a wise one. It is quite evident, to my mind, that we could not manage our railway system adequately except from one centre, and if the Board of Railway Commissioners is going to be effective, it can only be effective by having the full sweep and control over all railways. In fact, I would be prepared to consider seriously an argument whereby it was attempted to be shown that even branch lines connected with the same artery should be under the same control. I think that can be fairly argued. I think it is actually an impossibility, in the administration of our railway system, to sever branch lines from the main arteries ; and if branch lines are to be associated with the main arteries, then I think it would almost follow, ex necessitate, that railways that were not part of the main system that were crossing these main arteries should also come under similar control for the purpose of organization and the distribution of freight, &c. But this was a very sweeping Bill, and it declared that these railways were to be under the exclusive jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada by the Act of 1883. The Railway Acts of Canada were subsequently consolidated in 1888, and the clause of 1883, though changed in form, was practically re-enacted with this subsection:

> Every such railway and branch line shall hereafter be subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

This Act of 1883, as amended or enlarged in 1888, practically brought our whole railway system under the authority of the parliament of Canada, branch lines and all their connections, because all roads crossing the main lines were, by that Act, declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. There came a sudden change over the minds of the legislature subsequent to 1888. In 1900, for instance, it was declared that the mere crossing of a railway by a street railway would not bring it necessarily within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. The clause reads as follows :

> The Railway Act, chapter 29 of the Statutes of 1888 is amended by inserting after section 6 the following section :
> 6a. Street railways and tramways, while hereby expressly declared to be subject to such of the provisions of this Act as are referred to in section 4, shall not by reason only of the fact of crossing or connecting with one or other of the lines of railway mentioned in section 306 be taken or considered to be worked for the general advantage of Canada nor to be subject to any other provisions of this Act.

That is to say, that street railways and tramways were, to a certain extent, relieved from the sweeping circle of the Act of 1888. Then in 1904 still further concessions were made to the provinces. For instance, it was held by the Act of 1904 that so far as Sunday legislation was concerned, and various other matters to which I will refer presently, that these were not removed from provincial jurisdiction simply because they were brought by a general Act or declared by a general Act to be for the general advantage of Canada. You will see this in clause 9, subsection 2, of the Consolidated Railway Act. Then it was also provided there that railways owned by the provinces were not brought under the General Railway Act except as to through traffic. Then it was also declared that telephones, although placed under the Railway Board, should still be subject to certain municipal control, &c. So that by the subsequent amendment of the Railway Act the high ground taken in 1883 and 1888 was to a certain extent abandoned, and concessions were made towards provincial rights, which, as far as they went, I think, were worthy of approval. But we meet with a difficulty. Although by the Acts of 1888 and 1906 the jurisdiction over crossing railways was to the mere act of crossing or to the physical connection and to through traffic, and to criminal matters and to connection with navigable waters, yet by section 6 of the same Act it was declared—and here is a very important subsection :

> Where any railway the construction or operation of which is authorized by a special Act passed by the legislature of any province, is declared by any Act of the parliament of Canada to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, this Act should apply to such railway and to the company constructing or operating the same to the exclusion of such of the provisions of the said special Act as are inconsistent with this Act, and in lieu of any general railway Act of the province.

That is to say, where the province passes a railway Act or passes any special Act incorporating a railway, any clause in the Railway Act of the province or any clause of the special Act of the province, inconsistent with the Railway Act is null and void. Now this is a tremendous exercise of power. If the parliament of Canada exercised control simply over the physical connection of railways crossing each other, or over through freight, or over criminal matters, or over their extension to navigable waters, we might say, ' well and good, if it is necessary for the efficient working of the railway system,' but when they extend their power far beyond that, and when they declare that any Act of the provincial legislature inconsistent with the Dominion Act is null and void, then I feel that they have gone further than is necessary. Let me give you an instance or two. For instance, in the Railway Act passed in 1906, in the province of Ontario, provision is made to fix the rates on sleeping cars. That is a provision inconsistent with the Railway Act of this parliament as far as I understand it. There is no power taken yet, or if it has been taken it has not been exercised, to fix the rate on sleeping cars.

The Board of Railway Commissioners does fix the rate as to passengers, and have recently revised it, I believe, declaring a three-cent rate for Canada. Then the legislature of Ontario has declared a two-cent fare to be the regular fare on radial railways. The Railway Act governs the radial railways, I believe. The terms of the Act are very ambiguous, but I thought that they covered the radial railways and tramways. I do not know exactly what a tramway is, unless it be an extension of a street railway. If that be under the jurisdiction of the province, it would be computed at a two-cent rate. Then the provincial legislature has declared that the franchise of a railway should be 25 years. There is no limit to the franchise of a radial railway for the Dominion of Canada. The Railway Act provides for the examination of motormen and that railway employees shall have a lien for wages on the railway property. It defines the hours of work; that no motormen or conductors shall work more than sixteen hours without six hours of rest, and then the Crown may use the right of way for certain purposes. I have not exhausted the differences between the two Acts by any means, but I have shown that in certain important matters, the provinces proposed or declared that it is right to exercise jurisdiction in the province, inconsistent on many points with the jurisdiction exercised by the Dominion Board of Railway Commissioners. Now, why should that be declared to be ultra vires by the Dominion Act? It is inconsistent. It is certainly ultra vires, if I understand the significance of the term. And therefore the Dominion parliament in extending the authority over provincial railways has infringed, as I believe very seriously, upon provincial jurisdiction in matters of that kind. I can see difficulties arising too. For instance, will there be a clash of authority between the Dominion Railway Board and the Provincial Railway Board? There is the danger. If so, then the courts must settle as between them, and perhaps it is only in that way that the relative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada and the legislatures of the provinces can be ascertained. Then other questions arise. Do we dismiss for all time to come, or do we exercise or must we exercise for all time to come the control over provincial railways? The Dominion parliament has declared these railways to be for the general advantage of Canada. Can we recall that, whether it is right or wrong? I think if any one reads the Interpretation Act, he will see it cannot be recalled. There may be retroactive legislation, but retroactive legislation, by the Interpretation Act, has only a certain sphere of influence. Then the provinces are permanently deprived of that right, and then there are certain railways, amalgamated railways, that are partly under the provincial and partly under the Dominion government. What is their standing? Who is to determine between them? Then there is the question I raised before: does a simple declaration by the parliament of Canada oust the jurisdiction of the province? These are questions that will arise in connection with the consideration of the proposition which the hon. gentleman from Mille Isles has so ably brought before us, and which the parliament of Canada, and this House particularly, should face at the earliest possible moment. For that reason, I am in entire sympathy, shall I say, with the resolution proposed by the hon. gentleman from Mille Isles. Just let us see what his motion says. The first paragraph reads:

1. The Senate will insist upon the application of section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, in accordance with the spirit and true intent of that section, to the end that the exclusive powers of the legislatures of the provinces of Canada may be protected and preserved.

That is what we are here for, as I understand it, to insist upon the meaning of section 92, its true spirit, intent and meaning. The second paragraph of the hon. gentleman's motion reads as follows:

2. The Senate will not consider the mere insertion in a Bill of a declaration that a work is for the general advantage of Canada to be in itself sufficient foundation for the exercise of the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

There are various ways, I fear, of introducing into Bills certain clauses whereby, on the face of them, they appear to be for the advantage of Canada, and yet it is merely for the purpose of getting legislation here, although the true purpose and spirit of the Bill could be served quite as well without any such clause. The third paragraph states:

The Senate will not pass any Bill containing a declaration that a local work or undertaking is for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces, unless the truth of that declaration has been proved.

I think we all owe it to ourselves that we should see that the truth of such declaration were proven. Then the fourth paragraph is as follows:

The Senate will not consider the presence in a Bill of clauses relating to subjects within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada to be in itself sufficient reason for the enactment of other clauses relating to subjects not within that authority.

These resolutions may be amended or modified as they are passed in the House. That is a matter of no concern for the present. The main concern is that the spirit of those resolutions should be followed. I do not think this House should be placed in a position of being a sort of a court of appeal from the other House in regard to matters of this kind. We should not be required to set up a sort of abbatoir here, where we would slaughter Bills coming from the lower House because they contain provisions violating the jurisdiction of the province. It is the duty of the whole of the parliament of Canada, as much the duty of one Chamber as of the other, to see that the rights of the provinces are maintained. While in a certain sense a greater responsibility may rest upon this Chamber, I do not for one moment wish to be understood as saying that no responsibility rests upon the other Chamber. In fact it is barely possible that sometimes clauses are inserted in Bills and they go through certain stages in the other Chamber, in the hope that they may not go any further when they reach this House. There should be no such motive in introducing any Bill into any Chamber. But whatever may be the motive of introducing any Bill here or there, we, as the custodians of provincial rights, we who are set up on the watch tower by the terms of the Federal Act, should see that the rights of the provinces are guarded, and that in no narrow spirit. If it can be shown that a Bill which may appear to be a provincial Bill, has a wider sweep than the province, and embraces in it matters of Dominion concern, I am sure this House will rise to the importance of the occasion, and not wait for some metaphysical or casuistic consideration of the British North America Act, but will give its imprimatur to every measure, if it considers that it is necessary that it should be declared to be an Act for the general advantage of Canada; and, on the other hand, when it is apparent that a Bill has no such significance and is not necessary for any such purpose, this House ought to be sufficiently responsive to the constitution under which it is organized to see that provincial rights are not encroached upon. For these reasons, I have very great pleasure in seconding the motion of the hon. gentleman from Mille Isles.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I thought it is rather extraordinary that so important a resolution as this should be passed without any expression of opinion on the part of the government. The affirmation of a principle in this resolution is very important, and affects the legislation of both branches of parliament on the policy of the government. I think therefore, we should hear from the government as to whether they are fully committed to this resolution, or whether they are not.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman. If he wishes to debate this resolution, it is quite within his power to do so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We know what the constitution is, and we had better adhere to it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I understand it, this is not a declaration which is supposed to come from the government. This is a declaration of the policy of this House, the Senate, not as representing one side of politics or the other.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—If this motion is carried, shall we be bound by it?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—By common sense.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Therefore it is that I for one also would like to know what the government has to say about it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I think the leaders of this House ought to express their opinion.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I think the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman from Halifax is the correct one. We are simply expressing the views of this Chamber with regard to the whole question of our relations with the other provinces, and it is not a matter upon which the government are called to express an opinion. We are dealing with a question that comes properly within the purview of this Chamber, and we are dealing with it in such a way as to express clearly and distinctly our opinion upon an exceedingly important question.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I entirely dissent from the view expressed by the hon. gentleman from Halifax. I did not expect the point to be raised, but the highest authorities on parliamentary practice and government lay down the rule that the government is responsible for everything that passes through parliament. It is extraordinary that the government should fail to announce a policy on so important a question. If the motion passes, and the government is silent, it is assumed that they adopted its principle.

The House divided on the motion, which was carried on the following division :

YUKON PLACER MINING ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committe of the Whole on Bill (135) An Act to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand the object of the government is to seek power to grant leases of the whole bed of the river in the territory of the Yukon. Has my hon. friend or the government in view the granting of leases of the entirety of the river bed to any particular individuals or companies ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No, I do not understand that that is the object ; but I think that the question was raised as to whether the government had the right to make regulations governing dredging leases at all, and that this simply makes it clear that the government have the power to issue regulations governing leases.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is an amendment to the Interpretation Act. It seems a rather peculiar place to insert an amendment of this nature.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Apparently it has appeared to the Department of Justice that there was some question, under that particular clause, as to whether they could make regulations or not, and this is intended to remove the doubt.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the policy of the government with reference to the granting of those leases ? Is it intended to lease very large areas of river beds, or to foster mining on a much smaller scale than prevails at present ? We are all familiar with the reports in the press, that the Guggenheims, of New York, who are known to be large monopolists, have acquired extensive areas for placer mining in the Yukon Territory. An amendment of this kind looks very much to me like a declaration of policy on the part of the government to lease the entire beds of rivers and streams in that country. If that is the policy entertained by the government, I think it is objectionable in the extreme.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—As I understand the matter, the intention of the government is, in the first place, to sub-divide the river beds into sections of somewhat considerable extent, but still into sections ; but they reserve to themselves the power, in certain cases, where it is made apparent to them that it would be desirable and important to do it, of granting several leases to one individual. That I understand to be their policy.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 2 :

2. Section 36 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following subsection :
2. No claim shall be relocated within ten days of its being so abandoned.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—This is intended to meet a certain difficulty which hon. gentleman will probably understand readily enough. Under the section which it is proposed to amend, a person holding a claim might abandon it by giving certain notice, and the special reason for recommending this change is stated to be that, under this Act, entry for a claim is granted for say one year, but within that period the party is bound to expend $200 on mining operations. It has been found, in some cases, that the holder of a claim has made no expenditure whatever during the year : he gives it up just prior to the termination of the year and before any one knows what he has done he re-locates it. This is intended to prevent that abuse.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under the law as it stands, he is precluded from re-locating that claim at any time.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am not advised to that effect. The department think that if ten days are allowed to elapse between the date on which the abandonment is recorded in the office of the mining recorder, and the date of its being again recorded, the fact of its being abandoned would become known to other parties, and the public would have an equal chance.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Section 36 of the Act says expressly : 'And thereafter he shall not personally, or through any other person, re-locate the said claim.' You cannot have stronger language than that, so I do not see the exact point of this amendment.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The department appears to think that they get it re-located in point of fact.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It must be that relocation does not mean necessarily location by the same party, but a second location by some one else, and I can understand that the object of having ten days' notice is that a man who is waiting behind the office door to re-locate the claim as soon as it is abandoned shall not have that advantage.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That is their intention.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It evidently ties up the claim for ten days after it has been abandoned. The law is, and will continue to be, that the person abandoning the claim shall not have the right to re-locate. The abuse that this amendment would be subject to, is the possibility of permitting a mining recorder to assist friends in taking up abandoned claims while the public would not be aware of the fact that they were abandoned. Under this amendment, the claim would remain practically in the office of the mining recorder for ten days without the public knowing anything about it, and, in the meantime, the recorder may communicate to his friends the fact that a certain claim has been abandoned, and that it is open for re-location on a certain day.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I should think that anybody is permitted under the law to go to the office of the mining recorder and see what has been done at any time—is not that so ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, that would be the case ; but I suppose the public would not intuitively know that a man is about to abandon his claim. It seems to me public notice should be posted in the mining recorder's office in sufficient time to give the public notice that certain claims have been abandoned. In that way you give the information to the public.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Would that be sufficiently advertising it ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think the notice posted in the office of the mining recorder, that such claims are subject to re-location on certain dates, would be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I understand it, the hon. leader of the opposition does not object to this clause which is under consideration, because it must be felt that there is very much less chance for the friends of the party who abandons the claim to get hold of it, if it be vacant for ten days; but, as I understand the hon. gentleman, he thinks that in addition to these claims being held vacant for ten days, there should be notice to the public that these areas are vacant. I think the suggestion is a good one, and if we do not amend the Bill by adopting it, the regulations which I suppose the Minister of the Interior has power to make, should contain a provision of that kind.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What does my hon. friend suggest ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not prepared to say the extent to which the notice should go, but notice should be given to the public immediately any of those claims are abandoned. Otherwise the mining recorder is the sole repository of the information that the claims have been abandoned.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I understand the hon. gentleman's point, and and I would ask him to put his views in writing and give notice that on the third reading he will move that certain words be added. In the meantime, I can submit the matter to the Minister of the Interior. I am not sufficiently familiar with the details of these mining claims to know how far it is practicable to carry out the hon. gentleman's idea, or what possible difficulties might arise. The object is clear enough, to allow ten days to elapse during which no claim can be re-located.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The object is right enough. I move the following amendment :

Due notice of which shall be posted in the office of the mining recorder and upon the claim during the ten days which elapse between the abandonment and re-location.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Are these claims within a reasonable distance of the mining recorder's office generally, or are they a long distance away ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I could not speak of that with accuracy. The policy of the government has been to locate a mining recorder within a reasonable distance of claims. I apprehend, in a case of that kind, the mining recorder would not permit the re-location within ten days, but the Act does not make it obligatory that the re-location shall be in ten days. It may be longer.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I accept the amendment conditionally, reserving the right to subsequently change it if the Department of the Interior see difficulties in the way of carrying it out.

Hon. Mr. POWER—How would it be to add these words :

And only after notice of such abandonment has been posted up for at least a week in the office of the mining recorder.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I accept the change.

The amendment as changed was agreed to, and the clause as amended was adopted.

On clause 3 :

3. Paragraph (b) of section 90 of the said Act is amended by inserting in the fifth line thereof, after the words 'ninety-eight,' the words 'or of any regulations now or hereafter passed in amendment of such regulations.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my right hon. friend say whether this will affect any vested rights in that territory ? It will be observed that section 90 protects certain rights, and the passage of this amendment might very seriously affect other rights.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The intention seems to be fair and proper enough.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The statute defines what rights may be acquired. It protects rights acquired up to 18th of January, 1898. The intention of the amendment is to enlarge the protection of those rights, and to practically take from the public rights which, upon the passage of this Act, they then enjoyed as against the private individuals referred to in clauses a, b and c.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I would hardly put that construction on it. What it intends to do is to protect parties who have acquired rights under subsequent regulations. Should they not be protected ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As the rights to be acquired were limited by the legislation of 1906, how could other rights be acquired in anticipation of the government enlarging the scope of those rights during the present session ? Have rights been acquired in anticipation of the passage of this legislation ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not think that was the intention.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would be the effect of it.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The hon. gentleman will observe that this was nearly nine years ago, and a good many new regulations have been passed since that date under which parties acquired rights. What is now proposed is to validate their title to the property that they have acquired under subsequent regulations to those of the 18th of January, 1898. I hardly think the public at large would be damaged thereby.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will see the peculiar rights in view were rights which were taken or will be taken out of this Act. That is, they must be rights of an exceptional character, rights to which the Act of last session would not extend, and this amendment would enlarge those exceptional rigths.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does my hon. friend think that this amendment would have a retroactive effect ? I hardly consider so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would be the effect of it. You say any regulations now or hereafter passed in amendment of such regulations.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Would not that, under the general construction of our statutes, apply simply to cases occurring after this became law ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It might enlarge the particular right which was acquired under the order in council of 1898. That is to say, if a right were acquired by the order in council of 1898, and since that time regulations in council have been passed, it would enlarge those rights as may have been provided by the regulations in council which have since been passed.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That it would enlarge those rights is undoubtedly clear, but would it enlarge them except after the passage of this Act ? I should rather think that any party who had come in and acquired a vested right in the interval would not be affected by the passage of this Act ; but any parties who, after its passage, came in would be affected.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My reading of it would be this ; that if they acquired a right under the order in council of 1898, then no matter what rights they have acquired since that time, if there be an order in council passed since, they would enjoy those rights in entirety, even though it be to the exclusion of the restrictions which are embodied in the general legislation. It seems to me that this measure is being passed in pursuance of something which has occurred. The question is, should not the committee know what is in contemplation by reason of the enlargement of this particular section ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—There may be cases which are not known to me in detail, but as I am advised the intention is simply as there had been a good many regulations made since that particular date, that whatever validity was given to rights acquired previously should be now given, but only, as I understand it, from this date.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, it would not be from this date ; it would be regulations already in existence. However, my hon. friend may get further information on the object of this amendment.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Certainly I will. If the hon. gentleman is clear as to the point, I will consult the Minister of Justice about it. How would it meet his views to insert some words providing that nothing in this clause should affect any litigation or claims accruing prior to the passing of this Act ? That I think would completely avert the danger he fears.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If there be some restrictive clauses to prevent a conflict of rights which may have occurred in the interval, that in my judgment would be desirable. My right hon. friend will observe that it deals with a particular class of mining rights which are, by reason of the order in council of 1898 and the subsequent amendments, taken entirely out of the general legislation; that is to say, we are dealing with a class of rights excluded by this Act and dealt with by orders in council.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I understand that, and I understand also this: Mining rights are sometimes of a complicated character, and there is considerable difficulty in dealing with them at the immense distances we are from the scene of action, so that I will consult the Minister of Justice on this point. We might reserve this clause until I have had time to get the desired information.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I cannot realize the danger which the hon. leader of the opposition seems to feel with respect to this clause. The section reads as follows :

No person shall be granted or acquire a claim or any right therein, or carry on placer mining in the territory except in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

Now, if that were made absolute, the rights of persons who have been acting under the old law and under the regulations made in accordance with the old law, might be prejudiced and then the clauses comes in order to protect those persons :

Provided that this section shall not affect any rights which

(a) Have already been acquired under the regulations for the disposal of mining locations in the territory to be worked by the hydraulic or other mining process approved by order in council the 3rd of December, 1898, and amendments thereto.

The Bill proposes to say ' Or of any regulations now or hereafter passed in amendment of such regulations.' I do not see how any injustice can be done to any one under that clause, and I think it is a very necessary thing.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I call the attention of the leader of the opposition to a fact which he might not have noticed, that this paragraph (b) refers solely and exclusively to leases to dredge for minerals in the beds of the rivers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Of course that is a very large and important right.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is a very large and important right, but it is not one of those rights in which I think there would be anything like the same danger of dispute or difficulty as would occur in ordinary placer claims.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Not numerically, but this class of claims was, and I fancy is yet, looked upon as one of the most important classes of claims in the Yukon, and I think that probably operations there will be conducted more under this class of claims in future than any other from what I can learn. Of course it may involve the question of riparian rights. Dredging leases must necesarily involve questions of that kind. In fact very many important and complex questions may be raised.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I have no objection to confer with the Department of Justice about it. In the meantime we can let the clause stand.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On clause 4,

4. The validity of the right of any owner of any placer mining claim in the Yukon Territory shall not be affected by reason of the neglect of such owner, or the neglect of any company or person through whom such owner claims title to such placer mining claim, to renew, between the thirtieth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and six, and the first day of August following, the date upon which the Yukon Placer Mining Act came into force, the free miner's certificate held by such owner, company or person under the placer mining regulations which were in force in the Yukon Territory prior to the said first day of August : provided that this section shall not prejudicially affect the rights of any other company or person in or to such placer mining claim, if such last mentioned rights were acquired by reason of the neglect of the prior owner of such placer mining claim, or of any company or person through whom he claims title thereto, to renew such free miner's certificate within the period in this section mentioned.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I may point out to the leader of the opposition that the reason for this, as I am informed, is that the Yukon Placer Mining Act was originally framed with the idea that it would come into force on the 1st July, 1906. As he will recollect, for very good reasons it was not put into force until the 1st of August. There seems to be some error as to the date; it did not come into force until the 1st of August, 1906. Prior to the passing of that Act, every miner was obliged to obtain and keep in force by renewal a free miner's certificate. That certificate is not required under the provisions of the Yukon Placer Mining Act. A number of these miners, understanding the Act would come into force on the 1st July, 1906, did not renew their free miner's certificate, and the intention, apparently, is to prevent any injury accruing to them from their default in that respect.

Hon. Mr. BAKER, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again.

PORT ARTHUR POWER AND DEVELOPMENT COMPANY BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENTS POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS moved concurrence in the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to Bill (WW) An Act to incorporate the Port Arthur Power and Development Company.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I wish to say a few words on this question ? I do not think these amendments are before us in a proper way. I do not think the committee had a right to report on that Bill before having done its work. The committee had no right, after having adjourned in the morning, to sit in the evening without proper notice, and no notice was given. I call attention to the point that this motion is not properly on the order paper. I do not think a committee has more rights than the House has. At page 54 of the third edition of Bourinot we find the following :

> Committees shall be regularly adjourned from day to day, though in the case of a select committee particularly the chairman is frequently allowed to arrange the date and hour of sitting, but this can be done only with the consent of all the members of the committee.

The committee sat in the morning. At one o'clock, or a quarter past, the committee adjourned to the call of the Chair. A particular instruction having been given to the chairman to call a meeting for that day. I say that, under those circumstances the committee cannot go back on its decision and have a meeting on the same day. There must be a distinct understanding when the committee is sitting if it is to meet on the same day. If the House adjourns now, would the hon. gentleman contend that we could meet this evening ? No, we could not, because when the House adjourns today it has to adjourn till the next day, and so with the committee, except if at the sitting of the committee there is unanimous consent of the members of the committee that the session is to be adjourned till the evening. It is the same sitting and is continuing, but in this case it was not the continuation of the same sitting. The sitting had been concluded and the calling of another session was left to the Chair. I contend that the meeting was irregularly called in the evening, and moreover I contend that the committee has no right to report at all, the time having expired. If we look at page 358 of the Minutes and Proceedings we find the following :

> Your committee recommend that the time limited for presenting private Bills to the Senate be extended to Wednesday, the thirteenth day of March next, and also that the time limited for receiving reports from any standing or select committee on a private Bill be extended to Wednesday, the third day of April next.

We are far from the third of April, and I do not think there has been any subsequent order. I looked through the Minutes and made inquiries and find that this is the last order. So that the committee has no right to report that Bill any more than any other Bill. Then I refer to page 758 of Bourinot, where he says :

> In the session of 1880-81 the time for the reception of reports on private Bills in the Commons lapsed accidentally and it was not competent for the Standing Orders Committee to recommend an extension of time. It was then considered necessary to give formal notice of a motion to revive it.

And more than that I claim also that no notice was published in the lobby. Rule 121 says :

> The clerk shall cause lists of all private Bills and petitions relating thereto to be prepared daily by the clerks of committees to which the same are respectively referred; and the time when and the room wherein each committee is to meet shall be specified in such lists, which shall be hung up in the lobby.

Not one of those things was done. The list in the lobby did not show us there was a meeting in the evening, or that there was a meeting in room No. 8, which, by rule 21, is made obligatory on the secretary of the committee. For these reasons, I claim that the report is not in order.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Perhaps the House will allow me to say with regard to the meeting of the committee, that the members on the committee were notified. I was notified and went to the meeting.

When I reached the committee room the committee was sitting, and the hon. gentleman who sits on my left was in the Chair, and some progress had been made I sat down and took part in the proceedings. The hon. gentleman asked me openly if I could take the Chair. I did so, with the consent, I presume, of the gentlemen present. The discussion went on for some little time. It was finished in the usual way, and I was acting chairman at the time, and so reported the Bill. I certainly got my notice.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I got mine.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—That is the whole proceeding, so far as the committee was concerned. With regard to the other point raised by my hon. friend, I may say that there was a meeting of the committee this morning, and I thought I saw my hon. friend present and he raised no question as to the regularity of the proceedings there.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That does not deprive me of the right to raise the point here, but I think the other questions are not answered. It is not the fact of giving a notice that makes the meeting in order. If you have a right to have a meeting of a committee, you may give the notice.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I was in the committee at the time this Bill was under consideration. There was a motion to adjourn made, but it was never put to the meeting. It was discussed at some length. There was an appeal made to pass this Bill, because it was a short Bill and had to go to the Commons. Under those conditions, the motion to adjourn was not put. It was agreed to set aside the motion of adjournment, and take up this Bill and dispose of it. That was done, and the committee rose for lunch.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. The committee adjourned.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No, never did.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then it is there yet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I understood the hon. gentleman, I think he made a mistake as to the two meetings. The meeting at which he was called to the Chair was one where the chairman had to leave to catch the train. At the meeting to which the hon. gentleman alludes I spoke myself till ten minutes after one, and then the committee adjourned.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I do not think I have made a mistake. I referred to the afternoon meeting. That is the meeting at which the Bill was agreed to, and I presume my hon. friend was served with a notice to attend the meeting. He knew it was to take place.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I beg your pardon, I did not receive any notice at all.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—You were there.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I was on the train.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I understood my hon. friend refused to accept service of the notice.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is not the same thing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is quite right as to the afternoon meeting. Before the hon. gentleman from Stadacona left that afternoon, just before the adjournment, he came and asked me if I had any notice of a meeting that afternoon, and I told him no, I had not at that time. I received it afterwards. He then left for his home. He said he never received a notice. Of course that I know nothing about.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I may be wrong, but speaking from memory, my recollection was that Sir Mackenzie Bowell had the floor in the committtee after one o'clock, and moved that the committee adjourn, feeling, and reasonably so, that the committtee had worked hard enough to entitle them to an adjournment at one o'clock, and I called the attention of the chairman of the committee that there was one more short Bill, and that while the hon. gentleman from Hastings had very properly moved the adjournment of the committee after one o'clock, but he might not object to a meeting of the committee after the House adjourned that afternoon. So far as my recollection goes, that was agreed to, and the committee met after the sitting of the House, and proceeded with the business of the committee. I mention this, if I am correct in my understanding of the matter, to show there was no surprise, because the matter of meeting after the sitting of the House was fully discussed, and I remember the hon. gentleman from Hastings saying he did not object to that at all, but he did object to a committee sitting after one o'clock ; that it was a reasonable time for a committee to adjourn, and I think he received the unanimous support of the committee in that respect.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did the hon. gentleman say that I did not object to the adjournment ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No, the hon. gentleman objected to sitting after one o'clock, and I said that objection was well taken, but the hon. gentleman's objection might not go so far as to object to the committee meeting after the sitting of the House, and so far as I was able to observe, that seemed to meet the view of the committee, because there was no dissenting voice, and we met afterwards. I received my notice, and considered the Bill very carefully, and so far as the notice of the committee is concerned, I think there can be no complaint.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As to another point which was raised, I may say that this report was received at the last meeting of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—An hon. member could not object to it until it had been received.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I was not here and I will tell you why; because the bell did not ring. There was only one call bell last night instead of two, and when I came here the House was discussing a Bill in committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That does not prevent any gentleman taking objection to it. He could not well take objection to it or raise a point of order until the report was received.

The SPEAKER—Two or three points of order have been raised against this motion made by the hon. gentleman from St. John, and there is one point on which I am not clear, that is, as to the fact that the time would have expired for the committee to report. As against that fact, which is alleged by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, is the other fact that the Senate has consented to receive the report from the committee. If any hon. gentleman has any light to throw on this matter I shall be glad to hear it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I contend that this committee is no longer in existence. They cannot make any report, and the document that we have here is not a report of the committee. The time has not been extended. No report can be made. I was not here yesterday when the report was presented, but it was proposed for acceptance.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—If I remember rightly, the hon. gentleman was in his place when the committee reported, and made no objection.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not the report on that Bill. Am I obliged to take objection to it at every stage ?

The SPEAKER—As the point is of considerable importance, as bearing on the procedure of the House, I will reserve my decision until to-morrow on the only point which I consider of any importance—the fact that the committee would have no existence at the time it made its report.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The minutes are there to speak for themselves.

The SPEAKER—As to the chairman being allowed a free hand in regard to the calling of committees, and the members assenting, or being subsequently notified by regular notice—these are facts which are not before me.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We accept what the hon. Speaker says, and leave the point to be decided by him. But I call attention to the fact that the necessity of posting was not done. The members of the committee were not duly notified in anyway.

The SPEAKER—For an afternoon sitting.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman admits that the morning sitting was regularly called?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes.

The SPEAKER—The point is not raised as to the right of the committee to sit in the morning.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the first point is maintained, there cannot be any report.

The SPEAKER—The objection of the hon. gentleman is as to the sitting after the Senate adjourned.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would also go to the question of the report. If that was not an afternoon sitting of the committee, of course there could be no report.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With respect to the point which His Honour was good enough to say he would consider, I think there is this to be borne in mind: The proper time to have objected to the power of the committee to report, which is the ground the hon. gentleman from Stadacona takes, that the committee has practically gone out of existence and could not report, was when the report was presented and before it was received, not after the House has decided that the report shall be taken into consideration on a future day, and that future day arrives. I take it that the objection is late.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I was informed by one of the officials of the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Was the notice given that there was to be a meeting that evening?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I am told that the hon. gentleman from Stadacona was offered his notice for that particular meeting, and refused to accept it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is not the point. You are jumping to another point. I want the hon. gentleman to answer my question first, and I will answer his afterwards. The first question I am asking is, was notice posted in the lobby that there was to be a meeting that evening?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I am so informed, and furthermore that the hon. gentleman who complains he did not receive notice was handed his notice personally and refused to accept it. Therefore he must have had notice of the meeting of the committee.

The SPEAKER—The Order of the Day will stand until I am ready to give my decision. It will not be in the position of having been dropped.

WINNIPEG TERMINALS OF THE CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY AND GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (128) An Act respecting Winnipeg Terminals of the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This agreement is signed by the Canadian Northern, the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Minister of Railways and Canals, and by the commissioners for the Transcontinental Railway. The price put upon the terminals is $2,265,000. The rental to be charged on that is calculated at the rate of four per cent. The Canadian Northern bear one-half and the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific bear the other half. It might be pointed out to my hon. friend, speaking of the rental based on four per cent, that while the government is only receiving a rental on the basis of three per cent on the eastern section of the railway, they are contributing four per cent on the terminals. It is a poor rule that won't work both ways. In this agreement the rate of interest chargeable is on the basis of the present value of money.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Whereas the improvident contract which has been entered into between the Grand Trunk Pacific and the government at once becomes apparent when you take into consideration that during the whole period after the expiration of ten years, the government is only receiving a rental on the basis of three per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. Of course the value of money changes. There is no doubt about that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is a hotel scheme connected with the terminal scheme. Can the hon. gentleman tell me how much is appropriated for terminals proper, and how much for the hotel scheme?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am unable to give the hon. gentleman any information as to that point.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What would be the policy of the government with reference to the hotel?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have come to no decision yet.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (143) An Act to amend the Immigration Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When we last had this Bill under consideration, a discussion arose on the last clause of it in relation to stowaways. I find that this question was pressed on the department by the federation of shipping. They are naturally very much opposed to stowaways, because it is impossible to ascertain the character of a person coming to the country in that way. Ordinary immigrants leaving the shores of Europe are examined, and somebody has a knowledge of their antecedents and that report is transmitted to the department here. In regard to stowaways, the shipping interest have a greater concern than even the Immigration Department, because they recognize that the stowaways ought to be returned. They want to break up the practice. If it is known generally that stowaways are not allowed to land, then the Federation of Shipping think they can check the practice to a great extent.

It is at the instance of the shipping federation that this clause has been introduced.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government are showing entirely too much solicitude for the shipping federation. When we take into consideration the fact that the shipping federation is the body that largely determines the character of the immigrants we receive into Canada, for which they are well paid, it seems to me there need not be that deep concern evinced by my hon. friend in excluding stowaways from the country. The stowaway, in the first place, is not a charge upon the country. He is not brought here at the public expense. No commission is paid to booking agents for bringing him here. He comes here entirely on his merits, and so husky a gentleman is the stowaway that he should certainly get a chance in this free Dominion. I am sure it will be news to the public at large to learn that all the immigrants that come to Canada have their antecedents inquired into, as has been intimated by the hon. Secretary of State. It certainly would make very pleasant reading to learn the antecedents of the many thousands who come from continental Europe. I should like very much to know on what authority my hon. friend makes the statement that inquiry is made into the antecedents of all the immigrants who come to Canada? I see no good reason why the stowaway, if he can pass the physicial test imposed by the government upon immigrants landing in Canada should not be permitted to stay here. He comes here at his own expense—at the expenditure of his own energy. He evinces an enterprise which certainly no bonused immigrant shows, and why when he lands on our shores free of cost, particularly after all the efforts he has made to reach this free land of ours should he be excluded at the instance of the shipping federation ? If those gentlemen cannot exercise sufficient vigilance at the various points of embarkation in Europe, it surely does not devolve on the Dominion of Canada to manifest the deep concern they are showing to-day to provide machinery for the exclusion of those gentlemen who land on our shores at the expense of this same Shipping Federation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is in error when he says no commission is paid on those stowaways. That is one of the frauds perpetrated by these agents. They take the shipping list of those on board the vessel and the stowaways would be included. They have gone to no expense or trouble to bring them to this country, but they receive a commission on them. Any one who has crossed the ocean and has seen how those stowaways are made to work the moment they are discovered, will conclude that they earn their passage.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Perhaps that is why the shipping federation want them deported, so that they can make them work on the way back.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The master of the ship that brought the stowaway to the country wishes to get rid of him, then you impose on him the penalty of taking back the same man that he did not want.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the law now, and has been the law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then there is no necessity for changing it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is to give greater facilities to control the abuse.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is beyond doubt that those in command of ships do not like to have these stowaways on board, but it has been expressed here, they should be responsible for the stowaways being on the ship. I remember distinctly when we were leaving Sydney, Australia, the captain of the vessel ordered that a strict watch be kept to prevent stowaways coming on board. He had three or four men watching for some days before the vessel sailed, nevertheless after we had been at sea some three or four days, three or four stowaways popped up. I know the captain made them work all the way over, and on reaching Honolulu sent them on shore, yet after we got away from Honolulu the same fellows popped up again.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I think it is a most unhuman thing to reject a man who is simply under the strong impression that he would do better in this country, and who would be willing to give a note in payment of his passage. The fact of these men having to work hard for their passage when they are discovered, is sufficient to pay the company for the trifling amount of food they consume on the way. I do not think it is any detriment or injury to the company to give a man the space that his legs will occupy on a ship. Therefore I protest against this clause. Nobody with a sense of humanity would put such a man in jail until the ship was ready to leave port. If the ship met with an accident, he might be detained in jail six months, to his great injury.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is one feature of this which has been rather overlooked. Hon. gentlemen know we have agents all over Europe picking up eligible persons to immigrate. If the man who becomes a stowaway is a deserving character he will have no difficulty in coming to Canada through the legitimate channels. There is the very best evidence, to begin with, that the stowaway is not a desirable person. He may be a fugitive from justice and is most likely to be. If he were the hero that my hon. friend has painted him, and as we are all accustomed to think he is, if he were an active, plucky fellow who wants to get a fresh start in a new world, there would be some reason in admitting him. But there is another side to the picture, and, as I say, if he is a deserving man, he can be readily sent across to Canada. We know that the Salvation Army are picking up deserving people all the time and paying their fares and it may be taken for granted, under these circumstances, that the stowaway is not a desirable man.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

REVISED STATUTES AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (148) An Act to amend schedule A of the Revised Statutes, 1906.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said: This is a purely technical Bill which is to correct some errors in the Revised Statutes. Schedule A repeals a large number of statutes, amongst others those relating to the Northwest. At the time the Revised Statutes were approved, Alberta and Saskatchewan had been formed into provinces and the object of this Bill is to put at the end of that schedule 'Except Alberta and Saskatchewan.' There is nothing else in it.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at Three o'clock.

PORT ARTHUR POWER COMPANY BILL.

A POINT OF ORDER.

The SPEAKER—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to pass upon the point of order raised by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona yesterday on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Ellis that the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to Bill (WW) An Act to incorporate the Port Arthur Power and Development Company be concurred in. The hon. gentleman contended that the report of that committee was irregular and illegal inasmuch as the time within which the said committee could report to this House had lapsed, the last day being the third of April inst. The hon. gentleman added, as other reasons why the report should not be concurred in, that a meeting had been called with too short a notice, against the letter and spirit of our rules and practice, and that the notice had not been given to the members of the committee and had not been posted in the lobby. The principal point that I have to decide is as to the lateness of the report which was made. I will draw the attention of this House to the fact that although the time had lapsed for the committee to report after the third of April, the Senate judged fit, on the fourth of April, to send to that committee two Bills, the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway Company Bill and the Quebec and Oriental Railway Company Bill, which were reported upon on the ninth of April inst. by that committee, accepted and passed by this House. Similarly the Railway Committee reported on the Bill which is now before us for review, the day before yesterday, and the Hon. Mr. Ellis, from the Standing Committee presented his report; that report was received by the Senate and on a motion by the hon. gentleman it was ordered that the said amendment should be taken into consideration by the Senate the following day, which would be yesterday. I will not discuss the validity of the work done by the Railway Committee on these three Bills which I have mentioned, nor upon the validity of the report that was made. All that I have to find is—and I do find—that the Senate accepted the work of that committee, reviewed and passed upon it to such an extent that the two first Bills were adopted and passed the third reading, and were sent to the House of Commons. This Bill is in the same position. The Senate accepted the work of the Railway Committee, and placed it on the Orders of the Day yesterday to be discussed, revised and reviewed. The Senate could have, as the Commons did in 1887, withdrawn the order of reference, and decided to deal with the Bill itself. It did not choose to do so, as was done with the Bill affecting the Albert Railway Company in the House of Commons in 1877, but accepted the work of the committee, and took it up for review. I find that the point of order has been raised too late, and it is now for the Senate to take whatever action it pleases on the Bill as it is at present before us. This covers practically the points raised by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, but I may say, after examining them as they were made, that the chairman of the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, having been given the liberty of calling the committee when he would deem proper, after the question having been raised of the possibility of that committee sitting after the adjournment of the House, that he was within his rights in doing so. As the hon. gentleman from Killarney has made the affirmation that the hon. gentleman from Stadacona had received his notice, as well as the other hon. members, and as this has not been formally contradicted by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, inasmuch as he admitted having received a notice which he did not read——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I received no notice at all.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman refused to receive it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I give my word that I did not receive it, and my word should be taken. I did not receive the notice.

The SPEAKER—I understood when the matter was before the House yesterday that the hon. gentleman had simply declared that he had not read the notice——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I did not receive it.

The SPEAKER—And did not contradict the fact that the notice was offered to him. The first point, to my mind, settles all the points raised, inasmuch as the point of order is declared to be too late.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Certainly I accept the decision of the Chair, and I merely rise to say that I did not receive notice and to contradict the assertion that it was because it was on a Friday and we were not accustomed to meet in the evening that the chairman was empowered to convene the committee at his call; it was understood we were all leaving on Friday.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman had not made this remark when the hon. member from Killarney spoke yesterday.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Of course, I accept the statement of the hon. gentleman that he did not receive the notice, but I made my statement on the strength of the statement of a respected official of the House. In connection with this matter there arises another question which should be dealt with promptly. That is the fact that the time has expired for the presentation of reports on private Bills by our Standing Committees. I take upon myself the responsibility of not having brought this matter to the attention of the House at the proper time. I happen to be chairman of the Standing Orders Committee, and that committee rely upon me to attend to these matters and I failed to do so. When I make a confession of this kind I hope to get absolution.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The absolution is given in advance.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The House adjourned on the 22nd of March and reassembled on the 4th of April. The 3rd of April coming in during the adjournment accounts partly for this matter being neglected. When we reassembled on the 4th of April, after the Easter holidays, the time had gone by for presenting reports. The Private Bills Committee, according to our rules, are in a peculiar position. The latter part of rule 110 provides as follows:

> Nor may any report of any standing or special committee upon a private Bill be received after the first six weeks of each session.

As hon. gentlemen know, the Standing Orders Committee recommended an extension from time to time and, therefore, the power to present reports of any special committee was extended up to the 3rd of April in that way. If you turn to rule 125 you will see that:

> The committee to which a private Bill has been referred shall report the same to the Senate in every case.

Now, you can readily see the position in which our committees stand. In the one case the time to report has expired, and if, as the Speaker has pointed out, this House has referred to a committee a Bill for their consideration, they are bound to report under rule 125. I ask permission to make a motion that clause 110, so far as it relates to reports of committees for the balance of the session be suspended. If you turn up the authorities which the hon. Speaker has quoted, you will find that they mention similar cases which have occurred in the Commons, and the ruling of the Speaker was that owing to its being necessary for the routine of the House, that no notice was required.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I object. That is against our rules.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will prove it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—This is the exception.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not see why the hon member should consider it necessary to suspend the rule to the end of the session if there is no rule.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—What I say is that making a motion without notice in this case is one of the exceptions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman will turn to rule 24, paragraph (a), he will find it provides that to suspend any rule or standing order, or any part thereof one day's notice must be given. It is in the face of this obligation imposed on us by our rules that he asks the Speaker to decide, in accordance with certain decisions in the House of Commons, that no notice of his motion is needed.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—When that ruling was given by the Speaker of the House of Commons, had they not a similar rule that no rule could be suspended unless by unanimous consent?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, by unanimous consent, but I am opposed to it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is some years since I read the authorities on the subject, but my recollection is that objection was raised to the rules being suspended, and the Speaker being appealed to said that no notice was required under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No notice is required when it is by unanimous consent, but I do not consent.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I never knew the hon. gentleman to consent to anything yet.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman forgets. However, if he is under that impression, in the future I will never consent.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I would ask the Speaker to inform the House if there is such an authority as I have mentioned.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has just pointed out that under rule 125 a committee to which a private Bill has been referred shall report the same to the Senate in every case. That is very well understood. When a committee is in possession of the Bill they may say that they cannot proceed with it because the time has expired. They are not obliged to bury the Bill in the committee, they must report it to the House, either expressing approval of the Bill or refusing to recommend its passage because the time has expired.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—My hon. friend took the position yesterday that they could not report.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That they could not report the way they did.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—But to-day they can.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—My hon. friend is happy to bring in a decision given in the House of Commons when it favours the position he takes, but he does not want to accept a decision of the House of Commons when it is against him. That is not fair-play. If we are bound by our rules, those amendments are not in order. If our rules do not bind us, why ask to have them suspended ? Why not decide that a committee may go on and report to the day of judgment.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—My only interest in this matter is to forward the business of the House without any technical interruption. I think it is desirable, however, to place our committees in a proper position at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Give notice then.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman misunderstood me when he said I was willing to accept decisions when they were in my favour and reject them when they were not. My memory of the decision in the House of Commons is that in a matter of this kind, no notice of motion is required. However, to save time and remove all objections, I give notice that I will make this motion to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That notice of motion settles the question ; but I wish to direct the attention of the hon. member from Stadacona to paragraph (s) in rule 25. Rule 25 says that no notice is required for certain motions, and paragraph (s) is 'other motions of a merely formal or uncontentious character.' That paragraph was intended to provide for cases of this kind where the formal business of the House is interfered with in some way and the motion is formal in its character. However, to remove all objections, the course taken by the hon. senator from Killarney is the safer.

The SPEAKER—I have looked up the authorities cited by the hon. gentleman from Killarney, and my decision is that the point of order is well taken—that notice is needed.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In both cases the motion was to remedy an informality due to neglect.

The SPEAKER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That was my point.

The SPEAKER—I may state, if my decision was not clear enough, in answer to the remarks of the hon. member from Stadacona, that if he had taken his point of order the day before, when the report was presented it would have been well taken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand that the decision is that had the objection taken by the hon. member from Stadacona to-day been raised when the report was presented first, or when the Senate took action in referring it back it would have been well taken ?

The SPEAKER—There was no action such as is mentioned by the hon. gentleman.

The demand was made on the Senate to receive the report, and the Senate agreed to receive it, and on a motion that the amendments be considered next day, it was agreed to, so the matter is now before the Senate in that form. The Senate has seized itself of the Bill and is now dealing with it as coming from that committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As I understand, if the hon. gentleman had taken the objection when the motion was made to consider the amendments it would have been in order ?

The SPEAKER—Yes, when the report was made.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Because when a report is presented, we do not know what is in it. An hon. member arises and says : 'I beg to bring in a report.' I cannot object to the report. It must be received. I do not know what is in it.

The SPEAKER—The report was from the Railway Committee on a private Bill, and if the time had expired, that was the occasion to object to it.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish again to direct the attention of the hon. leader of the House to the circumstance that some returns to addresses which were passed by this House comparatively early in the session have not yet been attended to. One of these refers to the steamer 'Montcalm.' Another is with reference to certain exhibits that accompanied the report of the insurance commission.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understood they were brought down.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am told they were not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I made inquiries and they told me they were brought down.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the hon. gentleman is confusing the notice in regard to exhibits referred to by the insurance commission with the other notices I made with reference to insurance. One was with regard to the discourtesy shown to the Senate in not furnishing the annual statement with reference to the Civil Service Insurance Act. That was attended to. Another was a return showing the operations of the Civil Service Insurance Act up to the present time ; that has been attended to, but the motion which I made in the form of an address for a return of certain exhibits which accompanied the report of the insurance commission have not, I am told by the officers in custody of these documents, been presented to the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Can you give me the page where I can find the notice ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I will give it later on.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to know whether either of the ministers can tell us whether any of the exhibits which were moved for by the hon. senator from Marshfield were ever laid upon the table of the House of Commons ? They were asked for by members of the opposition at that time, and they were informed, if my recollection serves me right, that it could not be done without the consent of somebody—without the consent of the Commons. His attention was called to the fact that an address had been passed by the Senate asking for these exhibits.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am not aware of what has been done in the matter, but I will make inquiry.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I might say to the hon. gentleman that I think those exhibits are with the clerk of the Printing Committee of both Houses. Whether they have been formally laid down on the Table of the House I do not know, but I think they are in possession of the clerk of that committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the Printing Committee intend to meet again this session ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I could not say that. All the unfinished business is now in the hands of the chairman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is very important that those exhibits should be printed, in order that we can understand what we are doing when we discuss the question.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The explanation or statement made by the First Minister to the House of Commons that an address of the Senate had been passed asking for certain of these exhibits, only a few of them, five or six altogether, but that the documents had been placed in the custody of the House of Commons and that the order of the Senate could not be complied with without the consent of the House of Commons. That statement was made and it seemed very singular to me. I learned from the late secretary of the Insurance Commission that when the commission disbanded the papers were placed in the custody of the House of Commons, and that was in accord with Mr. Fielding's explanation. I presume that when the Insurance Commission disbanded and the secretary took his place once again in the Department of Finance, of which department he was an officer, that some person had to take over the custody of those documents. Perhaps the House of Commons might properly assume that custody, and, having assumed that custody, perhaps it was necessary that its consent should be obtained, in order that the Senate might get copies; but what surprises me is that so much time has intervened from the day that the discussion took place in the House of Commons and we have not received the copies that were ordered by this House to be furnished.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I wrote Mr. Flint about it, and I understood they were sent over promptly. I brought some papers here myself, which I did not examine, but I thought they were the exhibits connected with the Insurance Commission. I may be wrong about that, because I did not examine them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is quite surprising to me to be told, as we have been told by the hon. gentleman from Killarney, that these papers are in the possession of the clerk of the Printing Committee. I cannot imagine that the Printing Committee should have the custody of them, although they may be considering the question of whether they are going to print them or not. Did the hon. gentleman say the Printing Committee ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman is charging me with one sin of which I am not guilty. I did not open my mouth.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—It was the hon. gentleman from St. John.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Then it was the hon. gentleman from St. John that made that statement. I do not suppose either of them made a statement that was inaccurate ; I only want to know why these documents should remain in the custody of the Printing Committee. They may have been referred to that committee for the purpose of considering whether they should be all printed or not. I suppose the Printing Committee, in its wisdom, will decide that matter ; but I will say that in all conscience we have had printing enough in connection with the Insurance Commission.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The rule, as I understand it, is that when returns are laid before parliament, particularly before the House of Commons, they pass into the hands of the officer who is appointed for that particular purpose, who is also the clerk of the Printing Committee. They pass into the control not perhaps of the committee absolutely, because that committee simply pronounces whether they should be printed or not, but into the hands of the clerk of the committee, Mr. Polkinghorne, who decided whether they should be printed or not, and from him a copy can be obtained. I happened to be in the room this morning, and a gentleman from the House of Commons sent a memo. to Mr. Polkinghorne asking for exhibit so and so, and it was given to him.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is extraordinary that members of the House of Commons can get those documents in so simple a way, when we cannot get them even if we pass an address.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I am quite sure if my hon. friend went over he could get them. I am risking the statement, but that is the common practice.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I remember there was some discussion on this subject at an early stage in the history of the commission's report, when the report first came down, and the hon. gentleman from Marshfield was anxious that the exhibits should be brought down. It was then stated in explanation that the exhibits were most voluminous. I think the hon. gentleman thought they should be printed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I distinctly said no, as I say now, that there was printing enough and too much.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. gentleman will permit me, I may finish what I am saying before he contradicts me. It was pointed out on the other hand—I am giving my own recollection of the matter—that it would involve a great expenditure, and then the hon. gentleman said he did not wish to have all the exhibits printed, but I think he suggested that a list of the exhibits should be printed, and the members of this House should have access to any of those which they desired to see. I understood the hon. Secretary of State to agree that a list of the exhibits should be printed and submitted to accompany the report. I do not know whether that has been done or not, but I think that is the position as far as the House is concerned.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I stated then most distinctly, just as I have stated today, that I was not in favour of having the exhibits printed, that we have had printing enough and I did not ask for any more. I wanted to know where I could get the exhibits. My hon. friend told me where I could see them, and I went there to look for them, and saw some in which I felt an interest, and then I got an order so that I could get a copy of them, I moved for an address and that is what we are talking about now. I instanced by their numbers some six or seven exhibits which I was desirous we should be furnished copies of, but that order has never been complied with.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The statement made by the hon. gentleman from St. John in reference to the routine is quite correct, but he scarcely finished the statement. A report when laid before the House of Commons is referred to the Printing Committee, and, of course, it goes to the clerk; then it is for the Printing Committee to decide whether it is to be printed simply for circulation among the members, or whether it shall be entered on the journals. That is the routine course. If it were presented to the clerk of the committee, he would lay it before the committee at the first meeting, and it would be for them to decide what could be done with it.

EMPLOYMENT OF OUTSIDERS IN CANADIAN MILITIA.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to an order that was passed by this House on the 19th February, for a return in reference to the employment in our Canadian militia of persons coming from the British Isles, from the other English colonies, and from foreign lands as strangers to Canada. That order was passed on the 19th of February, and I should like to have that return. It is not very long.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will look it up.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (128) An Act respecting the Winnipeg Terminals of the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (143) An Act to amend the Immigration Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Second reading (Bill FFF) An Act respecting Juvenille Deliquents.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that this Order of the Day be discharged and that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman expect to pass the Bill this session?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is just to have it circulated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The reason I asked the question was that if the hon. gentleman had any hopes of passing it this session, he had better not delay it any further.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is not intended to pass the Bill. It is simply intended to elicit public opinion on the measure. A number of copies have been circulated, and I hope hon. gentlemen will express their views on it.

The motion was agreed to.

PORT ARTHUR POWER AND DEVELOPMENT BILL.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS moved concurrence in the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to Bill (WW) An Act to incorporate the Port Arthur Power and Development Company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is one of those Bills dealing with a matter that is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario, but it is contended that because it is proposed to extend the electric wires up to the boundary line, that therefore it comes within the purview of this parliament. Now it is well known that the territory through which this line runs is exclusively in Ontario, and it is well known that even when you reach the stream, Pigeon river, the bed of the river to its centre belongs to the province and is under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. Hence the line is to all intents and purposes one of a provincial character, but in order to give it a Dominion character, a Bill is introduced in parliament and considered in committee, adding the words 'to extend it from Pigeon river to Ile Royale.' That is a well-known island at the head of Lake Superior, in the United States, and it is equally well-known that nobody lives there except a few fishermen. At one time there was some copper mining upon that island, but that ceased long ago. The object of adding these words extending the line to Ile Royale could have no other purpose than that denounced so clearly yesterday by the hon. senator from Middlesex (Hon. Mr. Ross)—to bring the Bill within the authority of this parliament. No mention of Ile Royale was made in the notices published in the 'Official Gazette' and the newspapers, of the intention to apply for this charter; but finding the difficulty which would probably arise on account of its local character, they placed this clause in the Bill. It could be for no other purpose. If Ile Royale was a manufacturing centre, or a place largely populated, where power would be required for mining or industrial purposes, one could understand their desire to connect with that island. It is just one of those tricks—I use that word advisedly—so admirably exposed by the hon. senator from Middlesex yesterday, in order to bring the measure to this House instead of to the Ontario legislature. Gentlemen have come to me who had Bills of this kind before parliament, and when I asked them why they did not go to the Ontario legislature to obtain these powers, they replied: Oh, we cannot get the same powers and privileges there that we can get from the Dominion,' and for the very good reason that the great majority of those who occupy seats in both Houses here cannot be as familiar with the localities to be affected by such legislation as are the members of the Ontario legislature. The Ontario legislature surely know what concessions should be granted in the interest of the people and for the protection of provincial rights. I wish to emphasize this point, that the promoters of this Bill are seeking powers which they did not ask for in the notices given to the public, that they intended to apply for legislation here. If we are to admit the principle of granting important concessions and privileges not specified in the published notices, I hesitate not to say that we are adopting a principle which is very dangerous and may be carried very far in the future. I admit that in some unimportant cases such privileges and concessions have been made; but in a case of this kind, when the question of provincial rights is so prominently before the country, I ask is it wise to establish such a precedent? It must be borne in mind that the Ontario legislature have unanimously protested against the passage of such legislation by the Dominion parliament, and have announced that they will pass a Bill restricting as far as possible the operations of any company of this character by depriving them of local rights which they ought to have if they are to make their corporation operative. I think I might say that the vote of yesterday in the Senate was unanimous. My hon. friend from Kingston, voted nay, not because he was opposed to the principles involved in the resolutions before us, but because he thought the constitution itself was sufficiently clear to provide for cases of that kind, and the passage of the resolutions would be only duplicating what is already the law of the country.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—And because the Senate is not likely to carry out the principle it affirmed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That, to my mind, is not as good a reason as the other. The hon. gentleman, while admitting that the principles embodied in that resolution conform to the constitution, says that the Senate are not consistent in carrying out their own decision, and, therefore, he did not wish to cast a vote which he might violate the very next day, as he will if he supports this motion. I am pointing out all this on a motion for the adoption of an amendment, because the amendment to the Bill gives the company power and authority not asked for in the notice published for the application for this charter, and for the further reason that the Bill ought to be rejected, and the parties should be compelled to seek legislation from the Ontario legislature. If the Senate adopts the motion now before us approving of these amendments, I shall take advantage of the third reading to put my views upon this question upon the journals, leaving it for those who voted for the motion of the hon. senator from Mille Iles, seconded by the hon. senator from Middlesex, to say whether they will act consistently with that vote, or stultify themselves by voting for this Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Perhaps, as the hon. senator from Hastings has expressed his views at considerable length on this subject at this stage, it would be only courteous to him to say a few words now in defence of the action of the committee. The hon. gentleman says that the notice in the 'Gazette' did not cover the provisions of the Bill which take it out of the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. The hon. gentleman has forgotten when he made that statement, that the notice in the 'Gazette' provided that the company should be allowed to operate on the Pigeon river.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To the Pigeon river.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Pigeon river, as every hon. gentleman knows, is a stream which forms the boundary between the United States and the province of Ontario. Now, a company could not operate in connection with the Pigeon river under a charter granted by the province of Ontario. If the company proposed to do anything with the Pigeon river, either in the way of getting power from it, or supplying power to the people on the other side of it, they would have to get authority from the parliament of Canada to do so. There was nothing about Ile Royale in the 'Gazette' notice; but Ile Royale is United States territory, and the ground taken by some hon. gentlemen in the committee was that notice with respect to territory in the United States was of no value and was unnecessary. As the hon. gentleman says, the motion before the House is for the adoption of the amendments made by the committee. I wish to call attention to these amendments. The committee recommend that certain clauses be inserted. The amendments are as follows:

A.

13. The company shall not enter within the limits of any municipality with any transmission line or sell or distribute electrical or other power therein without the consent of such municipality expressed by by-law.

B.

14. None of the powers conferred by this Act shall be exercisable within the limits of the town of Port Arthur or of the town of Fort William unless a by-law has been submitted to its qualified ratepayers and duly passed by them authorizing the exercising of such powers within its limits.

C.

15. The company shall at all times be prepared to furnish for consumption in Canada one-half of the power developed, and six months' notice to the company by registered letter shall be deemed sufficient notice to the company to furnish any person or persons power to the extent (or any quantity thereof) mentioned in this section.

D.

16. In case of any dispute as to the price for power or electrical energy in use or to be provided for use upon the Canadian side of the international boundary line, or the methods of distribution thereof, or the time within which or the conditions upon which the same shall be furnished for use, such dispute shall, notwithstanding the provisions of section 17 of the Railway Act, be settled by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada on the application of any user or applicant for power, or of the company, or of the town of Port Arthur or of the town of Fort William.

E.

18. Except as provided by sections 15 and 16 of this Act, the provision of the Acts passed during the present session of parliament, intituled, respectively, An Act to regulate the exportation of electric and certain liquids and gases and An Act respecting the inspection of electricity, shall apply to the company and to its undertaking.

Now the next amendment is the most important one, and it is one to which I direct the attention of the hon. senator from Middlesex. It is as follows :

F.

19. The company and its undertaking shall be subject to such provisions of any general Act now or hereafter passed by the legislature of the province of Ontario as provided, in the interest of public health or safety, for the control and regulation of the transmission, distribution or supply of electricity in any form.

Granting that this company are asking for powers which the legislature of Ontario could not give them, I think every hon. gentleman must feel that the amendments which the committee submit for the favourable consideration of the House deserve that consideration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman evidently did not hear the commencement of my remarks. He stated that I did not refer to the question of running to Pigeon river. I not only referred to that, but I pointed out the fact that the provincial government had control over and owned that portion of the river to its centre. The merits of the Bill to which he has referred have nothing whatever to do with the question I raised.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Did the hon. member oppose the amendments submitted to the Senate ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I opposed the Bill as a whole.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—But does he accept the amendments ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am very much surprised at the hon. member from Halifax being chloroformed into a condition of unconsciousness, apparently, as to this invasion on provincial rights.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not going to raise a question about this word chloroformed, but it is unusual. I think my wits as a rule are as clear as the hon. gentleman's.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I give my hon. friend credit for acuteness of wit which is not surpassed probably by any hon. gentleman in this House, but there are moments when the hon. gentleman gets into a state of mental torpor as to the invasion of the rights of the provinces and convinces himself by reason of legislation of this kind being brought within the realm of the federal power. Now, it must not have occurred to my hon. friend, in dealing with the argument as to Pigeon river, that the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario to the middle of the stream is just as great with reference to Pigeon river as it is with regard to any other river within the province of Ontario, and my hon. friend must have overlooked the fact that that jurisdiction of the province of Ontario, as to Niagara river, which beyond all other rivers is of an international character.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I understand, Pigeon river is a navigable river at that point.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—So is Niagara river.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Not at the falls.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The question of the navigation of the river has nothing to do with the jurisdiction of the province or its ownership of the bed of the river to the middle of the stream. Therefore, my hon. friend's argument, which appears to be a source of comfort to him, that because Pigeon river is what he is pleased to call an international stream it was therefore taken out of the jurisdiction of the province, has no application in this case whatever. The case is one precisely similar to that of a company incorporated by the province of Ontario to utilize water-powers on the Niagara river. There is really no distinction whatever. My hon friend must be very well aware that the notice did not call for the extension of the operations of this company to Ile Royale, an island in Lake Superior belonging to the United States. It was said by many hon. gentlemen supporting the Bill that owing to the operations of the company being extended to Ile Royale, it therefore, comes within the jurisdiction of the federal parliament. It is pointed out that this company did not, in the first place, conceive of extending their operations to Ile Royale. When I say that, we must be governed by what appeared in the notices published in the 'Gazette' and in the Canadian newspapers. If they had intended to extend their operations to Ile Royale, it should have been mentioned in those notices. So far as the notice was concerned, that in all probability would have given the federal parliament jurisdiction, but the omission of it must have established in the minds of hon. gentlemen that this company was purely local in its character, one which, above all others with which we have to deal, comes within the jurisdiction of the local legislature. Let us assume for a moment that it was the intention of the company to operate in Ile Royale. Even that, I submit to hon. gentlemen, should not take it out of the jurisdiction of the local legislature. The domestic concerns of the company, so far as the carrying out of its operations upon Canadian streams is concerned, is purely local, and it should have been incorporated by the local legislature and then, if necessary, secured from the federal parliament an Act to permit it to extend its operations to Ile Royale. So much for the merits of the Bill. Now as to the general principle; session after session we listen with a good deal of pleasure and instruction to many hon. gentlemen who profess to be champions of provincial rights. I must confess that I have never been in sympathy with the principle of leaving the incorporation of railways to the provinces. I have always taken the ground that this parliament should exercise its jurisdiction with reference to declaring all railways, even those which are wholly within the boundaries of the province, to be works for the general advantage of Canada ; but I am bound to say that I am thoroughly in sympathy with the argument and with the principle that this federal parliament should not interfere with reference to power and other companies peculiarly local, whose operations are entirely within the boundaries of the province, and are not such as to make them a link in a chain such as provincial railways are, because a railway incorporated within the boundaries of the province must necessarily, in its interchange of traffic, be a link in a great chain extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific. This principle does not extend to power companies. Above all companies, in my judgment, they are purely local in their character, and this charter, above all Acts of incorporation passed this session is an invasion of the rights of the province. It was not designed peculiarly to operate within the province of Ontario, and upon streams controlled by that province, and why this parliament should extend its far-reaching hand to permit this company to be taken out of the jurisdiction of the province is something which I cannot understand. It certainly would be a manifest inconsistency, in view of the fact that this Chamber passed yesterday, I might say unanimously, resolutions affirming the principle of provincial jurisdiction in such matters, that we should grant this legislation to this company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Mille Iles asks me if I was opposed to the amendments. I hesitate not to say that if the Bill is to be passed, the amendments are an improvement ; but I took the opportunity to express my views as to the unconstitutionality of the motion, upon the motion for the adoption of the amendments. It will also be remembered that I stated that in case the amendments were affirmed by the House, I should then move, on the third reading, against the principle involved in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The discussion on the amendments is practically a discussion which would be more regular on the third reading. It has taken the wide range of discussing the principle of the Bill, apart from the amendments. If I understand the hon. member from Hastings right, he raises no objection to the amendments, because the amendments are more restrictive than the Bill is without them ; but it will save time if we finish up the discussion at this stage. A similar Bill to this, touching the international waters of the Rainy river, came before this House two years ago, after the company had obtained legislation from the province of Ontario, and some of the best legal minds decided that the local legislation was incomplete, and the company had to come to this parliament to get the powers necessary to carry out their undertaking. My hon. friend from Hastings took a very active part at that time in seeing that the Canadian side got a fair deal in the legislation with regard to the distribution of power. The hon. leader of the opposition quotes the vote of yesterday, and I fancy that that is a milestone we will hear of frequently, and reminds the House that we declared yesterday we would be loyal to the constitution, and he asserts this is a violation of that declaration of yesterday. How is a layman to reconcile the necessity of legislation of a similar character on an international stream two years ago, with the stand the hon. gentleman takes now? On that occasion the best legal minds in Canada decided that even after the company had obtained legislation at Toronto, as my hon. friend would have this company do, they found it necessary to come here for further legislation in order to have the necessary powers to carry on their undertaking.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that I supported the Bill respecting the Rainy River Company?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No, that my hon. friend's efforts were directed to obtaining a fair share of the power generated by the company for the Canadian users.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What I opposed was placing the power in the hands of a lot of Yankees.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—My hon. friend and I are agreed. He took the view then that in the legislation which had been passed at Toronto, the Canadian side of the question had not received proper treatment, and he, along with others, in this House, exacted better terms for Canadian users of power. But that does not alter the comparison I wish to make between this case and the case of two years ago. Further, let me call attention to this fact that this Bill has been submitted to the Department of Justice, and the department has pronounced upon it, and that opinion was given in another case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have no evidence of that.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will my hon. friend say, of his own knowledge, that that is a fact?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is my information. I cannot repeat what occurred before a committee. Unfortunately, my hon. friend from Toronto, on account of circumstances over which he has no control, is absent today; but I understand he has the written statement of the department in his possession, and could produce it if he were here.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He should not have run away with them.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is right, but I will not rely on that. I rely on the principle followed by this House two years ago. As to the safeguards which we have provided in the Bill, I would draw attention to clause 19 of the reprint of the Bill, which provides:

> 19. The company and its undertaking shall be subject to such provisions of any general Act now or hereafter passed by the legislature of the province of Ontario as provide, in the interest of public health or safety, for the control and regulation of the transmission, distribution or supply of electricity in any form.

We also provide in another clause of the Bill that notwithstanding section 17 of the Railway Act, the Board of Railway Commissioners have governing power under the Bill. And I think that my hon. friend, whether he is for or against the motion, will bear me out that the committee endeavoured to amend the Bill on the same lines and consistent with the Bill which was passed two years ago by this House. It seems to me this Bill is on all fours with the Bills of two years ago and has equal claim to the attention and consideration of this House, and I submit that with all confidence to the good judgment of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When yesterday we passed this very solemn resolution with regard to provincial rights, I felt at the time that a good many of us, especially some gentlemen I see now on the opposite side, and some I do not see just at this moment, would have a very great deal of difficulty in squaring their preaching with their practice, and I thought of the story of a merchant, I do not know where he lived—I do not believe he lived in Prince Edward Island any way—who was very punctilious in looking after his clerks and his boys. On one occasion he called two of them before him one morning, Jack and Jim, and he said: 'Boys, have you said your prayers this morning?' They replied: 'Oh, yes we did' He said: 'Are you sure?' They said: 'Oh, yes.' 'Did you pray "Lead us not into temptation?"' 'Yes.' 'Did you pray "Deliver us from evil?"' 'Yes.' 'Well, you are good boys; Jack, you go and put some sand in the sugar, and Jim, go and put some water in the molasses.' That is just what the House is proceeding to do with regard to this matter. We passed a resolution yesterday, the third section of which reads in this way:

3. The Senate will not pass any Bill containing a declaration that a local work or undertaking is for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces, unless the truth of that declaration has been proved.

I ask hon. gentlemen what proof have we of that declaration with regard to the Bill that is now before us? It is simply a power company located in the province of Ontario. I have looked at the amendments in committee, to give rights to transmit and sell power in Ile Royale on the other side of what constitutes the international boundary, but care has been taken, and properly so, that the due share of the power that should be generated at that place should belong to and be used for the purposes of the province of Ontario. The reference to Ile Royale being in the States, I dare say has been inserted in the Bill for the purpose of affording a flimsy argument in favour of it being for the general advantage of Canada. Upon the whole, I think day by day we will be met with very serious difficulties in the way of squaring our preaching of yesterday with our practice hereafter. The very first day after adopting that resolution, here is the position we are placed in. I think really we should have sufficient respect for ourselves to reject this Bill, after adopting that resolution yesterday, for it is evident that it is not for the general advantage of Canada—at least we have no proof of that—not the slightest attempt to prove any such proposition. That being the case, I think we should have sufficient respect for ourselves and for the solemn resolution we passed yesterday, to reject this Bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I have heard questions of this kind discussed in the Railway Committee. I believe the committee passed on the Bill two days before the House affirmed the principle of provincial rights, and therefore the Bill is entitled to a great deal of consideration, because, in good faith, the Railway Committee passed the Bill, and between wind and water this Bill comes in. I should be in favour of voting for the Bill as one of the last measures of this kind. When the Bill comes before the committee again, they will not entertain it, if it interferes with provincial rights, but this case is so close that it deserves to be adopted by the House, as I think it was considered fully by the Railway Committee.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—This question of infringing upon provincial rights in the matter of legislation in this House and the other House, has been referred to almost every year since it has been my privilege to occupy a seat here. There has been a general contention that the central authority was, in many cases, legislating in the direction of doing work that virtually should be done in the local legislature. Yesterday we had a very unanimous expression of opinion with regard to this matter; but the question is, would it be right that we should draw the line at this particular Bill? I do not think it would. We have passed other Bills of this character. We have about finished the work of this session, and we are now virtually winding up all the Bills that have been introduced; they are now in their final stages. Would it be right, on the third reading of this Bill, on account of the very pronounced expression of opinion yesterday, that we should now draw the line and not pass any more Bills of this character? I think the expression of opinion yesterday was rather for the purpose of giving the people of Canada notice of the feeling of the Senate with regard to measures of this kind next year and the following years. We had better intimate—and we have done it in very plain terms—that the Senate will feel it is its duty to judge of every Bill in the light of the jurisdiction and the rights of the provinces. I think it is well that we should draw that line at the close of this session; but would it be right for us, after having passed several Bills of the same character, to draw the line now and throw out this Bill? I do not think so. My hon. friend from Marshfield appears to hold very distinct views with regard to this Bill. Why did he not express his views when the Bill was before us for second reading? That was the time to express his views clearly and determinedly.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It was only yesterday we turned over the new leaf.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. gentleman never expressed one single word of opposition to this Bill on the second reading. We affirm the principle of a Bill on the second reading, if we do it at all. Why should we cut off its head on the third reading, simply because we pronounced as we did yesterday? I do not think it would be fair to the promoters of the measure. I hold as strong a view as any man in this House with regard to provincial rights, and I should be glad indeed if the Dominion government and several of the local governments got together and drew the line where legislation of this House should cease, and where provincial legislation should begin. I should like very much to have an understanding. If we do not do that, the first thing we know, some of those Bills will be subjected to legal criticism, and possibly reach the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court may possibly hold that it was beyond the power of this House to pass the Bill, and may set it aside. I should prefer to see the question prudently and carefully adjusted between the local authorities and the Dominion authorities, but I say, in justice to those that have been interested in legislation this session, and in justice to the promoters who have had charge of the Bill now before the House, it is nothing but right that we should give it the third reading, and let us make up our minds that when we commence the business of next session, we will let the country know that we do not intend to trespass upon the rights of the provinces if we really understand what they are.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The argument used by my hon. friend from Wellington amuses me very much. He says that the vote given yesterday by this House will be considered by the country as a notice as to what we shall do in the future. If today, by our vote, we annul the vote of yesterday, what will the country think of the first vote? It will be superseded by the last vote, and what the hon. gentleman is going to do will wipe out of his record what he did yesterday, and he will appear before the eyes of the country, not as a decent sinner—but as the most unrepentant of sinners. I think it is time, when he wishes to take a stand before the country, to be consistent with the vote he gave yesterday, and if yesterday he voted for the resolution proposed by my hon. friend from Mille Isle, he is bound now to vote against the present Bill, because this Bill does not comply with those conditions that the motion recited. If not, what will his vote mean? What will his position be? How will his decision appear before the country? All of those things should be taken into account by my hon. friend, and if he feels that he can face the music in that way, I do not think that he should at all events be permitted to bring us to the same conclusion. We voted yesterday for a principle laid down in a formal resolution, and what was the principle? The principle propounded yesterday, which I think is binding on this House in the name of common sense and in the name of constitutionality, is as follows:

1. The Senate will insist upon the application of section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, in accordance with the spirit and true intent of that section, to the end that the exclusive powers of the legislatures of the provinces of Canada may be protected and preserved.

My hon. friend has voted for that principle. What is he doing to-day? He is putting it aside, and he says: 'No, we will not look at the rights of the legislature of Ontario.' We voted for the principle of protecting provincial rights yesterday. Let that vote be forgotten altogether and we will destroy by our action to-day what was affirmed as a binding principle yesterday. That is the position taken by my hon. friend and no other position. The resolution of yesterday also provides that:

2. The Senate will not consider the mere insertion in a Bill of a declaration that a work is for the general advantage of Canada to be in itself sufficient foundation for the exercise of the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

What is that declaration? It is, in a few lines, the substance of what my hon. friend from Middlesex said yesterday. No hon. member in this House has, with more eloquence, defended the principle of provincial rights in supporting the resolution submitted by my hon. friend from Mille Isles than the hon. gentleman from Middlesex and, if I remember correctly, my hon. friend from Wellington applauded these sentiments. He found what the hon. gentleman from Middlesex was saying was the expression of truth, of convenience, and of the law and the spirit of our constitution, and he applauded those declarations ; and now, by his vote, he wants them expunged from the records and that we shall stand once more against the rights and privileges of the provinces. The resolution says :

3. The Senate will not pass any Bill containing a declaration that a local work or undertaking is for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces, unless the truth of that declaration has been proved.

The hon. gentleman gave his vote yesterday in favour of that declaration. What is he going to do to-day ? Notwithstanding that he declared by his vote that the Senate will never accept a declaration of that kind without the proof to support it, he is now accepting it, he is now accepting that very declaration without any proof whatsoever ; more than that, he is accepting a declaration from the committee, amendments coming from the committee, which, as I said yesterday, and I repeat to-day, has no standing whatsoever and which has no existence according to law and according to the requirements of our regulations. But he has a reason that satisfies himself. He says the Supreme Court will decide. If we are going beyond the power given us by the constitution ; if we are invading provincial rights, what will be the consequence ? The consequence will be that this legislation will be void, ipso facto. The consequence will be that if any litigation arises after the Bill comes into force, and if the case is brought before the courts, the court will have to pronounce with the obligation if this legislation is intra vires, to declare it invalid. Is that the object of the work we do in the Senate ? Are we to rest upon the Supreme Court to declare that what we are doing is good or bad, and not ascertain for ourselves if we are acting within the limits of the constitution, or if we are going beyond its bounds ? I think it is our duty to convince ourselves whether we are doing right or wrong. But no, the hon. gentleman wants us to commit once more the sin for which he had so much repentance yesterday, and relies upon the Supreme Court to give us absolution. In what way ? By imposing on litigants all the expense and trouble of litigation before the courts. That is what will be the consequence of our acting here, if the principle advocated by my hon. friend should be considered a good one. Another argument which I say should not be adopted in this House is to accept the present legislation because a similar Bill was passed a year or two ago ; are we to be guided now by what we have done in the past, instead of by the rules of this House and the constitution of this country ? The hon. gentleman may think himself on the safe side, because we have done everything in the past, we have done constitutional things and we have committed acts that were not constitutional, which were outside of our power, but is the fact that we exceeded our jurisdiction in the past a reason that we should repeat such acts to-day ? Is that a precedent that should have force in this Chamber ? To cite the proposition laid down by my hon. friend is sufficient, I think, to show why it should not be accepted in this House, because it is simply against common sense. We have heard that the Minister of Justice has given his opinion. On what has he given an opinion, and why should not that valuable paper called the opinion of the Minister of Justice be laid before us ? Why should the hon. gentleman who took so great interest in the passing of this Bill run away from his duties and take away with him that valuable document ? What was the report of the Minister of Justice ? On what did it rest ? What was the consideration brought forward by the Minister of Justice ? We know nothing of that. That document is not before this House, and I am amazed to hear my hon. friend make it one of his principal arguments, that the Minister of Justice had given his opinion. There is another way to get an opinion. We have in our regulations, if my memory serves me well, a clause which permits this House to refer to the Supreme Court all Bills of that nature, and to ask the opinion of the Supreme Court before we go any further ? And why ? My hon. friend from Wellington wants the decision of the courts to be given at the expense of the litigating parties. Why should we not refer the Bill to the Supreme Court and ask the opinion of the Supreme Court on that kind of legislation? I would prefer their opinion to an opinion that I cannot see, an opinion that has now gone to Toronto, in the pocket of an hon. gentleman from that city. I should prefer having from the Supreme Court a definite opinion on this question, and it would do us more credit to follow such a course than to accept the bald statement that the Minister of Justice has given his opinion. Did he say that this Bill was in conformity with the notice given in the papers? He could not have said that, because it would not be according to the facts. We know that the notices were published. We have them in our possession. They were published in the 'Canada Gazette' and in the local papers in different places in which that company wishes to operate, and these notices show that the Bill now before us is not covered by them. The Bill asks for certain things that were never mentioned in the notices, and I will convince this honourable House on that point in a few minutes. This notice was dated at Ottawa on the 6th of December, 1906, and was given, I think, in the 'Canada Gazette' on the 8th of December, 1906; in the 'Herald,' of Port Arthur on the 5th of January and in the 'Chronicle,' of Port Arthur on the 6th of December. The notice reads as follows:

Notice is hereby given that application will be made to the parliament of Canada at the present session thereof, for an Act to incorporate the Port Arthur Power and Development Company, with power to acquire, own, use and operate the water-power or powers now or hereafter existing at a point or points on (1) The Nepigon river, (2) The Black Sturgeon river, and (3) The Pigeon river in the district of Thunder bay, in the province of Ontario, and construct, develop, operate, and maintain works, canals, raceways, watercourses, dams, piers, booms, dykes, sluices, conduits and buildings in connection with said power, including any increase of the said power on any or all of said rivers, by storage or other works on waters tributary to or all of said rivers to be used for the purpose of developing electrical and hydraulic power; and for the purpose of building, constructing, equipping, maintaining and operating electrical and hydraulic works to be erected on the land adjacent to the said river or waters or any of them necessary for the production of hydraulic and electrical energy in the production of light, heat and power for sale and distribution; and for power to construct, maintain and operate transmission lines of wire, poles, tunnels, conduits or other means as may be decided on for the purpose of transmitting electrical energy and power so produced to such point or points in the district of Thunder bay, and with the right to enter into contracts for the disposal of such power so produced or transmitted at such prices and in such manner as may be agreed on, with power to take and use water for the said works and other purposes, and to acquire by purchase, or otherwise, lands for the purpose of the company, and with all other powers and rights incidental, necessary or useful in the said undertaking; to exercise all rights of expropriation as are granted by the Railway Act, 1903, and that the said works be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada.

ALBERT E. HONEYWELL,
51 Sparks street, Ottawa.

As hon. gentlemen will see by the notice, all the operations are limited to the district of Thunder bay. Now what does the Bill say? Clause 8 of the Bill reads as follows:

8. The company may—

(a) construct, acquire, use, maintain and operate canals, watercourses, raceways and water-powers at any point on the Pigeon river, the Nipigon river and the Black Sturgeon river, in the district of Thunder bay, in the province of Ontario;

(b) at such point on each of the said rivers as may be selected, construct dams, wing-dams, storage areas, sluices, conduits and buildings in connection therewith, and all other works necessary for the company's undertaking;

(c) acquire lands and erect, use and manage works, machinery and plant for the generation, transmission and distribution of electric and other power and energy;

(d) utilize water, heat, steam, generated or natural gas for the purpose of creating power, heat, light, compressed air, or other force; and may acquire all rights necessary for the purposes mentioned in this paragraph.

Then clause 9 of the Bill reads as follows:

9. The company may supply water by hydraulic, electric, water or other power, for use for any purpose by means of cables, machinery or other appliances, and at such rates and upon such conditions as are agreed upon, and may construct, maintain and operate works for the production, sale and distribution of electricity and pneumatic power for the purposes of light, heat and power; and construct, maintain and operate intakes, tunnels, conduits and other works in the manner and to the extent required for the purposes of the company; and conduct, store, sell and supply electricity and pneumatic power, and with such pneumatic, electric or such other conductors or devices, conduct, convey, furnish or receive such electricity or power.

You will see that the company in this clause asks for more power than is covered by the notice. But where the company comes altogether outside of the territory covered by the notice is in the following clause:

10. The company may erect poles, construct trenches or conduits, and do all other things necessary for the transmission of power, heat or light in the district of Thunder bay and to and in Ile Royale, in the United States of America.

The words 'Ile Royale' were probably put in the Bill to bring it within the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament. Now, this is not covered by the notice. Was the attention of the Minister of Justice called to that clause of the Bill and did he declare that it was in conformity with the notice to the public? I say this clause should never have been in the Bill, and the duty of the committee was to strike it out, but instead of doing so the committee add to it 'in the United States of America,' so as to make it more clear to every hon. member of this Senate that this work is to be of an international character, and, therefore, that it becomes ipso facto a work for the general advantage of Canada. This is done by setting aside the notice and introducing a clause which brings the Bill under the jurisdiction of this parliament. But yesterday we passed a resolution declaring that it must be proved that a work is really for the advantage of Canada before it is so declared in a Bill, or if it is so declared in a Bill the declaration must by supported by proof which will convince the House that the legislation is within the jurisdiction of this parliament. Where is the proof? I contend that this clause has been added merely to bring the Bill within our jurisdiction, and that it has been done by disregarding our regulations and in violation of the law. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat says all these objections should have been raised at the second reading of the Bill. I do not agree with him. The second reading of a private Bill does not necessarily affirm the principle of it. I know that as a general rule the second reading of a public Bill does affirm the principle, but the second reading of a private Bill is given only to allow a Bill to be referred to a committee, where its details and the principle may be discussed, and the principle of the Bill is really accepted by the House at the third reading after the consideration of the amendments made in committee. It is then the proper time to sanction the principle, on the third reading when the Bill has reached its final form. All those private Bills are based upon facts that must necessarily be proven in committee, and it is when those facts are accepted by the committee that the preamble of the Bill is adopted. That is why we are not committed to the principle of a private Bill when it comes before the House for the second reading. So I do not think the hon. gentleman is right in claiming that we are now bound to accept the Bill because we allowed it to be read the second time. Even though we had accepted the principle at the second reading we are not finally committed; if that were the case there would be no necessity for a third reading. A member may accept the principle of a Bill on the condition that certain improvements could be made to it in committee. He may believe that objectionable features will be removed from a Bill in committee, and if that should be done he would agree to its passing. When the third reading comes, the principle of the Bill is again involved, and those who accepted the principle conditionally at the second reading if there is anything objectionable in it, may vote against it not only on a question of detail but on the principle. Every author who treats on public and private Bills admits that the principle of a Bill may be once more discussed on the third reading. That is really the ground that one hon. gentleman took when he said we ought not to discuss the principle of the Bill on this motion to concur in the amendments, but that we should reserve to ourselves that right until the third reading, when we could discuss anew the principle of the Bill itself. On that ground I think my hon. friend from Wellington was not justified in reproaching those who oppose the Bill now with having failed to do so at the second reading. I should reserve my further remarks until the third reading. In the meantime I hope that the Senate will not concur in these amendments. Some of the amendments are worse than the Bill itself. Some of the amendments which protect the rights of the municipal authorities are valuable, but others of them are not acceptable, and for that reason I cannot concur in the amendments. I am opposed to the Bill itself. I think it is one which is entirely within the jurisdiction of the local legislature. Therefore, if I accept amendments of any kind I am accepting the principle of the Bill. If I think the Bill should not pass, why try to amend it? The first thing, to my mind, to be settled is whether we have jurisdiction, and if we have not jurisdiction, we should not try to make the Bill better. I should therefore vote against the motion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is very hard to understand the conclusions of the hon. gentleman. He says in his closing remarks that the amendments are worse than the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Some of them.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What are the amendments? The hon. gentleman lectures the members of this House with regard to their duty as legislators, after the foolish vote of yesterday afternoon, when we asserted our loyalty to the constitution. It was an absurd vote.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it was absurd, why did the hon. gentleman vote for it?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think it was absurd to assert our loyalty to the constitution when every member of the Senate has sworn to be loyal to the constitution. We had, two years ago, a similar Bill to this before us, a Bill for the development of power on the Rainy river. No serious objection was taken at that time to this House dealing with the Bill. As a matter of fact, we restricted the power that the province of Ontario had given to that company to transmit electricity to the United States. We took greater care of the interests of the people of Ontario in the Bill which was discussed in this House than the Ontario legislature had taken. The province of Ontario sent a representative here on that occasion, and he complimented the Senate on the provisions that we incorporated in that Bill. I contend that this Bill is entirely within the jurisdiction of this House; that the province of Ontario could not possibly pass a Bill that would be effective in this case any more than they could in the case of the Rainy River Company, because it contemplates the development of a water-power on an international stream. Hon. gentlemen must know that the province of Ontario could not give power necessary for such a work.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is to be in the district of Thunder bay.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The water-power is on the Pigeon river, which is in Thunder bay district. The hon. gentleman says that 'The district of Thunder bay' is not proper notice. The hon. gentleman must know that Thunder bay is a very large territory, and covers all that part of Ontario in which these works are to be located.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does it cover all Ontario?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, but it does cover the territory where the Pigeon river is.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman says no; I say yes. I know where Thunder bay is, and where the Pigeon river empties into the lake. The district of Thunder bay is well known.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman tell us how far it is from Port Arthur to Pigeon river?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should judge by the map, that it is fifty or sixty miles.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—More than that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman said he knew all about the district of Thunder bay, but he does not know that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do know all the territory in that part of the country known as the Thunder bay district, and I know that the hon. gentleman had little or no ground of complaint about the notice that was given to the public. The Standing Orders Committee have been very careful in passing on notices. That notice was approved of some time ago. No exception was taken, and the validity of the notice was accepted by the Railway Committee.

Hon. M. LANDRY—What about Ile Royale?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That is United States territory. The hon. gentleman finds fault with the Bill because it provides that the company can erect poles, &c., in Ile Royale. He says that is not in the notice. This House has no jurisdiction over that, but they have put the provision in the Bill to enable the company to spend money in Ile Royale. They could not take it out of this country and spend it in the United States without authority from parliament. We passed legislation last session incorporating a company to do certain work in Mexico, and it contained an enabling clause, of course, to erect poles in Mexico. The hon. gentleman will not say that we have jurisdiction in Mexico, more than we have in Ile Royale, still no objection was taken to that Bill, and I do not suppose that they have given any notice in Mexico that they are getting power here to erect poles in that country. Some three or four Bills of that character were passed here last sesison without opposition. There can be no question of this company being within its rights in coming to parliament, because Pigeon river is on the international boundary, and they could not get power from the province of Ontario to develop power on that river. They refer to Ile Royale because they purpose conveying power to that island. It is not regular to state what took place in committee, but I may be permitted to say that we had another representative of the Ontario government present at the meeting of the committee when this Bill was under consideration, and he stated——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to refer to what took place in committee.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I know I am out of order. I admit that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman is out of order, he should not violate the rules.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Well, I will not mention the committee, but I heard the representative of the Ontario government make a statement that this Bill proposed to convey that power to Ile Royale——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am not referring to what took place in the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—My point of order is this, that the hon. gentleman has no right to state what took place in the committee. He says that he is not speaking of the committee, but he has no right directly or indirectly to state what took place in the committee.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am not going to refer to the committee at all. I may say that a gentleman who came here representing the Ontario government said in my presence that he believed if this company bona fide intended to transmit a portion of that power developed in Canada to Ile Royale, the Bill was within the jurisdiction of this parliament.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Where did he say that ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman is inquisitive, but I do not intend to tell him.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Until he tells me where, I cannot accept the hon. gentleman's statement.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman must accept it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Of course, if the hon. gentleman wants to inquire into my private doings, he can put another notice on the order paper. It might have been in a private car. The hon. gentleman says that some of the amendments are worse than the Bill itself. I think the changes made are all in the right direction. For instance, in the original Bill it says : 'in the adjacent waters to Pigeon river.' The Bill limits them to any point on the Pigeon river, not on the waters tributary to Pigeon river. They are not given a roving commission as they had it before. For Ile Royale is substituted as a certain point. These are not bad clauses. Then the other clauses are put in for the purpose of guarding the public interest. The hon. senator from Halifax read them to-day, and they are all in the right direction. The hon. gentleman from Hastings admits that they make the Bill much better than it was before. He opposes the Bill because he thinks it is legislation which is within the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. He does not claim for a moment that the provisions of the Bill are not right ; but he must remember that two years ago when the Rainy River Bill was before this House, the representative of the Ontario government admitted that this parliament had jurisdiction in that case. That admission was made by their solicitor here, and Mr.

Whitney, the Premier of Ontario, told us we were doing well to make those changes in that Bill restricting the powers given the company by the province of Ontario. We adopted a principle at that time that any power required for the purpose of developing an industry in Canada should be retained in Canada. We inserted a clause in that Bill, and we have it in this Bill, that the people of Canada at all times can have power in preference to having it transmitted to the United States. In view of the fact that this Bill deals with an international waterway, and that two years ago it was admitted such legislation is within our jurisdiction, we should support the Bill.

The motion was agreed to on a division.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In accordance with the notice which appears on the orders to-day, I move that rule 24 be suspended in so far as it relates to this Bill. The House will agree that it is only fair to the promoters, since it originates in the Senate, that it should be passed with as little delay as possible. Its passage in the other House will be jeopardized if it is delayed here, and I have given this notice in order that the third reading may take place at an earlier date than it otherwise would.

Hon. Sir MACKENZE BOWELL—This system of moving the suspension of the rules in order to facilitate the passage of Bills, whether opposed or not, is, to my mind, highly objectionable. We have been in the habit, unfortunately, in the past of suspending the rules to facilitate the passage of such Bills, but I do not think my hon. friend should press his motion. I know it is done repeatedly, with the result that many important Bills have passed through the House without the consideration they deserve. He very often takes advantage of his long parliamentary experience and knowledge of the rules to push objectionable measures through, when some of his confreres by whom he is surrounded would forget all about them. When we come to the third reading I will refer to the hon. gentleman and some of the arguments which he has advanced. I should not do so on this motion because I do not think they would be relevant. I hope my hon. friend will not press the motion. If he does, I shall take some little time to discuss it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The discussion this afternoon has been irregular, because the amendments only were open to consideration. But I took it for granted that a broad discussion would possibly save further discussion on the third reading, and, therefore, took no objection to it on that account. From the suggestion which my hon. friend has made just now, I see that I cast my pearls in the wrong place. The hon. gentleman has asked me to defer making this motion. I must confess he has softened me to a great extent, because he is always courteous to this side of the House, and to myself especially, and in deference to him I shall drop the motion of which I have given notice and move that the Bill be set down for third reading to-morrow, when I trust that I shall get the assistance of my hon. friends opposite to have it passed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope I shall be able ere long to reciprocate the courtesy.

The motion was withdrawn, and the Bill was fixed for third reading to-morrow.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three p.m.

SENATE.

OTTAWA, Thursday, April 18, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY POLICY-HOLDERS BILL WITHDRAWN.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (SS) An Act to amend an Act respecting the Canadian Assessment Policyholders in the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company, recommending that the promoters be permitted to withdraw the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before permission is given to receive that report, I do not know if I am in order in asking what the hon. gentleman has just presented to the House is really a report from the Committeee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—I should like the report to be read, and then the hon. gentleman will see the reason.

The SPEAKER—This is the report of the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I raise the point of order that the Committee on Banking and Commerce is no more in existence. The time for presentation of reports expired on the third of April, and no extension has been granted, so that the Committee on Banking and Commerce has no right to make any report.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—The reasons are set forth in the written report, and I propose to supplement them when it has been read.

The SPEAKER—The point of order is raised against this report as a report from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, because the time to make reports expired on the third of April inst.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I think I might be permitted to adduce some reasons why the report should be received. Perhaps the rule or order may be all right. I have no doubt it is; still, where the public interests are concerned, it is expedient at times that there should be a good deal of give and take, and perhaps I might give such a reason as would induce my hon. friend to withdraw his protest. If not, of course, I will not succeed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am afraid if I withdraw my protest I might be afterwards ruled out of order as taking my point too late, so that I prefer taking it in good time.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am trying to show why my hon. friend should withdraw his protest. I introduced this Bill as a public measure. It certainly should not have gone to the Banking and Commerce Committee. Still it went there, and I found no objection. It is a committee we all have confidence in, and I do not see why it should not go there ; but at that committee I was induced to withdraw the Bill, and I want to put myself straight with the public at large, for I do not want it said afterwards that the Mutual Reserve had been after me with twenty thousand dollars to quash the Bill. I think my hon. friend will see the absolute necessity of allowing this one report to pass. I stated there that the chairman of the committee thought perhaps it would serve the interest of the public as well if, having discussed the matter to some extent, we allowed the matter to stand over until next session as the government propose to bring down a Bill dealing with the subject of insurance, and perhaps what I sought to achieve by this Bill might be accomplished in the government Bill. That is the main reason why I ask to withdraw the measure. I brought the matter to the attention of the House, the government and the country, and I only ask that the money deposited with the government to secure policy-holders in Canada should not be allowed to be withdrawn under any circumstances until all claims are satisfied. I made the statement that the Bill never would have passed here had it not been endorsed by the insurance inspector. Mr. Fitzgerald denied in committee that his name was on the Bill, but on turning up the Senate Debates of July 13th, 1904, page 691, I find the following :

> Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understand that all these things could be properly said in the House—that the Bill had been referred to a sub-committee and examined by Mr. Fitzgerald, Mr. Bradshaw and Mr. Eldridge, but what appears to me as being singular and without precedent, is the fact that this Bill is put before the country with that endorsement.
> Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Perhaps the Bill thus printed is a report to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and not for this House, because I understand this is not the Bill as reported to-day.
> Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I hope the hon. gentleman is right. I hope the Bill will not come before this House with that endorsation. It is either a public Bill or a private Bill, and in either case we do not want on it the endorsation of Messrs. Fitzgerald, Bradshaw and Eldridge. I protest against it, if this is the final form in which the Bill is to appear.

I was led to believe that the Bill was all we expected it to be; but it does not go quite far enough, I bow to the wisdom of the committee, that it would be better to let matters stand until next year and then make provision for the security of the Canadian policy-holders. I have given my reason why my hon. friend should allow this report to pass in justice to myself and to those whose rights I desire to protect.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it was a personal question between my hon. friend and myself, I would yield to his wishes, but it is not a personal matter. Here is a report from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, a report which that committee has no longer a right to make, as it is submitted to the Senate after the date fixed by the House when reports on private Bills could be received.

The SPEAKER—The point of order is well taken. A standing committee can make no report on a Bill after the date decided upon by the Senate for such report.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I suppose the proper way now it to ask leave of the House.

The SPEAKER—There is a motion on the paper for that purpose now.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG moved:

That rule 110 be suspended to the end of the session in so far as it relates to the report of any standing or special committee on a private Bill, and that leave be given the said committee to sit and report from time to time to the end of the session.

Hon. Mr. LANRDY—The hon. gentleman wishes to suspend the following part of rule 110 :

Nor may any report of any standing or special committee upon a private Bill be received after the first six weeks of each session.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is not the proper way to proceed. The committee should be revived, or better, the Committee on Standing Orders which is still in existence should report asking the House directly for a suspension of the rule. There is no urgency in the matter. It is better to have a report from the Standing Orders Committee recommending an extension of time to the end of the session or to some specified date. But, after all, why should we, at this time of the session, grant a further extension of time. In the House of Commons last year, when a similar motion was made by a member, the premier refused to allow any extension of time in the last days of the session. Our rules are made for the purpose of informing the public of the conditions for private Bills, and when private Bills may be introduced and referred to committees, and no reason has been given why our rules should be suspended. The proper way is to let the Committee on Standing Orders itself make a report in that direction.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We will make a serious mistake if we adopt this motion. This year we have had a large number of private Bills introduced in this House. Every senator ought to encourage that state of things, because it is calculated to take away the reflection that has been levelled against the Senate on many occasions, that we have not originated any considerable number of measures, and in that way our usefulness has been disparaged before the country. I had an opportunity of hearing a discussion elsewhere on this subject, and complaint was made about so many Bills originating in the Senate being sent to the House of Commons at a very late stage of the session, leading to a lot of work for their committees at a time when they are clearing up their own work. It is the experience coming home to them of the difficulty we have always had in the Senate in the past. I thought we should welcome the change, which is a most desirable one, and I was glad to find gentlemen speaking elsewhere on the subject regarding it in the very same light. But if we suspend our rules and allow these reports to come in up to the very last day, it will create a state of congestion in the other branch of parliament that may probably lead to this happy result of so many private Bills coming to us being discontinued in another session of parliament. If we adopt this motion we should take care it shall not apply to Bills originating in this House. We might amend my hon. friend's motion, so that it would only apply to Bills coming from the other branch. We should consider whether by encouraging the presentation of reports on Bills right up to the close of the session, we are not giving rise to an argument which might be used everywhere against these Bills coming before us in the first instance.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—When I gave notice of the motion yesterday, it was for the purpose of curing a technicality in our procedure which was very necessary, as

I think we will all admit. The time for presenting reports on private Bills had expired, through an inadvertence, and it was merely to cure that, but the argument my hon. friend from Marshfield offers to the House, that if we extend the time for receiving petitions we will be congesting the other branch of parliament by work coming in at a late date, does not appeal to me, for this reason: This House has within its own right and power authority to refuse the second reading of a Bill. It has a right to refuse the procedure which is required before it is sent to a committee, and if in the judgment of the House we are getting too much to do—I do not think my hon. friend will argue that—and if it is thought desirable to kill a Bill, so as not to congest the work in the other chamber, the Bill will be here on trial, and if the hon. gentleman will pause for a moment, he will see that the doorway which allows private legislation to be introduced, has been closed some time ago by cutting off the right to present petitions, and that is the doorway through which private legislation is introduced. Therefore, we have it absolutely under our control to receive a petition or not receive it later on after the time has expired, which time expired some few weeks ago. In presenting the motion, I do it simply to carry on the work ordered by the House, if there should be any. The committee do not report on a Bill unless the House has referred a Bill to them, and Rule 125 says that if a private Bill is referred to a committee, they must report back, so that it is merely to cure what is obviously a technicality in the working of the machinery of the House, and the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona is that it would be better if the Standing Orders Committee had met and recommended it. I desire to call his attention to the fact that if the Standing Orders Committee had the power to recommend an extension of time, I am not so sure that it is not a matter for the House to deal with directly, when the time has expired, as in this case. At any rate, as you see today, a committee has reported, and the objection was taken to the report being out of order, inasmuch as the time had expired. It must appeal to hon. gentlemen that if there is any virtue in passing this rule, that it should be passed at as early a period as possible, so that the machinery of the House would proceed in its regular way. It was through an oversight and inadvertence that the time had expired, and it should have been rectified in the shortest time possible. No harm can arise by the extension of the time for presenting the reports, because if the House had no desire for a report, they should not send a Bill to the committee. That is the position I take. I have no interest in the matter other than to facilitate the work of the House. The matter is in the hands of the House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Nobody disputes what the hon. gentleman says. He has spent considerable time elaborating the idea that the House had the right to do so and so, and suspend the rule. But in our wisdom we made a rule, and why? To prevent the practice of private Bills coming in late, not only taking up the time of this House when it had other important matters to deal with, but being sent late to the other branch of parliament. Having made the rule, I would ask with all deference, what common sense is there now in extending the time for receiving reports to the end of the session? If this is so eminently the very thing that ought to be done, why should we have the rule at all? Let me say that one of the oldest members of the House of Commons discussed this question the other day, and he suggested in consequence of measures coming from this House so late, that joint action should be had between the two branches in order to provide that the date for the reception of private Bills and passing them from one House to the other should be absolutely fixed, so as to prevent the congestion of work in either branch of parliament towards the end of the session. It was incidentally alleged—although I do not know whether it is true or not—that our rule admitted of Bills coming in much later than the House of Commons rule did. In the face of that circumstance, if we pass this motion, sweeping the rule to one side altogether, we had better have no such rule at all.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I do not propose to offer any serious objection to the course adopted by my hon. friend from Killarney, but I do think that the better practice would be to suspend the rule only for special Bills. We have a rule in virtue of which the action of committees is suspended after a given time, and it seems to me not to be very logical to revise it indiscriminately at the end of the session. I have noticed that this practice has been followed in other sessions, and it always struck me as being a practice which should be abandoned as soon as possible. I think these reports from this committee are made by way of exception, and it should be applied only as occasion offers, but not open the door to bring in a number of petitions or Bills at the end of the session. I would therefore suggest to my hon. friend to amend his motion to make it apply only to the Bill which he has in view. He may renew the same motion for other Bills.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is a roundabout way.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Permit me to ask a question. Suppose his idea is carried out, and limit my motion to the report of the committee which sat to-day, what position would we be in when Bills come over from the House of Commons, which, in the natural course of the work of the House should be the case as far as the session would permit? Shall we place every Bill regardless of its merits, at the mercy of a vote of this House?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—With regard to Bills coming from the other House, they stand on another footing altogether. In regard to them, the extension should be made for good, and our rule should not apply to them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call attention to the practice that is followed in the House of Commons when things of that kind occur. At page 758, Bourinot says:

> In the session of 1880-81 the time for the reception of reports on private Bills in the Commons lapsed accidentally, and it was not competent for the Standing Orders Committee to recommend an extension of time.

So much for the House of Commons, but here the question rises, is not the Standing Orders Committee in this House yet competent to grant an extension of time? Bourinot proceeds:

> It was then considered necessary to give formal notice of a motion to revive the committee. The Standing Orders Committee then met and made a report to extend that time for petitions as soon as the House had agreed to the above motion.

Well, either one of the two things. Our Standing Orders Committee has the right to extend the time or it has not.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I would gather from that authority that we had not the right to recommend any extension of the time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have a right to recommend the extension of time.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes, we have passed that stage.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The time has expired, but what is being discussed to-day is a further extension as directed by this House.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No, a revival of the time. The time has expired and now we wish to revive—a different proposition.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it is a revival, the motion does not say so. Does it refer to all committees?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Committees on private Bills.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is equivalent to an extension of time, and the latter part of the motion of my hon. friend is a formal demand for an extension of time. So, I contend, it should come from the Standing Orders Committee itself, if that committee is still in existence, and my own opinion is that it is, because this applies only to committees that were dealing with private Bills.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—They are in existence.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—My hon. friend is confusing the Standing Orders Committee with the Private Bills Committee, and the Banking and Commerce Committee, and the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours. These are extinct. They cannot make a report. What is the use of a committee that cannot report, and for that reason are extinct? If we want to do something we must revive those committees, and when they are revived we will have from the Standing Orders Committee a report to extend the time for petitions or the reception of reports. That is what was done in the House of Commons in 1881, and I submit it as a precedent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is some question evidently, as I gather from the case in the House of Commons, which the hon. gentleman for Stadacona has referred to, but there is no question at all as to the rights of this House to take the course which it considers best adapted for carrying on its own business. The companies which are dealt with by the Private Bills Committee are sometimes very important companies. I have no doubt the company reported on now by the Banking and Commerce Committee is one of very considerable importance, and I do not see why we should put unnecessary difficulties or obstacles in the way of dealing with that report. The House can make any order it pleases with respect to these Bills, and it is very doubtful whether the Standing Orders Committee can take any action. The House can take the action, and the better way is that the body which has the power should take the action. Certainly, there is no question about the power of the House.

The SPEAKER—I have noticed that the practice has been in this House for the Standing Orders Committee to make the necessary recommendations to this House as to the time within which petitions should be received and reports made by the committees, but the practice has not been so uniform in the other House, which has received such recommendations from other committees than the Standing Orders Committee, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, and from the Private Bills Committee, and that House has itself ordered committees to proceed, and has revived the committees. At page 784, Bourinot says :

> When a committee cannot meet for want of a quorum, the attention of the House may be called to the fact and its interposition invoked. In such case the House will order : that the committee be revived and that leave be given to sit and proceed on a certain day.

I feel that the present motion is sufficient to empower the committees to sit, but of course it is for the Senate to decide if this motion be granted, or if by an amendment it should be sent to the Standing Orders Committee. I take it for granted that before sending that motion to the Standing Orders Committee that that committee would have to be revived. I will read the decision which was mentioned by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, and which seems to indicate that the time having lapsed, that committee could not report.

> In the session of 1880-81 the time for the reception of reports of private Bills lapsed accidentally, and it was not competent for the Standing Orders Committee to recommend an extension of time. It was then considered necessary to give formal notice of a motion to revive the committee. The Standing Orders Committee then met and made a report to extend the time for petitions as soon as the House had agreed to the above motion.

I have considerable doubt as to this precedent being correct in using the word 'revive,' because I think that the standing committee is for the whole session, and it is for the House to decide as to its procedure, and as to the time at which it would receive reports.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to raise another point——

Hon. Mr. POWER—I rise to a point of order.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am rising to a point of order. My hon. friend is ready whenever I rise, to raise a point of order.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman is too late, the question having been put from the chair.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, the motion had not been put. The hon. Speaker had decided one point of order. I may not be upheld in the point of order I propose to raise, but I am certainly entitled to raise it at this stage.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman may proceed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The point of order is that this is not an ordinary suspension of the rules. It is making a new standing order for the rest of the session. We declare that for the rest of this session the standing order shall be different from what it is now. If it were merely relating to one Bill, it would be all right ; but as you propose to change the standing order for the balance of the session, you require to have a difference in the notice.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—My hon. friend cannot be sincere in that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am quite serious.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is quite competent for the leader of the House to move that the standing orders be suspended for the balance of the session. It is done nearly every session.

The SPEAKER—I had occasion to examine this point yesterday, and I found that in many instances the House of Commons had adopted such motions at the end of the session, that the committee should be empowered to report till the end of the session.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is not a new departure.

The motion was agreed to.

REFUNDING OF FEES.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I should like to move that the fees paid in connection with the Canal Bill, which has been withdrawn, may be refunded, less the cost of printing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that in accordance with the recommendation of the committee ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When the report of the committee recommending that the fee be refunded, less the cost of printing and translation, has been presented to and adopted by this House, there is no necessity for another motion.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—We have a double-barrelled practice in that respect. I am quite content to rest the matter as the hon. gentleman has suggested if the clerk of the House considers that sufficient authority to adjust the financial part.

The SPEAKER—I would be of opinion that concurrence in the report by the Senate would be sufficient justification for the clerk to pay the money.

ERIE ONTARIO POWER COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the third reading of Bill (YY) An Act respecting the Erie Ontario Power Company.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does this Bill contain the clause for the general advantage of Canada ?

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—I gave notice of an amendment, which, with the consent and approval of all the parties interested, I should like to withdraw. I want to substitute for it an amendment to provide that the works of the company shall not in any way interfere with or diminish the powers and privileges of the Jordan-Erie Power Company without their consent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—On behalf of the promoters I have no objection to adopt the amendment.

The amendment, in substitution for the one of which notice was given, was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was asking a question when my hon. friend moved his amendment. I find, on reference to the Bill, that it is to amend an Act which was passed in a former session, and I suppose we are at liberty to finish up and make perfect the charters we have already granted. I suppose our solemn declaration of two days ago refers to new measures ?

The Bill was read the third time and passed.

PORT ARTHUR POWER AND DEVELOPMENT COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS moved the third reading of Bill (WW) An Act to incorporate the Port Arthur Power and Development Company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I intimated yesterday when this question was under discussion that I purposed discussing it further and dividing the House on the question. On reflection, I have decided not to divide the House, but I wish to reply to some remarks which fell from those who support the Bill. The hon. member from Halifax devoted some little time to discussing the details of the Bill and the amendments which had been made to it by the committee, to which the House I think made no objection, except the one extending the line to Ile Royale. The same course was pursued by the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie. Neither of them to any extent discussed the principle involved in the Bill, of interference with provincial rights. I have no dispute with either of the hon. gentlemen on any of the points which they discussed at some length; my objection was simply on the broad question of provincial rights. Several hon. gentlemen who, in the past, have been ardent advocates of the rights of the provinces, and who affirmed the resolutions passed a couple of days ago upon that question, stated that having erred in this respect so long they thought they had better not stop now; but intimated their intention to take a stand at some future period. Something was said both by the hon. senator from Wellington and the hon. senator from Portage la Prairie which I had not heard before, but which I am informed was quite correct; that when this Bill passed the committee it was understood that it was to be a final step in this sort of legislation. That may have been the case with some of those who supported the Bill, though opposed to the principle involved in it. An arrangement of that kind, it seems to me, affecting legislation, is scarcely admissible as an argument for supporting a Bill. A number of gentlemen, from their utterances yesterday, who voted for the resolutions of the hon. senator from Mille Isles, seconded with an unanswerable speech by the hon. senator from Middlesex, will nevertheless vote in favour of this Bill if a division is taken upon it. There are many politicians who are guided to a very great extent by expediency and a desire to assist their friends rather than to stand for a principle.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—But not in the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I concede the correctness of the interruption, because when the vote was taken the other day upon this question, my hon. friend, to use a western expression, 'skedaddled, vamoosed the ranch.' He was not here. He did not wish to place himself on record, and, consequently, absented himself when the vote was taken. Perhaps he took the same view of it that the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie did, that the resolutions were a piece of nonsense, which was not very complimentary to the hon. gentleman from Mille Isles. If he thought the resolutions were of that character he should not have voted for them. I want to point out that the case of the Rainy River Bill is not at all analogous to this case. Rainy river is a very narrow stream dividing the two countries, and the company asked for power to build dams and construct a bridge across the river. The Bill contained provisions which deprived Canada of a large proportion of benefit which we hope will arise from the construction of those works, and the amendments made to the Bill were referred to by my hon. friend from Killarney in discussing the measure before the House. This case is different. In addition to mentioning Ile Royale with the object of bringing the Bill within the purview of this parliament, the operations of the company by subclause (a) of clause (8) are confined to the Thunder bay district, and then Pigeon river is described as being within the Thunder bay district. Is Pigeon river within Thunder bay district?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No. If you look at the map you will find Thunder bay district clearly defined, and that you will have to pass from Port Arthur, at the head of Thunder bay, through two or three townships—Neebing, Lake and Crooks—before you reach Pigeon lake, which is the head of Pigeon river. Unless you declare the whole of the Algoma district is within Thunder bay, Pigeon river is not within that district. In view of the understanding among some hon. gentlemen to which I have referred, I have no desire to divide the House, but I wish to put on record an expression of my views. They are contained in the motion which I had intended to make, and which is as follows:

'That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day six months, for the reason that the powers sought to be exercised should be left to be dealt with by the legislature of the province of Ontario, and that the powers conceded in the provision of the Bill are such as were not asked for nor contemplated in the public notices applying for the charter, and for the further reason that the enacting of said Bill would be in direct conflict with the principle affirmed in the resolution passed by the Senate on the 16th instant on a vote of forty-eight yeas to one nay, affirming provincial rights and the right of the provinces.'

I am inclined to think that a number of the hon. gentlemen who voted for that resolution on the 16th instant, would vote against this amendment if I were to move it. I would not like to put the hon. gentleman who pronounced himself yesterday upon this Bill in the position of being an unrepentant sinner. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman beside him (Hon. Mr. Watson) would place himself in the same position, and having given my own view on this question, I am content to let the Bill go; but with the distinct understanding that if we live to attend another session of parliament, my hon. friend from Wellington shall have an opportunity of recording his vote either in favour of the principle or in opposition to it, which he has been advocating for almost a lifetime. If he and others desire to place themselves in that position, I have no objection; but I promise them that if I live and am here they shall have an opportunity of carrying their professions into practice. Under the circumstances, and not desiring to place these gentlemen in a false position, I am charitably inclined to let the matter drop for the present.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

PROVINCIAL SUBSIDIES.

ADDRESS POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Consideration of the message from the House of Commons, informing the Senate that they have passed an address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, humbly representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, to be made by Canada to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their governments and legislatures; and requesting the Senate to unite with the House of Commons in the said address, by filling up the blank therein with the words 'Senate and.'—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the order be discharged, and that it be made an order for Monday next.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am afraid if this order is postponed now, there will not be sufficient time to discuss it. There are reports in the lobbies that prorogation will take place next week and such an important matter as this should not be delayed until a day or two before the close of the session.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is all in a nutshell. It has been discussed since the convention held in Quebec and is a very old story.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman should give us an opportunity to discuss these questions.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it does not come up until the end of the session, my friend must not be surprised if we keep the House a day or two longer than he expects. I give notice in advance that we will take all the time necessary to discuss this question.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to give the hon. gentleman a similar notice, that I shall insist on my rights to discuss this question fully.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I hope nobody will dispute the rights, not only of the hon. gentleman, but of every hon. member of this Chamber, and parliament will be kept a month if necessary to give time for a full discussion of the subject.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I desire to take this opportunity to say that there is something deficient in these resolutions about the province of Manitoba. Under the present arrangement, Manitoba has a right to have a subsidy based upon the population ascertained by a quinquennial census, but in the new arrangement the basis is a decennial census.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman must confine his remarks to the question of postponing the order.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Have I not a right to call the attention of the government to what I consider a deficiency in the resolution?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will it be made the first Order of the Day for Monday?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is hard to say. I shall be very glad if it can be done.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I want to call the attention of the government to a defect in the resolution in order that it may be remedied.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

The motion was agreed to.

OLD-AGE ANNUITIES.

DEBATE CONCLUDED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Honourable Mr. McMullen: That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of all correspondence in the hands of the government, or any department thereof, on the question of old age pensions to aged residents in Canada, or retiring allowance in any form.—(Hon. Mr. Sullivan.)

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—

> To catch dame fortune's golden smile > assiduous wait upon her,
> And gather gear by every wile > that's justified by honour ;
> Not for to hide it in a hedge,
> Nor for a train attendant,
> But for the glorious privilege
> Of being independent.

Such is the intent and purpose of this Bill and I thought I would quote you a text from a distinguished author well known. I have been for the past fifty years a daily visitor to an orphan hospital and asylum, and for six months of every year of that time I have listened to medical students on subjects connected with their profession, which gives me a right to speak with some degree of intimacy on this subject not possessed by those who have not had a similar experience. This condition of rich and poor has existed from the very foundation of the world. After the expulsion of Adam, you remember that one of his sons killed the other for the purpose of removing the inequality; nevertheless it has continued to the present day. If you search the records of all the nations of antiquity, you will find that this condition has always existed and no attempt was made to settle the difference in any way except by the arbitriment of war. Such a thing as charity was not known. The word did not exist either in Greek or Latin, and there was no institution where that virtue was practised. Greece attained the zenith of its fame during the reign of Pericles, four hundred and ninety-two years before Christ, and Rome attained its golden age in the time of Augustus Cæsar, when the city contained one million five hundred thousand inhabitants, yet while these prosperous conditions existed no attempt was made to remedy the condition of the poor. The only way in which rulers did anything as charity was by certain feasts at which they gave corn and food to the people. I merely mention this to show you that with the exception of the Jews, who, under the law of the Ten Commandments, and under the commands of the fourth and tenth, were particularly enjoined to works of benevolence and to works of assistance to those who were in need, even to the stranger within their gates. That is the only exception, until the dawn of Christianity. When Christianity came of course all was changed. Those Deities of Olympus which held sway, were set aside. In their doctrines, although there were gods or goddesses, for every other condition of mind, there was never any deity for acts of charity or benevolence, nor any placed under love, except an immoral love, a love which was a passion, or rather lust than love, which was governed by a goddess. Christianity changed all that. The early days of its career in this world were attended with a good deal of difficulty and of terriffic persecution. This persecution was so great that the Church had recourse to the seclusion and safety of the catacombs. Persecutions continued for a long time, still the Church enjoined a benevolence which was stronger even then than it is to-day. It enjoined a condition where the goods of this world were equal among them, and such practices as were not heard of before, and certainly have not been heard of since. The persecutions ceased and the Church emerged from the seclusion of the catacombs. When the Christian doctrine began to be propagated, the Church immediately had recourse to its exemplification. Charity was enjoined. Assistance was to be rendered to those who were industrious, or to those who were afflicted with sickness, and that continued until, as you are aware, the barbarians attacked the Church and the Church converted those people, after a short time, into her supporters and champions. This state of things prevailed until there was such a division between the rulers and the ruled in the world, during the feudal tenure, that the people were oppressed ; the feudal lords had a tendency to oppression. This was modified by the influence of the Church. The Church emancipated woman and raised her from the low position as the slave of man, to be his equal. She enjoined on man the marriage laws which govern the Christian Church at the present day and which are models of wisdom. Hospitals and asylums of all kinds were erected. She curbed the tendency of the great lords to absolute power, conceived, and wrote the Magna Charta, and removed any other grievances within her power which were likely to affect the liberties of the people. That went on, as hon. gentlemen are aware, until the policy of the civilized governments of the age was changed, excited by their lust for power and ambition, and their unlawful passions, seized the great endowments of the Church which were used for such beneficent purposes. A fine example of that is seen in the actions of Henry VIII., who is said never to have spared woman in his lust nor man in his anger. He set the example, and from that time on I consider the state, by its action, put aside the Church, as guardians of the poor, and assumed the care and protection of the people. I make a little digression here to cite examples in our own country of the first power and of the second. The first, that of the Church, is exemplified in the province of Quebec, and an example of the state is furnished by the province of Ontario. In the province of Quebec, the religious bodies were very poor at the time they were granted certain estates, but by the efflux of time these estates have become very valuable. These religious and charitable institutions employ all their wealth for the purposes for which they started two or three hundred years ago, educating or protecting the poor and the sick—I suppose it was of all denominations—at all events, the French-Canadian, and other works of charity. These heroes and heroines we read of as having done so much at the first settlement of this country, are perpetuating these efforts in the charitable institutions which you see today. Opposite the great French cathedral in Montreal there is a magnificent monument erected to the founder of Montreal, Maisonneuve, and there are several tableaux. They are so beautiful that every time I visit Montreal I admire them. One represents the founder of the Hotel Dieu, and some of the effects shown by her solicitude for a wounded young Indian. This shows that the French-Canadians have a peculiar advantage in so far as money is concerned. They are not asked to contribute as they otherwise would, although their ministrations extend all over Quebec. This is supplemented, so far as the residents of Montreal are concerned, by the private benevolence of a great many people, one in particular, Lord Strathcona. On the slope of Mount Royal is situated one of the most magnificent institutions in this country for the care of the sick. It is a hospital complete in every respect, equipped to the very smallest detail. Lord Strathcona, who is responsible for it, placed a million dollars at the disposal of this institution, and I know that in giving Dr. Roddick the order for the required instruments and apparatus for the hospital, they gave him carte blanche to buy all that was necessary for the equipment of the hospital. This is an example of that private benevolence which is doing so much in our day for the purpose of relieving any distress or afflictions that are common to humanity. I should mention also the province of Ontario. In Ontario the action of the state is seen in the perfect manner in which the destitute and sick are cared for. There is not a country, I do not care where it is, in the world that has so complete, thorough and satisfactory a system of charitable institutions for comforting the sick and afflicted as Ontario. I do not know anything about the maritime provinces or the Northwest provinces. Probably the former are too old and the latter perhaps are too young. However, Ontario has adopted as a source of revenue the system of succession duties, payable by large estates to the province at the death of the owners, for the support of these institutions, and that probably does greater benefit than the doners could confer on their fellowmen during a lifetime in their ordinary work. A good deal has been said in reference to the pauperizing effect of such a measure, and that it was unnecessary in Canada. Anything that would tend to have an injurious effect on the people of the country, is entirely opposed to the principle of this proposition. If we take European countries, Germany for example, has a complete system of old-age pensions. Denmark and Belgium were also mentioned as models, but especially Germany. Germany's is all right, but is it pauperism? That is a word we want to get rid of. Pauperism is a word that will never be applied to Canadian people. I do not believe that the right hon. gentleman ever thought of such a thing. On the contrary, this Bill is an antidote, a preventive of pauperism, and that is the reason I give it my strong and warm support. From the experience which I have had of these institutions I can assure this House that I have seen many persons that this scheme would benefit. It is even a better institution, and would do more good by securing a certain class of people that nothing else would secure—not even savings banks. It is on the same line as the savings banks. It is simply a voluntary system. The population of England alone, without Wales, Ireland or Scotland, as given in Whittaker's, is 30,811,428. The amount of money required for the poor is supplied by the poor rate tax, and to show you how heavy it must be, in addition to the amount paid as income tax, the poor rate is £11,373,000 sterling, or about $56,845,000, which is exclusive of the amount paid to asylums, hospitals or any other purpose. It is the rate levied on the taxpayers, and you can see how large it would be divided among them. Besides, there is a sum of $18,500,000 contributed by agricultural boards and other institutions, making a total of $75,365,000 for one year for the support of 871,765 paupers, which, divided among them would be nearly $86 each. In addition, the board of guardians are permitted to open what are called labour yards, which give employment to all the men able to work, chiefly at breaking stone. One of these at St. Ovade, opposite Whitechapel, was open last year for three months. Over 1,000 men were employed. In calculating the results the stone which is usually broken at 5/ per ton, cost on this occasion £7 sterling, or $35. This is not encouraging to furnishing work for paupers. In fact the name of them is idleness.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN.

Scotland has a population of 4,472,108 and the number of paupers in Scotland is 108,643. These are maintained by a poor rate. Their cost is $7,011,770, and with such a small population and such a country you can understand how heavy such a tax is. There is a good deal of similarity between these conditions in Ireland. The population is 4,074,780, the number of paupers 115,083. That is relatively more than Scotland, but of course a great diminution takes place in the population of Ireland every year by emigration. The emigration from 1851 to 1905, inclusive, was four million and some hundred thousand, and last year was over 30,000. England, Ireland and Scotland have pretty much the same condition of people, although the poor rate and the number of people receiving aid are greater in Ireland than in Scotland. So widely is this poor rate fund distributed that there is not a county in England that has under one thousand paupers, some 20,000, some 30,000 and some 50,000, and I think London is put down at 149,000. There is one county in England, Rutland, which has only 622. Scotland has no less than fourteen under a thousand, Kincardine having the smallest number. I have not had time to analyse these figures, my object in quoting them is simply to give an idea of the enormous amount of money spent on the poor in England, and to show that they require a pension to be given to old men. This Bill is not pensioning old men. It is an annuity to which the person himself subscribes and pays for. I have not studied the Bill, but from the hasty perusal of it, I do not consider it involves a pension. I will read to the House a resolution passed by the British House of Commons as follows :

Moved by Mr. O'Grady of Leeds, and seconded by Mr. Groves, and resolved : that in the opinion of this House a measure is urgently needed in order that out of funds provided by taxation, provision can be made for payment of a pension to all the aged subjects of His Majesty in the United Kingdom.

In speaking to the resolution, the Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Asquith) said :

On the broad grounds of principle on which this motion has been put forward, not only is there no reluctance on the part of the government to accept it, but there is the strongest and keenest possible desire, by every means we can find available and practicable to further the object which the hon. gentleman has in view.

Allusion has been made to the case of other countries. Our fellow-subjects in New Zealand have established a system of old-age pensions on I think a rather more liberal scale than is proposed here. I find they are spending every year in developing and carrying out that scheme, £200,000.

Then speaking of Germany and of Denmark, he says :

In Denmark the cost of the system of old-age pensions as it at present exists, and has existed for something like ten years, is about 216,000 pounds a year, spread over a population of 2,500,000.

Then he refers to a meeting presided over by Sir Edward Hamilton to consider what the cost of carrying out this scheme would be. He says :

They found, taking the year 1901, that the population of the United Kingdom, over 65 years of age, might be estimated at a little over two millions. If the whole of these two millions were to be entitled to receive a pension upon the scale suggested by the hon. gentleman, five shillings a week—that is to say thirteen pounds a year—the total cost would obviously be 26,000,000 pounds. But from these two million people the select committee deducted no less than 1,350,000 as persons who would not come within the conditions which had been suggested, leaving 650,000 people who would legitimately become entitled to pensions charged upon the exchequer or the rates, as the case might be. Assuming that these people were to receive a pension varying somewhat between seven shillings and five shillings and sixpence a week, the estimated total annual cost would be 10,300,000 pounds.

This shows that there is no possible parallel between the conditions in England and in this country, certainly, if the measure was intended to supply a want on the part of the people. I believe this country is only in its infancy ; that the conditions are favourable to rewarding every man. Toil is rewarded, and children are blessings, and he who has most has riches and honour and glory to boast. I hope it will not be impertinent to discuss the motive that actuated the right hon. gentleman who proposed this measure as an experiment. The position of responsibility that he holds and his knowledge of the conditions of the country would absolve him from introducing any measure that would lead in any way towards pauperism, a term that is disliked in every country. Pauperism is not a crime, but it leads to crime, making the man less self-respecting, making him feel dependent, and less careful of what he does. I tell you from my own experience that any man in this country who becomes a pauper, so to speak, to be supported by the public, suffers trouble perplexity and annoyance just as he does before he falls into crime. The millions who are in the pauper class in the old country, are, as a rule, people low in the scale of humanity, who have lost self-respect and the feeling of independence. As long as a man retains the feeling mentioned in the verses I have quoted in my opening remarks, he will be a better citizen and more serviceable to the community than the man who does not. This Bill submitted by the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, is simply a draft Bill, or a suggestion, and I suppose hon. gentlemen have read the clauses. There is not a word in it which would not commend itself to the judgment of every hon. gentleman, were we considering it in committee. It is rather a preventive of any tendency there would be to lower the standard of our fellow-countrymen. The first clause gives power to the minister to sell annuities. Then the other clauses are with reference to the fund, the amounts payable and the age. The amount is four hundred dollars a year, payable by way of government annuity. It is not to exceed that. It also provides that no government annuity shall be payable or paid to any annuitant unless and until the annuitant has reached the age of 60 years. At 60 years they consider a man useless in England, but in this country we have useful men at the age of sixty, of which there are remarkable examples around me. Another provision is that annuities are not transferable. That is a good clause. Then it is not liable for any debt or taxation. That is certainly good. Then the heirs are to receive any moneys paid. If the person should die before the amount is paid, his heirs will receive the deposit with the addition of three per cent interest. Then there is a very important clause with regard to by-laws and regulations. That is all I see that would require any discussion. There is a reference also to the tables for fixing the amount. Then with reference to the form of contract, the examinations if any, the mode of proof of the age, and mode of obtaining sums of money, and then with reference to unclaimed government annuities. It also provides that all moneys received on account of this Act shall go to the consolidated revenue. Then there is provision with reference to the trustees and to investments—all in the hands of the government—provisions for deficiency of fund, certificates to parliament, penalty for fixing the annuity after death, of annuitant, and then the returns to be made to parliament. That is all there is in it, and can any one for a moment find anything in that which would be objectionable? I consider that with the vast experience the right hon. gentleman has had, being engaged so long in first criticising measures of a government to which his party was hostile, until they came into power in 1896, and from that time onwards appointed to look after the finances of the country, which he has done honestly and with credit to the Dominion—I say considering the vast experience of that hon. gentleman and considering the only object he could have in view, I think the measure which he has put before the Senate should receive careful consideration. In submitting it to us, the hon. gentleman could have no other aim in the world than the good of his country, a patriotic and benevolent action than which there could not be anything nobler, and I trust that this measure, or some other of a similar character will become law. I have seen cases over and over again which were, to me, lamentable. I was induced to support this scheme by a society that is in Kingston, called the King's Daughters. They found that many people received aid in winter, principally fuel, and by inducing them to subscribe five or ten cents a week or a month, found that in a short time they accumulated enough money to keep them in winter, independent of any charity. Now, that is what I think is the object of this proposition, that a man, while his health is good, while work is abundant, and wages are at the highest, shall then put enough in the hands of a sure and safe steward who will hold it and multiply it to his advantage. I would go further and ask the government to add to this fund and make it superior to any other that can be devised. I think the government are doing a good act in experimenting in this direction, and I am sure if they put the project in practice that this will become a fixed, a kind, and benevolent feature of our country. I hope that any hon gentlemen that have not looked into this question will do so and will help the right hon. minister to place it on the statute-book.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am very much indebted to my hon. friend from Kingston for the broadminded and generous appreciation with which he has approached this suggestion, as it has been properly described by the hon. member from Hastings. The House, as I explained before, will understand that the sole object in laying this measure before them is to provoke discussion, and to obtain suggestions from every quarter, in order that at the proper time a well considered and well digested measure may be laid before the country. I have received many communications from a great variety of persons with respect to this proposition, and it is desirable that I should point out in the first place, to prevent misconception, what this measure proposes to do, and what is almost equally desirable, what it does not propose to do. This measure proposes, in the first place, that the government of the country shall have power to grant annuities. In the second place, that the annuities shall be made inalienable and absolutely free from seizure for debt or any other cause whatever; that there should be no forfeitures, as is the case in almost all insurance companies, and that every penny that a man pays in shall go back to him in one form or another, and, lastly, that in case of a man dying before he becomes a participant in the annuity scheme, what he has paid should be refunded to his proper representatives, with reasonable interest. That is what it proposes to do. What it does not propose to do in any form, shape or way, is to grant old-age pensions. I do not want at present to encumber the discussion by a debate as to whether it may under any conceivable circumstances, here or elsewhere, be desirable to grant old-age pensions. My present object is simply to point out that this Bill has nothing whatever to do in any form, shape or way, with the granting of old-age pensions. It does not pretend to interfere with the practice of insurance as it now prevails in this country, nor does it pretend to provide in any way for the families of the parties accepting annuities under this scheme, except in so far as I have stated, that parties who die prior to the age of 60 or 65 will have the sum that they may have paid, refunded to their representatives. And here permit me to say that my hon. friend from Kingston is perfectly right in distinguishing widely between annuities and pensions. An annuity, in the nature of the case, is a purchase; a pension, in the nature of the case, is a gift, and there is no resemblance between them whatsoever. I have been somewhat amused at noting the variety of objections which have been raised in various quarters in respect to the measure. Some parties have objected to it because it is not an old-age pension Bill; other parties have objected to it because it is in their opinion an old-age pension Bill in disguise. Some have objected to it because, in their opinion, it promises too much, more than can be properly performed; others because they think it does not go quite far enough. Some parties think that this project would burden the state unduly; others have told me they consider the state would make unreasonable profit out of the transaction. Some allege that there is no need for it. With that objection I shall deal presently, and at a little more length. Some say the annuity limit is fixed too high, some that it is not fixed high enough, and so on. Some allege that the government has too much latitude given to it; some that it does not take discretion enough. Some parties think that there is a sinister design concealed behind this project, and that the government take power to interfere with companies which are now doing good work in the country. Some, as I have said, consider that it may possibly interfere with insurance companies, and others object that it does not provide insurance which they would like to see furnished by the state. Now the question of state insurance, like the question of old-age pensions, is a question which may, under certain conditions and in certain places, be fairly discussed. I do not propose to discuss that now, I merely mention it in order to clear the ground, and to point out that this is neither an old-age pension Bill nor yet a provision for state insurance. Then there are parties who object to the provision, which I may observe has already been recognized fully by our law, and is recognized in all old-age pension Bills introduced in other countries, that an annuity granted by the state under these conditions should be inalienable, should be free from seizure for debt and should remain the property of the person who obtains it until the day of his death. Then there are others who object because this measure would in no respect assist men who have not chosen to assist themselves, and because there is nothing in it which would enable the lazy or the sensual, or men who have neglected their opportunities, to batten on the toil of their more honest and prudent neighbours. These objections pretty well answer each other, but when parties allege that there is no need for the propsed measure, I think they make a rather serious mistake. Some persons have urged that there is no demand for a measure of this kind. Well there could by no possibility be a demand for an article which has never yet been put on the Canadian market, or, as far as I know, on the market of any other country. No one but government could offer the terms that are proposed to be offered in this Bill, and to say that there is no demand for a thing that has never been placed before the public, seems to me to be a contradiction of terms. But if there are parties here or elsewhere who hold that there is no need of this, then I say that they are very blind to certain very obvious facts disclosed in every Gazette return, and every bank statement, and every governement report which deals with the question. It may be unknown to some gentlemen, even in this House, but it is the fact that there are at this moment no less than five or six hundred thousand persons, being very nearly a fourth of all the wage-earners in Canada, who are unable to invest the moneys they possess at any higher rate than 3 per cent. Of these two hundred thousand are at this moment investing their moneys in government savings banks, in which they have deposited $61,-

000,000 at 3 per cent. I have in my hands the returns from three of our more important banks, which show that in their savings department 170,000 depositors are likewise depositing their money and receiving no more than 3 per cent. At the very lowest calculation, at least an equal number are depositing their moneys in the savings banks operated by the other banks in the country; so you have at this present moment between five and six hundred thousand of our fellow-countrymen and country women investing their money at three per cent and to the extent of from one hundred and fifty to two hundred million dollars. I may add, parenthetically, that the total amount deposited in the banks of this country, almost all of which is at three per cent if it bears any interest at all, amounts roughly to $560,000,000, apart from the sixty millions invested in the government savings banks. A very great deal of this is a pure provision for old age on the part of these people. I have had occasion to inspect these savings banks returns in a good many quarters, and it is a notable and noteworthy fact that many who put their money in savings banks leave it undisturbed, or go on increasing their deposits during the whole term of their natural life. It is a very frequent case that men who begin to deposit never take out a penny, but leave it there until it is withdrawn by their heirs. Now, I may ask the House and the country, why it is, in a country like Canada, where there are undoubtedly a great many opportunities for profitable investment, that this vast number of people have deposited this immense sum of money at a bare three per cent interest? The answer is plain to my mind. These people deposited it because they require perfect security, and they believe that the government or banks of high standing alone can give this perfect security. There are, besides these, a very considerable number of people, though nothing like as many as those who deposit in savings banks, who have invested their money in enterprises of a more or less dubious character, simply because they have no opportunity of doing better. Until now, these people have had no alternative. They must either put their money in the savings banks at 3 per cent, or take the risk and chances of investing in enterprises as to the solvency of which it is very difficult for them or anybody to form an opinion. Now I say that to all this class, and it is a very large class, this scheme would give an opportunity for making very fair provision for their old age. It may not be accepted, that is quite possible; all the same I think it is the duty of the government to give these people the chance and take pains to explain it to them. and no doubt very much will depend on the way it is presented, but I am of the opinion that if the parties to whom the administration of such a scheme is entrusted were to take one-tenth part as much pains to explain the merits of this measure to the public at large as the ordinary vendors of quack medicines do in advertising their nostrums through the country, that an immense number of people would be found ready to avail themselves of it.

One word as to the duty of the state. I do not believe that the state owes every man a living. But I do believe that the state owes it to every man to see that no legal impediment is put in the way of any man earning a living, and more especially that it is the duty of the state to see to it that no man is prevented by the tyrannical violence of any combination from disposing of his labour on such terms and conditions as he chooses on the one hand and on the other that no trusts or combines be permitted on any pretext to filch from him any part of the wages of his labours. I have said there has been a confusion of ideas on this matter. I have pointed out the complete distinction which exists between annuities and old-age pensions. There has been a confusion also as to the number of men who are likely to be desirous of availing themselves of such a project, and who have the means of doing so. There has been confusion likewise, as I have said, as to the risk of interference with insurance companies, with which this measure at any rate does not interfere at all, and likewise, I think, over the question whether the government was likely to outstep its legitimate functions in providing such a means for those who choose to avail themselves of it, of guarding against penury in their old age. I do not want to lay too much stress—because circumstances differ in different countries—on the fact which has been alluded to by my hon. friend from Kingston, that an annuity which is a purchase, where a man pays his money and obtains an equivalent and nothing more, is a totally different thing from a pension, in this, that the purchase of an annuity strengthens a man's self-reliance and independence, while the gift of a pension in a great many cases tends to debase and demoralize him. One of these proceedings—although it may be temporarily expedient under different conditions from those which prevail in Canada—is at the best a doubtful remedy. The other may well prove a means of preventing grave mischief in the not distant future. The duty of the government is chiefly to help men to help themselves and not to pander to folly and improvidence, much less to penalize thrift and prudence, for the House and the country would do well to remember this, that when you grant large sums of money for the purpose of providing pensions for those who are unable to provide for themselves, a very large proportion of the burden, under any circumstances, must rest on the shoulders of the industrious poor. They, after all, are the parties who contribute the major portion of our revenues under our fiscal system and any unnecessary expenditure, or any additional expenditure must, of necessity, come out of their pockets in a large degree. This measure not only does not conflict with insurance companies who are doing a good work on the whole throughout the country, and with reasonable precautions will continue to do it; but it does not conflict seriously even with those companies who desire to issue annuities. They have a large field left to them. We do not propose, that inalienable annuities should be granted for a larger sum than $400 a year in any one case. Everything outside of that, the ordinary companies are left to deal with, as they choose, and there is this important difference to be observed, that ordinarily speaking a man who purchases an annuity purchases something which he desires should be paid to him from the moment he makes the payment to the annuity company. In this case, the great majority of annuities that might be purchased would be deferred annuities, not coming due for thirty or forty years, which is another very good reason why it would be much easier to induce workmen in particular to purchase them from the state, than to purchase them from any other quarter is, because the most astute financier would hardly feel the same confidence that an insurance or annuity company, however solvent to-day would be equally solvent thirty or forty years hence, as he would that the government under which he lived would be able to redeem its obligations. No doubt a private company has this one advantage—a private company might conceivably invest its money at higher rates, and, possibly, give a little larger annuity. As a matter of fact, I am tolerably certain that no private company of decent standing could afford to give better terms than those I expect would be given under the Bill now before you, and for these very good reasons: The rate of interest which it is suggested should be allowed, will quite equal the rate which can be obtained to-day on first-class securities, and in the next place, as I remarked before, the government could conduct an operation of this kind very cheaply, and has no desire whatever to make one penny of profit out of the transaction; whereas, in the nature of the case, every annuity company must of necessity desire to make its reasonable profit. In order that the House may understand it exactly, I have worked out this scheme at the ages of twenty, twenty-five, thirty and forty, and at a rate of interest varying from three and a half to three and three-quarters per cent. I am prepared to show, and I have the authority of the Insurance Department, besides, that taking the usual rates allowed by insurance companies in good standing, any man who begins at the age of twenty years, can, for a payment of twenty-five cents per week continued up to the age of sixty years, secure for himself an annuity of $120 at that period, or, although his payments would cease at sixty, if he chose to accept a deferred annuity at sixty-five he would receive $200 a year.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think my hon. friend can scarcely be accurate in that calculation.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I should be very pleased to give my hon. friend the calculations.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Twenty-five cents a week is $1 a month—$12 a year.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Thirteen dollars a year to be exact.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Has it been worked out actuariarialy?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I will work it out with the hon. gentleman now, and I think when I have worked it out, he will see that the statement is correct. As I understand him, he thinks my calculations are far too little. $13 a year for forty years equals $520. At three and a half per cent, much more at three and three-quarters per cent in interest in those forty years would bring the amount up to $1,040. Under the terms proposed here, there will of necessity be a reasonable though not an excessive advantage to the annuitant, because we only pay in the case of lapses three per cent ordinary interest, and the result is this, that on the payment of so small an amount as 25 cents a week the government could afford to pay the annuities I have mentioned. The same results would follow if he began at twenty-five years of age, when he would have only thirty-five years to pay, by a payment of thirty cents a week. If he began at thirty years he would have to pay thirty-five cents a week for thirty years. If at thirty-five years, when he would have only to pay for twenty-five years he would require to pay fifty cents a week, and at forty years seventy cents a week. Those are calculations which have been very carefully made by the actuarial department, and there is no doubt whatever about it. Everybody in this House will see that there are very many wage-earners in Canada to whom it would be no inconvenience to make such weekly payments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are the deposits compounded annually or semi-annually in that calculation?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think they are compounded annually, but the difference between the annual and half-yearly compounding at a low rate of interest would be very small. The one that I took as an illustration was the case of a men who, at twenty, chose to avail himself of the system. Three and a half per cent would be sufficient in his case. The man who availed himself of it at forty or later would be allowed a slightly greater rate of interest.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Is anything allowed for the cost of management?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That I think the state, looking at the advantages to the community, might take on its shoulders; but I will allude to that afterwards.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The government could afford to throw in the cost of management.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The cost of management would be very insignificant, for this reason: The state at this present moment has a very large savings bank account. It deals with two hundred thousand separate depositors in its savings banks alone, and the actual cost of management is very small. Now it would be a trifling addition to the cost of management to add whatever number of parties chose to avail themselves of this project to the present savings banks depositors, and, as I said, I think the advantages to the state are so great that it might well allot a very moderate sum of money to the purpose of facilitating the introduction of this scheme. There would, no doubt, for the first three years while introducing it, be need of some grant in aid. That I mentioned in my former remarks on the subject. I may state with respect to old-age pensions, I have here the very latest Bill introduced in the English House of Commons, on the 15th February, of this year. That is a subject which has been debated for from twenty-five to thirty years in England. It has been dealt with by a great many parliamentary committees, among which was one of which His Majesty himself was a member. I do not say what may be evolved hereafter, but up to the present time all these committees, I think, without exception, have reported that no perfectly satisfactory scheme could be recommended. I have pointed out before, and I now repeat, that I do not desire to criticise at all what it may be deemed necessary to do in old countries where there is a large population hovering on the verge of famine. Other expedients may be necessary and experiments may be properly tried which have no place in a country like Canada, and for that reason I shall not refer to the cases of Germany or even of Australasia, because in the case of Germany you deal with a situation which is impossible here. You have compulsory payments for the purpose of providing an annuity, and you have a form of government which, although nominally representative, is in reality to a very great extent an autocracy. Nor do I care for the experiments in Australasia, for two reasons: In that country they have gone pretty far in the direction of a very rank socialism, and what is more, the evidence that has come into my hands in respect to them, go to show that the result of their experiments has been by no means satisfactory, nor is it likely to be satisfactory. Now, in conclusion, let me say this: I repeat that this is a matter which is brought forward absolutely and entirely without reference to parties. It is brought forward for the purpose of laying before the people of Canada, as far as it is in my power to do so, a project which, I think, if well worked out, may be of considerable service to a large and deserving portion of the population. I say, first of all, to this House, and next to the people of Canada, whose servant I am, and whose servant I have been for about four and forty years without any very great profit to myself, not merely is the time opportune; not merely is a good chance presented to us now, but I say that it is most singularly opportune. There is a combination of circumstances now existing in Canada which gives us a chance of devising and placing on our statute-book and putting into effect a scheme of this sort such as, in my experience, has not occurred at any time within the last fifty years or, I believe, since Canada became a country at all. I think the House, as a whole will agree with me that at this time Canada is entering on a period of very great industrial development. For a long time to come there is a strong probability that the rate of wages, and the rate of interest, which is an important point, will continue at a very high figure throughout Canada. It is quite possible, nay, it is quite probable that there may be occasional setbacks and depressions; but so far as it is possible for any one to make a forecast, for the next twenty-five or thirty years I believe there are many circumstances which tend to show that it is extremely probable that during a whole generation from the present date and until our western territory fills up, Canada will be an extraordinary prosperous country. Our position here to-day is very closely analogous to the condition of things which prevailed in the United States from 1840 to 1860, when they were settling up a very great portion of the country they now possess. That period, as I believe, as every political economist in the United States has admitted, was perhaps the most prosperous portion of American fiscal history. It was a period during which there was an enormous expansion, and a much better distribution of wealth, much more general comfort, and lastly much less individual poverty than exists in the United States to-day. Unfortunately, the bright prospects that then existed in the United States were soon overclouded. They had in the first place what all of us will agree in regarding as a desolating civil war, and they had also in what all will not agree in regarding as a still greater misfortune, a desolating tariff.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, we will not agree to that.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am not going to raise the question of the tariff either, but I will simply say this, that in my judgment—and I have bestowed a good deal of attention on the subject whether it has been well directed or not—the United States did themselves a great injury by the introduction of their tariff. It was responsible for many evils, and notably because it divided labour and capital into two hostile camps, and has brought about, as all observers know, a state of things in the United States which borders on a potential, industrial war breaking out very often on very flimsy pretexts, and which in many respects threatens the prosperity of that country quite as much as do the European armaments which have done so much to hamper the progress of the peoples of that continent, a condition greatly to be deplored and which, I may add, threatens their liberty too. Now I do not say that such a scheme as this will prevent these consequences, but I say it will go a good way to lessen them. Moreover, I say that this is suitable in a high degree to the temper of our people. I am not concerned as to how such a scheme would answer elsewhere. I say Canada is able to make her own precedents, and if she sets an example in this case, she will only do what she has done before on other occasions and successfully. No true Canadian, and no honest workman that I know of, would desire to be dependent on charity whether of the state or an individual if only opportunity is given him to make provision for himself by his own energy and self-denial. It is our happy position that in Canada there is as yet no submerged tenth, and I may add it will be our own fault as a nation if for many a day and many a generation a submerged tenth should come into existence in Canada.

I say, God forbid that such a thing should ever happen; and I say moreover that this measure would contribute both directly and indirectly if the people chose to avail themselves of it, to prevent any such contingency, and it is infinitely better for us to spend, if need be, a few thousands a year in order to encourage thrift and self-respect amongst our people, than perhaps, as they may have to do in England, to waste millions which at best will pauperize a great many. I may add too, that it is well even for us to remember that in old times—we have the lessons of history to teach us—the Roman people never lost their liberty till the people were fed by the state. I have no sympathy with the class of maudlin philanthrophists who would reward the idle sensualist at the expense of the honest, frugal and industrious. And if hon. gentlemen think that this is too hard a saying I may remind them that there was once a great saint who was also a great philosopher who lived about 2,000 years ago and who has left his views on the subject on record in the memorable saying, 'If a man will not work neither let him eat.' This is sound sense and sound political economy as well, and to this doctrine I, for my part, do most heartily subscribe. Lastly, I desire to point out that this is no charitable proposition in any shape or way. The state and the citizen under this will alike cooperate. The state will supply the machinery and the security which the state alone can supply. The citizens will do the rest.

It is a true and proper commercial arrangement. If it succeeds, both parties, both the state and citizen, will benefit and benefit largely. The cost of the experiment, which my hon. friend opposite alluded to, is insignificant. As far as I can calculate it is probable that the cost of it might about equal the cost of one field-gun in a field-battery at the very latest prices that we have had to pay for that luxury. We have come to the parting of the ways. This question will have to be handled, and it will be handled doubtless whether we like it or not, in the space of a moderate period of time. We may treat it as demagogues will treat it, or treat it as statesmen will treat it, and at least and at lowest—and with that I will leave the matter in the opinion of my friends here—at least and lowest this project can by no possibility involve any harm except the loss of a very small amount of money. Let us give the people the choice, and let the people choose. If it fails, Canada will be no poorer. If it succeeds, Canada will be very much the richer, and it will be richer in more important things than money. We will have the satisfaction of knowing that a difficult problem has been solved, that a long step has been made forward, and that a valuable educational lesson has been taught. It will strengthen self-reliance; it will strengthen independence; it will encourage and reward forethought and self-denial; and these, in my judgment, are qualities which are indispensable to the formation of any strong national character. Without these, neither men nor nations have achieved permanent greatness, and anything we or the government can do to foster such results at least deserves serious consideration.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I merely desire to suggest that in order that we may the better appreciate the brillant remarks which have been made by the right hon. gentleman, the draft Bill be placed with the minister's speech either at the beginning or the end of his remarks, so that we will be better able to follow them ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I will have pleasure in complying with the request.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There are three terms used with reference to old-age provision. In Germany they call it insurance, although there is a state contribution. In New Zealand a pension, and my hon. friend calls it an annuity. I understand my hon. friend to draw a very clear distinction between an annuity and a pension. I did not quite understand what it was.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The distinction is this : An annuity is a purchase in which a man pays full value for what he gets; a pension, in the nature of the case, is either in whole or in part a gift. That is the distinction I draw.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend did not treat it in the same way two years ago when he provided a pension for retiring ministers. He called it an annuity, although they did not pay a cent.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I did not draw that Bill, but I will call attention to this : There is always a certain contribution to the amount of pension coming to civil servants and to retired officers in banks and so forth, and it arises from the fact that the pensions in those cases are more in the nature of a proportion of their wage than a pension, and the reason why it may be just and wise to give a pension to a returned minister or bank clerk is simply this: These men, as a rule, are placed in circumstances of great responsibility, and where they are required to have great trust reposed in them. It has been held by banks, who are not given to any maudlin philanthropy in these matters, that it is extremely desirable, in the case of their officials, they should do these two things: that they should be retained in their service as long as possible. They do not like to have a constant influx of new men in and out. They wish to keep them there, and by remaining in their service a reasonably long time, they receive a pension, and that is found to be a powerful lever. That is one thing ; another thing is that where men are placed in positions of great trust and responsibility and of great temptation, very often it is not expedient that such men should feel that they may at an hour's notice be thrown on the street and be left totally unprovided for.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is as to the application of the word. It was called annuity in the Bill two years ago, and now it is pension.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think it was a mistake to call it an annuity ; it was a pension. I gave my views on that some year and a half ago, though those views did not, unfortunately, prevail ; and I may say unofficially that I think it is a great pity, and unfair that men who, like my hon. friend opposite, had received from the country a pension as a reward for long and meritorious service, should have been deprived of it.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—I rise to congratulate the hon. gentleman on the brilliancy of his idea, and the brilliancy of the speech he has just delivered, and I suggest that this House should take some steps to have a synopsis of the speeches delivered on this subject and the speech the hon. gentleman delivered to-night printed and distributed throughout the country. If some arrangement could be made to do this, it would be very valuable indeed.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Probably the hon. gentleman could give me some information in regard to one or two matters. Is it the intention to restrict this project to the male sex?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No, any lady who likes may come in.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN.—It was not mentioned in the hon. gentleman's speech.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I said 'persons,' which covers males and females.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN.—Another question which may affect the merits of the Bill is: We have two persons purchasing annuities at the age of twenty-five years. They pay up to the age of sixty, equally. They draw their annuity at the age of sixty. One draws it up to sixty-five and dies; the other lives to the age of ninety and draws it for thirty years. The one drawing for thirty years is an old bachelor, and the one who dies at sixty-five leaves three or four or five children. Do I understand by this Bill that the only benefit he will derive from the annuity fund is during the five years he should have lived after he has ceased to pay into the fund?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes, that would be so.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is going to be a very strong objection.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—We cannot both insure and grant annuities.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Two persons enter and pay into the fund twenty-five cents a week for forty years. Each one pays in to the fund $520, which, at compond interest, gives him $120 a year. If the one lives thirty years after, he is drawing $120 for thirty years from the money deposited with the state, and he has very little or no embarrassment, while the other man if he dies at sixty-five, leaving a widow and family, all the benefit he derives is during the five years he lives after he has ceased to pay.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That is inherent in all annuities.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This is going to be an obstacle in the way. But of course I am in favour of the Bill.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I would suggest that there is a remedy. A man might appropriate enough money to obtain an annuity for his wife under this Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Why not have reciprocity? If she outlives him, continue it until her death.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—We would have to charge very much more.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—These would be matters of detail.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I desire to say that any papers that exist will be brought down.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—'Wage-earner' is a general term. Does that include workmen, clerks and all that class of people?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It would include every citizen of His Majesty who choose to pay—black, brown, yellow or white, male or female.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—If it were possible, I should like to support the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island. Really the circulation of the views expressed by the gentlemen who gave this subject some study, taking into account the importance of the subject itself, would be of great educational value to the public. It would, therefore, be a good idea to print in one forme all the observations which were addressed to the Senate, because while the Senate Debates is supposed to be an embalming place, yet the circulation of a document containing all the speeches on this question would be quite as important as the circulation of the Insurance Commission report.

The motion was agreed to.

DRAFT BILL.

An Act to authorize the issue of Government Annuities for Old Age.

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows :

1. This Act may be cited as the Government Annuities Act, 190 .

2. In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) 'Minister' means the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or such other minister as may be appointed by the Governor in Council to administer this Act ;

(b) 'government annuity' means an annuity issued under the provisions of this Act ;

(c) 'annuitant' means a person in receipt of or entitled to the receipt of a government annuity.

3. His Majesty, represented and acting by the minister, may, from time to time, subject to the provisions of this Act and of any order in council made under the authority of this Act, enter into and enforce any contracts whatever which may be lawfully made by any person, for the sale of annuities, either immediate or deferred, and whether conditioned upon the continuance of the life of the annuitant or for any certain limited term of years ; such annuities shall be chargeable and charged upon, and shall be payable and paid out of the fund by this Act created and designated 'The Government Annuities Fund.'

4. A government annuity shall not be made in favour of any person other than the actual annuitant, nor for any larger amount than four hundred dollars a year ; the total amount payable by way of a government annuity or government annuities to any annuitant shall not exceed four hundred dollars a year; nor shall any government annuity be payable or paid to any annuitant until and unless that annuitant has reached the age of sixty years.

5. The minister may refuse to contract for any government annuity in any case where he is of opinion that there are sufficient grounds for refusing so to do.

6. The property and interest of any annuitant in any contract for a government annuity shall not be transferable, either at law or in equity, and the minister shall not receive or be affected by notice, however given, of any trust affecing any government annuity.

7. The property and interest in any contract for a government annuity of any annuitant shall be exempt from the operation of any law relating to bankruptcy or insolvency, and shall not be seized or levied upon by or under the process of any court whatever.

8. In case of the death of any annuitant before the time at which a government annuity becomes payable to him, all moneys paid by him in consideration of such annuity shall be paid to his heirs or legal representatives, with interest thereon at the rate of three per cent per annum.

2. In such case the provisions of section 7 of this Act shall apply to such moneys.

9. The Governor in Council may, from time to time, make regulations not inconsistent with this Act,—

(1) As to the use of tables approved of from time to time by him for determining the value of government annuities; and for the revocation of all or any of such tables and the use of other tables approved by him.

(2) For the discontinuance, after notice in the 'Canada Gazette,' in such form and manner as he thinks fit, of the sale of government annuities, if he deems it advisable so to do.

(3) For fixing the kinds and classes of government annuities which may be issued, the maximum and minimum limits of the amount thereof, and the amount and mode of the payments to be made therefor.

(4) As to the mode of making and the forms of contracts for government annuities, including all requirements as to applications therefor.

(5) As to the modes of proving the age and identity and the existence or death of persons.

(6) As to the modes of paying sums of money payable under this Act, and the management of the accounts required to be kept.

(7) As to the dealing with and application of unclaimed government annuities.

(8) The doing of everything incidental to the foregoing matters or necessary for the effectual execution and working of this Act and the attainment of the intention and objects thereof.

10. All moneys received under the provisions of this Act on account of the purchase of government annuities shall be paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, under such regulations as the Governor in Council from time to time prescribes in that respect; and a distinct and separate account of all such moneys shall be kept, which account shall be called 'The Government Annuities Fund Account.'

11. Such moneys shall be held and invested by and in the name of three trustees, of whom the Minister of Finance and Receiver General and the Auditor General shall be ex officio two, and the third shall be appointed by the Governor in Council.

2. The said trustees shall, from time to time, invest the moneys standing to the credit of 'The Government Annuities Fund Account,' firstly and by preference, in government securities of Canada and of the several provinces of Canada, and of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and, seconding, in such other securities as are from time to time authorized by the Governor in Council.

12. All moneys payable under this Act as, or on account of, government annuities are hereby made chargeable upon and shall be charged upon the moneys standing to the credit of 'The Government Annuities Fund Account.'

2. If at any time the moneys standing to the credit of 'The Government Annuities Fund Account' are insufficient to discharge the amounts so chargeable, the Auditor General shall, under the warrant of the Governor in Council and on the requisition of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, countersigned by the minister, sanction the issue of the amount of such deficiency out of the consolidated revenue fund to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, to be transferred by him to the credit of 'The Government Annuities Fund Account' for the purpose of paying claims for such amounts.

13. The Minister of Finance and Receiver General shall certify every such deficiency to both Houses of parliament within fourteen days after the issue of such moneys from the consolidated revenue fund, if parliament is then sitting, and if not, within fourteeen days after the commencement of the then next session of parliament.

14. Every person who for his own use, or for the use of any other person, receives any payment, otherwise than as is authorized by law, upon or in respect of any government annuity, after the death of any annuitant on the continuance of whose life such annuity was payable, knowing such annuitant to be dead, and contrary to the true intent and meaning of this Act, shall forfeit to His Majesty, his heirs and successors, treble the amount of all money so received.

15. The minister shall lay before both Houses of parliament, within twenty-one days from the commencement of each session thereof, a return containing a full and clear statement and accounts of all business done in pursuance of this Act during the fiscal year next previous to such session. The statement and accounts shall be in such form and shall contain such information and particulars as are from time to time prescribed by the Governor in Council.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON (in the absence of Hon. Mr. Casgrain) moved concurrence in:

The amendments made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to (Bill 4) An Act in further amendment of the Railway Act, 1903.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I desire to know what would be the effect if this report is concurred in. What is the report? I think the report is the killing of the Bill. The Bill only contains one clause, and the report expunges that clause so that there is nothing at all remaining in the Bill.

The SPEAKER—It means the rejection of the Bill itself, because there is but one clause.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the committee has not the power to amend to that extent. At page 665 Bourinot says:—

> Though a committee has full power to amend, even to the extent of nullifying the provisions of a Bill they cannot insert a clause reversing the principle affirmed by the second reading.

We must not forget that this is a public Bill which has been referred to a standing committee. The principle of the Bill has been accepted by this House, and I do not think that the report of the committee should go to the extent of nullifying the Bill itself. At page 667 Bourinot says:—

> But a committee have no power to extinguish a Bill; that power is retained by the House itself.

At page 669 Bourinot says:—

> A Bill may be ordered to be reprinted as amended if it has been amended or recommitted to a Committee of the Whole or to a select committee.

We send it back to the committee or to a Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Have they amended the Bill?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They have amended the Bill so as to strike out all the words of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—They have only struck out one clause.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If you subtract one from one I do not see what remains.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Have the committee any power to amend?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is all they did.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But they have no right to reverse the principle accepted by the House at the second reading of the Bill. This is a public Bill, and the House has pronounced itself upon it and accepted its principle in passing the second reading, and now the committee comes with a motion that annuls the Bill altogether and destroys the principle that was accepted by this House. The committee thereby reverses the action of this House. I think it should be treated as a Bill that went into Committee of the Whole. It is always lawful and regular for a member to make a motion to have a Bill replaced on the Orders of the Day. I think it is the best way to get out of the difficulty.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think there is nothing to hinder the House from referring the Bill to a Committee of the Whole, and there is something to be said in favour of that scheme. The hon. gentleman has not put the whole matter before the House. The Senate did not, as a matter of fact, affirm the principle of the Bill, when they allowed it to be read a second time and sent it to the Committee on Telegraphs, Railways and Harbours. It was felt it was a case where evidence and argument should be heard on both sides, and that could be done much more conveniently in the committee than in the House; and for the purpose of informing members, this Bill was sent to the Railway Committee, which embraces nearly two-thirds of the members of this House. Then the committee make a report which this House can deal with as it pleases. The House can neither pronounce its opinion at once, or the House can refer the Bill to a Committee of the Whole, or refer the report to a Committee of the Whole. If hon. members are prepared to deal with the motion at once, I do not see why the House should go into committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The fact is that the second reading is an affirmation of the principle of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is usually considered so, but we did not in this case consider the principle.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There was nothing to take the second reading out of the second rule.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If that argument had been advanced thirty years ago, there would be a great deal of force in it. When I first came into parliament the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona was the correct one, that in the case of a private Bill the second reading affirmed or disagreed with the principle of the Bill, but for the last ten or fifteen years that idea has practically been abandoned. I have heard it repeatedly stated in the lower House, by the leaders of both parties, that if a Bill of that character is introduced, or if a Bill of any character is introduced, and is to be referred to a committee in permitting the second reading to take place without discussing its principle. it was distinctly understood that the House is not pledged to the principle of the Bill. That has been the practice of parliamentarians who have paid any attention to these matters for a number of years. I have heard it argued that, this being a public Bill should not be sent to the standing committee, but should have been referred at once to a Committee of the Whole House. That is, no doubt, the practice, but a different course is not only very often suggested, but carried out. The most important Bills come before the Senate that year, and also before the House of Commons, are government Bills. Take for instance the Insolvency Bill—and I do not know that I could instance a more important Bill than that, for which the government is responsible—that has been referred to a special committee, and at other times to a Banking and Commerce Committee as the case may be, in order, as pointed out by the hon. gentleman from Halifax, to enable a general discussion pro and con upon its merits, and then, when it comes back to the House, we affirm the principle, or reject it. I think I am correct as to the practice in the past.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When this Bill was before the House, and read the second time, I made the suggestion to the hon. gentleman in charge of it, knowing there was some difference of opinion regarding referring it to the Railway Committee, for the simple reason that those for and against the Bill could be heard, and that hon. gentlemen could have a better opportunity of getting at the merits of the Bill by that means. It is not quite correct, however, to say that the Bill was not discussed at the second reading. It was very fully discussed. There is only one clause, and the principle is in that clause. The House sent the Bill to the Railway Committee, and it was very fully considered there. I am not going to discuss that, but there was a strong difference of opinion in regard to it. The point that now arises is this: the Railway Committee could scarcely reject the principle of the Bill, seeing that it was a public Bill being sent to them from the House after the second reading, and I do not think it will deprive the House of the right of going into Committee of the Whole on the Bill. I do not think that is possible. We have the right to go into Committee of the Whole at this stage, and if the House sees fit to restore the clause, they have a perfect right to do so. My suggestion, therefore, would be that the Bill be referred back to a Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—This Bill was discussed thoroughly in committee—more so than any other Bill.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I merely wish to say that I think the rule is absolute; that when a public Bill of this kind is voted upon by the House, and a majority vote to send it to the Railway Committee when it comes back to the House, any member can ask that the Bill be submitted to a Committee of the Whole House and that being so, I think it is proper now that the Bill be submitted to a Committee of the Whole House.

The House divided on the amendment, which was lost on the following division:

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (51) An Act to readjust the representation of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan in the House of Commons and to amend the Representation Act.—(Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright.)

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock to-morrow.

SENATE.

OTTAWA, Friday, April 19, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—On the division which took place yesterday, I voted on the question of referring to a committee a Bill which was before the House. I remembered afterwards that I had made some kind of an arrangement with the hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière with regard to that measure, and while the pair which we made was on the principle of the Bill, it might be better had I not voted at all; I would therefore ask the House to permit my name to be withdrawn from the division.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The understanding was that the pair was in regard to the Bill itself.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The vote was not on the Bill, and for my part I voted in favour of the reference on a question of order which was raised; but as far as the Bill is concerned I intend to vote against it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the vote should stand as it was given.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The vote of the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry must stand, but I think the request made by the hon. gentleman from St. John ought to be acceded to.

The SPEAKER—I understood the hon. gentleman not to insist.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood him to say he had paired with his colleague from De Lanaudière, and that he asked to have his name erased from the division. I might say that that is a thing which sometimes occurs, and in such a case the hon. gentleman, on the first opportunity, informs the House that he voted in error and wishes to have his name erased from the division. I do not insist upon this; I am only speaking of the practice, and I think, if the hon. gentleman desires it, his request should be acceded to.

The SPEAKER—I understood the hon. gentleman was not insisting, and, therefore, I did not put the question to the House.

REVISED STATUTES AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (148) An Act to amend schedule A to the Revised Statutes of 1906.

He said: The third volume of the Revised Statutes contains a long list of Acts and parts of Acts that have been repealed. Hon. gentlemen will find them in schedule A in the third volume of the recent revise. An error was committed in inserting the Northwest Territories. It was not intended to repeal those Acts as far as Alberta and Saskatchewan are concerned, and the object of this legislation is to correct that error.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When may we expect a general distribution of the Statutes? It is extremely inconvenient to find the Revised Statutes in force in the absence of the books.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have been distributing them as rapidly as possible.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.—How many have been distributed throughout the Dominion up to the present time?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Probably 5,000 or 6,000. How many copies has my hon. friend received?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—One copy.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of course, each senator is entitled to three copies. The fourth volume was not ready when the other three were issued. It was ready about ten days ago, and should have been sent to every one entitled to it. They are turning them out as rapidly as possible. If any hon. gentleman wants a copy now, I will give special orders to have it sent here, but the volumes seem to be distributed the moment they are brought up here.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not alluding so much to the distribution to members of parliament. There is a manifest lack of statutes here, but I am alluding chiefly to the distribution in the country. I find quite a number of complaints coming in from the legal profession of the difficulty of getting copies of the statutes and ascertaining what the law is.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The law this year follows the law of 1886 under which the Revised Statutes were distributed, only a little more liberally. In one or two instances they are being given to parties not mentioned in the statutes of 1886. They go to members of parliament, officers of the Crown, stipendiary magistrates, police magistrates, clerks of the peace and so on—any person holding an official position, and then the colleges, universities and public libraries. Individuals in the community, lawyers, for instance, were not named in it. They have to buy the statutes and the cost of the four volumes, I think, is $5.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—For the whole four volumes?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is very cheap.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no doubt about that. No profit is desired to be made out of it, but rather a reasonable loss. We want to get the statutes distributed. I shall make inquiry, and will state on Monday how many copies have been issued.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And how many have been sold.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I doubt whether many have been sold, because I have had a number of applications from members of parliament, and have suggested to them to allot one of their own three copies, and in many instances that has been done where they have received appeals for copies. Then judges want extra copies, one for the residence and one for the court house. The most liberal interpretation has been given to the order. My failure is in the direction of liberality in this matter, and I think I have rather exceeded the order in council in the number who have got them, believing that there should be as wide a distribution as is possible.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When may we expect the French version to be issued?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will probably be the 1st of July before it is issued.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Did I understand my hon. friend to say that the three copies to each member of parliament have been distributed?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, only one.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When will we get the other two? I let my own copy pass out of my hands for a certain purpose, and I thought I would get the other in a few days. That was nearly three months ago, and I would like to get the other copy.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will ascertain exactly how it stands by Monday, and let the hon. gentleman know.

TRANSPORTATION BETWEEN LIVERPOOL AND HALIFAX.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. POWER asked:

1. What proportions of the passage money from Liverpool, England, to Winnipeg, Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Sydney, severally, via Halifax, are taken by the steamship company, the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway respectively?

2. On through freight shipped from Liverpool and forwarded via Halifax, to Sydney, Truro, New Glasgow, Moncton and Montreal, severally, what proportions of the charge for transportation go to the steamship company and to the Intercolonial Railway respectively ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I may say to my hon. friend that I am ordering an inquiry on the subject, and he will understand that it is a matter in regard to which I cannot obtain the answers offhand. I will have the answers shortly.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (FFF) An Act respecting juvenile delinquents. He said : The Bill I have now the honour of submitting to the consideration of the Chamber is somewhat different from the legislation which we have had before us this session. Our legislation has chiefly been with regard to the incorporation of companies having mercenary objects. The main idea in the greater part of our legislation has been the incorporation of transportation and industrial companies with the object of accumulating wealth. The Bill now in the hands of hon. gentlemen proposes to deal with another question, one that is not entirely new, still, in my judgment, an important Bill. It is for the betterment of a large class of the community, the children who are surrounded by an environment that leads to evil, and the purpose of the Bill is to lay down such methods of procedure as may at all events minimize the tendency to crime of children who happen to be unfortunately situated either in houses where the examples before them are not of a high order, or other causes that are tending in the direction of evil. The principle of the Bill is probably well explained in the opening paragraph, which reads as follows:

> Whereas it is inexpedient that youthful offenders should be classed or dealt with as ordinary criminals, the welfare of the community demanding that they should on the contrary be guarded against association with crime and criminals, and should be subjected to such wise care, treatment and control as will tend to check their evil tendencies and to strengthen their better instincts.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think we understood from my hon. friend that it was not proposed to pass this Bill this session.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not this session, but it was thought desirable that we should elicit an opinion on the subject. It was not intended at first to introduce it this session. In the beginning of the session I introduced a sort of sister Bill that was to accompany it, but some of my colleagues thought it was premature, and that public opinion was not prepared for the legislation, and so it was deferred. Then it was decided that this Bill should be submitted with a view of eliciting opinions, in order that if the opinions were favourable to its being entertained, it should be introduced at the beginning of next session.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman desires to have the opinion of the Senate on a Bill of this kind, he should postpone it until a time when we shall have a larger attendance. There is nothing at all on the order paper for Monday.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am in the hands of the House. It is more for the purpose of getting it before the public and having it circulated, and the debate can be adjourned at any time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman desires to give an explanation of the Bill and its provisions, and I would suggest that he give instructions to have a large number of copies printed and circulated in order that persons connected with public institutions may consider it during the recess.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the idea. It is not an experiment by any means. The system exists in twenty-four states of the American Union. Some three or four years ago, Sweden sent an expert to the United States to inquire into the workings of the system, and it has since been adopted in Sweden, and in Austria to some extent, and in parts of Italy. Similar legislation prevails in Birmingham, England, which is a pretty advanced town, as hon. gentlemen know. Birmingham has been represented by the Hon. Joseph Chamberlain for a long term of years. This treatment of juvenile offenders is one of the evidences of advancement, and in all cases the result has been perfectly marvellous. Surely any reform that tends to diminish the number of criminals that grow up in the country must be one not only of great interest to the community, but one which will save a large amount of money. It is very much cheaper to reform a child than to keep him in prison as a criminal. That is the fundamental principle of the Bill. I do not know whether any hon. members were present last December when Mrs. Schultz of Philadelphia addressed a body of senators and members in the Railway Committee room of the House of Commons. Any one who heard her description of the working of the law in Philadelphia needs no further argument in support of this Bill. She brought forward the individual cases. She, for a number of years, had been head of the Probation Soviety in that city. She counted by thousands the extraordinary reformations that were made by the methods that are proposed under legislation of this kind. Then, in January last, we had an address from Judge Lindsay of Denver, Colorado, who is known all over the United States with a broad reputation as 'the boys' judge,' or 'the kids' judge.' Simply by the exercise of a sympathetic nature, his personal influence over boys was something almost miraculous. He could do with a boy almost anything he liked. Even when the police would bring up a criminal and say: 'This boy is a very bad boy, he has done wrong and should be in the house of correction,' if the judge decided he ought to go to an industrial school or some reformatory, he would appeal to the boy's sense of honour, and he would order the railway fare to be paid to him to get a ticket to the reformatory. The police would laugh at him and say: 'This boy will spend the money; he will never go there.' Well the judge would say: 'He promised me he would go.' The judge gave us the assurance that he was never deceived. The boy would buy a ticket, under the influence exerted on him, and would go to the reformatory and present himself without a policeman. If a policeman attempted to go he would dodge him. The very fact that a cop, as he is called, was watching a boy, or suspecting a boy, created an aggressive sentiment in the boy's nature, and he resisted, and his whole object was to be even with the policeman. It was an instinct in the character of the boy which, under certain circumstances, ought to be admired. I mention these as illustrations, showing that this Bill is not an experiment. To a limited extent it has been in force in this city under the name of the Children's Aid Society. They have not had the channels for developing it to the extent that this Bill contemplates, but ask the police magistrate or chief constable here and he will tell you it has had a marvellous effect in the city of Ottawa in the limited way it could only be carried on under the laws as they exist to-day. The principle of this Bill was recognized, I may say, as far back as 1894, when the late government placed on the statute-book an Act under the name of 'The arrest, trial and imprisonment of youthful offenders.'

It was then recognized that to imprison boys or girls under sixteen years of age in the ordinary jails of the country was simply to harden them in crime. Unfortunately, at that date, and to a large extent to-day, the opportunities for detaining youthful criminals in detention houses or reformatories did not exist in this country. They do, of course, exist in some centres of population, and grand juries have repeatedly called attention in the past to the unfortunate condition they found in the jails, finding boys chiefly, who had been charged with minor offences, herded with hardened criminals, causing them to graduate in crime, because the evil example was so great that when they came out they were likely to follow the course which had been talked over by the older prisoners in jail. I mention this to show that the idea is not a new one. In 1894 an Act was passed which authorized the Attorney General of New Brunswick to remove any boys then held in the penitentiary of the province to an industrial home, and from time to time that sort of power has been taken to remove youthful offenders from the ordinary jails or penitentaries to reformatories where they exist, otherwise to houses of correction or industrial schools, or some other institution, to get them away from the jail where the evil in their characters was only being hardened and any future chance of reformation was being destroyed. The criminal law was altered in this direction, that justices were authorized to allow juvenile offenders to go on suspended sentence, or on their making compensation, or giving security for their conduct, showing a tendency in the direction that this Bill indicates. Now it may be of use to know what other men think of this. Certainly we will all admit that President Roosevelt takes an interest in subjects that, usually, those holding the position of President of the United States or occupying thrones do not give much thought or attention to. In his recent address to congress I find the following:

> The District of Columbia government should be a model for other municipal governments of the nation in all such matters as supervision of the housing of the poor, the creation of small parts in the district inhabited by the poor, in laws affecting labour, in laws providing for the taking care of children, in truant laws and in providing schools.
>
> In the vital matter of taking care of children much advantage could be gained by a careful study of what has been accomplished in such states as Illinois and Colorado, by the juvenile courts. The work of the juvenile court is really a work of character building. It is now generally recognized that young boys and girls who go wrong should not be treated as criminals, not even necessarily as needing reformation, but rather needing to have their characters formed, and for this end to have them tested and developed by a system of probation.
> Much admirable work has been done in many of our commonwealth by earnest men and women who have made a special study of the needs of those classes of children which furnish the greatest number of juvenile offenders, and therefore the greatest number of adult offenders, and by their aid, and by profiting by the experiences of the different states and cities in these matters, it would be easy to provide a good code for the District of Columbia.

On another occasion he was addressing a Colorado audience, where this law exists, and I will give a short extract from his remarks there:

> Just one word on the future of the country—the country as it will be twenty or thirty or forty years hence. A good deal depends on how we handle business, how we do our great industrial work, how we handle the farms and ranches, but what counts most is the kind of men and women that there are at that time in the country. No nation is safe unless in the average family there are healthy happy children. If their children are not brought up well they are not merely a curse to themselves and their parents, but they mean the ruin of the state in the future.

Now those lines are certainly worthy of very great thought and attention. They indicate what might happen when we have passed away in forty or fifty years from now. It will be a gratification to those of us passing away from this world if we have laid down laws on that line, to make the people better, and if the generation coming after us should be an improved one, and certainly that is possible, this is one of the many avenues through which that end can be accomplished. Now, Judge Lindsay, of whom I spoke of a few minutes ago, who is known as the head of the juvenile court in Denver, Colorado, said on this subject:—

> The juvenile law is a good thing, but there can be little chance for its entirely satisfactory operation unless it be accompanied by the following: a law holding parents and others responsible for delinquency and dependency of children, as such laws now exist in Colorado; a wise child labour law; a good compulsory school law; a detention school in cities in place of the jail; the enforcement of all laws relating to children in one court before one judge, and a corps of paid and efficient officers who are sincere and earnest in their work.

The Bill is on this basis. It is an old saying that poets are born not made. It is just the reverse with children. Children are not born criminals; they are made criminals by the environment by which they happen to be surrounded. Remove the environment and the child grows up an entirely different character. We all know that a wise man said long ago, as the twig is bent the tree is inclined, and so it is with the characters of children. They are plastic, like clay, and can be modelled in any direction. It simply depends on those who have the care and charge of them. One of the features of this Bill is that where parents or guardians neglect to look after their children properly, and set them a bad example, they can be punished. If a drunken father comes home and beats his wife and abuses his children, the officers remove the children to what is called a detention house under the control of what are known as probation officers. Of course, the success of a measure of this kind depends entirely on the people who have the administration of it. A cold, unsympathetic judge, one who did not feel any interest in the children brought before him, a judge who would dispose of them as judges usually do, according to the law of the land, pronouncing formal words of censure and condemning crime, is not the one to reform them. To reform children you must touch them in a tender spot; they must recognize that you have a sympathy for them. Unless a man shows his fellow men that he has an earnest sympathy for them, he cannot expect to win their confidence or support, or win an offender over to live an improved condition of life. There is this peculiarity about it; in every county there should be an individual judge who is chosen for this particular work, a head of the child's juvenile court. There is this happy feature in human nature, and it has been demonstrated in my own experience. Take a judge whose antecedents may not have been in that direction and I venture to say that after holding such a position and finding that he has succeeded in reforming juvenile criminals, he would develop into a sympathetic man, just as Judge Lindsay did, and he would in that way gain a marvellous control over children that could not be appreciated by any one who had not studied human nature to the same extent. Then take the probation officers; they must be persons with exactly similar characteristics, sympathetic in every way, showing the child that it is his own interests they are looking to, his own improvement, his own advancement, and in that way winning his confidence, doing it all by tenderness, and by the exercise of those qualities that necessarily win over and attract those who are being dealt with. Those officers, in the same way as with a judge, grow up, so to speak, to the duties that are imposed on them. They take an interest in the work necessarily, because they feel they are accomplishing something. One does not take an interest in work unless he has results; but if you see marvellous results, more particularly in morality, purity of life and elevation of thought, it is natural for the probation officer to develop a greater interest day by day in the youth brought under his care. I do not know that it is necessary for me to say anything more about it. As I explained in the beginning, the purpose is to bring this question before the people of Canada. It is, in a limited degree, now before them. Great progress has been made in the province of Ontario, where they have laws, as far as they are permitted to exercise them, in the direction I am indicating, and it is under Ontario Statutes that the Children's Aid Societies exist in Toronto, Ottawa and other places. The province of British Columbia has made some progress in this good work, and so has the province of Manitoba, and I think the province of New Brunswick also.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It may also be Nova Scotia, so it is not altogether a new subject. It is new probably to the parliament of Canada. It is necessary that legislation should be had here for parliament, of course, deals with the criminal law, and the criminal law is under the jurisdiction of this parliament. The limited operation it has had outside of the criminal law has been confined to those minor offences that are recognized as penalties and punishments under provincial statutes. With these few observations, I submit the subject for the consideration of this Chamber, in the hope that the opinions may be so freely expressed that we will be warranted in submitting a Bill for actual acceptance in another session.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Do I understand my hon. friend to now move the second reading of the Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I move the second reading.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Does the Bill make any provision for dealing with the parents ? They are the source of the whole evil, and, again, the municipalities do not carry out the law. The police are lax, the municipalities are lax and the parents are really the source of the evil. I know that many parents cannot help it, living in small houses, the father out at work all day and the mother busy in the home, and the children are on the street and get into mischief. The Bill should reach the parents first to get at the source of the evil.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I omitted that element as I did not wish to detain the House too long, but it distinctly provides for cases where the parents or those in charge of the child, are in any way responsible. They are punished. In fact one of the principles on which the Bill is founded, shortly is this—that parents should be held criminally liable for bringing to delinquency any children, &c.

Clause 26 of the Bill is as follows :

Any person who knowingly or wilfully encourages, aids, causes, abets or connives at the commission by a child of a delinquency, or who knowingly or wilfully does any act producing, promoting or contributing to a child's being or becoming a juvenile delinquent, whether or not such person is the parent or guardian of the child, or who, being the parent or guardian of the child and being able to do so, wilfully neglects to do that which would directly tend to prevent a child's being or becoming a juvenile delinquent, or to remove the conditions which render a child a juvenile delinquent, shall be liable on summary conviction before a juvenile court or a justice, to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year, or to both fine and imprisonment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to make a few observations with reference to this Bill, but as the wish of the House was expressed at the moment my hon. friend introduced the Bill, it would probably be meeting that wish if I moved the adjournment of the debate until Monday next.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I may not be here on Monday, and I wish to tell the hon. Secretary of State, as representing the largest judicial district in Canada, containing between five and six hundred thousand souls, he need not consider this Bill one moment too premature. The sooner it goes on our statute-book the better. This Bill affects communities like the city of Montreal and large centres of population, and I know from experience that this Bill, or something in the nature of this Bill, should have been on the statute-book long ago. In fact our police authorities have taken it on themselves to give our youthful delinquents private trials, &c., so that the hon. Secretary of State, as far as the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec are concerned, will find us at one with him. I am only sorry that he has not pressed the Bill to its passage to-day, because it is a measure essentially just and necessary for the social conditions of our youth.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I understand, the hon. gentleman from Calgary has moved the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have simply asked permission to state this much, as I expect to be absent on Monday when the Bill comes up for further consideration.

The SPEAKER—I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he might request that the debate be not closed on Monday, but that it be continued the following day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—My object is simply to assure the hon. Secretary of State that he need have no hesitation in pressing the Bill this session.

The motion was agreed to.

ADULTERATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (127) An Act to amend the Adulteration Act. He said: In moving the second reading of this Bill, I desire to state that the changes are not very material. The first change is to add the word 'public,' in order to cover outside analysts. It was held that the law as it stands did not relate to analysts outside of Ottawa, and, therefore, this clause is amended as I have indicated. The next change takes power to appoint an assistant chief analyst. There is an assistant analyst in Ottawa who makes a great many analyses, but whose evidence cannot be received, because he has not the official standing under the Act, and this is for the purpose of giving the assistant chief analyst power to perform the work done by the analyst at the laboratory, as if it were done by the chief analyst. Mr. McGill has been assistant to the chief analyst for twenty years, but he has had no power whatever, and in the absence of the chief analyst through illness or other cause, there was no head to the branch. In the committee, when we take up the Bill, clause by clause, I shall be glad to make further explanations.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

OTTAWA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

On the Order of the Day being called :

Consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill (AA) An Act to incorporate the Ottawa Life Insurance Company.

Hon. Mr. POWER (in the absence of Hon. Mr. Kerr) moved concurrence in the amendments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To what extent do the amendments go ? One of them changes the capital. The Senate fixed the capital at one million dollars, and, if I am not mistaken, the Commons have reduced it to five hundred thousand, and carried out the idea of the superintendent of insurance; and instead of making seven directors a quorum requiring that a majority of the directors shall be a quorum. I do not want to object, but I wish to point out the difficulty of practically working a company under such an arrangement. In the Bill, they provide for the appointment of eleven directors from the policy-holders and eleven from the shareholders, making a board of twenty-two. So that under this amendment, you would require to have twelve directors present to constitute a quorum. Any one who has had practical experience in the management of such companies will understand at once how difficult it will be to get a quorum to do any business, particularly when half the directors are appointed from among the policy-holders, some of whom may live at a distance from headquarters. If the parties who are interested are satisfied, I do not know that I shall take any objection.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I quite see the difficulty indicated by the hon. senator from Hastings, but, as I understand, the amendments made to this Bill and other insurance Bills have been at the instance of the government Department of Insurance and have been accepted by the promoters of the Bill, so there is really no option.

The motion was agreed to.

GOLD AND SILVER MARKING ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON moved concurrence in the amendment made by the House of Commons to Bill (UU) An Act to amend the Gold and Silver Marking Act.

He said: The amendment made by the Commons to this Bill reads as follows:

Page 1., line 3.—Leave out section 1 and insert the following in lieu thereof:—

'1. Section 2, of Chapter 90 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, respecting the sale and marking of manufactures of gold and silver, is repealed and the following section is substituted therefor:—

'2. This Act shall come into force on the thirteenth day of March, one thousand nine hundred and eight.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. gentleman explain what the effect of the amendment is?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The Bill was sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce in the House of Commons, and several days were spent in discussing it. It was finally moved by Mr. Kemp, of Toronto, and unanimously agreed to—I happened to be present at the time—that they would recommend to the House the postponement of the coming into force of the Act for eight months, so that by next session of parliament an opportunity would be given to both Houses of discussing the merits of the amendment to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman perhaps has not made clear to the House just what was done in the other Chamber. The truth is that the amendment which the hon. gentleman proposes for concurrence simply wipes out the Bill which we passed. Instead of amending what we have done, they provide that the original Act which is now on the statute-book shall not go into operation until next year.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Reading the amendment as it appears on page 716 of the minutes, I should not be disposed to think that that was the effect of it. I have not looked at it critically, but it seems to me they have passed the Bill which was introduced in this House, and have added to that Bill an amendment providing that the Act shall not come into force until the 13th March, 1908.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is only one clause in the Bill, and it strikes that out.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They would seem to have passed the Bill which was sent to them from the Senate, and which amended the ten karat standard, by reducing it to nine.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is clause one the clause which we passed?

Hon. Mr. Power—Yes, that is the only clause in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think it is an excellent amendment. It rejects the sole clause of the Bill and inserts a provision that the original Bill shall be delayed for some little time before coming into operation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The fact of the matter is, that the trade are divided in regard to this measure. Hon. gentlemen may recollect that we had a division in this Chamber as to whether the standard should be nine or ten karats, and it is with the object of ascertaining how it is going to affect the majority. It is probable a compromise may be made between the manufacturers and the importers before another session, and in that way we shall be advised of what is best to be done with it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The message from the House of Commons simply states that they disagree with the Bill which we passed this year, and have postponed the coming into operation of the Bill of last year.

The motion was agreed to on a division.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (145) An Act to amend the Criminal Code.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

WINDING-UP ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (147) An Act to amend the Winding-Up Act.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time on Monday next. He said: The necessity for this measure arises in this way: In the winding-up of the unfortunate York Loan and Savings Company where some thousands of parties would have to be heard and represented, servant girls, labouring men and others who have contributed sums of thirty, forty and fifty dollars, it is absolutely impossible that each one should be represented, and this Bill is to appoint some one to represent each class. For instance, unmarried women, who were large contributors in the aggregate.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should think the court could have done that without this legislation. Such a thing has been done in other cases.

The motion was agreed to.

RESIDENTIAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY'S ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (161) An Act to amend the Act of the present session incorporating the Residential Fire Insurance Company.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In the absence of the hon. gentleman from Kingston, who has charge of the Bill, I move that the Bill be read the second time on Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This is a private Bill. I do not know if the Standing Orders Committee have made a report on it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is a Bill making a trifling amendment to the Act passed during the present session.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is a new Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

The SPEAKER—The point can be raised at the second reading. If the point is well taken, there can be no second reading.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose I will be within my rights on Tuesday next?

The SPEAKER—Yes, if the point is well taken.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will not be prevented from taking the point?

The SPEAKER—Oh, no.

PROVINCIAL SUBSIDIES.

A MESSAGE FROM THE COMMONS.

The SPEAKER—I beg to inform the House that I have received a message from the House of Commons requesting:

That the Senate return the address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, humbly representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, to be made by Canada to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their governments and legislatures

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is the message which I foreshadowed yesterday or the day before. It appears it is necessary to make a change in the address that was adopted by the House of Commons, and which is now on the Table of this Chamber. I presume we are all interested in having the address corrected if there is an error in it, as I believe there is. I hope, therefore, the House will not object to the message being answered by returning to the House of Commons the address. I therefore move that the address be returned to the House of Commons, as requested by them in this message.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think we are out of order altogether. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to page 324 of Bourinot. This address is on the order paper for Monday, if I understand aright.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And the hon. Secretary of State wants to make a motion to send back the address to the House of Commons for further consideration, as recited in the message that we received to-day. Well, as the House has pronounced on that question in this way, that it was placed on the Orders of the Day for Monday, I do not think we can take it out of the Orders of the Day before Monday. Bourinot, at page 334 says :

> The rule which requires a strict adherence to the order paper, is absolutely necessary to prevent surprises. So rigorously is it enforced in the imperial parliament that even when it has been admited that a day has been named by mistake and no one has objected to the appointment of an earlier day, the change has not been permitted. It is quite irregular, even if a member proposes to conclude with a motion, to introduce and attempt to debate a subject which stands on the orders for another day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Quite correct. There is no doubt about that. It was with a view of facilitating the time when the House may rise. It is not a controversial question in any sense. We will have it back here much more quickly if we send it down at once, than if we wait till Monday. We should exercise some little wise discretion in yielding to the proposal of the House of Commons, because if we only carry it on Monday, they will not take the matter up till Tuesday, and it may not come here till Wednesday or Thursday, which we all recognize may be rather unfortunate, because it may delay prorogation.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman was notified in advance.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not tell when this would come.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Neither could I.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The House was anxious to take this subject up, and I therefore named Monday. At the same time I stated to the House that there was an error in the address, and that the House of Commons had before it then a message proposing to ask the Senate to return this address. If my hon. friend objects——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not object for the purpose of objecting ; but it is a very serious question as a matter of procedure. We are asked to deprive ourselves of a document in our possession which is placed on the Orders of the Day, and we are asked to do so by a message which gives no reason for the request. I think it is a very grave question. It is a question which we should have time to study. I will not object on Monday, even if the hon. gentleman does not give any notice, but I think it is not fair to have us discuss it immediately without giving us time to study the whole question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the Order of the Day for taking up the consideration of the address on Monday next be discharged, and that the message from the Commons be taken into consideration on Monday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We cannot discharge the orders for Monday.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We will discharge it on Monday. I give the notice now.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the government is very negligent in this matter. As early as Tuesday of last week it came to their knowledge that grave error had crept into the address, and they put off the Order of the Day twice and sent it over till Monday next, without taking any action. It is certainly very undesirable that this address should be held over till the end of the session. I discovered the error on Monday last, and the Manitoba members called the attention of the government to it on Tuesday. On Tuesday it was discussed in the House, and the order was postponed till Monday. The government should have acted earlier.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was intended to send it up yesterday, but with the pressure of work in the other House, it was impossible to reach it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Do I understand that the message which has been sent down is silent as to the reasons why it should be returned ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes; as I read it, it gave no intimation of what the error was.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If hon. gentlemen will look at the position of matters, I think they will see that the request of the House of Commons is not an unreasonable one. They sent us a message, which lies on our table. We have done nothing with it, and now they have found that they had made a mistake of some kind, and they ask us to return the message.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Do they acknowledge they made a mistake ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I assume that. They ask to get back what they sent here. I think the courtesy which should exist between the two Houses should lead us to immediately comply with their request.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not a question of courtesy at all ; it is a question of procedure. I will not object to send it back when it comes up in its order, but I say it cannot be considered to-day. Our Orders of the Day are fixed for Monday, and you cannot discharge to-day the orders for Monday. They can be dealt with on Monday.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Why could we not comply with this request now, and discharge the order on Monday?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Because the rule says that we cannot anticipate a debate on a question which is placed on the Orders of the Day for a future time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is not really anticipating the debate on the address, which is on the Orders of the Day, but postponing it. The authority which the hon. gentleman read was in a case where there was an attempt made to anticipate the discussion; but this is to postpone, and there is this fact: The hon. Secretary of State is in charge of the government business of this House. He has a right to say, with respect to any particular item, 'I do not propose to proceed with that to-day,' or he can say, 'I do not propose to go on with it at all. I propose to abandon it.' The Secretary of State has agreed to postpone this matter till Monday, but, in my humble opinion, there was no substantial reason, under our practice, why what the hon. Secretary of State asks should not be done at once.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not think that a precedent can be found anywhere for asking that an address of this kind be returned. It has been sent to this House, asking our assent to it, and we can either assent to it, or disagree with it, but I have looked in vain over all the parliamentary books that I know of to find any precedent for such an application as this. I do not say at the same time that I would oppose it, but I would suggest to my hon. friends in the government that I think their better course is to begin afresh with a new address in the other House, because this message was not started in the right way. There was no message from the Crown. They will have to begin at the beginning and bring down a new address.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is what we intend to do, but, in order to be consistent, we had better return this address.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They can drop it here. It has been a series of blunders from beginning to end. In the first place, there was no message from the Crown on which to base it, and then resolution (C), of the Interprovincial Conference of 1906, dealing with the census of the four western provinces was left out, and now we are asked to return this address, for which there is no precedent. Let the address be dropped, and let the government begin afresh in the other House.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman raises the question as to there not being a message from the Crown.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am just pointing that out.

The SPEAKER—Because in regard to the other House asking us to return this message, I will draw attention to Bourinot, page 685, which reads as follows:

> Sometimes mistakes are discovered in Bills after they have been sent up to the other House. For instance, Bills may be sent without having passed all their stages, or without certain amendments that had been made therein. When a Bill has been sent up by mistake to the lords without certain amendments, a message has been transmitted to that House asking them to make the necessary amendments, either by adding the requisite provisions, or by expunging certain clauses or parts of clauses.

When a Bill has been sent up without having been read a third time, a message has been received for its return, and in such a case if the House agree to the request, the Bill will be discharged from the orders. On another occasion, when several amendments made by the Commons were not in the Bill sent to the lords, the former have transmitted a correct copy of the Bill. In the session of 1875, a Bill 'to incorporate the Royal Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada,' was amended in the Senate and sent back to the Commons, where the amendments were concurred in. Subsequently the House of Commons was informed by message that the amendment to the title had been inadvertently left out in the copy of the Bill sent back to the Commons, and requesting that leave be given to the proper officer of the Senate to supply the omission. It was accordingly resolved by the House to give the necessary leave, and a message was returned to that effect. Then the omitted amendment was considered and regularly agreed to. This is the ordinary practice now, in the case of an amendment being omitted in any Bill. But when a Bill has been sent to the other House without having passed through all the necessary stages, a message must be sent for the return of the Bill; and when it has been brought back, it will be taken up at its proper stage and passed in due form—the standing orders being suspended when necessary.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am quite well acquainted with the extract the Speaker has read, but it deals with cases where the error occurred in the other House. In this case the error did not occur in the other House. The address, as it comes to us, is exactly the address of which notice was given, for every word of it was spread out on the order paper of the House of Commons, just as it was prepared by the government. It is not a case of error in the other House. If there is an error, it occurred in the Department of Justice, and this quotation from Bourinot has no bearing on the case.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Exception was taken to my moving the return immediately. Then I consented to give notice that I would move to discharge the Order of the Day for Monday, containing a reference to this particular subject, and to move that the address be returned to the House of Commons.

The SPEAKER—Then the message will be taken into consideration on Monday.

The Senate adjourned till three o'clock on Monday next.

SENATE.

OTTAWA, Monday, April 22, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

YUKON TERRITORY ORDINANCES.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg to lay on the Table certain ordinances relating to the miners, which require to be presented to the House before the close of the session.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is of the Yukon territory.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. There are two documents. One is an extract from report of committee of Privy Council, relating to mining in the Yukon territory, and the other is relating to streams and lakes in the Yukon.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C)—The hon. Secretary of State was blocked last session in the House by not having the rules suspended at the proper time, and I would advise him to give notice to suspend all the rules respecting government measures for the remainder of the session. If he does not do that, my hon. friend to my right (Hon. Mr. Landry) will be on his feet to stop the proceedings.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I shall trust to the courtesy of the House, and of my hon. friend in particular, that public business will not be blocked unreasonably, and that we will not be asked to delay any measures unless there are grounds for it and hon. gentlemen desire to more fully inquire into it. I do not like to make a sweeping order. I should rather depend on the courtesy of the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, B.C.) should not forget that he came here late in the session, and it would be to his interest if the legislation were a little prolonged.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There should be courtesy to the House as well as courtesy from the House? It is four weeks since the address with reference to the subsidies passed the House of Commons, and we have still not reached it, and probably will not for days yet, and then we will probably have it brought down when the usher is announcing that His Excellency is at the door. I want to give my hon. friend notice—I have given it once already—that I desire time to discuss that measure.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend will have ample time I am sure. Perhaps he will assist me to-day in having the address returned at once to the Commons. I should like to have had it returned on Friday, but I was rather blocked and hon. gentlemen took advantage of the occasion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman put it off till Monday himself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was obliged to put it off till Monday, because it was objected to.

PASSENGER AND FREIGHT RATES ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. POWER inquired of the Right Honourable the Minister of Trade and Commerce :

1. What proportions of the passage money from Liverpool, England, to Winnipeg, Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Sydney, severally, via Halifax, are taken by the steamship company, the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway respectively ?

2. On through freight shipped from Liverpool and forwarded via Halifax to Sydney, Truro, New Glasgow, Moncton and Montreal, severally, what proportions of the charge for transportation go to the steamship company and to the Intercolonial Railway respectively ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—On best information obtainable, the answer is as follows :

1. Halifax to Winnipeg first class, $41.75. Intercolonial Railway proportion to Montreal, $7.50 ; Canadian Pacific Railway, $34.25. If routed via St. John, Intercolonial Railway proportion, $2.72 ; Canadian Pacific Railway, $39.03. Second class—$19, which applies via St. John only ; Intercolonial Railway proportion, $2 ; Canadian Pacific Railway, $17 ; Halifax to Montreal, first class, $7.50. If routed via St. John, Intercolonial Railway, $2.72 ; Canadian Pacific Railway, $4.78. Second class, $5.50. If routed via St. John, Intercolonial Railway, $2 ; Canadian Pacific Railway, $3.50. Halifax to Quebec, first class, $7.50. Second class, $5.50 via Intercolonial Railway only.

2. In regard to freight rates, there are no through rates quoted ; but the rates charged on all traffic delivered at Halifax to all points on the six classes as covered by classification are at the following rates :

Halifax to Sydney—32, 28, 24, 20, 16, 14 cents per hundred pounds.

To Truro—16, 14, 12, 10, 8, 7 cents per hundred pounds.

To New Glasgow—22, 19, 17, 14, 11, 10 cents per hundred pounds.

To Montreal—26, 23, 20, 18, 15, 13 cents per hundred pounds.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not catch what proportion of passage money was paid to steamship companies.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I just gave the information that was furnished me from the Railway Department. I do not think that part of my hon. friend's question is included in it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is a very important part.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I will try and get the further information.

The notice was allowed to stand.

INCREASED SUBSIDIES TO THE PROVINCES.

MOTION.

The Order of the Day being called :

Consideration of the message from the House of Commons, informing the Senate that thay have passed an address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, humbly representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, to be made by Canada to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their governments and legislatures ; and requesting the Senate to unite with the House of Commons in the said address, by filling up the blank therein with the words 'Senate and.'—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Order of the Day be discharged, and that the following motion be substituted therefor:

That the request sent up from the House of Commons for the return to that House of the address to His Majesty the King on the subject of the increased subsidies to the provinces, be forthwith agreed to and returned to the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When this address received its treatment from the House on Tuesday and subsequently on Friday last, I took the liberty of pointing out to my hon. friend that it would be necessary, in my opinion, for the government to begin afresh in the other Chamber, as I did not think the course being pursued by means of a message and asking for the return of the address was in accordance with parliamentary practice. His hon. the Speaker read to the House at our last meeting from Bourinot, page 685, in relation to the mode of correcting mistakes during the progress of a Bill:

> Sometimes mistakes are discovered in Bills after they have been sent up to the other House. For instance, Bills may be sent without having passed all their stages, or without certain amendments that had been made therein. When a Bill has been sent up by mistake to the lords without certain amendments, a message has been transmitted to that House asking them to make the necessary amendments, either by adding the requisite provisions, or by expunging certain clauses or parts of clauses.
> When a Bill has been sent up without having been read a third time, a message has been received for its return, and in such a case if the House agree to the request, the Bill will be discharged from the orders. On another occasion, when several amendments made by the Commons were not in the Bill sent to the lords, the former have transmitted a correct copy of the Bill. In the session of 1875, a Bill 'to incorporate the Royal Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada,' was amended in the Senate and sent back to the Commons, where the amendments were concurred in. Subsequently the House of Commons was informed by message that the amendment to the title had been inadvertently left out in the copy of the Bill sent back to the Commons, and requesting that leave be given to the proper officer of the Senate to supply the omission.

On page 475 of the 10th edition of May, a similar rule is to be found. I have taken the footnotes in May and Bourinot which refer to 18 cases in the British parliament and in the parliament of Canada, regarding messages which passed between the two Houses for the purpose of correcting mistakes and I find that not one of these refers to a situation such as this, where no mistake is alleged in the message. They have all reference to cases where a mistake has been made in the House sending a message, and, consequently, they ask that it may be sent back to rectify such mistake, and the message has set forth in all cases the fact of the error or mistake being made, but in this case they simply ask us to return a Bill for further consideration.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But this is not a Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, it is an address, and the difficulty is as great as in the case of a Bill, because when one House gives its assent to an address it performs its part, and it only remained for the other House to perform its part, so I think the difficulty is practically the same. I might point to a case that occurred in England, when Lord John Russell was in the House of Commons where an address was agreed to by a thin House, of which the majority of the House did not approve, and difficulty was felt in moving another address. They did not do it, but Lord John Russell recommended that the House should change its rules so as to take the same care in dealing with an address as in the case of a Bill, so that it could be considered at several stages; his suggestion was that addresses should be sent to a committee in order to prevent difficulty of that kind occurring. With regard to Bills, we know the parliamentary law is, that when a Bill has been assented to by one House and sent to the other, if it is assented to, that ends it and the Bill becomes law on receiving the assent of His Majesty. If an amendment is made in the House to which the Bill is sent, and it is returned to the House in which it originated, that House can only deal with the amendments made or consequential amendments rendered necessary in order to work the amendments into the Bill without producing incongruities and inconsistencies.

All this points to the fact that when the judgment of one Chamber is passed on a measure, that Chamber is done with it unless the other House deals with it and amends it. Hon. gentlemen are aware of the rule of parliament, that the judgment of the House must stand, and this decision is found in volume one of the English House of Commons Journals, which reads this way:—

> That a question being once made and carried in the affirmative or negative cannot be questioned, but must stand as a judgment of the House.

And so firm has that been held that on two occasions, in order to get over that difficulty, the parliament of England was prorogued to admit of another Bill being introduced. I have gone over these eighteen cases of messages referred to, but I will not take up the time of the House by reading them. They are all referred to in footnotes in Bourinot, page 685, and May, page 475, I have all those passages marked, and I find there is not in any one of these cases a situation similar to that which we now find blocking us, where no mistake is alleged in the message. In all these cases errors occurred in the House which caused the application to have the measure returned. These errors were alleged, they were pointed to, and the return of the Bills was asked for for the purpose of correcting what were plain and manifest errors. In the present case, no reason at all has been given; we are simply requested to send back this message for further consideration by the House of Commons. I have failed—perhaps other hon. gentlemen may be more successful—to find a precedent in British parliamentary practice or in the Canadian practice, for what we are now asked to do. I have several cases under my hand in the old parliament of Canada, and two cases occurred since these editions of Bourinot have come out. one in this House and one in the House of Commons ; in each case the mistake was rectified. That is common and and can be done, and is administered under the rules of both Houses of parliament ; but it is not alleged that any mistake had occurred in this case. It is not for the purpose of correcting an error, but for the purpose of allowing the other House to take the address into what they call 'Further consideration.' I have looked over this address very carefully, and I do not think that it is free from errors. There are very serious errors in it, but I do not think that they are errors that occurred in the House of Commons, and that is a necessary requirement in order to bring the matter within the parliamentary rule, as quoted from Bourinot, page 685, I have taken the address, and looking it over I find several cases of what I consider to be very plain and palpable errors.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But as I said before, they did not occur in the House of Commons. I find that this address is rather remarkable for the omission of a resolution agreed to at the conference of 1906. I find on page 4 of the report of that conference the following resolution :

> C. The population as ascertained by the last decennial census to govern, except as to British Columbia, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and as to these four provinces the population to be taken to be that upon which under the respective statutes in that behalf, the annual payments now made to them respectively by the Dominion are fixed, until the actual population by the census ascertained to be greater, and thereafter the actual population so ascertained to govern.

I find that resolution is as passed by the conference which met in November last, but I find that it is not contained in the address, but that was not a mistake of the House of Commons. The mistake was on the part of the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no mistake there.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend says there is no mistake there. I have no doubt but my hon. friend is sincere when he says so, but it only shows that he has not examined this question or he would not make that statement. He simply does not know or he would not make that statement. This resolution was one of the resolutions of the conference, and it has to be put in this address, and it will have to be put into it somewhere before it will be an address such as the parliament of Canada can pass, and my hon. friend says that no mistake was made. A mistake was made, and let me tell my hon. friend that this clause that I have read will have to find its place in this address in some form, before it can pass by the two Houses of parliament. Now I point to that as an undoubted mistake of the House of Commons. It was a mistake that was made in the Bill where it originated, and before it reached the House of Commons. I know that, because the address was spread out on the order paper, and this resolution 'C' was not in the notice, and consequently did not find its way into the address. My hon. friend, the Secretary of State, says that no mistake has been made. I presume he is defending the House of Commons, but I was not laying the charge against the House of Commons, but against the Department of Justice and the government. My hon. friend says that no mistake was made in leaving out 'C.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I said so.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Let me tell the hon. gentleman that without such provision the western provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta will all have to fall back on the decennial census of 1901 in the matter of computing, and in getting their per capita allowance for the added section 'd' is not adequate. That is my contention, and that without that, resolution or words equivalent to it, to legalize the quinquennial census held in the western provinces. The address will not be complete, the provincial conference. Section A of the resolutions reads as follows :

Instead of the amounts now paid, the sums hereafter shall be payable yearly by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their governments and legislatures to be according to population and as follows :

Then follows a scale of annual allowances. I would ask my hon. friend since he was so ready to deny a few minutes ago that a mistake had been made in omitting a resolution 61—will he please inform me or inform the House how these allowances in section A, are to be computed? On the decennial census or on the quinquennial census? It says the allowances shall be based on population, but it does not say how that population is to be ascertained. In three of the western provinces, census are taken quinquennially, and provision is made that an estimate shall be made in the middle of each quinquennial period, practically a census for every two years and a half. There is no provision as to how these allowances are to be computed, whether by periods of two years and a half, or by the decennial census. I submit that section A is also wrong, but that is not a mistake that occurred in the House of Commons. I find it on the notice paper as it was given by the Premier. It was a mistake that belonged to the Bill before its introduction. Hon. gentlemen will now understand that I am trying to help the government out, and to ascertain whether any error occurred in the House of Commons or not, which would warrant the sending back of the address to that Chamber. But as this was not a mistake of the Commons, the message does not allege any error Now I turn to another resolution which forms part of the address. It is section D. The Premier also gave notice of section D, and it became part of the Address, and it reads:

Nothing herein contained shall in any way supersede or affect the terms special to any particular province upon which such province became part of the Dominion of Canada or the right of any province to payment of any special grant heretofore made by the parliament of Canada to any province for any special purpose in such grant expressed.

I have already pointed out that section A provides that instead of the amounts now paid to the provinces for government and legislation, a certain scale of payments should be made hereafter. Then we find section D saying : 'Nothing herein contained should in any way supersede or affect the terms special to any particular province upon which such province became part of the Dominion.' To illustrate, British Columbia came into the Dominion with $35,000 a year for legislation and government. Under section A of this address British Columbia will be entitled to $150,000 on the census of 1901. But section D says : 'Nothing herein contained shall in any way affect the terms special to any particular province.' I will read the terms special given to British Columbia :

The following sum shall be paid by Canada to British Columbia for the support of its government and legislature, to wit, an annual subsidy of $35,000.

That is what is in the special terms, provided, and then the address provides that on the present basis of population, 178,000, British Columbia shall receive $150,000; but it goes further and says in section D that nothing in this section shall supersede or affect the terms special under which any province entered the Dominion. This is no doubt a very flagrant error.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt. Does he not think he is travelling outside of the question ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman is discussing an address which came up several days ago.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The question is whether we should, as an act of courtesy, return that address in accordance with the request.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is exactly the question. I am discussing that very point and my contention is that parliamentary practice is all against a message of this kind being received, unless reasons are assigned, unless an error is assigned as having occurred in the House of Commons during the progress of this address in that House. I contend that is the rule, and I can find no exception. Now I am trying to help the government out, to see whether I can find whether an error——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Whether any error did occur in the House of Commons, I find errors; but I cannot see that they occurred in the House of Commons. If hon. gentlemen can show these are errors that occurred in the House of Commons after the Bill was introduced there, why they will have made a point, but I am anticipating an argument from these gentlemen that the errors did occur in the Commons, and I am trying to show, as I would not perhaps have an opportunity of taking the floor again, that there are abundant errors and very serious errors in the address, but they did not arise in the House of Commons, and therefore I hold that my observations are entirely directed to the motion that we should return this address. A message has been received asking us to return the address, but it does not allege a reason. The reason, to be effectual, would be that some mistake had occurred during the progress of the address through the House of Commons. I have not only shown that the address does not contain that reason or any reason, which I think is fatal to its being dealt with by this House, but I go further and claim that while errors did occur, that they were not errors as far as I can see, that occurred during the progress of the address through the House of Commons. They belonged to the address as introduced, they belonged to the notice. It went through without any change. I wish to raise that point of order that we cannot entertain this address, because it is not backed by reasons. It does not give any reason such as could be given. I could, if I were disposed, read from some seventeen or eighteen volumes of the journals of the House of Commons of England, but I do not want to take up the time of the House, as I have already given the references that are to be found on page 685 of Bourinot and 475 of May, and any hon. gentleman who wishes to investigate the matter can do it for himself. My point of order is that this address is not according to precedent, and cannot be entertained, because no reason is assigned for the return except for the purpose of reconsideration which the House of Commons cannot do at this stage, and as no reason is given, and no errors alleged, we cannot accede to this request.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not concur with the conclusions drawn by my hon. friend that the authorities he quoted in any way sustain the argument he used, and the argument itself is contradicted by the observations he has made over and over again, that there were errors in this address; but he went on to prove there were errors and insisted on it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But they were not errors that occurred in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman not see that any document can come before the House, even papers which may be prepared by some individual outside, and when there is an error in them there is no objection to sending them back. It is absolutely futile that because they were prepared by a draughtsman in the Justice Department or anybody else, if the House of Commons adopted them, and the paper came up here with an error, or what the hon. gentleman regarded as an error, that it is not to be returned. I admit that to some extent there was an error, and the natural process then was for the House of Commons to request us to return the documents. The hon. gentleman discussed the error ten days ago when the papers came up here first. It is idle, therefore, to say we are in ignorance of the cause for which the request for the return of the papers is made. I think it was discourteous to the House of Commons, not allowing them to go back forthwith. I yielded the point, and gave notice for a certain day. I gave that notice and I am prepared to abide by the decision of the House in regard to that notice.

The SPEAKER—I have had occasion to examine the point since it was raised last week. I find no rule on this matter governing the form that a message must take which will go from one House to the other, nor have I found any precedent indicating that such a message must, of necessity, give detailed reasons. I have therefore reached the conclusion that it is for the Senate to deal with the message as put before it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should like to have this decision placed on the Journals.

The SPEAKER—I will control the decision.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to raise another point of order in connection with this subject. Rule 70 of this House provides :

> The Senate will not proceed upon a Bill appropriating public money, that shall not, within the knowledge of the Senate, have been recommended by the King's representative.

We are asked to take a step with regard to this address. We are asked to take a proceeding without this information.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are asked to give it up.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are asked to discharge it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is a proceeding.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are not asked to proceed ; we are asked to recede.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend says it is not proceeding. If we were rescinding this address then my hon. friend would be right, but we are not proceeding in that way. We are taking what my hon. friend thinks is the best course of carrying it into effect, and that must assuredly be a proceeding. Surely my hon. friend will not claim that this action he is taking is for the purpose of killing the address ? It must be a proceeding. It might be contended—and as I am on my feet I want to cover that point—that this is not a question which requires the approval of the Governor General. I turn to the Speaker's decision, page 132, and there I find that a question arose in the parliament of Canada in the year 1871 with reference to an address. It is almost entirely on all fours with the one which is now before us. I will not read the address in full, but it was to the Crown, asking that the $10,500,000 of debt resting on the province of upper and lower Canada at confederation, and which was not assumed at confederation, should be assumed by the Dominion of Canada in 1871, as was done later, and that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick should be compensated. Sir George Cartier raised the point of order, that the address could not be proceeded with except on a message from the Crown. That was contested, and Speaker Cockburn rendered this decision :

> The motion proposes that an address be presented to Her Majesty, praying her to recommend that the British North America Act of 1867, be amended so that the public debenture of the Dominion be increased, and that compensation be made to the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.
> In my opinion this motion cannot be entertained, it being in contravention of the 54th section of the Imperial Act that this House shall not adopt any vote, resolution, address or Bill for any purpose that has not been first recommended by message of the Governor General.
>
> The contention is, that the proposed appropriation being beyond the power of the parliament of Canada, this provision of the statute cannot therefore apply.
>
> In its literal construction it does apply to the motion and certainly it seems to me to the full as necessary in a constitutional sense to interpose the check of a message from His Excellency under the responsibility of his ministerial advisers before adopting an address which may be followed by legislation, imposing a burden on the people by a parliament and ministers, owing to no responsibility, as in the case of a Bill or motion or the appropriation of money within our direct control.
> For these reasons, the motion, in my opinion is not in order.

The decision is therefore on record by Speaker Cockburn, and has never been reversed, that an address of this kind is a measure of supply and cannot be entertained or proceeded with unless it has received the sanction of the Crown ; and then we have our Senate rule 70 which prevents us from proceeding with a measure appropriating public money that shall not, within the knowledge of the Senate, have been recommended by the King's representative. We have no right to take any action on this address until we have this information. I submit that the action which is being taken is a proceeding for the purpose, as my hon.

friend has told us, of expediting the address, and that is certainly a proceeding. I ask for a ruling of the Chair on the point.

The SPEAKER—I do not believe the point of order is well taken, because the motion is to comply with a request from the House of Commons to return a message. I will not go into the merits of the point of order that the hon. gentleman has raised, because I think that it could only be raised and passed upon when there is any forward step towards the passing of the Bill or message ; but this is a receding step just now that the Senate is asked to take, and for that reason I do not think the point of order is well taken.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The ruling of course will be taken down on the Journals.

The motion was agreed to.

THE RESOURCES OF NORTHERN CANADA.

MOTION.

The Order of the Day being called :

Consideration of the third report of the select committee appointed to inquire on the value of that part of the Dominion lying north of the Saskatchewan Watershed, east of the Rocky Mountains, west and east of the Hudson's bay, comprising the north parts of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and the Mackenzie Territory, its extent of navigable waters, rivers, lakes and sea coast, and Ungava and Keewatin Territories.—(Hon Mr. Davis.)

Hon. Mr. COFFEY, in the absence of Mon. Mr. Davis, moved that the report be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

REPRESENTATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved the second reading of Bill (51) An Act to readjust the Representation of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta in the House of Commons, and to amend the Representation Act.

He said:—This is a measure which practically explains itself. As hon. gentlemen are aware, under a recent quinquennial census these two provinces are entitled to a considerable addition to their representation, and, accordingly, provision is made for bestowing the requisite representation upon them. I cannot pretend to be well versed in the division that is being made, but I am advised by the hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill in the House of Commons that this was the result of a committee on which both sides were represented and that it was passed unanimously. I noticed that there was no division in the House of Commons and I take it for granted, therefore, that we may assume that reasonable justice has been done.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS' BILL.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading (Bill FFF) An Act respecting Juvenile Delinquents.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have to express some regret that my hon. friend the leader of the House who introduced this Bill has intimated the intention of the government not to proceed with it during the present session. The fact of presenting it for the consideration of parliament, I take to be tantamount to saying that the legislation is necessary. This is a Bill that comes peculiarly within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada. I need not say to the hon. gentleman that parliament is charged with providing the necessary legislation incident to the criminal law of Canada. This Bill is in the right direction, and in my judgment should have been placed on the statute-book years ago. Why it should be withdrawn at this stage is a difficult problem to determine. The government has assumed the responsibility for the Bill and I am satisfied from what consideration parliament has given to the measure that there can be only one conclusion as to its absolute necessity. There is this peculiarity about legislation dealing with criminal law in Canada, that while we probably consider we are very much in advance of other nations in this matter, the fact is no country claiming a reputation for progressive thought and moral reform is so far behind in its legislation on criminal law, and especially that branch of it dealt with in this Bill. No country should be so far in the vanguard on questions of this kind as Canada should be. Our climatic and territorial conditions, our population and the newness of our conditions; the absence from our social organization of those festering sores which afflict the social conditions of many parts of Europe, and even of this continent, is a reason why the strong, robust, wholesome thought which prevails in our country should long ago have inspired legislation of this character. It may possibly be a tribute to the progress of Canada, in one sense, that we are too much concerned in legislation looking to the material prosperity and development of the Dominion; but, certainly, our remissness in advanced criminal legislation is a reflection upon the character of public life in Canada. Very little if any attention has been given to that legislation which looks to the building up and the formation of those sociological conditions which should go to make a people great. We are busy in legislating on transportation, tariff and fiscal matters; busy looking after the development of our natural resources, and every other subject, in fact, except that which deals with the submerged part of our criminal population, and which properly comes within the jurisdiction of the federal parliament. There is scarcely a department of the government but has its scientists and experts and staff of professional advisers to deal by the most scientific methods with all animate and inanimate subjects, and yet in the Department of Justice, the department peculiarly charged with legislating as to the criminal law, there is not an officer to my knowledge charged with the very important duty of working out those great sociological and economic questions affecting the criminal classes of the community. I have looked in vain throughout the report of the Department of Justice to ascertain if any attention is given to the development of subjects of this character, but cannot find that any special attention is given to the science of criminology. When we take into consideration that crime is on the increase and that we are paying millions of dollars every year for the administration of our criminal law and maintenance of penitentiaries and prisons, one would fancy that the subject would receive more consideration than the measure which is now before us indicates. New conditions are rising daily owing to the progressive policy of the government, and incident to the development of the country that call into being those crimes that follow in the march of national growth. For many years we have devoted ourselves to developing the industrial life of the country and building up large centres of population. We are spending nearly a million dollars a year to bring into the country people from all parts of the four continents, but incident to the working out of our great problems must necessarily rise the question of criminology. While we are working out the larger questions, we are absolutely ignoring the one which will more permanently affect social life in Canada than any other for generations to come. I said a moment ago that crime was on the increase; I wish to read some statistics which will show the importance and necessity of giving greater attention to this question than it has hitherto received. I find in a book on juvenile offenders published by W. Douglas Morrison, who is regarded as one of the best authorities on criminology in England, that he very forcibly points out the rapid growth of crime and the necessity of giving attention, from a very much more scientific standpoint than has hitherto been done, to grappling with this very important problem. He says:

1. It is perfectly well known to every serious student of criminal questions, both at home and abroad, that the proportion of habitual criminals in the criminal population is steadily on the increase and was never so high as it is now. In almost every official document dealing with penal administration this unsatisfactory state of things is both admitted and deplored. In France, Germany and Italy the proportion of old offenders who come before the criminal courts is constantly growing, while in England matters are just as bad. This is made perfectly clear by the report of the Committee on the Identification of Habitual Criminals. From a table compiled for the use of that committee it appeared that in Lancashire, the West Riding of Yorkshire, and Staffordshire about 70 per cent of the prisoners tried were known to have been previously convicted; in Liverpool, Birmingham and Bradford, 79 per cent; and in Norfolk and Suffolk 61 per cent.

7. He can be kept in prisons for four or five hundred thousand pounds a year; when at liberty he costs in police protection alone between four and five millions.

In the present volume I have endeavoured to show how habitual crime may be diminished by better methods of dealing with juvenile offenders. A wide experience of the criminal population convinces me that the habitual offender, the man who takes to crime as a trade, as a rule begins young. Unless a man has acquired criminal habits in early life it is comparatively seldom that he degenerates into an habitual criminal.

8. But in the main they constitute two distinct divisions of the criminal population, and it is not often that the occasional criminal degenerates into the habitual criminal unless he acquires criminal habits in early youth. As a rule the fatal transition from the one class to the other takes place during the period of immaturity. It follows from these facts that one of the most effective methods of dealing with habitual crime is to prevent the juvenile offender from acquiring confirmed criminal habits.

How is this to be accomplished? This question can only be answered after an inquiry into conditions which produce the juvenile delinquent. Crime among the juvenile population is produced by certain conditions, and all attempts at dealing with it is only groping in the dark until we know what these conditions are.

In accordance with this view I have devoted the first part of the present volume to an examination of the conditions which produce the juvenile offender. In a preliminary survey of the extent of juvenile crime among civilized communities, I have pointed out that the problem of juvenile crime is not diminishing in magnitude. Whether we look at home or abroad, whether we consult the criminal returns of the old world or the new, we invariably find juvenile criminality exhibiting a distinct tendency to increase.

What I desire to point out is this, that, from the statistics which I shall shortly present to the House, it is quite apparent that a great majority of criminals are practically made while they are in their teens. The majority of criminals in our penitentiaries and our prisons are between twenty and twenty-four years of age, at the most between twenty and thirty; and the deduction clearly is, that they must have acquired criminal habits at an earlier period even than twenty years of age. If crime is growing in a very much greater ratio than the population, as I shall be prepared to show it is, then it becomes absolutely imperative on the government to give the closest attention to the working out of this very important problem. The government of Canada publishes a year-book. The latest issue is for 1905, and from this I obtain information clearly establishing the very rapid growth of crime in the community. This I must say is confirmed by experience in European countries as well as in the United States. The table in the government year-book deals with convictions from 1900 to 1904, a period of four years. Convictions for indictable offences in the Dominion in 1900 were 5,768, and in 1904 they had increased to 6,754, an increase of 17 per cent. Hon. gentlemen will bear in mind that these are not summary convictions, but the more serious classes of offences. During the same period the summary convictions, which will represent the lesser class of offences, increased from 35,885 in 1900 to 48,192 in 1904, an increase of 34 per cent in the four years. In all Canada, during the same period, the convictions and sentences for all offences in 1900 were 41,653 and in 1904, they were 54,946, an increase of 33 per cent during those four years. To impress upon hon. gentlemen the necessity of legislation such as we have before us, and the remissness not only of this government but of the late government in not placing more advanced legislation on the statute-books, permit me to direct your attention to the growth of juvenile offences in the period from 1885 to 1904. During those years there were convicted for indictable offences in Canada, children under sixteen years, 14,231, and over sixteen and under twenty-one years of age, 16,916, a total of children—because you cannot call them anything else—convicted 31,147. We apparently have no tables for the summary offences which were punished during that period. The majority of criminals, according to the criminology series published by T. Fisher Unwin, in England, are between twenty-one and twenty-four years of age, and the same remark applies to crime in Canada. Hon. gentlemen will consider the serious character of the offences which result in a young man being placed in a penitentiary; yet in 1901 there were in the five or six penitentiaries in Canada 147 convicts under twenty years of age, while in 1905 the number was 169, an increase of 16 per cent in that period. I find according to this table, that the majority, practically two-thirds of our criminals in the Canadian penitentiaries, are under thirty years of age. There is another consideration which might be pointed out and which will disturb perhaps the idea which has established itself in many minds, and that is that the majority of crimes is due to intemperance. I find that according to the statistics furnished us from the penitentiaries in Canada in 1905.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Can the hon. gentleman tell us whether they trace that cause to the greater offences, or to the smaller offences?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Well it would be rather difficult for me to point that out. The growth of crime is evolutionary, so to speak.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The hon. gentleman knows a great many of the smaller offences are committed while people are under the influence of liquor.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am bound to point out these figures. I find, according to the penitentiary statistics up to 1905, dealing with the social habits of convicts, that in our penitentiaries we had 197 abstainers, 654 temperate convicts——

Hon. Mr. POWER—Moderate drinkers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And 516 intemperate ones, so that a little more than a third were classed as intemperate. That is rather beside the question. I simply mention this fact. Now then, as to those statistics being confirmed by the tables obtainable from other nations, I might point out that this same growth of crime is quite as observable in the old countries of Europe as well as in the United States. Mr. Morrison, in his work on criminology, states:

> Acording to the United States census of 1890 the number of convicts in penitentiaries has increased to the extent of twenty-seven per cent in ten years, and the number of prisoners in county jails has increased nearly fifty-four per cent. On the other hand, the population of the American union has only increased about twenty-five per cent during the decade. In other words, the prison population is increasing faster than the general population.

It seems to me, hon. gentlemen, that if the government will not for humane reasons, or upon sociological grounds, deal with this very important question, by passing legislation that will meet the requirements of society, and that will respond to the progressive thought of the times, then, on economical grounds and for economic reasons, they should certainly take this matter up and give the most mature consideration to it. European nations as well as the United States government have given the best thought of their public men to the working out of those problems. Royal commissions have been appointed. Institutions have been established. Inquires of the largest character have been made, and a vast expenditure of thought and money has been devoted by those governments to ascertaining the best methods of dealing with this very important question. But we in Canada are practically doing nothing. We are relying upon the old method of dealing with criminals. It is a far-away cry, as hon. gentlemen well know, from the advent of this Bill, which proposes to deal with juvenile delinquents, back to the practice of over a century ago, when in England they hanged children from eight to ten years of age for homicide and for other crimes. There are many cases recorded in England where children of ten years, as young as eight, were hanged for capital offences, but it seems to me, from a study of all the legislation we have upon our statute-book, that in Canada we have made no particular progress or reform other than to moderate the method of punishment administered to criminals. The same old ideas prevail that dealt with the violations of law, and the violations particularly of criminal law. All we have done has been to build penitentiaries; to put the convicts behind the bars and to mete out to them such varying degrees of punishment as may be determined by the statute-book or by the discretion of the judge who may try the criminal. But it is a well known fact in criminology that imprisonment does not prevent crime. Permit me to read what the Royal Commission of 1879 and the Prisons Committee of 1895, in England, said upon this question:—

> Imprisonment though pronounced, not only fails to reform offenders when in the case of the less hardened criminals, and especially first offenders, it produces a deteriorating effect; in other words, imprisonment defeats the very purpose for which it is supposed to exist. Instead of operating as a deterrent and a check on the criminal population it deteriorates the offender and increases the probability that he will continue to be a criminal for the remainder of his life.

May I be permitted to point out for a moment some factors which should be inquired into by the government with reference to stemming the tide of crime which seems to be beating itself upon society as it is to-day. In England these factors, which I shall take the liberty of referring to, have received very considerable attention and have been established by statistics to be the chief causes of crime in both England and Europe. Some years ago a committee was appointed by the British Association for the purpose of collecting observations of a systematic character as to the height, weight and other physical characteristics of the inhabitants of the British Isles. Then the committee in their report say :

Another very valuable index of the physical condition of the industrial school population is weight.

Perhaps I might explain that in England they have various institutions for dealing with juvenile delinquents. For instance about the first step to deal with a juvenile delinquent is to place him in what is known as an industrial school. They have different industrial schools in which the child is placed for corrective purposes. He is permitted to go to his home on probation at night. He returns the following day, and so on. They then have industrial schools wherein the child is kept permanently for a period. If it is found they are not sufficiently corrective for the delinquent he is then put in a reformatory, but the idea of imprisoning the child is kept as distant as can possibly be from the child until all other hope fails. Those statistics establish these facts, and these factors to which I have referred may be attributable to the large propotion of crime from which we suffer. The committee reports as follows :

Another very valuable index of the physical condition of the industrial school population is weight. In this respect all classes of the ordinary population of a similar age surpass the industrial school inmates. According to the report of the Anthropometric Committee of the British Association (1883), industrial school boys of the age of fourteen are nearly seven inches shorter of stature and 24¾ pounds lighter in weight than juveniles of the same age in the general population. Whether we compare the children in industrial schools with the general population of all classes, or with any class in particular, it will be found in every instance that as regards weight these juveniles are distinctly inferior to every other section of the youthful population. A large proportion of industrial school boys and girls are, as has been pointed out in a preceding chapter, drawn from the towns; and if these children are normally developed we should expect them to come up to the standard of town children of the artisan classes. But both in height and weight they fall considerably short of the standard. No matter what year we select, between six and sixteen the industrial school child is always below the average. It is the same with females as with males. Often inferior in weight as well as in stature to the class from which he springs, the juvenile offender in our industrial schools must accordingly be set down as in many cases, a decadent member of the community, not only from a moral, but also from a physical point of view.

The recent researches of Dr. Warner as to the physical and mental condition of children confirm the report of the committee of the British Association with respect to industrial school children in Irish schools there is a larger percentage of abnormal children in industrial schools than in any other class of schools. Dr. Warner examined nearly two thousand children of both sexes in industrial schools in London and the country, and of this number 591, or rather more than 29 per cent presented physical or mental defects. In English day schools the number of children who were either physically or mentally defective only amounted to 17 per cent. The defects noted by Dr. Warner consisted of smallness of stature, smallness of head, affections of the eye, affections of the nervous system, defects of development, excessive paleness or thinness, and mental dullness.

It has been pointed out that our only means of testing the physical condition of the total population of these institutions is by comparing the death and mortal illness rate which prevails in them with the death rate of the general community of a similar age ? The application of this criterion discloses the fact that the death rate in the general male population between five and fifteen amounts, for the period under examination to 3·7 per thousand; on the other hand, the death and mortal illness rate in boys' industrial schools is as high as 5 per thousand. The death rate of girls between five and fifteen in the general population is 3·8 per thousand; the death and disease rate of girls in the industrial school population is 12 per thousand.

According to Dr. Warner, and speaking in round numbers, no less than thirty industrial school children in every hundred are more or less defective either mentally or physically. Coupling this fact with the additional fact that 39 per cent of the entire industrial school population are without one or both parents, it is reasonable to conclude that a considerable proportion of these children are the victims of hereditary or acquired infirmity.

The amount of mortality among boys in the general population between the ages of ten and twenty for the five years 1887-91 was at the rate of 3·4 per thousand. The vast bulk of the inhabitants of our reformatories range between the ages of ten and twenty ; the death and mortal illness rate among this population for the five years 1887-91 will supply us with materials for forming a tolerably accurate comparison between them and the outside community. For the five years just mentioned the annual average of deaths in boys' reformatory schools amounted to 4·2 per thousand, and the annual average of inmates discharged on account of mortal disease amounted to 4·2 per thousand. According to these figures, if the discharges on account of mortal illness are added, the death rate among reformatory boys is fully twice as high as the mortality among the general community. Very similar results are obtained by comparing the rate of mortality among reformatory school girls with the average mortality of the female population in general of a like age. For the five years 1887-91 the yearly rate of mortality among the female members of the general community between the ages of ten and twenty amounted to 3·5 per thousand. During the same period the yearly death rate in girls' reformatories amounted to 5 per thousand; the discharges on account of mortal disease were 7 per thousand. If the actual deaths and the discharges from mortal illness are added together it will be found that the mortality among the female reformatory school population is between three and four times as high as the mortality among the ordinary female population of a similar age.

Juveniles in prisons, as far as it is possible to arrive at the facts, are very similar in their physical characteristics to juveniles committed to reformatory schools. In a return dealing with the social and physical condition of a hundred juvenile prisoners between the ages of sixteen and eighteen prepared by me for the Departmental Committee on Prisons, it was shown that the average stature of these young people was from one to two inches lower than the average stature of town artisans of a similar age. It was between three and four inches lower than the average stature of the general population of a similar age. The average weight of these juvenile offenders was also inferior to the average weight of the town population of a similar age, as well as of the population as a whole of a similar age. The parental condition of these juveniles also sheds light upon the sort of stock from which they spring. Almost one-third of them (thirty-two per cent) had one or both parents dead. Whether we look at the physical conditions of the juvenile population in prisons, in reformatory schools, or in industrial schools, we are always confronted with a similar set of facts. We find in each case that the delinquent population of these establishments is on the whole composed of a larger percentage of inferior physical material than the general population.

The results of personal experience among large numbers of juvenile offenders, as well as the evidence just furnished by statistical investigations, have for many years confirmed me in the opinion that among causes which produce a criminal life the physical inferiority of the offender is one of the most important.

I need not say that the fact of that physical inferiority must have its reflex in the mental condition of the child. The mental condition of those children is found to be very low indeed; and while it is almost impossible to obtain statistics to measure the want of mental ability, it may be said, however, so far as we can make the statement, to be about in the same ratio of incapacity as the physical requirements of the same children. I assume the risk of tiring the House by these statistics, to point out the duty that devolves upon the government of adopting progressive legislation for the purpose of grappling with this question. If the criminal population in society is growing with the rapidity which our own statistics establish beyond all peradventure to be the case, then, certainly, no more important duty can devolve upon the government than to appoint a royal commission, or to take such steps as will give them all the facts and all the knowledge and information obtainable upon this important question, so that legislation of an advanced character may be passed to grapple with this serious problem. This is more important, hon. gentlemen, when you apply the statistics which I have cited to the House, to this consideration, that if a child begins its life of crime in its teens, and if it reaches the height of crime so to speak, at twenty-four or twenty-five, as the statistics seem to establish, and if those criminals are growing at the rate which our own statistics establish that they are, then our condition is serious and lamentable indeed, and I say without any hesitation, that this legislation should not only be passed during the present session, but should have been grappled with by the government years ago, and that institutions should have been established through which this very important problem might be solved. As to the distribution, so to speak, of responsibility between the Federal government and the provincial governments on this question, I do not quite comprehend what understanding may exist between the federal government and the provinces as to the distribution of correction institutions of a reformatory nature, but we very well know that the penitentiaries are maintained by the federal government, whereas the jails and minor prisons are maintained by the provinces or municipalities, as the case may be. But if the case should arise—and it must necessarily arise—as to who shall maintain industrial and reformatory institutions such as we find existing in other parts of the world, the Dominion government, certainly should not stand upon the question as to who should assume that responsibility. I fancy that some of the smaller provinces would hesitate before assuming any responsibility for establishing and maintaining expensive institutions of this kind; but if it is necessary for the Dominion government to establish and maintain the penitentiaries of Canada, it is equally important, in fact more important, that the conditions which lead to the creation and development of criminal life, particularly in the youth, should be stamped out by the establishment of such institutions as they have in other countries, even though this government should assume the entire expense. I might point out just for the moment what other countries are doing with reference to these establishments and to the fact that for many years those establishments have been carrying on a very successful work along this line of diminishing juvenile crime. Dealing with principes involved in the establishment of these institutions, the writer of this book, Mr. Morrison, says :

'In Europe, France led the way and in 1850 special laws were passed in the French Chamber relating to the treatment of juvenile delinquents. In 1854 England followed in the wake of France. In the two decades between 1850 and 1870 almost every state in Europe had passed laws or organized establishments for the reclamation of juvenile offenders. The new world was as active as the old world. In the rational treatment of the young offender many states of the American union have borne an honourable and conspicuous part. The New York House of Refuge chartered in 1824 was established by the state of New York many years before any European government had given its attention to the value of reclamatory methods of dealing with juvenile delinquency. Since that date the number of institutions for young offenders has steadily increased, especially in the North Atlantic states. According to the census bulletin the total number of inmates in juvenile reformatories in the United States in 1890 amounted to nearly 15,000. The population of these establishments increased nearly thirty per cent in ten years.

The principle of dealing with juvenile offenders in special institutions has been most widely applied in Great Britain. According to the report of the inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools for 1894, the number of children under order of detention in reformatory, industrial, truant, and day industrial schools amounted to 33,521.

Hon. gentlemen will see that Canada is far behind European countries, and our neighbours on the other side of the line in the adoption of legislation to deal with this very important question, and I might say that in addition to the countries referred to, in the work I have just read that those institutions obtain largely not only in France and Germany, but in Austria, in Italy, in the Cantons of Switzerland as well as in other parts of Europe, and we therefore are not in a position to compliment or congratulate ourselves upon being equally progressive with many of those European countries upon which we very oftentimes are apt to look with a degree of commiseration with reference to moral reform. I say advisedly that Canada is behind all the other civilized communities, in such countries as those I have mentioned, as to legislation and dealing with this very important question. I furthermore say that crime within the Dominion of Canada is growing at a more rapid rate than the tables would lead us to believe that European crime is growing; hence the necessity becomes greater and greater every day. Under those circumstances, I fail to understand why the government consider it necessary to withdraw a Bill dealing with so important a problem, a Bill which society demands today in its most advanced phase. I hope, if the government withdraws it this session, that they will prepare a Bill of an even more advanced character next session, and will insist upon its passage, and will deal with this question in a statesmanlike way.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The speech made by the hon. gentleman is a very instructive one, and if he had not taken the opportunity to so frequently emphasize the statement that the government were at fault in not proceeding with the measure more promptly, no one would have any reason to criticise his speech. The hon. gentleman has evidently made himself familiar with the subject, which I have not; but there are certain points in his speech which I think are open to observation. The hon. gentleman seemed to think it was the duty of the Dominion government to look for something to be done in this direction. The hon. gentleman, I take it, is a pretty experienced politician, and fairly practical; and I think it is within the experience of every hon. gentleman here that, as a rule, governments do not go about looking for work to do, or for legislation to undertake, particularly legislation of a philanthropic kind. And it will be found, I think, that in nearly every instance legislation of this character is due to the efforts of individuals or of associations, and that this kind of legislation does not originate with the government. The hon. gentleman spoke chiefly of juvenile offenders, and that is the matter with which this Bill deals ; but he rather intimated that it was the duty of the government to establish reformatories, particularly in some of the smaller provinces. Now when we come to look at the British North America Act, we find that section 91, subsection 28, enumerates amongst the subjects with which the Dominion parliament has to deal, the establishment, maintenance and management of penitentiaries. This measure is not in any way concerned with penitentiaries, except perhaps to keep people out of them ; but section 92 subsection 96, gives to the local legislatures the establishment, maintenance and management of public and reformatory prisons in and for the province. So that the work of establishing these institutions is, by our constitution, committed to the provinces and not to Canada.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is like the Lazaretto.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Well, there is no question in this case. There may have been some question in regard to the Lazaretto. Governments do not go round looking for work to do. I think the hon. leader of the opposition is a little pessimistic in his observations with reference to the position of Canada as compared with other countries. Canada has done fairly well in this matter of dealing with juvenile offenders. We have had on our statute-books now for thirteen years the following provision :

28. Young persons apparently under the age of sixteen years who are,—
(a) arrested upon any warrant ; or,
(b) committed to custody at any stage of a preliminary inquiry into a charge for an indictable offence ; or,
(c) committed to custody at any stage of a trial, either for an indictable offence or for an offence punishable on summary conviction ; or,
(d) committed to custody after such trial, but before imprisonment under sentence ;
shall be kept in custody separate from older persons charged with criminal offences and separate from all persons undergoing sentences of imprisonment, and shall not be confined in the lock-ups or police stations with older persons charged with criminal offences or with ordinary criminals.

The next section in chapter 148 of the revised statutes reads as follows :

29. The court or person before any offender whose age at the time of his trial does not, in the opinion of the court, exceed sixteen years, is convicted, whether summarily or otherwise, of any offence punishable by imprisonment, may sentence such offender to imprisonment in any reformatory prison in the province in which such conviction takes place, subject to the provisions of any Act respecting imprisonment in such reformatory.
2. In no case shall the sentence be less than two years or more than five years confinement in such reformatory prison.
3. Such imprisonment shall be substituted, in such case, for the imprisonment in the penitentiary or other place of confinement by which the offender would otherwise be punishable under any Act or law relating thereto : Provided that in every case where the term of imprisonment is fixed by law to be more than five years, then such imprisonment shall be in the penitentiary.
4. Every person imprisoned in a reformatory shall be liable to perform such labour as is required of such person.
5. This section shall apply to the Halifax Industrial School and Saint Patrick's Home at Halifax, although the age of the offender exceeds sixteen years, if it does not exceed eighteen years ; and in any case of imprisonment in the said school or home the sentence may be for a term of one year or more, but not exceeding five years.

The section is made applicable to certain institutions in Halifax, the Halifax Industrial School and St. Patrick's Home, as stated in subsection 5. That is, even though the age exceeds sixteen, and does not exceed eighteen. Reformatories and industrial schools have been established in Nova Scotia. They have been established in New Brunswick. They have been established in Ontario. I do not know what they have done in the western provinces, but, at any rate, in the three provinces I have mentioned, and I rather think in the province of Quebec, although I am not sure, reformatories have been established. It is to those reformatories that juvenile offenders are sent, and I may say that the statistics which the hon. gentlemen read with respect to the physical condition of the boys and girls in these juvenile reformatories in the old country, do not at all apply at any rate to those in the province of Nova Scotia. The truth is that in the two institutions in Halifax the death rate is less than amongst persons of the same age in the general community. Now, the hon. gentleman referred to a submerged tenth. We have not really anything in Canada which corresponds to the submerged tenth, which they have in the old country, and there is no great mass of degraded children in Canada such as we find in the United States and in the old country. There may be a couple of cities in Canada where there are a good many bad boys, but there is no such misery and degradation as you find in the large cities of the old country, so that the problem is really not as pressing a one in Canada as it is in the old country. But we have gone further. In Ontario and in Nova Scotia there has been legislation establishing Children's Aid societies and empowering magistrates to sentence children to homes, and to detention homes, I do not know what the exact term is—places of detention—before being sent to the home. That is the practice now in Ontario and Nova Scotia, and up, I think, to the present year, there has been no pressure brought to bear upon the Dominion parliament for legislation. The people who are interested in these Children's Aid Societies find now that it is desirable that they should get legislation from the Dominion parliament in order to enable them to cover the whole ground. There are cases where the usefulness of these societies is limited by the want of legislation from this parliament, and it was in order to fill that want that this Bill was introduced. I regret that it is not going to be pressed this session; but I hope it may pass next session; meanwhile there is no such dreadful condition of things in Canada as there is in the old country. The hon. gentleman spoke as though these Children's Aid Societies or Children's Courts were to be found everywhere in England. As I understand, they are really only to be found in two or three cities. I am not aware of any city except Birmingham where this system has been introduced.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Fifteen years ago there were at least twenty of them.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—More than that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the honourable gentleman is making a mistake.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend behind me (Hon. Mr. Sullivan) will give the figures. They run up to 200.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Notwithstanding all that, I venture to think the hon. gentleman is in error, because it is commonly understood that the first Children's Court that was established, was in Colorado, and that Judge Lindsay, of Denver, was really the judge of the first Child's Court. I am told that Chicago was ahead of Colorado. But, in England, Birmingham has copied Denver or Chicago. I do not mean to say there are not some provisions with respect to children, but what I mean is that such legislation as is embodied in this measure does not prevail in more than one or two English cities. I cordially approve the character of this measure, and I agree with the principle laid down in the preamble. There are one or two suggestions which I was going to make to the hon. Secretary of State, which he might consider in dealing with the matter further.

Clause 6 provides that when any child is arrested, with or without warrant, such child should, instead of being taken before a justice, be taken before the juvenile court. I think that that should be qualified by saying if there was one having jurisdiction in the place where the offence was committed, because if you have only a couple of juvenile courts in the province it would be exceedingly inconvenient to take the child before a juvenile court. It would be better to give certain powers to the magistrate to deal with the case. Then clause 20 requires some modification. It says:

> No juvenile delinquent shall, under any circumstances, upon or after conviction, be sentenced to or incarcerated in any penitentiary or county or other gaol, or police station, or any other place in which adults are or may be imprisoned.

That is a very good general rule; but there are exceptions and in the cases of reformatories it has been found absolutely necessary to make certain exceptions to that rule. A lad of sixteen may be utterly perverse and unmanageable, and it may be absolutely necessary that an incorrigible of that kind should be sent to the penitentiary. The clause needs qualification. I should not have spoken at all only I thought the hon. gentleman who preceded me was just a little too severe in his remarks.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I am very glad of the opportunity to correct some misapprehensions and make some statements, which I hope will be of interest. I think the hon. gentleman has taken too severe a view of the state of morals in this country, and has not even given England fair play. In examining this question, we must first look at the causes of crime. The causes are various. For instance, intemperance is one of the most marked causes; tobacco is another; bad or insufficient food—anything which will debilitate a person physically, or which will put temptation in his way. For instance, if a boy on the street sees an apple exposed on a stand, he may be tempted to take it. That is not a serious crime; but it gives an idea of what I mean. There are also cases of criminal inheritance. That is a very important point, one on which I wish to correct any errors that may exist in the minds of hon. gentlemen. I will give the latest theory, and the facts on which it is founded. You will understand there is such a thing as heredity, that is, the conditions of an organization, animal or vegetable, which are similar to the progenitor—that is any condition whether disease or not. This condition has been denied, and I refer to it because the hon. the Secretary of State stated that crime was due not to any criminal instinct or criminal nature, but entirely to environments, I think I can show that a great deal of it may be due to inheritance. My hon. friend spoke of the diminution in stature as resulting from crime. That is a fact, and the same course pursued for a number of generations would cause the degradation of a whole people. What is it that has caused the degeneration of the Spanish and Portuguese? They are not the same as their ancestors whom Cortez and Pizarro led to victories in Peru and Mexico. They have degenerated in every way. I believe that is due to disease, and I state this fact with the greatest of authenticity and emphasis. Where a soil is occupied by the same crop in succession year after year, it will fail. There will come a time when that soil will not be able to produce crops. That is a peculiarity that occurs all through nature. Anything will wear out, and that is what happened to the Spanish and Portuguese. A disease was prevalent among those nations at the time of the Peninsular war. It was so severe that it decimated the British forces, until they had to be removed. It did not affect the Portuguese to any extent—why? Because the disease had passed down from father to son, until there came a time when it had no effect upon them. But at what a price was that immunity purchased? By the degradation of the race. The same thing would occur in any country. Immunity from disease depends not only on inheritance, but on the purity and chastity of the people themselves. The lack of those virtues is a great cause of disease. How those things act in such a subtle manner I cannot explain. This question of the inheritance of disease is one of the most profound and stupendous of nature's mysteries, and has, so far, resisted the investigations of scientists. The condition is a very singular one. I could tell you of cases where a person not subject to disease at the time, say a husband, would convey a disease to his wife who never had had any disease before, and it was not present in him at the time. At other times the wife would not be infected with a disease, but when a child was born, it would be covered with disease. There is a problem that would take the whole scientific forces of the world to solve. If the mother were to nurse the child, the disease would not manifest itself in her; but if a healthy woman is called in to nurse the child, not only as a wet nurse, but as a dry nurse, after a little while she will be covered over with the disease. She would be contaminated simply by the handling of this child. That is a law which never fails. I would not mention this except in a general way, because of the very difficult nature of what is called inheritance. Any criminal tendency may be affected by epigenetic factors, as an influence of environment. This tendency to crime in a parent will pass to the offspring, and will be there and develop if the opportunity should occur. It is the same with consumption. I do not believe that consumption is inherited; but I do believe that the constitution inherited from a consumptive parent will easily fall a victim to the disease. It is the same way with crime. Most of the influences which cause crime will cause poverty, affecting the person physically, financially and in other ways. To prevent it, complete change in the person's surroundings is necessary. The most dangerous class to be affected is the young. Such a terrible state of crime as the hon. gentleman has described does not exist in Canada. If you take the increase of population and the habits and mode of living of the people, there is no such increase in crime. This question of juvenile crime has been taken up by England long ago. The first reformatory society, called the Marine Society, was established in 1738, and the next, known as the Philanthrophic, in 1760. These two societies, for a long time, took care of destitute children. They were succeeded by two other systems of schools. England has done more, so far as I can see, than any other country in trying to stem the flood. And, contrary to the statistics of the hon. gentleman from Calgary, I find that the number attending those schools has increased and, consequently, the amount of crime has diminished in the adult population. We know that statistics can be made to support almost any statement. On this question of heredity, I may say that we have an illustration of it in the Hon. Secretary of State himself. His father was a very kind and benevolent man. The hon. gentleman himself is also kind and benevolent, having put through parliament an Act to provide for religious education in schools, an Act to prevent intemperance, one concerning education and others concerning the habits of the people, and now we have another Bill from him of a moral nature, also for the improvement of the people. This benevolent nature has been handed down to his son, who is the prime factor and the man who has taken most interest in this matter. So there are three generations showing the same qualities of charity and benevolence. The industrial schools that were established in England, date as far back as 1850. In the early years of last century there was a very great activity among the people of England to overcome the tendency to crime. It was particularly taken up by a man named John Pounds, a shoemaker, who lived in Portsmouth, and who had devoted himself to looking after the destitute. He got up what are called the ragged schools. I dare say many honourable gentlemen present remember hearing of John Pound and his work. The ragged schools spread through England. There was a strong desire to improve the condition of the people and in 1851 or 1852 a conference was held in Birmingham. Among those who were present were Lord Norton, then Mr. Adderley, Lord Shaftesbury and others. The result of the conference was that about 1853 Mr. Adderley prepared a Bill which he submitted to the House of Commons. That Bill provided for the establishment of two schools which were entirely distinct and different in their objects. The one is called the reformatory school and is a successor of the old schools of the Marine Society. The others are called the industrial schools, and these are the schools which have benefited England so much. They have been in existence since 1853. The first attempt at establishing industrial schools was made in Scotland in 1854. The legislation was introduced by Mr. Dunlop and passed parliament. However, they were all consolidated in 1866. Amendment after amendment was made in the laws relating to these schools, and they have been brought to as high a degree of perfection as it is possible to bring reformatories to, but they ignore the word 'reformatory'. A prison was established in 1837 for young offenders, who were allowed to have outdoor teaching and many relaxations of discipline. It did not succeed; it ran down because it had the name 'prison.' In 1864 that prison was closed, because the inmates had been reduced from 563 to 68 in ten years. That showed that the name affected it, and they are now careful to avoid having anything like the name of jail or prison where children are confined. The officers do not dress in any uniform. The establishments are for boys and girls, and they derive their support from three sources, the state, the poor rates, donations and gifts and subscriptions or work, because there is a certain amount of work done in these institutions by the young boys and girls. Say a boy will cost twenty-one pounds,—$105 : that is made up in this way ; the state pays say $80, the rates amount to $15, and the proceeds of the work of the boys and girls to $10. To show what influence these institutions have, I may tell you that in 1900 there were over 4,300 boys in these schools in England. They favour small schools with about seventy or eighty inmates, the highest being about 100. They will take children up to the age of fourteen in these industrial schools, and they are kept there until they reach the age of sixteen. On no account does a child remain there longer than five years. In the other schools, they are taken in up to sixteen and may remain until they are nineteen, but generally speaking, five years is the longest time any of them can remain in the institution. That gives an idea of the care they exercise in these schools. I do not see any treatment outlined in this Bill. The greatest possible powers are given to magistrates and justices of the peace in England. They have power to detain any delinquents and put them in these schools. There are truant schools, industrial schools, and day schools. The day schools are those where the inmates stay only during the day. There are the truant schools, of which there are twenty-two. At these, they only give the boys and girls their dinner and let them go home afterwards. They are for what are called truant children.

As it is now near six o'clock, and I have still some remarks to make, I move that the debate be adjourned until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

ADULTERATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (127) An Act to amend the Adulteration Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As I mentioned before, the changes are merely technical. Analyst has to be described properly as a public analyst, and there is an official known as the assistant chief analyst who is not mentioned in the law at present.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

YUKON PLACER MINING ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (135) An Act to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The only clause held over was clause 3, which refers to regulations now made or hereafter to be made. The question was raised by the hon. leader of the opposition that this might affect rights which had accrued after 1898 and the matter was referred to the Department of the Interior and also to the Minister of Justice. It appears there are no such rights and no parties would be interfered with. I have a long memorandum here, which I submitted to the leader of the opposition, and, after reading it, he thought there was no further objection to be made.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro), from the committee reported the Bill with an amendment which was concurred in.

WINDING-UP ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (147) An Act to amend the Winding-up Act. He said: As I explained when this Bill was introduced here, the object was to meet a case which has arisen recently in Toronto in the winding-up of the York Loan Company, where there are ten or fifteen thousand persons interested. It is quite impossible, of course, to have each one appear by attorney, and this is to authorize the court to name a solicitor or counsel to act for a particular class. There are different classes of creditors in the York Loan.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

STANDING ORDERS COMMITTEE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG moved the adoption of the twenty-eighth report of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders. He said: The report points out that the rules of the House of Commons have only been in force this session, and we were told, informally it is true, that they contemplate some changes and, therefore, it is difficult to make our rules conform until we are sure of some permanency of the rules of the other House. Besides the question is to be considered whether it is advisable to adopt the rules of the other House at all or not.

The motion was agreed to.

ROCK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN.

A message was received from the House of Commons, returning Bill (X) An Act to incorporate the Rock Life Insurance Company of Canada, with amendments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are two amendments. I dissent from one of them, but rather than jeopardize the Bill, I do not take exception to it but move that the amendments be concurred in. My objection is to the amendment fixing the quorum. It provides for the appointment of twelve guarantor directors and eight directors from the participating policy-holders, making a directorate of twenty. It is based altogether on different principles from an ordinary insurance Bill. When this matter was considered in committee, it was thought that a quorum consisting of a majority of twenty directors would be an impracticable number, particularly when you appoint directors from the policy-holders, who may be all over different portions of the Dominion, as difficulty might arise in getting a quorum of directors to transact business. The result of having a large board like this in the past has been that they appoint a small committee to transact the business, and when a majority of the directors can be got, they confirm what is done by the committee. It opens the door to a good deal of trouble and annoyance. However, the superintendent of insurance insists upon a majority of the directors forming a quorum, so that in this case there would have to be eleven directors present. It will entail expense upon the company, which is totally unnecessary. The Banking Committee thought seven directors was sufficient. However, I notice by this Bill that the Banking Committee of the other House have accepted the suggestion made by the superintendent of insurance, to make the quorum a majority instead of a fixed number of seven. The other amendment simply gives power to appoint directors representing the policy-holders at the second annual meeting instead of at the first.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (113) An Act to amend the Post Office Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

SENATE.

OTTAWA, Tuesday, April 23, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS moved :

That there be printed in one pamphlet, for public distribution, the speeches delivered in the Senate during the present session on the subject of 'Old Age Pensions, Annuities, &c.'

He said : The general feeling of the Senate was that the speeches contained very full and valuable information, and there was desire on the part of members that they should be bound together for the purpose of circulation, and therefore I have made this motion.

The SPEAKER—The number is not mentioned.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why is the number not given ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—There might be a discussion on the question of the number, and there will be none on this.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—There is no use in going to the expense of printing unless you adopt some mode of distributing the speeches.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Where would the funds for this expense come from?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—From British Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I have a letter from the King's Printer stating that as near as can be ascertained the pamphlet would make about 40 pages, 5,000 would cost $82,45, 10,000 would cost $164. I think that 10,000 could be distributed among the senators and therefore I move that number of copies be printed.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—We are discussing the question of the number of copies, and I should like to say why I should vote against this motion. We are introducing a new method of dealing with speeches. I do not think there have been many of these publications in this House or in the other House. If we establish a precedent, we may have to publish very many speeches. The majority of the House can, under such precedent, have all their speeches printed and circulated, and other speeches will not be so treated. If we consent to the motion we are introducing a precedent which would be very dangerous.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose that is to be translated in French. French people grow old like others.

Hon. Mr. KERR—They never get old.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They keep young as long as possible.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But there is no poverty in the province of Quebec, or the people of Quebec take care of their own poor if there are any.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—There seems to be a general impression that there should be 10,000 copies, and I would be perfectly willing to have half of them published in French.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—A smaller proportion would be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The French edition can be made up from the French version of the Senate debates after it is translated, and I do not think it would add materially to the cost. I should like to change my motion to cover 7,000 English copies and 3,000 in French.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I should like the Speaker to decide whether by this we are not spending money without having the right to do so.

The SPEAKER—I understand this will be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, over which we have control.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is a question the Speaker cannot be called on to decide.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This publication may not come out for a month yet, and the members will all be at their homes. There is no hurry about it. Perhaps it would be better to hold the copies here until the members return, and then they can be delivered at the different rooms and be distributed in that way. If they are sent to the homes of members, they may be over-looked, as occurred with myself at the time of the Boer war, when copies of speeches were sent to me to be distributed. The parcel came, and I did not see it until two years afterwards.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Perhaps the hon. gentleman thinks that by distributing here it will save postage but parliamentary papers are carried free whether distributed from Ottawa or not.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The suggestion of the hon. senator from Marshfield may meet the convenience of members, but so far as the press is concerned these important speeches should be distributed as soon as possible.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The distribution of 10,000 copies will be a considerable work for any secretary. It will occupy him for at least two or three weeks. In case the Internal Economy Committee do not supply wrappers for the distribution of these pamphlets, steps should be taken now to provide them.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—If the House consents, I will let this matter stand untill to-morrow and in the meantime will see what arrangements can be made.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I would suggest that 100 copies should be given to each member for distribution, and the balance held by some officer of the Senate for distribution later. In fact we should have a small committee to manage the printing and distribution of this pamphlet.

The matter was allowed to stand until to-morrow.

STATIONERY SUPPLIED TO MEMBERS.

MOTION WITHDRAWN.

The notices of motion being read :

By the Hon. Mr. DAVIS :

Will move that that part of the third report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate, which relates to the amount of stationery allowed to each member of the Senate, and which is contained in said report, presented on July 6, 1906 (page 400), of the Senate Journals, and adopted on July 7, 1906, be now read.

By the Hon. Mr. DAVIS :

That of this report the House rescind the following paragraph, reading as follows :

And further that an order be passed allowing each senator to requisition on the stationery office for stationery, &c., during each session of parliament to an amount not to exceed $5, any excess of the above amount to become a charge against the sessional indemnity of the member contracting the liability it being the duty of the stationery office of the Senate to furnish a weekly statement to the clerk of the Senate of the amounts of all excess disbursements made by them; all collections made by the clerk of the Senate to be accounted for and duly credited in the stationery office.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS asked that he be allowed to withdraw these motions.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand the hon. gentleman is letting these motions drop, because there never was an order given to carry out the recommendation of the committee. It is a small matter, but to show how it works, this year for the first time since I have been a member of the Senate, I took the trouble to look at the accounts. I went to see how my own account stood. I found for last year I had not reached the limit, but this year I had exceeded it by a couple of dollars, and I find it arose in this way. The Experimental Farms and the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Commons sent to each member three or four hundred copies of their reports to be circulated in the rural constituencies. When I received mine, I handed them over to the representative of one of the ridings in my county, the one I had formerly represented myself. I said: 'I think you had better send these and I will have them done up for you.'

I gave them to a messenger and I find that I am charged $2.08 for the wrappers. The government furnished gratuitously this information for the agricultural portion of the country as to the improved methods of farming and agriculture, and so on, and then when the documents are sent to a senator to circulate them he is charged, by this order, with the wrappers required to mail them. I do not hesitate to say, having been in the printing business and having been connected with the purchasing of a good deal of paper that I could buy a ream or two of the same quality of paper required to mail documents in for that money. I have no doubt my hon. friend who sits before me and who knows what the value of paper is would verify what I say. I do not complain of the prevention of abuse of the privilege, if any abuse has existed in the past, but I do think it strange that while the government goes to the expense of printing very valuable documents for the information of the people, that Senators should be charged for the wrappers in which they place them to be sent to the country. I give that as an illustration of how the recommendation of the committee has been carried out.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—It shows the picayune nature of those who are responsible for initiating this matter. This bundle of Bills is a sample of it. They used to be done up with rubber bands. I asked the boy why he did not use rubber bands for the Bills, as formerly, and the boy told me 'we would not be allowed.' I said, 'Go up and ask for them and let me know, if you cannot get them.' I never heard of the bands afterwards. That is a picayune piece of business and on a par with it is the charge of 5 cents for a box of matches. It is absurd that we cannot have rubber bands for our Bills and that they have to be left on our desks in this slovenly manner. I hope that whoever ordered this to be done will shrink into his own nothingness and that we will not hear of him any further.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—There is a motion standing in my name, and I think it is fair to explain why I withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I notice that there are strangers present.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I was merely going to say——

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman gave his explanation with closed doors and he need not repeat it now.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I understood there was to be no debate, but my hon. friend has started a debate on this question and it has placed me in a very peculiar position.

The SPEAKER—Instead of dropping the motion, the hon. gentleman can continue it until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—In looking into the matter, I do not think it is necessary to make this motion at all, because the order has never been issued by the House.

The SPEAKER—The motion will be dropped.

MORNING SITTINGS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved:

That when the Senate adjourns to-day it do stand adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday morning, at 11 o'clock, to be a separate and distinct sitting until one o'clock, and so from day to day, including Saturday, until the end of the session.

The motion was agreed to.

YUKON ORDINANCES.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the following resolution :

Resolved, that the ordinance of May 26 last, intituled : 'An Ordinance respecting Liens in favour of Miners,' and the ordinance of July 7 last, intituled : 'An Ordinance respecting the disposal of water from steamers and lakes in the Yukon Territory for the purpose of generating power, and for the control and management of the sale, transmission and use of such power,' passed by the Governor in Council, under the authority of provisions which now comprise section 16 of chapter 63, R.S.C., 1906, and which previous to the coming into force of that Act comprised subsection 1 of section 8 of chapter 6 of the statutes of 1898, as that subsection was enacted by section 3 of chapter 34 of 2 Edward VII., copies of which ordinances, as well as of the necessary order in council in each instance have been laid before this House, are approved by this House, in accordance with the provisions of section 17 of the said chapter 63.

The SPEAKER—The motion speaks of steamers and lakes, and it should be streams and lakes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Might I ask my hon. friend if we will have an opportunity of seeing these ordinances that we are approving of ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I will send them to the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It would appear to me that we ought to be in possession of them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They were laid on the Table yesterday, just as it has been done year by year.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I know that, but I think we have complained year after year of this very thing. We might, for all we know, be affirming ordinances for the establishment of dance houses and such things as that in the Yukon. Of course it is quite impossible, with the House ready for the question otherwise, for me to look over these ordinances and say whether I approve of them or not, but I do think they ought to be in the hands of every member in the printed form, so that we would know what we are agreeing to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was going to suggest, in view of what has fallen from my hon. friend from Marshfield, that these documents ought to be laid on the Table at a much earlier period of the session, and if the hon. gentleman will see that it is done in the future then there would be no complaint. It is quite impossible to go over those ordinances to learn what they contain or provide for when they are laid on the Table an hour or two before we are asked to approve of them. We are really asked to approve of that which we cannot by any possibility have any knowledge.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are the same ordinances that have been laid on the Table year after year. The House has never before exacted any regulation that they should be down early. They are in force until the end of the session, then they are revived by an order of each House and they are brought down in the other Chamber, just in the same way that they have been brought down here. Nobody asked to have them copied or entered on the books. One order in council relates to lien holders and the other to mining regulations in reference to the water allowed to miners.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Are we to understand that these are not new regulations made since last session ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We are simply reviving and renewing the regulations.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—With that assurance——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. They are the same, and they will be brought down again next year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—While the Secretary of State may be quite correct, I have no recollection of a resolution similar to this being introduced in the House and our approving of it. Most of these returns are laid on the Table without any hon. member of the Senate knowing what they contain.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think my hon. friend is in error in saying those ordinances are simply in force for one year. That is not the case. Those ordinances are passed the same as any other ordinance or statute might be passed by a local legislature.. The approval of this parliament is simply a formal matter, because I apprehend the Yukon legislature or assembly would certainly resent any interference by parliament as to ordinances which they deliberately recommend. That the provision of section 17 of chapter 63, making a provision for the approving of those ordinances by parliament by way of resolution, is something needless. Parliament would not for a moment, it seems to me, undertake to interfere with what was deliberately suggested by the local assembly in the Yukon territory. Why that provision is embodied in the Act I certainly cannot appreciate, yet it is nevertheless there. My hon. friend is in error, I think, in saying these are regulations continuing from year to year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I remember bringing them down last year and the year before. They may not be the identical ones, but I presume they are the same. I will let them stand a day and see if I can get any further information on the subject.

The resolution was allowed to stand.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (127) An Act to amend the Adulteration Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (135) An Act to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act, as amended.—(Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright.)

REVISED STATUTES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (148) An Act to amend schedule A of the Revised Statutes of 1906.

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill contains practically one clause. As I explained on a former occasion, the necessity for it arises from the fact that the words in the Act were 'As far as the Northwest Territories are concerned,' but Saskatchewen and Alberta ought to have been omitted from that category. Hon. gentlemen will find the schedules appearing at the end of volume 3, It is under the head 'Title of Act and extent of Repeal' and in nearly every year there is the clause in reference to the Northwest, whereas it ought to have excepted Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

The Order of the Day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to Bill (4) An Act in further amendment of the Railway Act, 1903.—(Hon. Mr. Davis.)

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It is very seldom that I care to interfere with the decision of a committee. But in this instance the circumstances are exceptional. This is a public Bill, which comes to us from the House of Commons, where it was passed unanimously by the 213 members of that body. It passed its second reading in the Senate, and was referred to the Railway Committee of this House. I attended the meeting of that committee and found the attendance was very small indeed. I do not know why it was so small, but perhaps it was on account of the difficulty of getting through the crowd of lobbyists at the door. There were about 20 members of the committee present when the Bill was disposed of, and if my memory serves me there were ten members who voted.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman cannot refer to anything which has taken place in the committee.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Can I not refer to the vote taken in the committee?

The SPEAKER—No.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—For the purpose of my argument, I wanted to show that ten members of the Senate undertook to dispose of a Bill which had been adopted by 213 representatives of the people in the House of Commons.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—This is not the first time the Bill has been before the Senate. It was sent to us last year and it struck me that the object which the promoter of the Bill had in view was accomplished by section 227 of the Railway Act, but it appears I was in error. I moved to strike the section out of the Railway Act and without any discussion the motion was carried. I want to say here and now that this is not a Bill which was passed hurriedly by the House of Commons or passed without full discussion. I find that it was discussed last year on the 6th July, and on that occasion Mr. Emmerson, the Minister of Railways, made a speech in which he said that the Bill had been referred to a committee who had reported that it was in the public interest it should become law, and that they had taken it up and incorporated it as a portion of the Railway Act, and in that manner it came to the Senate. When the Bill came before the Commons to be finally disposed of, Mr. Emmerson made a long speech on the subject. The Railway Bill had been disposed of in this House and returned to the House of Commons with amendments, and it was during the discussion on those amendments that the speeches from which I am about to quote were made :

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved concurrence to amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 62) to amend the Railway Act, 1903. He said : These amendments are, for the most part, not of a very material character. There is one amendment, however, deserving of some consideration. It will be remembered that the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) introduced in this House a Bill to amend the Railway Act, 1903, with regard to the speed of trains running through cities, towns and incorporated villages. That Bill was referred to a special committee. The committee took the matter under consideration and deemed that the object of the Bill was a very worthy one, that it was desirable that there should be some amendment. That at least was my view—I was a member of the committee—and we agreed upon an amendment to be recommended to the House as a part of the Railway Act.

Mr. STOCKTON. The agreement was unanimous.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was a unanimous recommendation on the part of that special committee. Now I am free to admit that the change was a somewhat radical one. We were taking the onus or burden from the Board of Railway Commissioners and placing it upon the railways themselves to see that every one of these crossings was protected. I felt that perhaps we were going a considerable distance, and perhaps a little too suddenly ; and it may be remembered that when the matter was under consideration in Committee of the Whole I recommended that this clause should not go into operation until January 1, 1908, in order to give the railways an opportunity to prepare for the burden which had been placed upon them. Naturally this met with a pretty strong opposition from the railways interested, and this opposition has perhaps voiced itself in the amendment of the Senate striking out this clause. Now I can only say that it would be perhaps too late to refuse to concur in this amendment now, it would be too late in the session, and perhaps no good purpose would be served. I can only say that I am in sympathy with the object sought to be attained, namely, the preservation of life throughout the country. There are many fatalities connected with these railway crossings, and my sympathy would be in the direction of protecting as far as possible the public in this regard. I would not wish to go to the other extreme and put too great a burden upon the railways.

In the same discussion, Mr. Stockton made a speech in which he said :

After a great deal of consideration and discussion in committee, we thought that on the whole it would be a fair compromise with the railway companies because it was stated that if we compelled the railway companies to protect all level crossings as provided by the Bill when first introduced it would cost $1,500,000 for the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk to make the change. We thought that would be too much of a burden to put upon the railway corporations at once, because a great many of these railway crossings were not dangerous and it would not be necessary to make at those crossings the provision called for by the Act. We thought it would be better to have a provision that they must properly protect it and then run the risk if it were not properly protected in the case of an accident, of being mulcted in damages under the direction of a jury ; or if they were not satisfied with it they could apply to the Board of Railway Commissioners for instructions as to what would be a proper protection. However I think that as the hon. minister says it is not prudent to allow the other legislation to stand and as the minister promised to give this matter consideration at the next sitting of the House we had better acquiesce in the amendment which has been made, but, I do think there should be some legislation for the protection of property and life in connection with our Canadian railways.

Now the leader of the opposition in the House of Commons takes a different ground from the leader of the opposition here, because Mr. Borden sympathizes with the people. He says :

Mr. Speaker, this proposition is one which has engaged the attention of this House for at least three sessions. It has been discussed at very great length. The hon. member for Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) has forcibly and eloquently urged it upon the attention of parliament over and over again, and finally, during the present session, he has been successful in having at least a measure of relief introduced in the Bill which the government have in charge. The course which was taken by the select committee to which it was referred was a course in accordance with the suggestion of the then Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) who, as reported at page 857 of the revised 'Hansard', said this, referring to the hon. member for Lincoln and Niagara :

'He does not mention the character of the protection nor does he make any provision as to the authority which is to decide what is to be proper protection. I apprehend that my hon. friend might adopt a suggestion to the effect that this protection ought to be sufficient to satisfy the Board of Railway Commissioners.'

Now that proposition made by a member of the administration was carried out. The proposition in the first place was that this Bill should be referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals. I suggested to the government that it would be far better to refer it to a small select committee which could deal with questions of fact and give a hearing to all parties interested much better than could a large committee such as the Committee on Railways and Canals. So, it was heard by a small committee and all the railway interests, as I understand, appeared before that committee and gave evidence.

Mr. STOCKTON. That is quite correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The case was gone into very fully, the legislation proposed by my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara was not adopted in its entirety, but the modification suggested by Mr. Fitzpatrick was adopted. The power to enforce protection from any railway company could be put no higher than the alternative which is contained in the clause I allude to in the Bill which passed this House.

Mr. Borden further on says :—

It is a rather singular proposition for the Senate, after an hour's discussion, to brush all this to one side, to have no regard whatever to the inquiries which have been made by the committees of this House, to have no regard whatever to the hearings which have been had, but simply to strike this clause out of the Bill. I for one object to this being struck out of the Bill. I think it is a reasonable provision. I think the railway companies of this country must learn to have a proper regard for the safety and sanctity of human life. The provision which is contained in the Bill does not seem to be in the least unreasonable.

If any hon. member in this House thinks that the Bill was not properly and thoroughly discussed in the House of Commons, he need only look at the Hansard report and see how thoroughly it was debated. I do not wish to be unreasonable with railway corporations. If they had not been given a hearing on this question we might be disposed to pause, but this measure has been before the House of Commons for two years, and the railway corporations have been represented by the best legal talent that money could employ. In both sessions the two sides of the question were fully heard ; but with all the legal talent at the disposal of the railway corporations they were not able to convince the peoples' representatives in parliament that this was a bad measure. Last year, when this Bill came to the Senate, it was thrown out, as I understand the function of this House is to be a cooling basin, to check hasty or ill-considered legislation ; but it is not the function of this House when a measure like this has been thoroughly considered for two years in the House of Commons and its committee, when all parties have been heard and the Bill has passed and then referred to us to destroy it. This is not Russia, where an irresponsible chamber can defy the people. The people, by their representatives in the Commons, have said this Act should become law. That is the will of the people, and the voice of the people must be respected. If you do not respect it, they will make you do so. In other words, when 213 of the people's representatives in the House of Commons pass legislation, it is not the duty of 40 members of this House to reject it after it has been twice passed in the Commons. That is the ground I take. I have alluded to the fact that this Bill has been fully considered in the House of Commons, and if any one had visited the committee of that House when this Bill was before them they would have come to the conclusion that greater interest was taken in it in the Commons than we have taken in it here. I cannot understand why a Bill so carefully considered and passed in the public interest should be rejected by the Senate. I am not keeper of any man's conscience, but this measure, in my judgment, is a measure for the protection of human life that ought to appeal to every legislator. It is a question between the protection of human life, the lives of Canadians, and the payment of railway dividends to shareholders in Germany, France and in every country in the world. The railway companies do not agree to this amendment. They say it is impossible for them to take this matter up and deal with it inside of six months. I am prepared to say let them have a year or two years, if necessary, to put their crossings in shape, but the lives of the people of this country are too precious to defer it longer and we cannot allow the railway companies, for the purpose of saving time and money to make shambles of their crossings. That is what the representatives of the people say, and the voice of the people must be heard. We have the power to throw this Bill out, but we are not the direct representatives of the people and we should be careful before destroying a second time, a measure that has been passed by the House of Commons in the public interest. In a discussion here the other day, I heard my hon. friend behind me make a statement which I thought had a good deal of truth in it, and that is, that large corporations are inclined to be too saucy. There is too much lobbying about these measures in both Houses. For the dignity of this Chamber, and of the other House, it will be well to take some step to put an end to this lobbying, because it is not pleasant to be accosted on one's way to the House by the representative of some corporation and solicited to vote for some measure in which the corporation is interested. The issue to-day is between human life on one side and railway dividends on the other. Which side will the majority of this House take in dealing with this legislation? We should be for the people every time. We may safely conclude that if we look after the interests of the people the railway corporations will look after their own interests. I do not want to be hard on the railway corporations. They are necessary in the development of this country, but there is a limit to the concessions which should be made, and this Bill ought to be placed on the statute-book as a warning to them to protect their crossings. If the Senate pass this measure, it will be a popular thing in the country. This is an unpopular chamber. A few measures of this kind rejected by the Senate would soon make it a great deal more unpopular, if that is possible.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I do not propose to discuss this Bill on its merits, but I am going to discuss it more on my own merits. I am somewhat pleased to note that the hon. gentleman has changed his attitude since last year. I was not here on the occasion when this Bill was before the House last session, but I understand that he voted then against it. I am pleased that the hon. gentleman has changed his attitude, because he recognizes by his action the right of every member to vote freely. I want to explain, in justice to myself, the course I pursued the other day. A few weeks ago I was over in the House of Commons and met Mr. Lancaster who spoke to me in reference to this Bill. I did not know anything about it. He said the Bill had passed the House of Commons and been sent to the Senate and we had not heard anything of it, but he led me to suppose it was a government Bill, and he asked me if I would bring it to the notice of the Senate and have the Bill reinstated, and the government would take charge of it. It is within the memory of the Senate that, soon after that, I brought the Bill to the notice of the hon. Secretary of State, and he disclaimed its being a government Bill; but said it was a public Bill. I then moved that the Bill be placed on the order paper again, and it came up a day or so afterwards for second reading. I moved afterwards, that the Bill be read a second time, and then it was suggested by some hon. member that we go into Committee of the Whole on the Bill. The Bill was not mine. I had not been informed as to the merits or demerits of it, and was not prepared on that occasion to look after it in Committee of the Whole, because I did not know anything about it, and I suggested that the Bill should be sent before the Railway Committee of the Senate. I understood then, as I now know, that it is not customary to have a public Bill go before the Railway Committee; but the Senate, out of respect for me, I presume, consented to a deviation from the general rules, and allowed the Bill to go before that committee. I contended that the Bill would there get a proper threshing out, and the arguments pro and con advanced, and the Railway Committee would probably arrive at a proper conclusion on the merits of it. I took every pains incumbent upon me to notify Mr. Lancaster when the Bill would come before the Railway Committee. I am not a member of that committee, but when the Bill came up, I saw that Mr. Lancaster had been notified. He appeared before the Railway Committee, and when I got him there I left the room, and did not pay any more attention to it, because I felt to a certain extent that I was bound to act on the result of the report of the Railway Committee. As I had moved that the Bill go before the Railway Committee rather than to Committee of the Whole, I felt in honour bound to stand by the Railway Committee. When the Bill came before the House again on the report of the Railway Committee, it was moved that it be referred to Committee of the Whole. I hold that I could not have done anything more inconsistent, after the Senate had granted my request and referred this Bill to the Railway Committee, three weeks before, if I had consented then to having the Bill go to the Committee of the Whole and ignored the report of the Railway Committee. I voted against the Bill being referred to the Committee of the Whole, the same as I did three weeks before that, or the same as I suggested three weeks before that. I would have voted for the report of the committee, because when you send a Bill before the committee, they have an opportunity of hearing all the arguments for and against it. I saw that Mr. Lancaster was there and had all the opportunity necessary. He ventilated his case before the committee, and when the committee made its report, I was prepared to vote for and support the report. The hon. gentleman has referred to lobbying. I have not spoken to Mr. Drinkwater for over two and a half minutes this session, when I happened to meet him. We did not speak of the Bill pro or con. As to Mr. Wainwright I have spoken to him two or three times, and the extent of the conversation was 'good morning, sir.' So that I have not been influenced in my action by lobbying. Nobody has tried to influence me; I voted according to my own conscience, what I thought was right and honest for me to do in the Senate of Canada when they allowed this Bill to go before the Railway Committee and not to the Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I was not in this committee when the Bill came before it. I, unfortunately, was absent. I think this is a question upon which we should go slowly. We should give it very great consideration before we amend our Railway Act, seriously limiting the speed of trains. I admit that a great many accidents do occur by people being caught on level crossings, and life and property are sometimes destroyed. I think, however, that if the law would insist determinedly upon the whistles of trains being blown and the bells rung, at crossings, it would do more than legislation of this kind. An engine will kill a man or smash a vehicle just as well when running at ten miles an hour, as it will at forty miles an hour. The great object is to keep the people off the crossings, and if the effort is made that I have indicated by blowing the whistle and ringing the bell, one-half of the accidents that we have, possibly might not take place. You must remember that we are living alongside of a republic where the speed in railway travel is growing greater every year. I travelled from Washington to New York just a week before this parliament met. The run that distance was made in six to eight hours, although it is town or city nearly all the way. If they should place a law of this kind on the statute-book of the United States in place of the run from Washington to New York being made in the limited time it takes them to-day, they would not do it in thirty hours if they were confined to a speed of ten miles an hour at crossings of streets, because it is city or town for almost the entire distance, and if the United States people who travel over our Canadian lines going west from Boston and eastern points learn that on Canadian roads trains running through towns and incorporated villages, are only permitted a speed of ten miles a hour, you are going to seriously interfere with a large percentage of through traffic. You are going to prevent our lines from benefiting——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I do not interrupt my hon. friend. He has the habit of interrupting me every time I address this House. He pointed out a statement I made the last time I addressed the House, and he was wrong and I was right. I want the same freedom of speech that is given to him. I was going to show why, by taking this course, you may seriously interfere with railway traffic from the western states to the east. We do not want to militate against the success of our Canadian railways. We are willing that they should have every opportunity to cope with the formidable competition they have on the other side. We have recently appointed a railway commission. I should like very well if this whole business were relegated to them. If they gave the matter their serious and careful consideration they would devise methods from time to time of adjusting matters of this kind, possibly better than we could do it. My hon. friend from the west has said that this Bill has passed the Commons two or three times. It may have done so. We have no right to be guided entirely by what the Commons does. We are here to act in the best interests of the country, free and independent, without any influence whatever with regard to what any section of the people may think or say. A remark was also made by the hon. gentleman with regard to members being influenced. While I have occupied a seat in this Chamber, I have not been approached in any way by any railway company or the representatives of any railway company to get me to vote for or against any Bill, and I do not cast reflections upon railways for being represented here. We are glad to see those gentlemen and have them express their views. I have never been discourteously approached or buttonholed in any way to try to get me to vote for a Bill or against a Bill. Possibly it is because I was not thought worthy of being approached. That may be the case. I do not know what the reason is, but I have not been approached. We are developing immensely in the matter of railways. There is no country on the face of the earth with the population that has shown such marvellous developments as we have made for the last ten or fifteen years, and that development is still going on. Let us deal carefully and courteously with every change of this kind that is proposed before it is adopted. I hope the House will accept the recommendation of the committee along that line.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The hon. gentleman has tried to leave the impression that this Bill absolutely forces railways to run at a speed of not more than ten miles an hour. It does nothing of the kind. They cannot run faster than ten miles an hour unless they fix their crossings.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman from Wellington declined to give me an opportunity to make a suggestion while he was on the floor, a courtesy that I have always extended in this House, and he referred to a past debate wherein he said I was wrong and he was right. As he has alluded to this matter, I may be allowed to put the matter right between us, because it happened we were both right. My hon. friend was speaking of the civil service, and he spoke of the civil service in the United States, and I did not observe that he passed on to the civil service in England, and I called attention to the fact that they had no good civil service law in the United States. I was speaking of the United States, and he of England. My interruption was made in the most perfect good faith, and we were both right. When I came to see the official report of the debate I saw at once that it was just a misunderstanding. The observation I was going to make when I interrupted my hon. friend has been partly anticipated by the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert. The hon. gentleman from Wellington dwelt on the great evils that will come from the limiting the speed of the railways. Evidently when he made that speech he did not know that there was no change proposed; that trains are obliged at these crossings to be slowed up to ten miles an hour, in the Act as it now stands. The clause in the Act of 1903 reads :

> No train should pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village at a speed greater than ten miles an hour unless the track is fenced or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act, or unless permission is given by some regulation or order of the board.

So that the point that is reached by the Bill before us, is not with reference to the speed of trains. In both cases the train is liable to be slowed up, but for somewhat different reasons. I assume that under the Bill we are now proposing to pass it might call for the application of that law in a greater number of instances than it would under the old Act, but this difficulty of slowing up belongs to the old Act, as well as to the one that is now before us. My hon. friend apparently was not aware of this, and, therefore, his speech was largely beside the question before the House. With regard to my own position, when the Bill came before us I was asked to take some interest in it, and if I approved of it, to help it through. I said I would look at it, and if I thought it was right I would do so. When it came up for second reading, I had not looked at it until I came to my seat, and from the hasty examination that I was able to give it, I thought it was a good measure. I looked at the speeches that were made in the House of Commons by the Minister of Railways and others on the question. I had been told that a compromise had been arrived at there. The Minister of Railways said that after a committee had been appointed and a long inquiry had been held, they had come unanimously to the conclusion that this Bill, not exactly as it was first introduced, but in the compromised form in which it then stood, should become law, and it went through the House of Commons unanimously. My impression was that there was an understanding arrived at with the railway companies on the subject. Such was the impression of two members of the committee, who communicated on the matter with me. I learned afterwards that the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway Companies were not satisfied with the Bill, and that they were still opposing it. Having made a different statement in the House on the strength of the information I received, I made an explanation in the committee in reference to it, that I had found subsequently that the railway companies had not agreed to the compromise Bill, that they were still opposing it. Further, on the day the Railway Committee met—I think it was that day or a day or two earlier—I met Mr. Moore, of the Canadian Northern, and I asked him the attitude of the Canadian Northern Railway towards it, and he said they were not opposing it. Since then I met Mr. Moore, and he said that what he intended to say was that he was not instructed to oppose it; still this company was in opposition to it. So that so far as I know at present, all the great railway companies are in opposition to the Bill. I see that a document has been distributed among us, to the effect that there is an antagonistic feeling against railway companies being stirred up in the country. For my own part I repudiate that in the most distinct terms that I can possibly use. I have no such feeling. The great railway companies of Canada deserve to be treated well. Their interests have a right to be fairly and fully considered in any legislation that comes before this House. They are doing a noble work for Canada. They are co-operating with the government and with the people in developing the material interests of the country. I have a letter in my hands to-day from the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, addressed to the Premier of Canada. It was published in the 'Citizen' this morning, showing what the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is doing. They have, within the last five years, expended over a hundred millions of dollars in equipment, in betterment of their road, and in building new lines; over one hundred million dollars of profits and capital used for the improvement of the railway interests of the country, and this by one company. The Grand Trunk Railway did a grand service for the old provinces of Canada. That cannot be denied. The Canadian Pacific Railway has almost made Canada, with of course the generous co-operation of the government and of the people. While that is all true, and undoubtedly it is true, and they deserve every fair and proper treatment, we must also remember that we are the representatives of the people, and while it is our duty to see that the railway companies are fairly treated in the matter of legislation, the lives of the people must be the first consideration in any legislation that effects the railways. This question of level crossings is one that is agitating the people not only in Canada but also in the United States. The words 'The deadly level crossings' is a phrase familiar to every man who reads the newspapers. Children and adults are killed on the level crossings. They are a source of danger, and I say that the expenditure of a few hundreds or thousands of dollars to the railway companies should not deter the representatives of the people from seeing that these crossings are made as safe as they possibly can. We know that these crossings are dangerous. Lives are lost at them, frequently, I am sorry to say, but we know that at this very moment the railway companies are very heavily taxed to keep up with their work. We know of the congestion of traffic in the west. We know the demands there are upon the railway companies at the present time and, perhaps, this House, while agreeing to accept the compromise which was arrived at in the House of Commons, not I am bound to say between the railway companies and the members of parliament, but between the members of Parliament who were opposed to Mr. Lancaster's Bill when it was first introduced and those who were in favour of it, that we should not require that the change should come into effect immediately. We might defer putting it into operation until the railway companies would have ample time to make preparations for it. I think that would be a suggestion that hon. gentlemen might very reasonably entertain, even those who are most earnest in the support of this Bill. I observe that my hon. friend from Digby has given notice of an amendment that this Bill should not go into operation for a year. For my own part I would not object if we were to enact that it should not go into operation for two years, and, if that were the case the railway companies would have time to protect all their crossings. They would have time to make their applications to the Railway Commissioners with regard to new orders. I am told that in a large number of cases there were orders of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council existing before the Railway Commission came into existence. It is provided in this Bill that these orders shall still remain in force. It is not necessary that it should be provided in the Bill, because another section of the Railway Act provides that all orders made by the Privy Council should remain in operation. They are continued in operation. All orders made by this board also remain in operation with reference to crossings. The railway companies could proceed and obtain orders in regard to others. It would not be such a heavy undertaking, I should think, as they try to represent it. I do not think it would cost nearly as much because we have an efficient railway board—it is admitted to be such—with experts in its employ who would be able, on being instructed by the board, to go over these crossings and classify them and declare in every case what kind of protection was necessary. One crossing might call for a more expensive protection than another would require. Others might not require any, but what is now provided. It would be for the Railway Board, on application by the railway companies, to make an investigation by their own experts, and find out how much was necessary to be done in order to protect human life properly at these crossings. What did we call this Railway Board into existence for ? Is it not just for such matters as these that a reference to the board is contemplated under the existing Act, but it is in such a vague way—I mean the Railway Act as it now stands—that it would not be imperative on the companies to make application to the board with regard to these crossings at all. Prima facie the railways would be, under this Bill, called upon to protect their crossings ; but if they were satisfied that a very expensive protection was not necessary they could appeal to the board. I am satisfied that they could classify them in groups and make application in that way, and then there would be orders of the board made, as I have already said, on the result of the reports of the experts belonging to that board, and I believe that the expense to the railway companies would not be excessive. But no matter what the expense would be, it would lead to the protection of human life, and it would also redound to the credit of this parliament if we adopt such legislation as will have that affect. For that reason I support this Bill, not because I have any feeling against the railway companies. I admire them for the work they have done. I have received every courtesy from them, and have no feeling against them, but I am animated by reasons now given, and the reasons which have been stated by the hon, gentleman from Prince Albert arising from the unanimity which prevailed in the House of Commons with regard to this legislation. This matter was before parliament for several sessions, and I think I am right in saying that the Bill has received not only the approbation of the Minister of Railways but of the government as a whole. I understand that a very prominent member of the present government, Mr. Lemieux, was chairman of the select committee ; that the late Dr. Stockton was another member of the committee and Mr. Lemieux and some other gentlemen, who would bring to the examination of the question not only legal ability, but a very great degree of common sense. Their report was unanimous. The House of Commons also came to a unanimous conclusion and to that conclusion they have adhered, and have sent up the Bill to us again so early in the session that it behooves us to give this matter full consideration and make it law.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I desire to express my humble opinion in as few words as possible. I take it for granted that we are all agreed that the main consideration in this House, as well as in the other House, should be the protection of the life of the public, but I fail to see in examining the Bill which is now before the Senate how life would be protected if it became law. According to my humble appreciation, the adoption of this Bill would have the affect of creating confusion and opening the door to all kinds of litigation, because I must say that I have very seldom found a Bill as badly drafted as this is, and I will explain why.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Except the joint address.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—We have, under the Railway Act as it stands, a provision that is very plain and clear, which reads in this way :

> No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village at a greater speed than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act or unless permission is given by some regulation or order of the board.

Under this, there can be no litigation and there can be no confusion. The speed is limited to ten miles an hour, unless the track is protected in the manner prescribed by the Act, or unless permission is given by the board. Now what is suggested to be substituted for that is the following :

> No train should pass over any highway crossing at rail level in any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village at a greater speed than ten miles an hour, unless such crossing is properly protected, or unless such crossing.
> (a) Unless it is properly protected.

Well, who will decide whether it is properly protected or not ? The question would have to be submitted to the courts of justice. There is no direction as to how the protection is to be furnished. In the Railway Act, under the section I have read, the protection to be provided is defined, but here the words used are 'properly protected.' As I have just stated, the question would have to be referred, in all cases, to the courts to decide whether the crossing was protected or not. Let us proceed further :

> Unless such crossing is properly protected or unless such crossing is constructed and thereafter duly maintained in accordance with the orders, regulations, and directions of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council and of the board in force with respect thereto.

I thought the economy of the Railway Act as passed in 1903, and as it is now on our statute-book, was to substitute for the Railway Committee of the Privy Council in all matters of that kind, that board, and now this Bill seeks to revert to the old system and submit it to a different authority. To my mind that would be creating confusion. It seems to me that the very statement made by the hon. member from Marshfield, that the Railway Board is composed of men in whom we have confidence, and who have all the experience necessary to guide them in arriving at a proper conclusion in matters of this kind, is an excellent reason why we should leave it to the Railway Board and not transfer it virtually from the Railway Board to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. It is well known that conditions prevail in one place where the speed of a train may be greater than would be safe at other places. Take for instance the town of St. John's, in the province of Quebec. It is well known that the Grand Trunk Railway passes on the outskirts of that town, where it does not cause the same danger as where the Canadian Pacific Railway passes. Why adopt a cast iron rule which will apply in all cases and not leave to the Railway Board the discretion of applying the rule as they may consider advisable in the public interest to one part of a city and not to another. As far as I am concerned, unless we have no confidence in the Railway Board, I think these matters should be left with them. They have all the powers necessary. We have in the Railway Act as it stands a well drafted law, and I would for no consideration consent to substitute for it a law which would have the effect of opening the door to all kinds of litigation and of creating confusion.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—It has been said that we should deal courteously with railway corporations. I think we should deal courteously with our friends in the other House, who passed this measure unanimously. The Minister of Railways, in his speech on this Bill, rather condemned the action of the Senate in throwing out a similar Bill last session. This Bill comes to us,

I may say, as a government measure, because it had the sanction of the chairman of the Railway Committee, and the Postmaster General and the Minister of Railways have spoken in its favour. Yet I find, to my astonishment, that some members of the government in this House are opposed to the action of their colleagues and supporters in the other House. I do not wish to dwell on the inconsistency of such a course; we have to deal with the lives of old and decrepid people who cannot run away when they see a train approaching at the rate of forty miles an hour. Perhaps under such circumstances I could run fast enough to save my life, but I can yet say there are many who might not be able to run as fast as I can. We have to deal as Christians with the protection of life, and I hope that on further consideration this Bill will be allowed to pass. It seems surprising that a Bill which comes to us the second time, endorsed by the House of Commons, is opposed here. There are such wise people in this House that they wish to throw out this measure. The wisdom of such men is almost incrediable to me.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to call the attention of the House to a point of order. The report we are asked to concur in is as follows:

The Honourable Mr. Casgrain, from the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, to whom was referred the Bill (4) intituled: An Act in further amendment of the Railway Act, 1903, reported that they had gone through the said Bill, and had directed him to report the same with an amendment, which he was ready to submit whenever the House would be pleased to receive it,

Ordered, that the report be now received, and

The said amendment was then read by the clerk, as follows:

Page 1, line 4.—Leave out the whole of clause 1.

On referring to the Bill I see that if we leave out clause 1, the Bill remains as follows:

Bill (4) An Act in further amendment of the Railway Act, 1903. His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

It leaves nothing at all. It is really a mockery. I submit that such an amendment is out of order. On reference to May, page 458, I find it laid down that:

Amendments are out of order that are irrelevant to the Bill; governed by amendments already negatived; inconsistent with, or contradictory to, the Bill as agreed to by the committee; or that are tendered to the committee in a spirit of mockery; and the chairman would decline to put such questions from the chair. The chairman also, regarding an amendment offered to a Bill that was limited in scope to the repeal of a clause in a statute, ruled that the amendment was out of order.

This is the case here, because its object was a continuance and extension of the clause. It does not enact any clause.

The chairman also regarding an amendment of it to a Bill that was limited in scope to the repeal of a clause in a statute.

This Bill asks for the repeal of the clause in a statute, substituting for that clause another clause.

Ruled that the amendment was out of order because its object was the continuance and extension of the clause to be repealed.

If we accept this amendment we continue the clause to be repealed.

The chairman stated that though the committee had full power to amend even to the extent of nullifying the provisions of a Bill, they could not insert a clause which reversed the principle which the Bill, as read a second time, sought to affirm.

For these reasons, I think that the amendments are not in order. If they were carried, in what position would we be? We would have passed a Bill, the preamble of which had been accepted, but which enacts nothing. If we accept the amendment, the Bill will go back to the House of Commons in that form and we would be the laughing stock of all Christendom.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I understand my hon. friend to say that the report of the committee is not correct. It is a correct report of what took place in the committee. The first clause was not carried. There was only one clause to the Bill, and it is a public Bill. In the first place it might not have been referred to the committee at all; it was intended that it should be dealt with in this House and this House could deal with the preamble of the Bill. In the committee, the first clause was not carried, and the report of the chairman of the committee represents exactly what took place in the committee. The matter is now before the Senate, and it is for the Senate to deal with it.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I propose to move an amendment which will make the matter plain.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have raised a point of order which must be decided before we go any further.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It is still open to move my motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not until the point of order is decided.

The SPEAKER—This report of the Railway Committee was made on a public Bill. I cannot dispose of what has prompted the committee to make the report in the form in which it appears. There was a motion made in amendment to the report of the committee, to refer it to a Committee of the Whole House where it could have been dealt with. That motion was rejected. The Senate is seized with the report of the committee, and I do not think that report can be settled by a point of order. It is for the Senate to take action and decide as to the propriety of adopting the report of the committee, or of sending it back to that committee to be amended; or the Senate can amend the report itself.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—By going into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER—That has been rejected.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I intended to say only a word or two with reference to the merits of this matter. It seems to me the Senate would not be discharging its whole duty unless it adopts the Bill, the principle of which we must assume was adopted when it was referred to a standing committee for consideration.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—No, no.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Hon. gentlemen say 'no, no.' Ordinarily that would be so, and if it was not adopted in this case, it should have been or it should be now. This question about railway crossings should be dealt with now, and dealt with as this Bill provides. It deals with a question of human life and its protection, and we are called upon here to set a higher value upon human life and not submit to postponements or delays in dealing with its proper protection. We have before us now a question which may be fraught with great consequences within the next twelve months. Accidents have happened, and great catastrophes may happen again, and may happen by reason of our refusal to pass this Bill as it came to us from the House of Commons. This question is not a new one. The railways cannot complain that they have not had ample notice. The question was up for consideration when the present Consolidated Railway Act was adopted. It contained this provision, practically, when the Bill came to the Senate; but the Senate struck it out on the ground that it was hasty legislation and that it was unreasonable that the railway companies should be precipitated into such a large expenditure as this would involve on such short notice. An amendment, excluding that provision as to railway crossings, was carried and so the matter has stood from that time to this. It has been the subject of discussion in parliament ever since. A compromise dealing with the matter in the terms of the Bill which is now before us has been arrived at after full consideration by a subcommittee of the House of Commons and the Bill comes to us with the recommendation of practically the unanimous voice of the House of Commons, representing the people who are imperilled by the continuance of the present condition of things. They say, although we have differed in the past, we have agreed now upon a provision which we deem necessary for the protection of human life. Under the circumstances, the Senate would be taking a grave responsibility to reject this measure and to reject it without giving some better reason for doing so than is to be found in the report of the committee recommending that the clause be struck out. To my mind, not many questions of greater importance than this have come before the Senate since I have had the honour of a seat in it. The time has come when railways can no longer complain that it is a precipitate movement; that it is hastily forcing them into a new situation. Let us see what it is that the railway committee are asking the Senate to reject:

> No train shall pass over any highway crossing at rail-level in any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village at a greater speed than ten miles an hour, unless such crossing is properly protected.

Is the Senate going to say that whether a crossing is properly protected or not—whether human life is protected at the railway crossings or not, the railway company shall be at liberty to run their trains at any speed they please, not throughout the whole city or town or village, but where it is thickly peopled—where the population is so dense that human life is always imperilled at those crossings ? Bear in mind it does not so provide for every crossing in a city, town or village, but in thickly settled portions, and unless properly protected. What is unreasonable about that ? Would not every person here admit that such protection should be provided ? Why then should it not be put into the form of law ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.).—Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to say what is the defect in the Railway Act as read by the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—The present provision is practically what was sought to be added at the time of the consolidation of the Railway Acts, but, instead of that, the Railway Act was left with a section that provides not for the protection of crossings, but for fencing where the railways track—not the crossings—is already constructed along, upon or across the highway ; and it provides that the board may order the company within a specified time, to submit to the board a plan and profile of such portion of the railway ; and upon such submission make any order in respect thereof as in the previous section provided. That is the provision in section 187. Section 227 is the one which this Bill was intended to repeal, and section 227 reads as follows :

> No train shall pass in or through any thickly settled portion of any city, town or village at a speed greater than ten miles an hour unless the track is fenced or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act, or unless permission is given by such regulation or order of the board.

What is the provision with reference to crossings ? What is the fencing which is required there ? Not fencing which protects people crossing over the rails, but fences in the nature of cattle-guards, fences which prevents one from driving from the highway along side of the track ; fences which might in some cases where there are no cattle-guards, be an obstacle in the way and cause accidents rather than protect one from them. Fences which would prevent one from turning his horse and driving it parallel to the railway when the horse could not be stopped. So, in point of fact, by the fencing provided for in this statute, and the only one as it stands, would imperil rather than protect life in many cases. Having regard to the gravity of the matter, and the way in which this subject has been dealt with in previous sessions, having regard to the way in which this Bill comes to us now, we are assuming a grave responsibility if we allow it to be rejected in the way this report proposes to do. Let me read to you a word or two of what was said by one who, we may suppose, would have the largest amount of experience and knowledge, and the benefit of the department behind him in speaking on this subject—the ex-Minister of Railways. After speaking of what had been done in a previous discussion, he said :

> We thought it in the public interest that there shoud be some further protection with respect to level crossings and it seems to us under present conditions that no better provision could be had than that contained in this proposed legislation. No one can fail to recognize that there are very many accidents all over Canada yearly, monthly, weekly almost in connection with these rail level crossings, and it was considered that some provision should be made to obviate that danger. The committee therefore made this proposition, which was accepted by the House of Commons unanimously, in fact while the Bill was promoted by a private member it was adopted by the government and made part of the government Bill in amendment to the Railway Act, but when it went to the Senate in the last hours of the session the Senate declined to accept it. It is not for me to question the judgment of the Senate, but it seems to be in the public interest there should be legislation of this character.

I have stated already the view which was taken by members of the Senate when they dealt with that settlement as part of the Railway Act, and I have also stated that the time which elapsed since has given an opportunity to have this objection removed. Now the point of the Bill, as I understand it, is, that instead of the railways being allowed to leave open and exposed a crossing in a thickly peopled part of a city, town or village, they are to be required now to have that crossing fenced or protected in some way. Unless they go to the Railway Board, and have it settled what that is to be, they must take the responsibility and the consequences of protecting it themselves. If they do not choose to do that, they can go to the Railway Board.

They have the choice of one or other, and getting the protection of the Railway Board or the determination of the Railway Board which would relieve them from responsibility. But unless they do that, the onus, the responsibility is upon them to have the crossing protected. That is the point we ought now to determine. I beg to move now, seconded by Hon. Mr. Ellis :

That the report of the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours on Bill (4) be not adopted, but that the said Bill be referred back to the committee, with instructions to report the said Bill as it was referred to the said committee.

Which means the adoption of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Is it not true that under section 227, the track has to be fenced in, or that the Railway Board must intervene to give the protection ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I desire to ask how far the motion which has been placed in your hands by way of amendment duplicates or reaffirms what the House has already rejected ? I think the parliamentary rule is that you cannot, after any question has been affirmed or rejected in the House, repeat the same thing again during the same session. A motion was made for the adoption of the report. You will find it on page 715 of the minutes. I do not think my hon. friend from DeSalaberry was present on that occasion. The motion was made for the adoption of the report, then the Hon. Mr. Ferguson moved in amendment, seconded by Hon. Mr. Wilson, that the amendments be not now agreed to, but that the Bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole presently. Was that motion for a reference to the Railway Committee ?

The SPEAKER—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then I stand corrected, but it only makes it worse.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I have listened very attentively to the various addresses with a view of hearing some arguments, or getting some statement of facts which would deal with the merits of this Bill, and give us some good reasons for changing the decision which the Railway Committee have arrived at in regard to it. We have heard a good deal with regard to the importance of human life, and the great necessity of passing this legislation at the present session in order that human life may be better protected ; but I have failed to hear from any speaker who has addressed the House in support of this Bill any statistics, or even any arguments, to show that the adoption of this Bill contribute in the least to the saving of human life. It does not appear to me that the loss of life at railway crossings has been very great. The accidents which have occurred, as reported in the railway statistics, have been very much larger where people have been walking on the track itself, and not at the crossings where railways crossed the highways. The accidents there are comparatively few compared with the accidents at other places. We have no statistics, so far as I am aware, to show what proportion of the accidents which do happen at public crossings are due to the high rate of speed at which some express trains are run, and much less do we have any statistics to know what proportion of these accidents are due to carelessness or drunkenness or some contributory neglect on the part of the person who is injured at the crossing. So far as my own observation and experience have gone, I am led to believe that the greater number of these accidents, I should say 99 out of every hundred, are due to carelessness or negligence, and too often to the fact that the person injured at the crossing happens to be in a state of intoxication, or for some other reason is unfit to take care of himself. It does appear to me that when we are asked to adopt an important measure like this for the protection of human life, we should have some statements of fact or some statistics to show that there is really urgent need for it, that the loss of life or accidents which occur at highway crossings, under the existing state of things, are in some way due to the speed at which the trains are run at these crossings, and to the lack of adequate protection furnished by railway companies. A good deal has been said, and indeed the gist of all the arguments that have been presented to the House has been that this matter has been the subject of consideration of parliament for two years, that it was referred to a special committee in the House of Commons, and that the Bill which we have now before us is the result of the investigations by that committee, and which that committee reported to the House. That this Bill further had the sanction and support of the Minister of Railways and the representatives of the government in the other House, and it also had the support of the leaders of both great political parties. I am not disposed to say anything derogatory to the high character of these gentlemen and to their ability to frame a measure of this kind ; but so far as I have been able to examine this measure it does not, to my mind, show that it has been prepared with such great care as we would expect a measure to be prepared by the gentlemen to whom reference has been made. The hon. gentleman from De Salaberry pointed out what I am referring to, that this Bill is, in his opinion, a very clumsy amendment of section 227, which is found in the old Railway Act, and my views with regard to that section differ slightly from the views which have been expressed to the House by any gentlemen who have hitherto addressed it. If that section is read carefully hon. gentlemen will note that it applies not to highway crossings alone, but to the whole track through any thickly populated city, town or village, that the parts of the track, except the highways, require to be fenced according to the provisions of this Act. The highway crossings are protected with cattle-guards so that it is impossible for any horse or carriage to go on and impossible for any person to get on unless they climb a fence, and in that way the trains cannot be run in the cities, towns or villages at a higher speed than ten miles an hour. Then so far as the level crossings are concerned, I take it that section 227 includes these crossings as well. A portion of the third and fourth lines covers that. It reads :

> Or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act.

The track between the crossing has to be fenced in accordance with the provisions of this Act, and at the highway crossings the trains have to be run in accordance with the provisions of this Act, which are that the bell has to be rung and the whistle sounded, and a sign posted up giving everybody notice that there is a railway crossing at that point. Now, in the clause which it is proposed to substitute for that clause, no reference is made to any portion of the track within a thickly peopled city, town or village except the highway crossing. The Act which it is proposed to substitute simply refers to a highway crossing and makes no reference to any other part of the railway. I consider that that is a very important omission, and, in that respect, the clause in the Act as it stands on the statute-book is very much better than the clause which is proposed in the Bill now before us. Not only does it provide for the fencing of the track between the highways where the cities or towns are built up and the land is occupied, but, we all know, that in thickly settled villages and small towns particularly, there are large open spaces which it is not the business of any private owner to fence, and including this, this clause in the old Act has been made so broad that all spaces of that kind, and the track itself, and the highway crossings, have to be properly protected if a train is allowed to run at a higher speed than ten miles an hour. The hon. gentleman who introduced this measure said that last year when it was introduced, he introduced the amendment to give it the six months' hoist. This year he is advocating the measure, and he certainly does advocate it with all the zeal of a new-made convert, but it occurred to me, while listening to his speech, that if he had given us some of the great and important reasons which had been suggested to his mind, which led him to change his opinion since last year, they might have had an important influence on this House. However, in some way or another, he avoided that entirely, and relied solely on the fact that the Bill had been passed twice by the House of Commons, to induce the Senate to endorse it. I have studied the matter somewhat, and so far as I am concerned, I have so strong an opinion that the Act as it stands on the statute-book is far superior to the Bill which is now before us, that I must support the report of the Railway Committee. The hon. gentleman from Toronto calls attention to section 187 of the Railway Act. This section deals with existing crossings : that is any crossings where the railway crosses the highway at the time this Act was passed. The preceding section deals with railways which were to be constructed after the passing of this Act and prescribes that before they are carried across any highway, a plan must be submitted to the commissioners, and that they should prescribe whatever was necessary for the protection and convenience of the public ; but with regard to existing crossings—that is railways which had already been constructed the Act says that where a railway has already been constructed upon, along or across any highway, the board may order the company within a specified time to submit to the board a plan and profile of such portion of the railway, and may, upon such submission, make any order in respect thereto as is in the previous section provided. Now, in this Act, the board are clothed with full power to make any order whatever, whenever their attention as called to the fact that a railway crossing is dangerous, and needs any protection ; and it would appear to me if any amendment is desired, it would be much simpler and would meet the case much better, if that Act were simply amended by inserting instead of the word 'may' the word 'shall' in which case it would read that where railways are already constructed along and across any highway, the board shall order the company within a specified time to submit a plan and profile of such portion, upon which they will make an order. That would have been a reasonable mode of accomplishing what some hon. gentlemen think it is very necessary to accomplish. But I cannot vote for this Bill, which is a bungling measure, and as the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry points out, must inevitably lead to litigation and confusion if it is passed.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I agree with the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry in regard to the legal interpretation of this Bill. He is fully justified in saying that it is badly drafted and very clumsy and will lead to litigation. He has found these defects in it, and I find another, a very serious one, that will practically annul the object of the Bill, if it should pass. This Bill is subject to the authority of two bodies. One is dead, and the other is alive. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council is no longer in existence. The Board of Railway Commissioners exists, and this Bill says that these regulations shall be subject to the approval of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council and of the board. Under the old law it is simply necessary to carry out the provisions of the Railway Act to have the sanction of the board ; but now you are asking parliament to pass a law to have the provisions of this Bill carried out by the Railway Committee, which has transferred all its powers to the Railway Board and asking the Railway Board to endorse afterwards what the dead Railway Committee may have done. That is absurd on the face of it, and confusing, and nullifies the provisions which they put in the statutes. They ask that the regulations shall be passed upon by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council and the board. It does not say 'or the board.' It requires the sanction of the two bodies, and supposing the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is reorganized for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Bill, the railway authorities and the public will have to deal with the two bodies. They will have to deal with the body politic, the Railway Committee, and they will have to deal with the Railway Board. Whoever drafted this Bill went too far, and has put in an element which destroys its usefulness. I also agree with the hon. gentleman from New Brunswick, that the Bill is clumsy, that it is not an improvement by any means on clause 227 of the Railway Act of 1903. If it were an improvement on it, I should be in favour of it. If it facilitated the transaction of railroad business in regard to the relation of the public towards the companies, I would be in favour of it ; but the provisions of this Bill do not make for any such amicable arrangement. On the contrary, it destroys the effect of what we had to fight for so hard four years ago, and I was one of those on the floor of this House who helped to get clause 227 and the other sections passed in spite of great opposition at the time. We fought strenuously for it. We have had it in force for the last four years, and it is and has been effective. All the public have to do is to appeal to the Board of Railway Commissioners and they will get all the protection necessary. Section 227 is as plain as ABC :

No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Are you going to fence the road ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Unless the track is fenced, if the Railway Commissioners have any sense, they will certainly order a fence to be built. They will either put a permanent fence along the railway, or, if it is a crossing, they will have a gate which will drop up and down to suit the conditions. The Railway Commissioners are not three babies. They are not men who are going, when a demand is made upon them by a municipality, to have a certain class of protection, to say the law does not give them power. I know the chairman of that commission, and the commissioners themselves, are fully persuaded and convinced that under this law they have all the power requisite to protect life. Why change it? Will any hon. gentleman dispute the contention I have put before the honourable House that these things cannot be done unless we ask the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, which no longer exists, to sanction the provisions of the Bill? In the face of that objection, are the promoters of the Bill to ask to have it passed, notwithstanding the plain absurdity on the face of it? I do not think this honourable House should do so, in view of what we have already placed upon the statute-book, and which, with proper arrangements between the railway company and the public, life will be protected. If the Bill was an improvement on the provisions of the Railway Act of 1903, I should be in favour of it, but it is no improvement and is a piece of clumsy legislation that may lead to litigation and contains nullifying elements in it. I say this House should not be called upon to pass it.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Middlesex)—I had the honour of supporting this measure when it came first before the House and am of the opinion still that it is a good Bill. My hon. friend from Montreal says it is not well drafted, and in proof of that assertion he compares this Bill with the Railway Act. I understand the Railway Act, as it is now on the statute-book, is practically the same as the Act passed in 1903. This Bill now before us went before the House of Commons in its present form in 1906 and also in 1907. It passed through the hands of two different Ministers of Justice, the highest legal authority in the House of Commons or in the country extrajudicial of course, and of the then Minister of Justice, Mr. Fitzpatrick, and the present Minister of Justice, Mr. Aylesworth. As to the members of the House, I would assume that they would see that the Bill was consistent with itself. I would assume that their opinion should carry a good deal of weight. It does with me. I would assume that they would not allow a Bill to go through the House inconsistent with itself or that was badly drafted, or in any sense a bungled Bill; and, although I do not like to commit myself absolutely to the judgment of any man, at present I am inclined to commit myself to the opinion of two Ministers of Justice and to assume that this Bill is reasonably well drafted and that it will serve the purpose for which it was intended. But further the Bill passed to the Railway Committee of the House of Commons and was endorsed by it, one of the largest committees of the House of Commons, on which there are no doubt a great many able lawyers. So we have, at all events, the imprimatur of a large body of able lawyers who are not members of the government, as well as the opinion of two members of the government occupying the highest position under the Crown. I am going to accept that for the moment, not setting up my opinion against it, although I may on some other occasion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This was not a government Bill; it was a public Bill in the hands of a private member. And I am not aware that the Minister of Justice said that it had his approval or that he drafted it.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Middlesex)—I assume that the government would not let the Bill go through on its responsibility unless it was a proper one. That is to let the Bill go through on its responsibility unless it was a proper one. That is the rule of the constitution; the government is responsible for all legislation. For public legislation, in a certain sense, as much as for decent legislation, the government would be recreant to its duty to allow a Bill to go through that traversed or contradicted the Railway Act, which was a government Bill, or that would on the face of it be ineffective if it passes. Having passed the House of Commons with the consent of the government, the government must have been satisfied that it was a good Bill. No member of the government voted against it. Nothing more could be done than would have been done if it had been a government measure. It satisfies me at all events. Shall we be less careful of human life than the ordinary municipality is ? If we refer to the legislation of all the provinces, and particularly of my own province, Ontario, we will find that in matters where life is in far less danger than from railway trains, there is legislation for its protection. Take the matter of bicycling ; in every municipality of any standing there is a by-law that any one using a bicycle should not run it at a greater rate of speed than the limit fixed in the by-law. Why ? Not because there is not good sport in bicycling, but that public life must be preserved. The worst that could happen from a collision with a bicycle is that some body would get a tumble. The same with regard to speeding vehicles on public highways. There is a limit to the speed allowed, and that limit is prescribed by the municipality under a provisional Act. The same applies with regard to automobiles ; the rate in cities is limited, and in the country is not to exceed fifteen miles an hour. I find the same provisions in many states of the neighbouring union, for I had occasion to study that carefully when I was in Toronto; there is a limit to the speed of automobiles. The automobile is dangerous enough, but not so dangerous as a railway train. The provincial legislatures and the municipalities pay some regard to the protection of human life, and surely it is not going to be said that the Senate of Canada is the only body that having the opportunity has neglected to adopt such precautions as are proposed in this Bill. Here is a somewhat startling fact to my mind. I have before me the statistics of the Dominion of Canada showing the loss of life and injury to persons caused by railway trains. I find there were killed at railway crossings : in 1902, 41 persons ; in 1903, 53 persons ; in 1904, 37 persons ; in 1905, 59 persons.

The Railway Act was passed in 1903 and it does not seem to be effective yet in preventing loss of life. Subsequent to the passing of that Act, 59 persons were killed in one year. Is there anything more that we can do ? Besides those that were killed there were injured : in 1902, 60 persons ; in 1903, 72 persons ; in 1904, 65 persons ; in 1905, 67 persons.

The extent of the injuries is not given.

In many cases it may have been perhaps worse than death.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Where are those figures to be found ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Middlesex)—The official statistics published by the Department of Agriculture, and I think they are probably taken from returns made by railway companies to the government. Now that is a very serious catalogue. If we could only look behind the 190 persons that were killed in those four years and see what their death involved, we would shudder before we opposed this Bill. That is my own feeling. To those 190 persons who were killed, life was as precious as ours is to us, and to their families we cannot estimate what their death involved. Then who can imagine the untold torture of the 264 persons injured at railway crossings ? I want no other reason for myself. I do not care what railway companies may say about the convenience to the public of running railway trains at high speed, and I do not care what inconvenience it may occasion railway companies to slow down ; I do not value those more than trifles light as air when I consider the loss of 190 lives and 264 persons injured in five years. I want the railway companies to feel that somebody, perhaps, is taking a little interest in their business. In the last five years there were killed in Canada, in connection with the railways, 1,930 persons, that is people who fell from engines, people who jumped off moving trains, people working on the track, people looking out of the windows, people coupling cars, people killed in collisions and in trains thrown off the track. There was a vast loss of life by collisions. In 1901, 44 persons, in 1902, 92 persons, in 1903, 77 persons, in 1904, 49 persons.

In the same period there were 6,865 persons injured. Why the Boer war was but a circumstance compared with the loss of life on our railways. Let me repeat it—

1,930 killed and 6,865 injured, and the injuries may have entailed as great a loss to the public and to the families of the injured persons as the loss of life. We have here a simple proposition: shall we take the side of safety and humanity, or take the side of the railways who, perhaps, desire to gain a few minutes in speed or to make a record in comparison with the railways of the United States or perhaps to suit the convenience of some men who are anxious to make a certain connection and pass the word on to the conductor that they must sweep through cities and towns no matter whose bones are broken or lives are destroyed, and that they should do all this for the precious privilege of advertising themselves to the world as a great corporation. I would choose the health and life of the people of Canada first. Let me give an illustration of what I mean. A distinguished Canadian lawyer, Mr. Walter Barwick, was killed in a railway accident while travelling from Southampton to London. He wanted to reach London at a certain time and he left the steamer about midnight and took a fast train to London. The engineer wanted to make London at a certain time. The train in sweeping around a curve was drailed and Mr. Barwick was among the killed; and what for? To meet the desire that the train should reach London at a certain hour. Mr. Barwick's family were compensated as far as money could compensate, but what is that to the family? What is it to the families of the 190 persons who were killed at railway crossings if the railway does make a speed record? I have cited, as an illustration, the legislation of the provinces and municipalities, and, as I said before—and I say it with some feeling of emotion—I shudder at the thought that so many lives should be lost under circumstances which are not at all warranted. We live in a fast age and are getting faster. We live at the sacrifice of nerve and tissue, and if by an Act of this kind trains were slowed down and lives saved we would be serving the public and proving ourselves a useful body.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I cannot allow this occasion to pass without saying a word. I have been deeply moved by the pathetic eloquence and denunciation of the hon. member for Prince Albert and the pianissimo utterances of the hon. member for Marshfield, and this burst of eloquence from the hon. gentleman from Middlesex caps the climax. It is all very well to talk about the public; I am just as anxious to save life as any one of them. The idea of any of those gentlemen assuming—because by their expressions they do assume—that any party who votes against this Bill is refusing to protect human life is absurd. How does any hon. gentleman know that one man, woman or child would be saved by the passage of this Bill? I contend they would not. I do not think the railways are to blame at all. At Kingston, as the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce knows, one of the most dangerous crossings in the country exists. I have been three or four times in danger there myself. Now, an order was passed that that crossing should be made safer. It is on the boundary of the city of Kingston and the county of Frontenac. It was decided by the Railway Commissioners that the railway company, the city and county should each pay a share of the expense of protecting the crossing. The railway company is anxious to provide the protection, but the city and the county municipal authorities are squabbling over the matter yet. I do not see why we should put the railways to millions of dollars expense or disturb their arrangements for nothing. I challenge the accuracy of the figures which have been furnished to us of the number of persons killed. If people will attempt to cross a railway track before a moving train they take their chances, and I hardly think the railway is to blame. I do not care whether there is a bar there or not, you could not protect the lives of people who are so reckless. I am as anxious for the public good and the safety of human life as any member of the Senate can be. I am not speaking in favour of the railways because of any expectation I have of getting favours from them. I repudiate such an idea as that, but honestly, from what I know of the state of affairs in Kingston, I fail to see any reason whatever to change the present law and adopt probably what is worse.

The Senate divided on the amendment, which was rejected.

The SPEAKER—The question is now on the adoption of the report of the committee.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Six o'clock—I have another amendment to move.

The report was adopted on a division.

At six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THE SENATE DEBATES.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—moved the adoption of the report of the Standing Committee on the Debates and Reporting of the Senate. He said : The first part of the report deals with a recommendation to adopt the system of publishing the Debates which prevails in the House of Commons. If this recommendation is adopted, it will mean that what is known as the revised edition will be dropped. Under the present system, there is an unrevised edition, which is issued daily, the day following the sitting. This would be continued. We get also a revised edition which contains any corrections which may be made in the first issue, and then there is a further revised edition which is issued in book form. We would get the first and the last, but the intermediate issue would be dropped. Hon. gentlemen would have an opportunity of revising and correcting the reports of their remarks only once, as in the House of Commons. The advantage of the system is that it would save a large amount of the expense of printing, and the edition which goes to the public instead of being this first revised edition for which there is no index, because the paging is changed for the book form, would be the book edition as issued, and we would get the book form much sooner than we can get it under the present system. All considered, I think it would be a decided advantage to adopt the practice of the House of Commons. It would be with the understanding that we would also get the same facilities as to galley forms, which are issued in the House of Commons and enable members of parliament to make the corrections promptly and in advance of the revised edition. I have here a letter from Dr. Dawson, in which he very strongly recommends the adoption of this practice. I know that he is actuated by a strong desire to accommodate the members of this House and to save as much expense as possible. The system is working admirably in the House of Commons, and there is no reason why it should not work equally well in this House, and it would make the practice uniform in both Houses. The second recommendation in the report is that Holland Bros., the official reporters of Debates, be paid for the present session $8,000 instead of the present contract price. This would cover the reporting of the divorce and other committees. The amount paid them last session was $5,832.90, exclusive of what was paid for reporting committees. It comes to about the same price per page as the 'Hansard' of the House of Commons. The reporters have been complaining that our adjournments make it very difficult for them to keep a permanent staff, and they have asked for an increase. The committee has come to the conclusion to grant the increase for the present session, and the amount stated in the report would give them, on the basis of last session, an increase of some $1,800. The last question dealt with in the report is the amount to be paid to the press reporter. He has submitted to the committee that he has been getting $30 a week out of which he has to pay $10 to some one to replace him in the House of Commons while the Senate is sitting, and $10 a week for the typewriting, and the committee has come to the conclusion to recommend that he be allowed $40 a week. I think the work has been very satisfactory. The synopsis is furnished to some 25 or 30 newspapers. I have not sufficiently followed the papers from other cities to ascertain what has been done, but I know that in the city of Montreal the 'Gazette', the 'Star' and the newspapers generally publish the report of the Senate proceedings.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—With regard to the remarks made by the hon. gentleman, I may say that the system which is recommended at present of the unrevised edition was in operation some ten years ago, and then it was a little deficient and it was arranged afterwards that we should have the proofs in galley form, which prevailed until last year. Again we come back to the old system, and I must say that I have not much feeling about this change. One or the other would suit me. But as to the second recommendation, to not issue any revised edition, I must say that I entirely disagree with that proposition. It may be economical, but it would be at the expense of the exactness of the report. You have first an unrevised edition which gives the member who has spoken a chance to make corrections, but we do not know that in the book form we will find the correction that we have made. You will find afterwards that when you get the book form, some of the corrections you have made have not been made by the printer, and then you will complain about the inaccuracy of the report. I must say again, some economy may result from this proposed method, but it will be at the expense of the satisfaction furnished by having a revised edition. The copies of the revised edition do not cost very much—it is not worth speaking of—and you have an opportunity to see whether the corrections you have made on the unrevised editions have been properly made in the revised edition by the printer. If you do not, you will find many deficiencies in the book form. You have no chance to correct it yourself and you have to take it as it comes.

Hon. Mr. COFFEE—I think the objections raised by my hon. friend with regard to the revised proof can be easily overcome. It is, I know, the custom for some members —and I suppose it would apply to both Houses—to make a great many alterations in their speeches. In such cases it would be quite in order to ask the Bureau to send him a revised proof; but I think you will all agree with me that the alterations usually made in galley proof are of such a nature that an ordinary printer can very readily see that they are correctly made. Therefore I think the recommendation of the committee is a wise one and would work well; if it does not work well, we can easily alter it. I think we should give it a trial at any rate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I may say when this subject was discussed in committee, I entertained very strongly the views set forth by the hon. gentleman for St. Boniface but this fact must be borne in mind that we have been advancing very rapidly in improvements with regard to the expedition in getting out these debates in late years, and if he will look at the report, it is provided that we are to have the same advantage that they have in the House of Commons with regard to being furnished with proofs in galley form, before the revised edition. In the House of Commons the members who have spoken are furnished with a proof on the day they have spoken, in galley form and they can make rough corrections in it and what appears in the morning as an unrevised has already been under the eye of the speaker and has received a rough correction. Now I regard it as a matter of very great satisfaction, that we are almost abreast of the House of Commons in the matter of expedition. It used not to be so. We used not to see the unrevised edition for two or three days, and the revised for perhaps ten days. Now we are advancing and there is a strong hope entertained that before another year some machinery will be installed which will still further expedite matters, so that it will be possible to give any member who has spoken in the afternoon, or even in the evening, an opportunity of correcting his speeches in galley form on the same day, so that it will not be absolutely the unrevised that will appear next morning. If that happens, we will be just in as good a position as we are now with the unrevised and the revised editions. By having it first in galley form it will give us just the same number of stages that we have now, while we will have this decided advantage, that the book form will come out instead of what we now call the revised, and that it will be furnished with a monthly index, and in that way will become valuable for reference, not only among ourselves, but just as the House of Commons book form now to the members of the press to whom it is sent and to everybody else. I agree with my hon. friend from London that it is well worth our while to give this a fair trial and we are very hopeful, from the information we have, that machinery will be equipped in the reporters rooms by another session which will bring matters at least up to the standard of the House of Commons service at the present time, and if that is done we will be all right. I think hon. gentlemen will do well to adopt the report and give it a fair trial. I have experienced some trouble just as my hon. friend has. I have found on one or two occasions that the book form has been mutilated in making the corrections from the revised. Lines had been put in twice, and such things as that had been done. Of course that may happen at any time, but where the speech is loaded with figures and tables it is the duty of the member making the speech to give the printer all the help he can and see that it is made right, because sometimes figures are rather complicated and tables are not in a form the printer can follow easily, and it is a duty of the member to render all the assistance possible.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL— I understand by this first paragraph that we are to return to the system that prevailed some years ago, of having the edition of the first report sent to each member in galley form, instead of, as at present, in page form. Is that what is recommended in the words 'your committee recommend that the practice obtaining in the House of Commons be adopted'?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Those who will take part in the debate will get the galley form, and all members of the Senate will get the unrevised edition as we get it to-day, and then we will get the revised edition in book form. I omitted to make it plain that under the system now prevailing the first revised edition is distributed to the public and to all newspapers; but there is no index and there can be no index for that edition, so that it is thrown into the waste paper basket and it is no use for future reference, and our debates therefore are not really as useful as they should be; whereas, under the change, if the change is adopted, the index will be furnished to the general public and the ordinary newspapers, because it will agree with the book form, and the book form will be issued much sooner than it can be issued now. It has been stated that the cost of the unrevised edition is but a trifle. I believe the cost represents a pretty large amount, because all the matter has to be kept standing during the whole session and the book form is printed only after the session, and sometimes pretty late, because some alterations might be made by two or three or half a dozen members of the Senate at a very late period.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand all that. The only question I ask, a matter of which I am not sure, is as to the manner in which the first edition was to be sent to each member who had made a speech. The hon. gentleman may not remember, but before he came into the Senate the report of each senator's speech or remarks was sent to him in galley form. It was afterwards changed to the present system, which I think every practical man would object to at once as adding a great expense to the getting out of the report. I am very glad to see that the committee have returned to the old system and I must say 'I told you so.' That is a very old saying, but hon. gentlemen will remember that I pointed this out on two or three occasions. If you have the proof sheet as formerly sent to you in page form, every hon. gentleman knows that if you add a line or two lines to it, you have to run over several pages in order to get the adjustment correct, and it is a large expense. The corrections in many printing offices, which take place particularly in the printing of a book, cost sometimes a fourth and sometimes half as much as the original composition, and the time that is wasted in changing the different pages and forms where you have to run it over, as my hon. friend said a few minutes ago, where an important change is made in the speech, and in many cases a line or two added in order to make the ideas that have been advanced by the Senate plainer to the reader, necessitates, if a sixteen page forme going over the whole sixteen pages. It will be a saving of expense, I am sure, and much easier and better to have the galley form for those who desire to make any correction. As to the other portions of the hon. gentleman's remarks, I understand from the report what is intended, and I am under the impression, looking at it casually, that it is a great improvement on the past system.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—As to having the book form sooner than we get it I have very great doubts as to that. I think these are, perhaps, suggestions by the printers, which they are in the habit of making, and if the expectation can be realized well and good. If the senator who speaks is to get a proof of his remarks in galley form himself only, and we are to have an unrevised edition, it is not so objectionable as I understood the report to be at first, and I suppose the chairman can give us the assurance that we will get that proof in galley form. With that change, I think the experiment is worth while trying.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have not any very strong opinion upon the matter which is before the House, but I have some little doubt as to what the practical working of the new system will be. Substantially it is going back to the system which prevailed ten or a dozen years ago. We were not satisfied with the system then, and I think the general feeling among the members of the House was that the change in having the unrevised edition come out the morning after the debate was a decided improvement upon the previous system.

Of course, it has been said by some hon. gentlemen who are members of the committee that we shall have our speeches in galley form on the same day on which the speeches are delivered. I have no doubt that would be a consummation devotedly to be wished, but I have very grave doubt as to whether we shall see that consummation arrive. Our experience in former years, when we were furnished with proofs of our speeches in galley form was, not that they came out so early; but, on the contrary, we got the proof in galley form about the same time that we get the unrevised edition now, and we got the speeches in complete form about the time we now get the revised edition. It may be that with the greater facilities for rapid work, which I understand exist now, we may get the unrevised edition the morning after the speech is made, but I take the liberty to doubt it. There was this thing with respect to the unrevised edition; while it might not be altogether fair to the hon. gentlemen who had spoken the day before, it at any rate gave the other members of the House a chance to see what the substance of the speeches had been. If, for instance, an hon. gentleman to-day wished to reply in a certain sense to an hon. member who had spoken yesterday, he had in the unrevised edition the substance of the speech of the hon. member to whom he wished to reply, which was a great convenience, no doubt. That we cannot expect to have unless the reporter and the Printing Bureau show greater promptness than they have done in the past, I say specially, the Printing Bureau.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The unrevised edition will not be affected by the change.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I venture to express a doubt as to that. For one thing, I have known the reports of the 'Debates' to be hung up for three or four days because some prominent member of the Senate had not taken the trouble to correct his speech. Some hon. gentlemen were too busy and could not spare time to correct the galleys sent them, and I have known the first edition to be delayed for three days for that reason. It should be distinctly understood that under this new system no neglect or incapacity of a senator to correct his speech immediately should hinder the unrevised edition from appearing next morning. Hon. gentlemen will see how hard it is for officers like the reporters, if a prominent member of the Senate has made a long, and what he thinks an important speech, to issue the revised edition before that hon. gentleman has returned the corrected galley form of his speech. The only thing is for the House to lay down a fixed and definite rule that it shall be the imperative duty of the reporters to bring the revised edition out the next morning.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I absolutely agree with the hon. member that the unrevised edition should not be held back because a member does not attend to the correcting of the galley form promptly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The difficulties which the hon. member seems to think might arise under the galley system might easily be avoided or not by the issue of the galley form in full of the whole debate. At present you get the unrevised report of the debate, not in galley form; but if you receive galley form of the whole debate, all the difficulties will disappear and you will avoid the extra expense which I have pointed out. The reporters complained, and very justly, in the past, of the neglect of members—I do not know whether it applies exclusively to prominent members—who have spoken and received proofs of their speeches, and failed to make corrections within the time provided by the rules. Well, if they do not comply with the rule, let them take the consequences; that is the way to meet that.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—If you want the unrevised edition the next morning you will have to correct the proof in galley form the same night. It will be impossible for some members to do that. They may be away for some reason or other, and their speeches will appear in the unrevised edition without correction.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Let us understand the working of this; I understand it is the system which obtains in the House of Commons. The system there is this, that those of the members who have taken part in the debate can, as a rule, have their speeches in galley form during the evening, and have an opportunity of making the first correction in time for the next morning; but if they do not make the corrections, the unrevised edition is not delayed. It is always issued in the morning, and it is intended to be the same here. Whether the corrections are made on the galley form in time or not will not affect the issuing of the unrevised edition, and we will get it the next day as we get it now.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does not the hon. chairman of the committee think that this will lead to abuse. You give a space of three or four inches on each side of the printed matter in the galley for a member to insert what he likes. There is lots of space in the margin of the unrevised edition to correct typographical errors or mistakes in dates, but if you allow the speakers the privilege of fabricating new speeches you will lead the House into difficulties. I do not know that such extensive revision should be necessary. I for one am prepared to stand or fall by what I say on the floor of the House and I think every member ought to do the same. I know that members complain of reading speeches in the revised edition that they never heard in this House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Perhaps they were not present.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They were, but in the revised edition the speeches were changed and contained statements which other members had no opportunity to answer. I state this as an argument against the galley form. I am quite content to accept the unrevised edition as it is, and make my corrections on the margin. I may say the reporters of this House deserve all credit for the very capable way in which they report the speeches, and the rapidity with which they get their work done. On that point I take issue with the hon. senator from Halifax. I say there is no blame to be attached to the reporters of this House in regard to the rapidity of the service.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not reflect in any way upon the reporters.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman said the greatest fault was on the Printing Bureau, giving the House to understand that there was some fault to be found with the reporters. I know their report is in the hands of the printers soon after the House rises, and they deserve credit for the manner in which they perform the service. As far as the galleys are concerned, if hon. senators want to correct their speeches in such a way that they cannot be recognized by those who heard them, I think the system will be objectionable.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY—I do not anticipate the slightest difficulty in carrying on this work in a very smooth and satisfactory manner. There are certain conditions to be observed and if the members of the Senate one and all would only observe the conditions required by the reporters and printers, I do not think there would be the slightest dissatisfaction. The whole work is like a piece of machinery; if one of the members retains his proof two or three hours or a day longer than he should retain it, the whole business is disturbed. The printers have to impose these forms. They are obliged to go to press, and if a member fails to send in his corrections in good time he has only himself to blame if they do not appear in the report. First of all, the copy go from the reporters to the Bureau. The linotypes are always at work and there are plenty of operators. The report is put in type and the proofs are pulled in galley form and read by the proofreaders; then the corrections are made and corrected proofs are pulled for the use of the members and sent up to the House. Those proofs should be read and returned at once. Then the forms are imposed and the work goes on smoothly all through. If we give the system a fair trial there will be no difficulty. There will be more satisfaction than at present and we will have no cause to regret the change we are now making.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—As to making changes in speeches, I quite understand that those who speak English require very little space, but I do not know whether the French members of the Senate will find it so easy. We sometimes find it necessary to make considerable changes so as to give our speeches a grammatical form at least.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So do the English senators.

The motion was agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (145) An Act to amend the Criminal Code. He said: This Bill amends different sections of the Criminal Code in which it has been discovered there were defects. Sometimes the wrong words are used or the conditions are not applicable. For instance, in the Northwest Territories it is not necessary to start a criminal prosecution before a court by an indictment; counts in indictment are not used. An ordinary information or statement would be sufficient. Then in regard to common bawdy houses it has been decided by one of the judges that if such a house consists of a single room, with a single person occupying it, such a house does not come under the statute. It was rather an extraordinary interpretation for a judge to make. The changes affect the Yukon and Northwest Territories, except one clause which rates the province of Quebec and which gives the definition of a judge. I shall be glad to get further information at the next stage.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

RESIDENTIAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the second reading of Bill (161) An Act to amend the Act of the present session incorporating the Residential Fire Insurance Company. He said: In one sense this is a private Bill and at first sight it might be thought it was open to the objection that there had been no petition, but if hon. gentlemen will be kind enough to read the Bill they will see that that is hardly the case. The Bill which it amends provides that the company shall not commence business until $100,000 of the capital stock has been paid in cash, and it provides further that in each succeeding year, for five years, an additional sum of $1,500 shall be paid in cash upon the capital stock of the company. Of course, $1,500 is absurd. The capital stock is $1,000,000. It is a clerical error, and the only object of this Bill is to remedy that error.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Has the Bill received the Royal Assent?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It has.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

REPRESENTATION OF SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA ACT.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (51) An Act to readjust the representation of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta in the House of Commons, and to amend the Representation Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—This Bill divides Saskatchewan into ten electoral districts, and Alberta into seven. It had the unanimous consent of members in the other Chamber, so I presume there will be no objection to it.

On clause 2,

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have not looked at this Bill, but I assume that those interested have examined it carefully and that there is no danger of such trouble as we have had over the subsidies address. I make this remark because if, hereafter, it should be found that some blunder had been made somewhere, I want the responsibility to rest where it should be.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—All I know about it is, the members from the district had frequent meetings of the committee during the last weeks, and agreed upon this Bill in the shape in which it is now.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Somebody has found that all the necessary provisions have been included in the Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is merely a division of the districts.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER from the committee reported the Bill without any amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

SALARIES OF FRENCH TRANSLATORS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the adoption of he third report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate. He said : I propose to make one slight amendment in this. In the 2nd clause, after the word 'month', I wish to insert, 'who has not reached the maximum fixed in said report.' The report as it reads at the present time would provide that all the persons named in the schedule would be increased $50 a year ; but it is not the intention that that should be done. It is intended to increase those named in the schedule who have not reached the maximum.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I understand the report, it recommends an increase to all the staff ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The committee intended to abide by the decision of the House arrived at last year, when a maximum salary was fixed for the permanent employees of the House. The committee, the other day, in consideration of good services rendered, recommended an increase of $50 a year to those who had not reached the maximum. The wording of the report would leave it open to question whether the $50 a year would not apply to all the members of the staff, regardless of whether they had reached the maximum or not. To make that clear, I move the amendment which my hon. friend has suggested, to leave no room for misunderstanding.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Do I understand that those who have reached the maximum will receive $50 extra ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then I object. Because a man has reached the maximum of $600 or $700 or $800, after having been in the service of the Senate for 25 or 30 years, is no reason why he should not get this increase. The cry is going up throughout the country that the cost of living is increasing, and the burden falls on the poor man rather than on the rich man. While the rich man can buy sugar at 4½ cents a pound, the poor man has to pay 5 cents; the rich man's coal costs him $6, while the poor man who has to buy his coal by the hundred pounds pays as high as $10.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—This was considered last year.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I object that it has not been reconsidered this year. Men who have been in the service for 30 years should receive some consideration.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is no such officer in the employ of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There is one in the cloak room, who has been there since 1875.

Hon. Mr. POWER—He has not been getting the same salary ever since ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—He has reached the maximum, and if he lives another thirty years he will be still receiving $800 a year, and I do not think it is very fair to draw the line as rigidly as that, under the circumstances.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am going to take a course which is somewhat unusual to me. I very seldom object to a report of a committee, particularly a report from the Committee on Contingent Accounts, unless I think there is some difficulty in understanding the wording of the report or some objectionable wording. I pointed out that in the last report there was a difficulty about the wording, and the hon. chairman of the committee accepted my suggestion. In reference to the question of salaries paid to officials of the House and in private life, my idea is that a man should be paid in proportion to the importance of work which he has to perform, and his ability to perform it. Men in the service of the government should receive at least as much remuneration for services rendered as if they were occupied in private life or in private enterprise in similar work. My attention was called to this more particularly in looking at the newspaper report of what is taking place in the House of Commons. I refer now especially to a very important class of our employees. I mean the French translators. In the House of Commons I notice that they have a much larger staff than we have to perform the work in this House, and necessarily so on account of the quantity of work that they have to perform during each session ; but I am not aware that the work performed by the translators in the House of Commons is of any greater importance than that which has to be performed by the translators of this House, and I also learn, whether correctly or not, from some little inquiry that I have made, that the gentlemen who perform that work for the Senate have just as much work to do proportionately, considering the number of the translators, as those who occupy similar positions in the House of Commons. Of course, my remarks are based upon information from those in whom I place the utmost confidence, and who have a knowledge of the work which is to be performed by the translators. I am informed not by members of the House but by those who know the gentlemen who perform this work, that they are a better class than has ever been in the service of the Senate in the past. They are men of literary attainments, they are men of education, who perform their duties satisfactorily to those who are most interested in the work. I notice that in the estimates before the House of Commons they have provided for an increase of the salaries of the translators in the House of Commons, the salaries ranging from fifteen hundred to two thousand dollars per annum. I believe the maximum salary of the translators of this House under the rules which have been cited by the chairman, is only $1,600, so that as long as we adhere to this rule the salaries of these gentlemen cannot exceed the amount which I have mentioned. I ask the Senate why should the translators of this House, men of equal ability in the work which they perform with those who do the same work in the House of Commons be paid $300 or $400 less than is paid in the Commons ? I have called the attention of the House to this fact believing as I do that the payment of the civil service should be commensurate with the importance of the work which they have to perform, and the amount of the work which they have to perform, and the manner and the correctness with which it is done. I am not in the habit of advocating increase of salaries where I think it is unnecessary, but while there is a general increase amongst the class of employees in this House whose positions could be occupied and their duties performed by scores of men that are at hand any moment, I cannot for the life of me see why the more intellectual portion of the staff should not be treated at least in as liberal a manner as those of the House of Commons. Holding these views, I propose to move an amendment to the report, which I hope the chairman will be as ready to accept as he was the suggestion which I made for a change in the report the other day. I therefore move, as an amendment, that the following words be added to the third report of the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, at the end of paragraph No. 2 : ' with the exception of Messrs. Trudel, Boucher and Chaplin, the three translators, who are hereby entitled to and given the maximum salaries of their class, inasmuch as the scale adopted by this House would have given them that maximum had it been applied from the time of their appointment.' This is simply to provide for giving these translators the maximum of their salary.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Would it not be fair and equitable to apply that same principle to all the other employees of the House, the same as to these gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, I thought I was sufficiently clear in my remarks in introducing that matter. You may have had a messenger whose duty is simply to stand at the door. He does not require high intellectual development to perform such work. There are hundreds on the street who could do it. I pointed out that I thought a gentleman occuping a prominent position which required not only literary ability, but education, industry, and knowledge of the business which they have to perform, should be paid in proportion to the importance of the work, upon the same principle that a bank manager is paid. The hon. gentleman might as well say that because a bank manager is receiving $25,000 to $50,000 on account of his thorough knowledge of banking and the financial business of the country that, therefore, the clerk who serves under him as a book-keeper should have the same salary. The thing is ridiculously absurd, and I thought I made that point sufficiently clear. There are men in the employment of the Senate who receive a full compensation for the duty which they perform. There are men in the Senate who receive a larger remuneration for the service which they perform than they could earn in any other position in life. It is to the other class that I direct my remarks, and it is not because it is these two or these three gentlemen, but because I beleive the position they occupy is sufficiently important to justify the adoption of the proposition which I am presenting.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I did not intend to make any comparison between the gentlemen in the Senate. I simply meant for each class. I understand the difference between the two, certainly.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I desire to give a word of explanation why I second this motion, and I must say I do it with pleasure, because I deem it my duty to interfere with the report which has been submitted to this honourable House. As was very properly stated by the hon. gentleman from Hastings, we should take into consideration the requirements and the fitness to fill a certain position in the civil service. There are a number of positions that are filled and paid pretty high salaries, which can be filled by almost anybody ; but the position of translator is a very difficult position. It requires a man of high education and long training. We have here the names of the persons that are mentioned in the motion, three employees, but two of them have been in the service for fifteen and twenty years. Mr. Trudel has been fully fifteen years in the service, and I am sure he has not hitherto demanded any increase of salary, and, as far as I am aware, he has not in the present instance asked for it. But I feel that it is unfair to accept the work of this man without remunerating him properly. After fifteen years of good service, his salary remains at $1,500, with a maximum of $1,600, and it seems to me to be our duty, after some fifteen years of service, to advance him to the maximum of $1,600 a year.

Hon. Mr. POWER—To give him $50 more than the report.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes, another employee, Mr. Boucher, has been over twenty years in the civil service. He has rendered very good service. He is one of the best translators that we can have. He is a man who has studied law. He has been admitted to practice law and has had literary training, is admirably educated as a translator, and does his work very well indeed. I have followed his work, and I can say that he does it as well as any translator can be expected to do it, and he is being paid at the rate of some $1,200 or $1,400 a year, after twenty years' service. It seems to me it is unfair, and I think we should now raise it to $1,600. As far as the other gentleman, Mr. Chapman, is concerned, it is true he has not been as long in the service, but he is a man of high education. He is a poet who does honour to our nationality and to the country, and he is doing his work very well also. It seems to me, therefore, that it is fair that these three gentlemen be given the amount which is mentioned in the amendment. Now, the point has been covered, or partly covered, by the hon. gentleman from Hastings, that in the Commons they are paid at the rate of two thousand a year, for doing the same class of work.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think that question is settled.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Well, they are being paid from $1,500 to $1,800. They stand on the pay-roll for those amounts at present, and I understand it is in the estimates that they should be paid $2,000, and that those estimates will very likely be passed. But I do not think we should be absolutely guided by that. I think we should be guided by what is fair. We should not be demanding or receiving the services of any employee, especially employees with expert qualifications, without fairly remunerating them. That is the principle upon which I go, and because I felt that it would be an injustice to these three gentlemen if we did not adopt the course suggested by the amendment. I may say that I have figures which show that they are doing fully as much work, if not more work, than is being done by similar employees in the House of Commons, although they have been paid much less for a number of years.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I desire to say a few words in support of the amendment which is proposed, and of the remarks made by my hon. friend from De Salaberry. It is true that the French translator mush have high literary attainments in addition to long training. He is really a professional man, and it seems to me such men should be paid at least the same salary as is paid to a first-class clerk, and their salary ranges from $1,500 to $2,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—$2,400 is the maximum.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—These men of high education, as has been stated, do not receive even the minimum salary of a first-class clerk. It seems quite unfair. With regard to their work, they do more work here than the translators in the House of Commons. I have a comparison of the figures for four years. In 1903 each translator in the Commons translated on the average 743 pages, while those in the Senate made 909 pages. In 1904 the translators in the Commons made 454 pages, while the translators in the Senate in that year made 619. In 1905 they made less. The pages done by the translators in the Commons in that year averaged 491, and in the Senate 468—not much difference. In 1906 the translators in the Commons averaged 383 pages, while in the same year the translators in the Senate averaged 657 pages, and in summing up the whole four years, we find that the translators in the Commons have averaged 2,073 pages, whilst in the Senate the translators have each averaged 2,650, and still the translators in the Commons are going to receive $2,000 each. It is in the estimates.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is not settled yet.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—When it is placed in the estimates by the government, it is likely to be carried. It seems to me that, under the circumstances, the case of these gentlemen should be taken into favourable consideration by the Senate, and I am very glad to support the amendment which has been proposed.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I should like to ask the hon. mover of the amendment, at what figure does he intend to place the salary?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—$1,600.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What is the purport of the amendment?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To increase the present salary of these gentlemen to the maximum, as provided by the rule.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is $1,600. I am sorry the hon. gentleman has limited it to those figures, in view of the facts cited by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The rules of the Senate have fixed a maximum, and if I had gone beyond that, I would have had to ask the repeal of the Act. If these gentlemen receive an increase up to the maximum at present, leaving the future to look after itself, they will be very well satisfied.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am prepared to accept the explanation, and it is the only thing which justifies it in the face of the facts just given to this House by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface, that the translators of the Senate have been doing for some years over fifty per cent more than the translators of the Commons. In 1904, they translated in the Commons an average of 391 pages, and in the Senate 652, one hundred per cent more, and the officials in the Commons are receiving $1,500, and are going to receive $2,000 in the future. Therefore, I am thoroughly in sympathy with the demand put forth by the hon. gentleman from Hastings, and seconded by the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry in regard to this matter. As far as the merits of the work of these men are concerned, I have some knowledge. I do not know them personally, probably never met them, but I know their work, and I know their French translation is as good as that which any professor of a university could make. It is not only necessary that they should have a training and knowledge of their own language, but in order to get the correct sense of a translation into their own language, they have to know the genius of the English language and must have a perfect knowledge of the two languages to be able to produce an accurate translation. As the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry has said, we have officers doing this translation who are men of the highest grade, intellectually. They have national reputations as literateurs, as men who are doing a credit to Canada in the arts, and in poetry, and I am surprised that their remuneration has been so low. I for one would have moved before this, had I known that the translators of the Senate were receiving less remuneration than the translators of the House of Commons. They are entitled to the same treatment, no matter what our rules may be, and if our rules are against honesty and justice, the sooner they are changed the better. I hope the hon. senator from Hastings will take an opportunity, if some members of the committee do not do so, to have these rules changed, in order to provide that the translators of the Senate shall be placed on the same level as the translators of the Commons, especially in view of the fact that they have more work to do, and do it equally well.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think this matter has been looked at altogether as it should be, from a business point of view. I may say, in the first place, that the contingencies of the Senate, as I understand, have been already exceeded, and the question is where the money is to come from.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Out of the $120,000,000.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will furnish it from his own pocket.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In the next place, what they may be proposing to do in the House of Commons is not a matter which would necessarily guide us. I fancy that, on the whole, the members of the Senate are as well qualified to judge as to what they should pay their employees as the members of the House of Commons.

I think that, perhaps, we are a little less influenced by political considerations in this House than they are in the House of Commons. It is very easy for a number of gentlemen who have behind them a majority of members of the House of Commons to bring pressure to bear on the powers that be that cannot be resisted. The facts about the House of Commons as they have been brought in here, are something of this kind; up to about three or four years ago, the pay of the Hansard French translators in the House of Commons was $1,000 a year. It was then increased to $1,500, and during the present session there was a well organized strike, so to say, got up for the purpose of lifting them up to $2,000.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They did right.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That question has not been settled. I understand there is a good deal of difference between the French reporters and the French Hansard translators which has not been settled. I understand the Hansard reporters think the translators ought not to be placed on the same footing as themselves.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are the estimates down?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I believe so. Let us take the position as it is now in our own House which, I think, is the right thing to do. Honourable gentlemen know that for some time members of the House had been annoyed continually by employees trying to secure increases of salary. It is a very unpleasant thing to be obliged to refuse applications of that kind, particularly when, as it is very often the case, the applicants are persons who really need the additional emoluments. But we are not here to exercise charity at the expense of the country. We are here to do the country's business in a reasonably businesslike way. The committee on Internal Economy appointed a sub-committee to prepare a scale of salaries so as to prevent this eternal worrying of Senators for increases of pay. The sub-committee devoted a good deal of time and attention to the subject, and prepared a scale which was submitted to the general committee. It was approved by the general committee and reported to this House. The scheme was not rushed through; it was considered at all its stages, and adopted by the House last year.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—Was the report as presented to the House adopted?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think there were two changes made in it. The House, in its wisdom, thought to give some $200 additional to one officer, and, I think, $100 to another. I thought we should have stood by the committee's report, not that the officers did not deserve the remuneration recommended; but the committee had made its report, and unless there was something wrong about it we should have endorsed that report. What is the history of these gentlemen? I do not say anything about Mr. Trudel who has been in the service of the Senate for some time and has got near the maximum. The effect of the amendment of the Honourable Senator from Hastings would be simply to give Mr. Trudel $50 more than he would get under the report of the committee. Mr. Bouchard came into the employ of the Senate in March, 1899, at a salary of $1,000, and I may be allowed to remark here that the statement made by some honourable gentlemen that he had been in the public service before coming to the Senate may be in one sense correct, but it is not absolutely correct. When Mr. Bouchard came to us, he had ceased to be in the service, and the same remark applies to Mr. Chapman. Mr. Bouchard came into the service of the Senate in 1899 at a salary of $1,000. In 1900 that was increased to $1,200, and in 1904 to $1.300. Last year it was increased to $1,400. It is not a very munificent salary, I admit, but Mr. Bouchard was willing to come in 1899 at a salary of $1,000, and I do not see why he should be so exceedingly discontented now, at a salary of $1,450.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is the gentleman married ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes. Perhaps there is this to be said on behalf of Mr. Bouchard, that if some gentleman would move that he be paid something handsome for his efforts as an immigration agent, I shall be prepared to support it. His family is supposed to approach the maximum of the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Oh twelve is a minimum.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Then with regard to Mr. Chapman ; I understand he has no family. He was appointed in the month of April 1902 at a salary of $1,000. That salary was increased to $1,100 in 1904. Last year the committee made it $1,200 and he will get $50 of an increase this year ; so from 1902 to 1907 there is an increase of $250. If these gentlemen were satisfied to come in and serve at the small figure, surely they must be able to get along at the increased figures. We made a scale of salaries to be paid and the very first year after making it we tear it up, because if we destroy the scale with respect to these three gentlemen, naturally every employee of the Senate will feel that he is at liberty to worry senators to get an increase which is not in accordance with the scale. It is hard to discuss a question in which the interests of our French officers are concerned, because hon. gentlemen who belong to the French race seem to think that anything that is said which is not in favour of whatever is proposed to be done for these officers is the result of animosity against the race. I wish to say that there have been occasions in the past history of the Senate when there was a chance to show good will towards our employees of the French race, and, on some occasions at any rate, I did not fail to show it, but I do feel that, where a committee, and then the House afterwards, have solemnly agreed upon a scale of payments, to go—influenced no doubt by motives which are creditable, but which are not altogether appropriate in dealing with public money—and upset that scale the following session, is something which I cannot approve of.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I shall be very glad to vote for the amendment of the hon. senator from Hastings. He has very properly said that translating is special work. I may have a sympathetic feeling in that way, because I was at one time, many years ago, a French translator in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What did they pay you ?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—We got a small remuneration in those days, and I was very young then.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—How long ago was that ?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—About thirty years ago. The translator requires special training. The three gentlemen whose names have been mentioned here, are men who have devoted many years to that special kind of work, and, in order to be able to do it properly some of them have made special studies. Mr. Bouchard, for instance. The hon. member for Halifax says that Mr. Bouchard only commenced in the service in 1899, but he had been in the House of Commons as translator a long time. I remember thirty years ago, when I was a translator there, he was a translator also. He may have left the service at one time, but he came back again, and I think he has been in the service consequently thirty years. When he commenced here, the indemnity of a member of parliament was $1,000 ; but since then everything has gone up—it is a growing time.

Hon. Mr. POWER.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Even the hon. member from Halifax had only a $1,000 at that time.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—At that time the session lasted three months or three and one-half months at the outside. Now the sessions run from five months upwards, and the volumes of the Debates are very much larger. Compare the reports of recent sessions with those of some years ago, and you will see how largely the work has increased. At that time there was an interval between sessions of seven or eight months, and during that time the officials could find something else to do. At present they hardly get through with the work of one session until they begin another so that, practically they devote all their time to the work here. One of the translators told me that although he only got $1,000 a year some sessions ago he made nearly twice that amount doing newspaper work during the recess ; but since the sessions have grown longer he cannot get any kind of employment. It would be but fair, knowing all the circumstances, and the very hard work these people do, that they should be better remunerated. I do not take it for granted that because they do not perform as much work as the translators of the House of Commons that they should not have the same remuneration. Their work is worth the money. One of these men is a lawyer. Mr. Bouchard is nearly sixty years of age, and he has been for some thirty-five years at this work. He should be at the maximum if he is ever to reach it. Mr. Chapman is universally known, not only in the province of Quebec, but even in France, where his works have been crowned with success. He is a man of whom we are proud. He has not been able to devote much effort to literary work of late, because his time is so much taken up with his official work in the Senate. It is an advantage to us to have these documents in good French just the same as hon. gentlemen who speak English wish to see the reports of their speeches in good English. There are very few people who can write French correctly. These translators must be experts in the language, because it is very difficult to convert English phrases into good French phrases. The genius of the two languages is so different, that it is exceedingly difficult to correctly express an idea when translated from one language to the other. It would be much easier for a man to conceive an idea himself than to translate it. Besides that the translator must have a good knowledge of the subject he is translating. Translating is one of the most scientific forms of work done in the civil service, and the one requiring most general knowledge ; therefore I heartily support the amendment of the hon. senator from Hastings.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—As the hon. Senator from Halifax has said, the committee last year went carefully into a consideration of all the salaries. I think it was the wish of every member of the Senate that some system should be adopted whereby we would have a regular system of increases. The committee, therefore, recommended that whenever practicable a maximum and minimum salary should be fixed for each office, and that there should be an increase of $50 a year until the maximum is reached. That was reported by the subcommittee to the Internal Economy Committee, and the Internal Economy Committee reported to the House. They made further provision for efficiency, such increase not to be regarded as a matter of right, but to be granted only on the recommendation of the Clerk of the Senate, who should certify that the employee had discharged his duty faithfully, and the recommendation of the Clerk must be concurred in by the Internal Economy Committee. Maximum and minimum salaries were provided for. The maximum salaries of the French translators were fixed at $1,200 and $1,600, respectively, and that was adopted by the House. It may be that these gentlemen are well qualified and entitled to better pay, but, at the same time, if we are to adopt any principle that increase should be given according to the term of service and fitness, then I do not think it is fair that we should in one instance make an increase of only $50 to one gentleman, Mr. Trudel, who is entitled this year to $1,550, while we give Mr. Bouchard an increase of $150, and if the hon. gentleman's motion prevails, will give Mr. Chapman an increase of $350. If the hon. gentleman would accept an increase of $100 a year for these gentlemen, I, as chairman of the committee, am willing to accept the change. I would be inclined to let these translators have an increase of $100 instead of $50 until they reach the maximum. That would give Mr. Trudel his maximum this year, and the other translators an increase of $100 each instead of $50. When the subcommittee reported to the Internal Economy Committee, they did so after making careful inquiry of what was paid in the House of Commons. I understand that last year the maximum salary paid a translator in the House of Commons was $1,500.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—$1,800.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Apparently they were getting $1,500, because I see they are increased in the estimates from $1,500 to $2,000.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the translators who were getting $1,500 were the Hansard translators.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The estimates show an increase of salaries for nine translators of Debates from $1,500 to $2,000 each, and, therefore, the maximum must have been $1,500. The committee last year, after careful consideration, recommended that the maximum for the translators of Debates should be $1,600, and I submit that we ought to have some regard for the length of service of these officials in fixing their pay. So far as the committee are concerned, there was very little doubt as to what we were doing when we adopted this report a year ago, and as chairman of the committee, I would not be doing my duty unless I stood by the report adopted by the House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The statement has been made that there is another difference to be noted between the translators of the Commons Hansard and the translators of the Senate Debates, that the translators in the Commons complete their work a few days after prorogation, after which they are free until the following session, while the translators of the Senate Debates are kept at work during the twelve months. Is that a fact? If it is a fact it is an outrage.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have not been furnished with that brief, so I do not know.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The chairman of the committee ought to know. I am assured by an hon. member that the translators are occupied here during the whole year, and yet the translators in the House of Commons are paid higher salaries. No wonder our friend, Mr. Chapman, finds no time to devote to literary work. Under the circumstances, I am only sorry that the rules and regulations interfere with giving the translators fair remuneration for their services.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am very glad to see my hon. friend, the chairman of the committee, recognizes the fact that these gentlemen are not paid enough, because he is willing to give an increase of $100 instead of $50. I should like to know if the hon. senator from Halifax can reconcile the speech he has made to-day, in which he so earnestly urges the Senate to adhere rigidly and strictly to the rules, with the proposal he made a few years ago to increase the salaries of some clerks, who have not very important business to transact, who have simply to look after books and not even to keep accounts. At that time he wanted to make a jump up to the maximum and pay the chief clerk $2,400 a year.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman must be making a mistake. I do not think I ever advocated such a thing as that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would much rather call the hon. gentleman's attention to it quietly; I do not want to mention names.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I know another gentleman who did that, but I opposed it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman says he opposed it, I stand corrected. It does not alter the fact that I mentioned in the first place, and which has been admirably illustrated by the hon. senator from de Lanaudière, that we ought to pay in proportion to the importance of the service rendered. The hon. member from Halifax asked how much the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière received when he was a translator in the lower house. I am not so sure if that is to be a basis on which we are to act. When I came into parliament, we got $600 per session. After a number of years that was increased to $1,000 per session, and since the present government have come into power, they have increased it to $1,500 and to $2,500, an increase in the sessional indemnity since confederation of no less than 316⅔ per cent. I am not aware that the hon. gentlemen who are opposing this amendment objected to the increase of their indemnity from $1,000 to $2,500. I mention this to show that we ourselves have recognized the justice of increasing our remuneration. The sessions have grown longer. I should not have made this motion did I not conscientiously believe that men who occupy important positions should receive better remuneration than they get to-day, and should get the same pay as those who are doing a similar class of work in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—One listening to a discussion like this is apt to get his ideas out of joint. As I understand the hon. gentleman's motion, he proposes to make an increase in certain salaries considerably out of proportion to the allowances given to others. Where will we be next year as the effect of that resolution? Would it not be better to accept the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, and readjust the scale in such a way that there would be proportionate advances to all? When my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Cloran) tells us that the French translators of the Senate are here all year translating, what are they doing? Do they simply sit down and translate to each other?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Ever since I have been in the Senate it has always taken them the full twelve months to make the translation.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—That may be correct. I suppose we cannot have the same number of translators in proportion to the work, but even that is a puzzle to one who hears it for the first time. I would suggest to my hon. friend to readjust his motion on the lines proposed by the chairman of the committee.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I had no idea of saying anything on this subject, but I wish to remark that the parsimonious spirit which pervades this chamber to a great extent—at least one portion of it—astonishes me. Where is comes from I do not know, but any man who would prevent an employee getting what he actually deserves for his work, I do not care where he belongs to, should withdraw from such a position. Salaries should be paid according to the merits of the men, and the work they do. A translator must live the life of a gentleman, as we understand the term here. His clothing, his board, the society he moves in, and everything else must be in keeping with the position he occupies. To be a good French translator, I conceive, requires an amount of education which very few men possess, an amount which I think a large portion of the Senate, myself included, might be found wanting. The very fact that an old member of this House who never tries to go beyond what he thinks is strictly just, submits a motion of this kind ought to commend the proposition. A few dollars added to the salaries of these men will never hurt this country. What an idea it is that a country of this size, boasting of its greatness, its fertility and its resources, should descend to the petty business of trying to keep a hundred or a couple of hundred dollars from the salary of competent men. I do not want any official to be paid more than the men in his class, or to do injustice to any one, but this Internal Economy Committee ought to be called the Infernal Economy Committee because they have some idea in their heads of running this Senate and everything connected with it on the smallest and meanest basis. I hope there is enough courage, honesty and honour left in this Senate to stand by the amendment to pay our translators what they fairly and honestly earn.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I do not belong to the committee. I did serve on that committee a year or two ago, but was changed to the Banking and Commerce Committee. When a committee has duly and carefully considered a matter connected with the salaries paid officers of this committee we should treat the report with respect. I am disposed, unless there are very serious objections, to stand by the committee. I should like my esteemed friend from Belleville—and I respect him just as much as does his friend from Kingston—to accept the compromise offered by the chairman of the committee. If he will do that, we will settle this question without further trouble. That compromise is, to give an increase of $100 instead of $50 until the salaries reach the maximum of their grade. That I think would be a reasonable settlement of the whole trouble, otherwise, as far as I am concerned, I should undoubtedly stand by the report of the committee. I find since I have come to this House that there are some civil servants who have been in the habit of pleading, pressing and coaxing members of that committee to consent to increases. Then, if they fail before the committee, they commence asking favours from members of the House, to see if they cannot accomplish their ends by moving amendments of this kind. I think that is a bad principle. It is encouraging the servants of this Chamber to make appeals on their own behalf, first to the committee, and if they cannot accomplish anything there they make an appeal to the House. I know that the matter has come up several times in this shape. We should not encourage such a practice, and, consequently, I am inclined to stand by the report of the committee, unless my hon. friend is prepared to accept the proposition that has been made.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I should like to offer an amendment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has spoken.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I think that last year when the report of the Internal Economy Committee was made to the House and adopted, that there was just as much urgent reason why this question should have been adjusted at that time, and the services of these gentlemen brought to the attention of the House, and action taken. I do not think the matter has changed in respect of that, and I cannot help feeling that the disposition of the House dealing with these questions and practically settling them, by some action, and disturbing them almost every following session, shows a lack of continuity of action which is not compatible with business methods. I think the proposition of the chairman, making the increase of a hundred dollars instead of fifty, which was the custom by which the salaries of officials should be increased is one which the House should accept, and therefore I move:

"That the words "maximum amount" in said amendment be struck out, and replaced by the words "By one hundred dollars each year until they have reached their maximum amount."

The House divided on the amendment, which was lost on the following division:—

WINDING UP ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Reported from committee.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (147), an Act to amend the Winding up Act.

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The necessity for this Bill arises from the fact of the insolvency of the York County Loan Co., of Toronto. There are probably three or four thousand persons who have claims, and it is quite impossible in winding up the estate, that each individual claimant should have a solicitor, and this authorizes the court to appoint a solicitor for the different classes of creditors. Each class will have a representative. There is a clause that the Trust Company need not give security, because the Trust Company is a body that is absolutely good surety.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK, from the committee reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (113) 'An Act to amend the Post Office Act.'

He said : This is a very short Bill, making certain changes in the Post Office Act. The first change is substituting the Post Office Inspector for the Comptroller in one particular place. As the law now stands, before a man could become a superintendent, he would have to be ten years in the mail clerk service, and this amendment reduces the term to five years. The next change is correcting a typographical error, substituting the word 'prevent' for 'permit.' Then there is a provision adding Calgary and Edmonton to the Dead Letter Offices in the west. Clause 5 is authorizing the Postmaster General to require any of the transportation companies to carry any official of the Post Office Department, limiting it to those named under the statute, with the mail matter.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (136) 'An Act to amend the provisions of the Criminal Code in respect of the preservation of the peace in the vicinity of Public Works.'—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock to-morrow.

SENATE.

OTTAWA, Wednesday, April 24, 1907.

MORNING SITTING.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

POSTAGE ON NEWSPAPERS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of all letters between the Chamber of Commerce, Montreal, or any other parties, and the Honourable the Postmaster General, or the Post Office Department, in regard to the increase of postal charges upon newspapers posted for transmission to the United States or any other countries.

He said: I would like to call attention of hon. gentlemen to a statement made in the House of Commons by the Postmaster General, in which he announced a change of policy or of practice in the postage on newspapers which will have the effect of very largely increasing the cost of, and will work harm to, a number of the small newspapers printed in this country. There is quite a number of newspapers, principally weekly papers, but the same thing applies to daily papers, which go from places in Canada to Canadians who have taken up their residence in the United States. These newspapers enable them to keep up their communication to a large extent with their early homes. We have all observed the Home Week celebrations which take place in the summer time and the effect which newspapers have in keeping up an interest in the old home, and bringing Canadians back, even though only as visitors. Generally, those papers are published at a very low rate which are circulated in the United States. While I offer no objection to the general policy of the Postmaster General, I should like to point out that, as I read his statement, newspapers which are printed now at $1 a year, and some that are issued twice a week, and which are sold at the same price, will have to pay a postage under this new regulation of one cent each. In some cases the postage will be more than the subscription price. I understand that the French Chamber of Commerce in Montreal have taken the matter up and have expressed the opinion that in view of the fact that this change is taking place immediately, the newspapers should be permitted to complete their contracts with those who have subscribed by the year, and that, in such cases, the government should carry the present postage until the existing contracts expire. But the postage is too much. For a weekly paper the subscription price of which is $1, the postage will be 52 cents a year, and for a newspaper published twice a week, the postage will be $1.04 a year, while the postage on a daily paper will amount to $3 a year, a very onerous charge and really not an advantage to Canada itself, because, as I said before, interest in the old home is kept up by reason of newspapers being largely circulated under a cheap postage rate. I should like to know what view the French Chamber of Commerce take of the matter, and if there are any papers on the subject I should like to have them laid before the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the increased postage to which the hon. gentleman has referred apply to the circulation of these papers in Canada, or only as newspapers sent out of the country?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Only to newspapers exchanged between the United States and Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If there is any correspondence I shall be glad to have it brought down as early as possible.

The motion was agreed to.

LIENS IN FAVOUR OF MINERS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved

Resolved, that the ordinance of the 26th May last, intituled: 'An ordinance respecting liens in favour of miners' and the ordinance of the 7th July last, intituled: 'An ordinance respecting the disposal of water from streams and lakes in the Yukon Territory for the purpose of generating power, and for the control and management of the sale, transmission and use of such power,' passed by the Governor in Council, under the authority of provisions which now comprise section 16 of chapter 63, R.S.C., 1906, and which previous to the coming into force of that Act comprised in subsection 1 of section 8 of chapter 6 of the statutes of 1898, as that subsection was enacted by secton 3 of chapter 34 of 2 Edward VII., copies of which ordinances, as well as of the necessary order in council in each instance have been laid before this House, are approved by this House, in accordance with the provisions of section 17 of the said chapter 63.

He said: This resolution comes before the House in pursuance of the statute of 1898. In the revised statutes, section 17 governs it. It provides that every ordinance made under the authority of a preceding session shall remain in force until the day immediately succeeding the prorogation of the next session of parliament, and no longer, unless at such session of parliament such ordinance is approved by resolution of both Houses. It would appear that the control that parliament has over it is either to reject or approve of it. Similar resolutions have been brought down from time to time and have been regarded perhaps more as a matter of form, unless there was some opposition to them. I am not aware that there is any opposition to the two ordinances referred to here. One relates entirely to giving the miner a lien on his work, which seems to be a very fair and just thing. It provides that any person who performs any work or service upon or in respect of, or furnishes wood to be used in quartz mining, shall by virtue thereof have a lien for such service or work on the claim and appurtenances thereto. It gives very full power, and points out that the miner must register his claim so as to have a lien on the property. The other ordinance refers to the distribution of water-powers. It provides that the Minister of the Interior may, upon application being made, grant to any person or company for any term not exceeding 20 years, the right to use water from any stream or lake at any particular part thereof, for the purpose of generating power, and the right to transmit the same. I may say the power is restricted to the quantity defined, and is subject to the rights of all other parties, such miners as shall at the time of such grant be working on the stream above or below the ditch head, or the rights of any person then or thereafter lawfully using such water for any purpose whatever. They both appear to be in the interest of the working-men, and, as I have never heard of any objection to them the last year, I think there can be no objection to adopting the resolutions. One was passed in 1905 and the other in 1906, and both have been approved by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am very glad to hear of the provision for the preservation of the water rights to old miners. We know that a few years ago the water rights of the Yukon were conceded to the Treadgold Commission, but that concession has been cancelled, and the rights of miners who are now using the water are preserved by this regulation. Anything like a monopoly in the Yukon, should be avoided ; the miners who are there individually should have all their rights preserved, and I hope those regulations now and hereafter will accomplish that, and that these privileges will not be handed over to monopolists.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend from Victoria possibly may labour under a misconception as to any difference really existing by reason of these ordinances from the condition of affairs before their passage. Unfortunately, this government or the Dominion government has always assumed to itself the right to deal with concessions of that nature. and, under those ordinances, they will continue to do so. It seems to me there is no good reason why the Yukon Council could not deal very much more advantageously with the regulation of matters of this kind than this government. The passage of those ordinances must necessarily be the result of the autocratic advice, so to speak, of the Yukon Commissioner. There is a representative assembly in the Yukon Territory, at least partly nominative, and partly representative, and there is no good reason in my judgment why a council or an assembly of that kind, elected by the people in addition to the nominated representatives, should not be able to pronounce, and should not have the authority to pronounce upon local matters of this character. We find the Governor in Council passing a lien's ordinance, for instance, dealing particularly with local matters, with which Ottawa cannot possibly have any familiarity or knowledge. The authorities here must absolutely rely on the Yukon Commissioner. He represents the federal government. He does not represent the people of the Yukon. They have nothing to say. They have no opinion to express. They have no right to express any opinion as to the advice which he gives to this government relative to the passing of ordinances which must necessarily govern the people quite as strongly, if not more so, than the ordinances which they pass in their own assembly. The question of liens is dealt with by every assembly in the Dominion of Canada. Yet we find the Dominion government assuming power to express itself in these ordinances, as what the procedure and what the provisions shall be upon a local matter. We find that, under these ordinances, the power is still vested in the Dominion government of dealing with water-powers and other territorial rights so far as regulating them is concerned. It seems to me the regulation of those rights can be very much better administered by the Yukon Council, men who, as I said before, are the representatives of the people, than by the Governor in Council acting under the advice of one man, the Yukon Commissioner.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is some misapprehension about it. Those regulations are drawn up by the Yukon Council. The order in council recites :

The minister further submits that the committee to the Yukon Council has prepared a lien as contemplated by the Yukon Council, and the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory in council prays that the Dominion government will enact the same.

It was drawn up by them, and all the government here do is to pass an order in council approving of it, and then lay it on the table.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I find this is being done in pursuance of section 17 of the Yukon Territory Act, and that also section 16, gives to the Governor in Council absolute authority to pass ordinances and regulations of this nature. True, the Yukon Council may possibly express their wish along particular lines, or in a certain direction, and doubtless the Governor in Council may act ; but so far as we are aware, and until my hon. friend has just mentioned the fact, and has all, so far as we know, been done simply upon the authority of the Governor in Council, regardless of the commissioner.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not understand it that way. The order in council puts it on a proper basis. It reads :

On a report, dated 9th May, 1906——

That is a preliminary proceeding of the Yukon Council. It proceeds :

The minister submits that a committee of the Yukon Territory Council has prepared a lien as contemplated by the Yukon Council, and that the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory in Council prays that the Dominion government shall enact the same.

We simply enact what is recommended by them.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I think that the regulation with respect to supplying water to the miners is a very salutary one.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is just one suggestion which naturally arises from reading this document, and also from the observations of the hon. leader of the opposition. I think it is not a desirable thing that we should be trying at such very long range to deal with the legal business of a district like the Yukon, if it can be avoided. Inasmuch as in all the old provinces, which formed the original federation, and also in British Columbia, the mines are within the control and jurisdiction of the local legislature, it strikes me that there is no good reason, now that the means of access and exit from the Yukon are comparatively satisfactory, why the mines of that region should not be controlled a little nearer their site than in Ottawa, and the best thing to do in the interests of the country at large, and particularly in the interests of the Dominion government, is to annex the Yukon to British Columbia and let British Columbia manage the Yukon mines, and then I do not see any special reason why the mines, whatever mines there may be, in Manitoba and Saskatchewan and Alberta should not be controlled by the provincial legislature there, as they are controlled in the older provinces.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to ask my hon friend, the hon. Secretary of State, if he will be good enough to call the attention of the proper parties to an order of this House voted on the 6th February, 1907, for the production of a statement indicating in so many columns the names, ages and nationalities of all persons who have been appointed to any position in the customs house at Quebec since 1st July, 1906 ; also another order adopted 19th February for a return in regard to the employment of foreigners in the militia service of Canada. I have already called the attention of the hon. minister to the address which has been passed by this House, and he promised me that he would inquire. Perhaps the multiplicity of his ministerial functions prevented him from doing so ; but I should like to have those returns before the end of the session.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (148) An Act to amend Schedule A to the Revised Statutes, 1906.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (147) An Act to amend the Winding-up Act, as amended.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (145) An Act to amend the Criminal Code.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2,

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not see where section 2 comes in. Paragraph 16 says that indictment and count respectively include information and presentment, as well as indictment, &c. It refers to any formal charge under section 873a, and any record.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. gentleman will look on the next page, he will see that in section 873 of the Criminal Code, the following is to be inserted as 873a :

In the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, it shall not be necessary to prefer any bill of indictment before a grand jury, but it shall be sufficient that the trial of any person charged with a criminal offence be commenced by a formal charge in writing setting forth as in an indictment the offence with which he is charged.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am aware of that

Hon. Mr. POWER—16 is altered so as to include that formal charge.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This anticipates our passing 873a, because we have no 873a yet.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Section 225 of the Code is struck out, and the following is substituted therefor :

225. A common bawdy house is a house, room, set of rooms or place of any kind kept for purposes of prostitution or occupied or resorted to by one or more persons for such purposes.

That was in consequence of a decision given in Manitoba, that a common bawdy house with one woman in it was not a bawdy house—a very stupid decision.

The section was adopted.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then section 873a has been added, to follow section 873. It reads as follows :

873a. In the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, it shall not be necessary to prefer any bill or indictment before a grand jury, but it shall be sufficient that the trial of any person charged with a criminal offence be commenced by a formal charge in writing setting forth as in an indictment the offence with which he is charged.

2. Such charge may be preferred by the Attorney General or an agent of the Attorney General, or by any person with the written consent of the judge of the court or of the Attorney General, or by order of the court.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This means that in these provinces a person can be placed on trial for a criminal offence without an indictment by a grand jury ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, in these two provinces the method is by information.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is that the practice in these provinces at present ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We are now legislating upon it, and are we simply making their practice legal, covering it by an Act of this parliament ? If so would it not be right, in dealing with it, that some safeguards with regard to criminal prosecution should prevail in these two provinces as well as the other provinces ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So they do.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In the other provinces, you cannot put a man on trial in the higher courts without a presentment by the grand jury.

Hon. Mr. POWER—They have no grand jury out there.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Many provinces would like to get rid of the grand jury system.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have not had time to look into it, and not being a lawyer I do not know; but is the provision which constitutes a grand jury a provincial enactment solely ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no, it is under the Criminal Code.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is done by requiring a grand jury to inquire, in a preliminary way, into a man's liability to be tried before he is formally placed on trial.

If that is so, why is there an exception with reference to these provinces ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot answer my hon. friend other than I think the provinces are in advance of the rest of the country, because it is regarded in very many instances as a farce. It is not considered the most common sense way of proceeding.

Hon Mr. McMILLAN—Why not amend the general law ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The grand jury is, to a certain extent, under the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature. As far as the criminal law is concerned, it is under the jurisdiction of this parliament, and in the province of Ontario, I know that there was a very strong feeling some time ago in favour of abolishing the grand jury, and there was a strong feeling in this House also. The difficulty was to get the two parties to agree upon the course to be adopted, but I think it would be very much to be regretted that in these new provisions they should introduce a system which is likely to handicap them, and this enactment is to adapt the procedure to the condition of things in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am surprised to hear the hon. gentleman from Halifax give utterance to such a legal heresy as to say the grand jury is under the jurisdiction of this parliament. In no shape or form is either the grand or petit jury under the control of this parliament.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I said that as regards the criminal law this parliament had to do with the grand jury.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I go further and say that in no shape or form has this parliament anything to do with the grand jury, and has no control over it. It is a creation of the provincial legislature, so much so, that I know, owing to a report which I made on that question in 1890, that the grand jury system was completely changed in Quebec, and the Dominion parliament was not consulted in the matter. The grand jury deals with crimes created under Dominion law, but that fact gives the government no power over them whatever, and to make such a statement on the floor of the House is a heresy and against our provincial rights. The grand jury can be made 24, 12 or 16 by provincial power, and by no other power, and there can be no question in this parliament of abolishing the grand jury or the jury system. That lies entirely within the jurisdiction of the provincial power, and the day will be far distant when either the grand jury or the petit jury will be abolished. The grand jury renders to-day great service to the country. It does not render the service that should be rendered, the same as in the United States, where the grand jury is very often called upon to investigate abuses of public right and abuses under public administration. Up to the present in this country, especially in the province of Quebec, the grand jury, after examining the indictments which have been laid before it, have, owing to the courtesy of the sheriff or to the direction of the judge, to visit public institutions and to make report thereon and that is all they have to do after the criminal work is concluded. I should like to see the usefulness of the grand jury extended, and where abuses of public right or abuses of public administration—that is maladministration—occur, that the grand jury would have the same right to investigate as obtains in the United States. I make these remarks simply to put on record the fact that this parliament and government have in no way, shape or form any right to interfere with the existence, control or administration of justice in regard to that point.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not know what the practice is in Quebec, but I suppose they have the same criminal law that we have in the other provinces, and I think that under that criminal law an indictment has to be found by a grand jury. The hon. gentleman, I understand, has an extensive practice in the province of Quebec in the criminal courts and otherwise, and perhaps he will tell me if it is not necessary there to bring an indictment before the grand jury.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes, I said so.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Then what does the hon. gentleman mean by saying that parliament had nothing to do with the grand jury ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Nothing to do with them in regard to their existence in any shape or form.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—As I understand it, the organization of the courts belongs to the province, and now I begin to appreciate the situation. In Saskatchewan and Alberta they have not organized the courts in such a way as to have a grand jury. Now we are declaring by this enactment that in these provinces, where there is no grand jury, how a trial can be proceeded with. If that is the position I now understand the amendment.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. COMEAU, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

JUVENILE DELIQUENTS BILL.

DEBATE RESUMED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading (Bill FFF) An Act respecting Juvenile Delinquents.—(Hon. Mr. Sullivan.)

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I am sorry that this very important matter should remain over till the end of the session, because I am satisfied there will not be time for hon. gentlemen whose opinion will be very valuable, to address this House. On the last occasion, I was engaged in discussing the question whether the acquired criminal habit or the congenital one, was the greater, or whether there was one or two. I understood some hon. gentlemen thought there was but one, that is the one of environment—that environment was the cause of all the crime. I draw the issue there ; statistics, facts and observation over a term of years go to prove the contrary. These questions of generation and the inherited tendency of a certain quality to appear in the offspring of a human being are, as I said before, most difficult for any one to examine. However, as to whether babies are born good and become bad by the corrupt influence of those in whose company they are trained, or whether they come into this world inheriting a certain predisposition to certain qualities good or bad, I am of the opinion that they do. Evidence of this can be found in a variety of ways, some of which I mentioned in the first part of my remarks. I mentioned about certain facts and conditions of disease and other qualities, appearing in the offspring. To give you examples of these, I need only mention certain qualities that you have noticed yourselves, probably on a rather limited scale, but these observations go to show that there is a great deal of truth in it. These qualities may be transmitted by one or both parents. For instance, Huxley, the greatest biologist of last century, was of the opinion that he inherited his artistic quality from his father, and that there was a very large slice of his mother in his character, compared with the small amount derived from his father. Moreover, good or bad qualities will skip a generation or two and come back. It is well known to those who have large picture galleries, that the physical features of one generation will stop and then after one, two or three generations will reappear. That quality is called atavism, or reversion to an ancestral type. But if the anatomical qualities can be transmitted, such as a tall or a short stature, so also can the mental or moral qualities, whatever they may be. The remedy for inherited evil tendencies is through the establishment of certain schools which this Bill contemplates in this country. Of all the means taken for the purpose of eliminating a criminal or diseased condition, it is essential that the person be removed from the environment in which he is. You know from your own observation that it is useless to try to correct a child and allow him to remain under evil influences. On this line these reformatories or schools have been established. I mention this to show at what an early period England took hold of this matter. It was begun as early as 1827, but the first attempt failed, because it was connected with crime. The schools were closed in 1866 because the number of inmates had dwindled from over 500 down to 60. Then came the establishment of other reformatories, but these also have something to do with penal institutions, and the result of the objection to them was the establishment, in 1854, of the first industrial school. That went on for several years, amended by not less than eight or nine Acts all extending the scope of it.

The object, as I said, was to take these children away from criminal surroundings and place them in a position where they would have instilled into their minds right sentiments and have their time profitably employed so as to fit them for good citizens and qualify them to earn an honest and comfortable living. There is a sort of fascination to young people in crime, as soon as they attain an age to understand the adventure connected with it, and they resist any attempt at confinement or restraint. The laws in England were made very stringent in their character. The schools were connected, not with the jurisprudence, but with the education of the country. The consequence was, they were extended all through England and have done an immense amount of good, diminishing crime and particularly juvenile crime. In 1900 there were 42 reformatories, 148 industrial schools, 15 day industrial schools, and 22 truant schools, attended by 4,953 boys, of whom 764 were in Scotland, and 4,189 in England. There were under sentence in those reformatories 3,786 Protestant, and 1,166 Roman Catholic boys, and 498 Protestant, and 160 Roman Catholic girls. I mention these figures to show the number confined in the reformatories compared with those in the industrial schools. In the industrial schools there were 14,384 boys. There were 4,719 girls in England, and 1,417 in Scotland. Of these 11,135 were Protestant, and 3,249 Roman Catholic boys, and 3,042 Protestant girls to 1,637 Roman Catholics. There were at large on license of these 1,498. These facts will show, with the extent of this movement, the great effort which England is making to suppress crime. A more humane act could not be taken by any individual that that which contemplates the snatching from destruction of boys and girls at an early age and turning them into good citizens. I mentioned in my former remarks the cost of this work—£21 for each boy and £20 for each girl. I mentioned also that about two-thirds of the cost is made up by the exchequer, and the rest of it from the rates on the county or borough, and by subscription and on the products of the labour of the inmates of the institution. These schools are generally entrusted to the boards of education in towns, unless there might be a special board in a large city. There is a scale given for the crime the boy may be committed for. The amount for a thief, for example, was six shillings; that is the highest, and the amount for a refractory boy is two shillings. The management, of course, is not at all like a prison. There is no uniform and the superintendent is supposed to know every one of these children, their habits and their tendency towards crime if they have any. I could not very well go over the treatment under which they place these children, but, as I mentioned before, the first influence employed is religion. Huxley, who, as you know, was a sceptic, when appointed towards the close of his life on the London school board, when arranging a curriculum for the public schools, put the Bible first, because he thought the religious instinct should be cultivated as much as possible. Moreover, they placed their children under Protestant or Catholic control. I will not speak for the Protestants, but the Roman Catholics have a great many communities both of men and women, and these communities can afford to work cheaper than the secular schools. You know they are not paid specially for their work. They do it because their obligations impose it on them as a duty, and they do it as a labour of love. There is a rivalry between the different communities, and you can see where the religious instruction comes in, I see that in this Bill there is a rigid rule which is to be enforced that each boy or girl be placed under the control of the denomination to which he or she belongs, so that feature of the treatment will be thoroughly observed. The next is elementary education. Of course the famous three R's will be required —reading, writing and arithmatic. If any inmate should manifest special talent, that will be cultivated. Then there will be physical training. Where those institutions are under the control of boards of education, they can be, and will be well managed, and the proper course of instruction will be observed. Then, connected with this, there are some esthetic teachers. On this Prof. Huxley was very strong. He thought physical education was very important for boys, though he did not see so much need of it for girls, except to give them a good gait and a good figure, and there cannot be a better endowment for a young woman than a good gait and a good figure. You can get any number of subjects for treatment of this kind in the city of Ottawa, when walking down the streets of the city, especially on Saturday. Esthetic training can be conducted by means of music. The boys who cultivate musical talent, find ready employment in military and other bands.

The next point is physical education consisting of athletics. My hon. friend from Calgary mentioned the influence which crime has in producing decrepitude of body and injuring the race. I am sure you were all impressed with that, though it may not go so far as some persons think. I read some time ago that if you cut off a dog's tail for some generations, in the end you would develop a breed of dogs without tails. It is said that the Abothammedans of the Celebes have hardly any prepuce. There is also the fact that the Scotchman of to-day have developed into a tall race of men, and then there is the fact of heads becoming elongated or square. I was very much interested, when in London, in visiting the Kensington museum where facts were being collected concerning physical influences. You could be measured, the number of respirations counted, the state of your pulse, facts about your father and mother mentioned, everything was taken down and no fee was charged. The trustees of the museum gave Sir Frances Boulton the space necessary to carry on his investigations. He has published a book since, which I have not had the opportunity of seeing. By taking such observations you can get at the effects of certain treatment and physical conditions, such as the effect of occupation, &c., on the anatomy of the race. We know that is so under certain conditions. I mentioned before about the degeneracy observable in some countries. The boys readily take advantage of the physical training. For instance, a great many of them go to the training ships and take a course, which they enjoy very much. The result of this treatment in England I have already mentioned. I should also mention in connection with the subject of physical culture that marks are given for conduct in the various classes. That is a good way of starting emulation. The object is to place the authorities of this institution in loco parentis—in the place of the parents—to arouse in them a feeling of enthusiasm, and a feeling of hope, and to make them appear as if they were not retained in any institution involuntarily. The idea is to make their stay voluntary, and where institutions are voluntary, the benefit is correspondingly great, and, as the Rev. Sydner Turner, who was one of the early philanthropists in this matter, said, when you come to the voluntary institutions you can dispose of the inmates ten times more satisfactorily than if they are in a public institution. They keep track of the address of these boys, their occupation and surroundings, and they report for some years afterwards. The report of the inspector for three years, is as follows: There were 13,390 boys and these were placed as follows: 939 in the army, 443 in the navy, 2,194 marine and fishermen, 428 farming, 678 factories, 475 carters, 395 iron and steel workers, and casual employment 577, and the reconvicted cases in those were only 976, or seven per cent.

With reference to the girls, there may be a great deal more difficulty in placing them, or perhaps there is less, probably there is less. They are educated as domestic servants. That is the main feature, and nothing could be better. Where any of them show any ability or any tendency to learn, and devote themselves to a higher sphere of occupation, they are taken care of as shop-girls, clerks, and typewriter-operators. They are thoroughly instructed in that respect, and, as I understand the condition, the number of girls placed in these positions is greater, and it is far more satisfactory. Of these girls 3,005, or one-half, were domestic servants, and 381 of these were in houses where there were more than one servant, and that is considered a good deal in England; but I do not suppose we would think so much of it here. There were 244 laundry maids. The reconvicted girls numbered 62, or two and a half per cent. There are 202 that were not accounted for. That gives an idea of the way these people are placed, and the satisfactory manner in which institutions of this kind can be worked. This disposal of the inmates is a great success, and by watching them the authorities consider that crime is diminished, and employment is obtained for many hundred of thousands of men and girls who would otherwise be thrown on the street, either as mendicants or vagrants or both, and the step from mendicancy to crime in large cities in England is very easy. I have shown you that England has, for a great many years, taken care of the juveniles, and tried every means possible to diminish crime. I have done that because my hon. friend from Calgary stated otherwise, and I wanted to break a lance for England on account of the presence of my hon. friend on my right. I thought it was my duty to do that. Now, I am going to show you that the information in the other part of his statement is not correct. I call attention of my hon. friend to a statement made by the compiler of the judicial statistics in England, which comprises three or four years, and it is of course very reliable. In making this statement I desire to call attention to the language used, and I desire hon. gentlemen to understand that this is a source which cannot be disputed. I do not know if the author quoted by the hon. gentleman is as correct as that. I had never heard of him, but I do not mean to say that the statement is not correct. I only desire to say that the source from which I obtained this information is beyond doubt. It is the judicial statistics of crime from the courts. The number of criminals in England of a year ago was 14,150. That is not a great number, and the statistics in Whittaker's Almanac do not seem to show any great increase. These are the words of the editor of these statistics, speaking in 1900, and giving the statistics of the three previous years :

> I am inclined to think the tendency towards the decrease of crimes generally extends——

Remember those words, because the hon. gentleman laid great stress on the fact that crime was increasing, and I presume he referred to our country——

> Generally extends to juvenile criminals as a whole. At all events there is no ground for believing that there has been any large increase of crime. Of the credit for this happy state of things, a fair share justly applies to the reformatory and industrial school.

That is very satisfactory, because it shows the influence of these institutions in the diminution of crime. According as the persons confined in the reformatory decreased, in the industrial schools it went up. I have had a great deal of pleasure in discussing the subject, because it has a good deal of affinity to my occupation. I know that the sooner you take any child away from the vicinity of crime the better, and when children arrive at an age when they can earn money, the parents try every means to get hold of them. This is a local measure, and I wonder the hon. gentleman from Mille Isles did not observe this. It is only a few days ago we passed a resolution in favour of provincial rights, only one vote being recorded against it, and here is a matter of provincial rights. I had a talk with the gentleman who was the father of the Bill, and he said they wanted permission to go to the local legislatures. This is education. You would not class it with crime. It is to prevent crime, it is educational and it belongs to the local legislatures, without a doubt. I do not wish to imperil the Bill by saying this, because there can be no nobler idea than the philanthropic one of helping mankind. There was a word devised by a great philosopher, 'altruistic.' It is very altruistic of the gentleman who took up this measure. It is the best measure that has been before this House in my time. It can be worked with benefit. I hardly think it would be proper to have a central place like a penitentiary to which juvenile offenders from all over the country should be brought. It would be better if the Dominion had made this arrangement general; and, on the other hand, it would be convenient if the provinces had it, because they would spend more time and labour on it probably. The success of such a proposition depends on the individual in charge of it. If a man delights in doing acts of beneficence of this nature—and there are men who are in that class—there are just as many men born with good qualities as there are with bad ones—he should have every opportunity afforded him of carrying out the reforms. It is with that spirit I entered on the discussion of the Bill, and not to criticise it with any degree of asperity whatever, but rather to give all the aid and assistance I possibly could. I wish the hon. gentleman who has charge of it abundant success, and I shall do all that I can for him. I trust whether it is the local legislature or the Dominion parliament that undertakes the duty they will not squabble over it, but that both will endeavour to make it a success.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—This Bill, which is to amend the criminal law, has been introduced in this House by the hon. Secretary of State. He told us he did not intend to press it at present; that it was put before us so that we might have an opportunity to study it before next session. Certainly this Bill ought to have been presented in the House of Commons, because the minister who is partly responsible for the measure is the Minister of Justice, and as it has been presented here, we can only suppose—we cannot be certain—that it was presented by the Minister of Justice. If that is the case, then the remarks I make will apply to him. Some hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this question have stated that it had a very good object in view, and suggested that the Bill should be passed now. Those gentlemen probably are not aware that these reformatories already exist in some of the local provinces. The preamble of the Bill reads:

> Whereas it is inexpedient that youthful offenders should be classed or dealt with as ordinary criminals, the welfare of the community demanding that they should on the contrary be guarded against association with crime and criminals, and should be subjected to such wise care, treatment and control as will tend to check their evil tendencies and to strengthen their better instincts.

This Bill would probably be amended if it were passed, but does the inference not come very naturally to every one who reads this clause, that we in the Dominion of Canada permit young criminals to be confined in the same jails as the old ones? I know very well that in the province of Quebec, for over 48 years, we have not allowed young offenders to be associated with the older class of criminals. We have in Montreal what is called a reformatory, which is a prison, for the Catholics, and in Quebec there is also one. In Sherbrooke there is a reformatory for the Protestants.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—There is no institution in Canada for the same purpose as this, because this is a preventive. The government would, under this Act, have power to take those children away from bad influences.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—It is only delicate children that should be sent there. Have you not in Ontario a reformatory school?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Yes, but it is a penitentiary.

Hon. Mr. de BOUCHERVILLE.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—They make a difference in Ontario and in Quebec, and they make a difference in Nova Scotia. Although this measure has been introduced by the hon. Secretary of State, I think the Minister of Justice must have something to do with it. It is hardly fair to put the provinces in the position of saying that they have had no such reformatory. The second clause reads:

> (a) 'child' means a boy apparently or actually under the age of sixteen years, or a girl apparently or actually under the age of seventeen years.'

Any child who smokes, or who is in possession of cigars, cigarettes or tobaccos in any form is a delinquent. You can put him in jail. You can call him a criminal, even though it is not in the criminal law. Would a boy smoking a pipe, cigar or cigarette be liable to be sent to jail? I suppose there are some places in Canada where they have not made the distinction between juvenile delinquents and others. I think this Bill should pass, and I agree with those hon. members who think that it should be passed into law now without amendment.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS moved the adjournment of the debate.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS presented the third report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament. He said: When this matter came before the Joint Committee on Printing, it was decided by them not to print the report of the Royal Life Insurance Commission and the evidence taken by them, inasmuch as it was already printed and laid before the House, and therefore it was not necessary to print it a second time. The committee so reported to the House, but when consideration of the committee report was moved in the House of Commons, some hon. gentlemen argued that the insurance report should be printed in French, and the committee concurred in that view.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE. I move concurrence in the report.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I beg to move that the report be amended according to the decision of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Have we not adopted a motion that the report shall be printed ?

The SPEAKER—That was not on the same matter.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—It was in regard to old age pension. We ought to have an assurance that the House of Commons has done this.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I have given that assurance.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What would happen if we took a different view from the House of Commons ? Are we bound to accept that amendment because the House of Commons has thought fit to recommend it ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I think we can vote it down if we wish to do so.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not see what advantage there will be in having the four volumes translated into French.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The committee recommended that the report and evidence be not printed in French; but the House of Commons decided that the evidence having been printed in English, should also be printed in French. The House of Commons have control of financial matters. They came to the conclusion it should be done, and I think the least this House can do would be to concur. The old practice was that the reports to both Houses always concur. It would be very awkward to let the journals go, with the House agreeing to one thing, and the Senate disagreeing.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If the Senate should disagree, there would be no authority for the printing. It is true the House initiates money Bills, but the assent of this House is necessary. I do not know what the view of hon. gentlemen in this House is with regard to printing this report in the French language may be. The report and the evidence have already been printed, and this will call for another printing. It is an enormous expense, and if hon. members representing the French language in this House have strong views on the matter, I should like to respect them ; if they are indifferent on the matter we have a perfect right to reject such an amendment, because I regard the printing as an absolute waste of money. The report has been published and has cost more than it is worth.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call atttention to a fact which occurred a few years ago when the voluminous report on labour was printed. It was never published in French. We never complained. If there was any possibility of effecting compromise, I would ask that the King's Regulations be printed in French instead of the insurance report. They would be of more service than this evidence, which will have interest for very few.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The position is, that whatever is presented to the House of Commons is printed naturally in both languages. Some documents may escape, but that is the principle upon which the government of the country, whatever party is in power, acts. This was a report submitted to the House of Commons. It was in print when it came to the Joint Committee, and that committee decided that it was not necessary to make an order for the printing of it. The question was asked in the House of Commons as to the French copy. There was no French version of the evidence, and the attention of the Minister of Finance was called to it, and the answer of the government was that whatever was printed in English must be printed in French. So that in order to get it right on the Journals of the House, the report of the committee was amended in that way, and the suggestion was made to me, as the chairman from this side of the House, that the Senate should follow suit.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman appears not to have received his four volumes. The evidence was printed in four large volumes and the report of the commission in another volume all in English. They were not printed by order of the government or parliament, but through the commissioners. What I understand they propose to do now is to translate all this into French and print it for circulation. Of course the French members are entitled to it if they desire to have it all printed in French ; but if the hon. member from Stadacona can speak for the French population, it will not be necessary to print the evidence in French. They have an advantage over our English-speaking people. They can all read and understand English, while many of us cannot read French. There would be a great expense in translating and printing those four large volumes of evidence. I do not know whether any of us will read the evidence, but we will, undoubtedly, read the report and probably the translation and printing of the commissioners' report in French will meet every purpose.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—All documents laid before parliament must be printed in both languages.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I cannot see any necessity for printing the evidence in French. It interests the insurance companies principally, and they are mostly all composed of English-speaking people, while the few French people interested understand English very well.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is a strong objection to printing the report without the evidence, from the fact that there are statements in the report which are not warranted by the evidence, and the report without the evidence would have a tendency to mislead.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Did I understand my hon. friend to say that he proposes to move an amendment to the report?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot reconcile that with the statement he has made; but, as a matter of course, the evidence and report are to be translated and printed in French. It seems to me if there be any amendment it should be that the evidence be not translated and printed in French.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The main report is that it shall not be printed at all, and the amendment is that it shall be printed. In order that we may have time to think it over, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The real trouble has arisen from the fact that the Insurance Commission, along with other extraordinary things they did, superseded the authority of the Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament by taking the printing of this report and the evidence into their own hands. The Joint Committee on Printing of Parliament has control of all the printing. The report was printed in English and not in French. Apparently the commission did not know any better.

The motion was agreed to.

STATIONERY SUPPLIED TO MEMBERS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the adoption of the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—As the chairman of the committee is present I wish to call attention to a statement made by him in the hearing of honourable gentlemen, which I understand had reference to myself, with regard to the use of Senate 'Hansard' envelopes in the distribution of public documents. I am glad the matter has been referred to, because it must have been talked over amongst some hon. gentlemen themselves, and the statement has been made that I had abused my right to get a supply of stationery. For the last eleven years the average of my drain on the Stationery Department for stationery, apart from 'Hansard' envelopes, has been $6.52 per annum. I find that the hon. gentleman from Brandon, during the seven sessions he has been in the House has requisitioned the Stationery Department for nearly double the value of ordinary stationery that I have drawn in eleven years. I think it goes without saying that my requirements in connection with public business is at least as great as his. I have not made out the cost of the 'Hansard' envelopes, but it is not much. Some years it amounted to considerable, but other years there was none, and other years again very little. I take the ground that there is no abuse in a member of the Senate using 'Hansard' envelopes in the distributing of parliamentary documents. It is only discharging a duty we owe to those we represent, and I am only sorry I have not been able to do it to a larger extent every year. I have paid for the printing of some of those documents myself, as much as $100 in one session. I feel I would be only performing my duty to the people I represent if I did three or four times as much of that sort of work, and I think it should be more generally done by members of the Senate. While I am on my feet I want to inquire about the telephone in room No. 17. If telephones are to be supplied for the private use of members in their rooms, there should be no partiality. The same privilege should be extended to every member of the Senate. I might very properly describe that as an abuse.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman has referred to a matter which arose in a discussion that took place with closed doors—that I had characterized as an abuse the fact that the hon. gentleman had ordered 20,000 'Hansard' envelopes from the Stationery Department. I made that statement and still maintain it, and that is why the subcommittee recommended that a limit should be placed on the quantity supplied. The stationery office could not refuse the hon. gentleman's application, but as there were only 14,000 envelopes for the whole Senate and he wanted 20,000, there were none left for anybody else. If the Senate wish to furnish envelopes enough to give any senator 20,000, let us know it and make an order ahead ; but I did say, and I repeat, that it was an abuse to allow any senator to clean out the supply of envelopes in the Stationery Department. So far as the telephone is concerned, there is one in room 17, which room is occupied by nine senators. That telephone is used by all of us and by any senator who may think proper to use it. I believe there should be another telephone in addition, because the one at the foot of the stairway is sometimes out of order and is very much in use.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—If any one in the House or out of it wishes to use the 'phone in room 17, he is at perfect liberty to do so. Last week when the telephone at the foot of the stairs was out of order, many senators were glad to be able to use the 'phone in room 17, and they were all welcome to do so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I inquired the other day who paid for the use of the telephone, and I was told that those who used it had to pay. I understand from the chairman of the Contingent Accounts Committee, that the Senate pays for the 'phone in room 17.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the Senate pay out of the contingencies whatever expense is connected with it ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think so. The 'phone is placed there for the use of senators, and is paid for the same as other 'phones in the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am glad to know that, because when I wanted to use a 'phone, I was told I had to pay for it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Do I understand that the hon. gentleman is asking about the cost of installing the 'phone ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Supposing I want to telephone to any part of Canada, is that message paid for out of the contingencies ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is the use of the telephone confined to the city alone ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Certainly. The long distance business has nothing to do with it at all. Each senator who sends a long distance message has to settle for it himself.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until three p.m.

SECOND SITTING.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Routine proceedings.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (139) An Act to create a Department of Mines.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend, the Secretary of State, informed us some day last week that he would give information on Monday last with reference to the distribution of the remaining numbers of the Revised Statutes. If he has the information now, I know hon. gentlemen would like to get it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have here a list of the persons to whom the Revised Statutes have been distributed :

1. It will appear from the memo. that the whole of the distribution has been supplied with one copy, except a few at the end of the list in England and foreign countries and in the Yukon territory, which cannot be reached by mail.

This distribution has been made with the three volumes, and the fourth volume is now being sent out to complete the set. The distribution of the fourth volume has already covered half the list.

2. All outside orders from the trade or booksellers has been filled and there are no orders outstanding from outside parties to be filled.

3. The number of copies distributed is 2,815. The number of copies sold to the public is 1,500—4,315. The duplication of copies is now going on to those persons entitled to more than one copy.

4. The distribution of copies in full calf and half calf binding will be commenced in from six to eight weeks.

5. The volume of Criminal Code is now being distributed to justices of the peace. The quantity required is very large—about 10,000. The distribution is going on as fast as is consistent with correctness.

6. It will appear, therefore, that the distribution is complete upon the list ordered by council, and the public has been supplied with every copy asked for, and that there are enough copies on hand to fill any order from the public which may come in.

7. As soon as the House rises and some of the presses are released a new edition will be put to press from the plates which have been made.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It may not be convenient, or perhaps possible, to distribute the remaining two copies to each member of parliament before the closing of the session ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no, that would not be possible.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Are the Crown prosecutors in the list which my hon. friend has read ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, unless they hold an official position they would not be. The distribution was made from the list prepared in 1886, when the former distribution took place. It is larger now, because it includes colleges and universities, which were not included in the list of 1886, but in other respects it is based on that.

CANADA'S ATTITUDE ON TRADE MATTERS.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to direct the attention of the acting First Minister to a cablegram published in yesterday's 'Star,' which reads as follows :

> London, April 23.—If, as is expected, the Colonial Conference closes on May 4th, Sir Wilfred Laurier has arranged to leave London for Paris on May 6th or 7th, and will proceed to Italy, where he expects to meet Mr. Fielding shortly after.
> I am informed to-day on unimpeachable authority, that it will altogether depend on the result of next week's discussions at the Colonial Conference on preference, and especially the attitude of British ministers, what line the Canadian ministers take in their negotiations with France, Italy and possibly also Austria. The way has already been prepared by pourparlers on behalf of Canada with both the Austrian and Italian governments, though it is most unlikely the British ministers will see their way clear to escape from their election pledges sufficienty to admit the principle of preference even on the existing British tariff. In that case, the Canadian ministers will feel perfectly free to proceed with negotiations with foreign countries to admit them to part of the benefits of the British preference under the new intermediate tariff.
> The Canadian ministers' position, as they are prepared to submit it to the British ministers is, I am authoritatively informed, as follows: 'Canada has practically gone the limit as far as advances to the motherland are concerned. It is now up to the motherland to reciprocate. Canada does not ask her to reciprocate, but if she does not, the motherland can scarcely blame Canada if she enters into trade arrangements elsewhere. In no way would such arrangements interfere with Canada's imperial sentiment, though the motherland may be sorry she has missed the opportunity.' The case stands simply thus:—'You may be a friend of mine, and I may have a business transaction which may benefit you; you do not fall in with my ideas, and I go elsewhere to find somebody who does. This fact, as a rule, would not interfere with our private friendship.'

My right hon. friend will doubtless recall an interesting discussion we had a few days ago, with reference to the extension of the intermediate tariff to foreign countries, particularly those countries enjoying the favoured nations treaty. My hon. friend pointed out certain difficulties which confronted the government at that time as to extending to those nations the advantages of the intermediate tariff. From this cable, it would seem as if the matter were being discussed at the Colonial

Conference. Can my hon. friend say to what extent the Canadian government has discussed that question, particularly with the nations referred to, and to what extent any favoured nations treaty may stand in the way of extending the intermediate tariff to these particular countries ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I regret that I am not in a position to give my hon. friend much information. These are matters which, you will observe, from the nature of the case, can hardly be discussed by cable, inasmuch as they involve a great variety of details, and I have not yet received any detailed information from the Prime Minister as to what has been done with respect to these matters. There have been certain pourparlers going on with one or two of the countries alluded to, but they had not special reference to the conference. These pourparlers have been going on with one or two of the countries to whom the hon. gentleman has alluded, but they had nothing to do with the proceedings of the conference. They have been apart from that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Can the hon. gentleman name these countries with whom these pourparlers have been going on ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Italy for one. We have had some communication with, and there have been some informal communications with Germany.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—These are the two ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—These are the two, but there is nothing in such shape that I could make a communication to the House with respect to them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would my right hon. friend be at liberty to say whether it will be a subject to be discussed at the Colonial Conference now sitting ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I doubt considerably whether anything as regards our attitude to foreign countries will be discussed there. I think it unlikely. I think the proceedings of the conference will be confined almost exclusively to the attitude of the British government to the colonies generally, and to the colonies as between themselves. I do expect that communications will be had particularly with New Zealand and Australasia on the subject of their extending preferences to us and ourselves reciprocally to them—those two colonies and, very probably, also the colonies of South Africa, the Transvaal and Cape Colony, but I do not think the question of our relations to other countries is likely to come up.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—At the risk of being regarded as inquisitive, may I further ask my right hon. friend if it would not be a very important factor in the consideration of the question as to what the attitude of Great Britain would be towards Canada as to the preference which we at present extend to the mother country in the event of Canada extending the advantages of the intermediate tariff to the other countries mentioned ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It would be a matter, no doubt, which I fully expect the Prime Minister will discuss with the British government and the officers specially charged therewith ; but I may remark, speaking, as hon. gentlemen will understand, informally, that the intermediate tariff that we offer will not materially affect the British preference. The amount of the reduction involved in it is not such as to seriously militate against the preference we offer to Great Britain.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I notice there is quite a divergence of opinion, particularly in England, as to the difference between the two tariffs ; I recall that my right hon. friend stated the other day that the intermediate would not exceed two and a half per cent, and I think that opinion seems to obtain in Canada, but I have noticed in some reliable British publications that they regard it as affecting English trade to the extent of from five to seven per cent. I am not prepared to say how well founded that conclusion may be.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think they are mistaken in that, as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition will see if he critically examines our tariff. There are a few cases, but very few, in which it may exceed two and a half per cent, but they are very rare, and as a rule they affect articles in which we deal chiefly with the United States, and not with other countries.

TRANSPORTATION CHARGES.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. POWER inquired :

1. What proportions of the passage money from Liverpool, England, to Winnipeg, Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Sydney, severally, via Halifax, are taken by the steamship company, the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, respectively ?
2. On through freight shipped from Liverpool and forwarded via Halifax to Sydney, Truro, New Glasgow, Moncton and Montreal, severally, what proportions of the charge for transportation go to the steamship company and to the Intercolonial Railway, respectively ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The reply I have had from the Messrs. Allan is as follows :

The first question refers to passengers but does not indicate whether cabin, intermediate or steerage is intended. In any event, however, the Intercolonial Railway is, we think, fully informed in the matter. The great volume of the season's business has been of steerage passengers from Liverpool to Winnipeg, the through rate for which has been $46.50 per adult, of which $27.50 is for the ocean passage. The second question has reference to through freight rates on imported merchandise, which indicate the class of goods respecting which information is required. Seeing ocean freight rates on this traffic vary from 9s. 6d. or less per ton for coarse dead weight up to 25s. per ton for fine goods, further information is required before an answer can be given to the question. But inasmuch as all through import goods via Halifax are moved over the Intercolonial Railway, the Railway Department is in possession of full details, which are doubtless available to you.

Inquiry is being made from the Intercolonial Railway, and I will give the hon. gentleman any further information I can obtain.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is one point to which the House will allow me to direct the attention of the right hon. gentleman. In their reply the Allans give the proportion from Liverpool to Winnipeg, but I asked also with respect to Quebec, Montreal, St. John and Sydney, and there is no information with respect to these points in the answer.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend will see that is a question which will require some considerable time to get full answers. I have made application and will obtain the information as soon as I can.

The motion was allowed to stand.

THIRD READING.

Bill (145) An Act to amend the Criminal Code.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (113) An Act to amend the Post Office Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The duties formerly discharged by the comptroller are by this measure proposed to be placed under the post office inspector.

On the second clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As the law stands, it provides that a man cannot be appointed superintendent unless he has served ten years. It was found impossible to obtain men who had served ten years, and it is proposed by this clause to reduce it to five years.

The clause was adopted.

The 5th clause amends section 115 of the Act by inserting after the word 'service' in the second line 'or any duly accredited official of the Post Office Department.' At present the Post Office Act names certain persons who are carried free on railroads and steamboats accompanying the mail, but there are other officials who are sometimes sent, and it is to give wider power, so that any one who is sent with the mails shall be entitled to free transportation.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN, from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment which was concurred in.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (136) An Act to amend the provisions of the Criminal Code respecting the preservation of the peace in the vicinity of public works. He said : Owing to the extensive works in connection with railway construction it is found necessary to enlarge the Act for the preservation of peace in connection with public works. The changes in the law make it more stringent. Section

17 of the Act is amended by adding the words 'Any such liquor shall be presumed to be intoxicating if it contains more than 2½ per cent of spirit.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—That interferes with the health of the community. It excludes peruna and other medicines which contain very much more than two and a-half per cent of alcohol.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It would exclude a mixture of sawdust and spring water, because from recent chemical investigation it is found that sawdust contains at least 2½ per cent of alcohol.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Section 150 is amended by adding the following words : 'Nor shall they apply where liquor is supplied for bona fide medicinal purposes on the prescription of a duly qualified practitioner.' From my point of view, I do not think that improves the Bill at all.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would exclude the wholesaler of liquor. I am at a loss to understand why the brewer or distiller should be placed in a better position than a wholesaler.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is the way the law stands at present.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No doubt, but why should the old law contain such a provision ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then the penalty for infractions of the law is increased from $50 to $100 on a second offence.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What good purpose is served by destroying the liquor seized ? Why not give it to hospitals and benevolent institutions where liquor is used medicinally ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is all adulterated, and it would be rather a risk to send it to a hospital.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—From experience gained in the west, I know that the class of liquor referred to by my hon. friend cannot be handled to the same advantage as it could be elsewhere. About as good and pure liquor is used in the west as in any other part of the Dominion and I fail to see what good purpose is served by destroying the liquor.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

INSPECTION OF ELECTRICITY BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved concurrence in the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill (P) An Act respecting the inspection of electricity.

He said : The principle amendment made is in changing the variation of pressure. As the Bill left this Chamber, the variation of pressure was allowed to be three per cent. The trade complain that the variation allowed is too narrow and they cannot live up to it. In England the Board of Trade allows a four per cent variation of pressure and the Inland Revenue Department sees no objection to the same provision being inserted in the Canadian Act. The amendment is to increase the variation to four per cent.

The motion was agreed to.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS BILL.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill (FFF) An Act respecting Juvenile Delinquents:

Hon. Mr. ELLIS said : So much has been said on this subject that very little is left for me to say. Much has been stated in the debate of a controversial character and much matter has been brought in which scarcely bears on the subject before the House. I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the leader of the opposition with reference to the increase of crime in Canada. I do not believe that there is any increase in crime, although the statistics seem to show the contrary. It must be remembered that, in the first place, there are a great many more crimes now than there used to be. The tendency in legislation is to make enactments against offences, which, without such enactments, are scarcely crimes. We have passed wholesale Acts to bring persons within the scope and operation of the law, and they find themselves in positions, which make them, to a certain extent, offenders against the law although until those Acts were passed they were not. I might call attention for instance to the law we passed with regard to Sunday observance, under which a number of things are made offences that were not offences before. Persons are apt to be brought up before authority for the commission of those offences, and the man who is making up his columns from the statistics, and has some point to prove, may readily find a number of offenders who had no existence previously; and so with regard to temperance legislation. Within the last thirty or forty years, there have been a great many laws passed with respect to prohibition and all the surrounding circumstances in regard to the sale of intoxicating liquors. There at once a large number of offences are created which come within the scope of the law and which the statistician who believes that crime is increasing, can very readily use as ground for an argument in support of this view. I think, on the whole, the tendency of the world is to improve. The fact that there are so many schemes in existence to benefit mankind, and the general spirit of philanthropy that prevails throughout the world, is very good evidence indeed that a better spirit exists than ever before to benefit humanity. The result must have a beneficial influence on mankind. I have no doubt, however, that the effect of the prevalence of those ideas has also resulted in making the laws more stringent, and making it more difficult for the ordinary kind of character to get along without, sometimes, coming within the purview of the courts. The hon. gentleman also stated that Canada is not up to the times—if I may put the idea that way—that we are behind the nations of the earth with respect to sociological questions covering a great many other things, and he referred to the older countries of Europe. But he must remember that they are countries which have been long settled. He referred to Italy, but Italy was a civilized nation before Christianity came into the world. It is no wonder that you find in that country a great body of opinion and very sound views with respect to the way in which crime should be treated. Some of the most eminent writers, with reference to the jurisprudence of crime and the forces which lead men to it and the nature of those who commit crime, are Italian, and the literature of that country abounds in really high views concerning the relation of man to criminal life. My hon. friend referred to Switzerland. That is also a very old country, and it is hardly fair to make it appear that Canada is neglectful, in view of the fact that this is a comparatively new country, and that we have been devoting ourselves largely to material work and have not the time to take up questions of that kind as the older countries have had. But I might make this observation, and I think it would be a fair observation, that as soon as we have an opportunity to study a law as is now proposed we take advantage of it. It was only last year that this matter was first brought within the notice of parliament. I remember that a lady came from some of the neighbouring states and addressed the members of both Houses on the subject, and I think you, Mr. Speaker, in returning thanks for the admirable address she gave, made the pledge that the Senate would be among the first bodies in Canada to take up her views and present them in such form that they might be made use of by legislation. We have carried out that pledge. The fact has been presented to the House that this movement originated in Chicago, or Colorado, only recently, or in 1899. Twenty-four states of the neighbouring union have so far adopted the plan, but the fact that twenty-four states have acted in this direction is a proof that the idea is making progress and the fact that the parliament of Canada is examining it to-day, shows at least a willingness on the part of our country to see whether such a scheme is a good one and to get the very best it can out of it.

So, I think, on the whole, that if we review our own work in matters of this kind, we will find that we need not disparage ourselves, and that we have no great reason to find fault. I observed the other day that it is only just at this moment that England is introducing the principle of a criminal appeal court. It would seem the moment attention is called to the formation of a criminal appeal court that such a thing ought to have existed long ago, and the ordinary layman, like myself, might be surprised to find that England has been without such a court. It would seem to be according to the highest ideas of fairness and justice that there should be such a court, but that great nation has not thought necessary to introduce it until now, when the public opinion of the more civilized world favours the idea. That is only a few observations on the general ideas which move men to adopt higher forms of legislation. I was not able to follow my hon. friend from Kingston in all his remarks, but it struck me that while he gave us a most interesting historical account of the growth of schools of various kinds looking to the reformation of the young, he really did not touch the idea which underlies this particular legislation, nor did he fully—I would not say he did not fully—appreciate the merits of it, but he did not seem to me to present the merits of the system. There is no doubt that great credit is due to the philanthropists of England who have in various ways developed plans for the improvement and care of the children who are brought within the control of the law, and the legislation here proposed follows and grows out of what has already been done in England, but it is a great advance upon anything that the English courts have yet had. It is quite true, I think, that Birmingham stands almost alone—it stands far ahead of the English cities in the arrangement which it has made for the care of children ; yet the idea still seems to cling to the British systems that the children are criminals. They still are under the observation of the law ; the philanthropic men, those men who have taken charge of the children committed to them, really hold them as offenders against the law, and the reformatories in which they are placed, while, to some extent, they go there voluntarily, yet are closely under the supervision of the state. Then, with regard to the matter of education, taking charge of the whole matter by the state has imposed new duties. I remember in the place in which I live that it was proposed to have a free non-sectarian system of education. The people who upheld the idea of such a system seemed to think that by educating the people you would stop, to a very large extent, the commission of crime. I would not say there has not been very considerable progress in that direction, but education in itself is not sufficient. The conditions of society do not change sufficiently rapidly. We are called upon to meet with the old conditions of contact in perhaps two forms under the system of education which is now in its infancy. Men cannot in one or two generations divest themselves of the old Adam that is in them, and reform comes slowly. Out of all the plans which are provided for the separation of children from people who have committed offences against the law, the plan of the reformatory seemed to be the best, and it was undoubtedly the best so far as men had knowledge of what was best to do under the conditions which existed in society twenty or thirty years ago ; but it was found that reformatories themselves carried with them an evil. I have visited several of them. I remember a very excellent one, so far as appearances go, in the state of Massachusetts, near Boston, in which, at the time I saw it, there were hundreds of inmates, from the very tender age of boys to the age of seventeen. One could not fail to be impressed with the regularity and order which prevailed ; still you could not fail to see that they were held as criminals. Their furtive appearance and whole manner seemed to indicate that every one of them would escape if he possibly could from the control which was exercised over him, and the effect upon the younger boys of contact with the older boys, some of whom were in the institution for some time, was admittedly bad. The statistics show that a number of them come back time and again, and it is now a question whether the reformatories do anything like the work they should do in restoring a man to the place in life of which he is deprived for a time by reason of the imprisonment which he undergoes, and the stigma attaches to him through life. It is very hard for a man who has been in a reformatory to regain his old position. People do not care to employ him. He must have established a very good record in the school if he would obtain employment at all of any superior kind. Then the tendency of the parents and the guardian is to ignore the child and allow him to go adrift and work his own way. There is a feeling not exactly of disgrace but of shame at being once or twice under the influence of punishment in the prison, that he is not to be trusted, and true his family and friends regard him with disfavour. Out of the observation of the failures of the reformatories arose in many minds the consideraton whether some better plan could not be devised of taking care of the young than the reformatory itself. Instead of congregating boys in large numbers, or girls in large numbers, whether some better plan of taking care of them could not be adopted, and out of that has grown the system which is here presented in this Bill. From my observation of boys, I am led to believe that they regard the policeman as a natural enemy. He interferes with their pleasure. Little things which seem to him to be trivial bring him within the influence of the law. I think a great many of us can probably remember when we were boys, the great freedom which a boy of fifteen or sixteen generally had. I ceased to be a boy, of course more than thirty years ago. I remember many things could be done by the boys of my time which would now bring boys under the observation of the police, and it is very natural, because civilization has grown, and the conditions of life are so different that no longer can a boy do as he likes on the streets ; no longer can he carry on his pranks with safety to the public, or without causing injury, and, therefore, it has been necessary to make laws more stringent than they were. I am often struck, when I read the accounts in the papers of the meetings of some of these societies, when the sophomores have to assert their power over the freshmen, and when the coming graduate has to show to the man below him how much superior he is. Here the young men are fitted up by the state to occupy very important positions in life, some barristers, some doctors, and yet, what would they do, if they were poor lads and their acts brought them before the magistrate. We look on them with some degree of toleration when we read the accounts in the newspapers, and think these are mere pranks of the uneasy energy of exuberant youth, thus playing off their humour upon themselves or upon others ; but if a waif were to do anything like some of the things which are reported in the newspapers as being done by students, he would soon find himself at the bar of justice, and have to answer to the police magistrate for the wrong he had committed. The main idea of this draft Bill is expressed in clause 30. It reads as follows :

Hon. Mr. ELLIS.

This Act shall be liberally construed to the end that its purpose may be carried out, to wit: That the care and custody and discipline of a juvenile delinquent shall approximate as nearly as may be that which should be given by its parents, and that as far as practicable every juvenile delinquent shall be treated, not as a criminal, but as a misdirected and misguided child, and one needing aid, encouragement, help and assistance.

That is the benevolent idea which underlies the whole of this system. As it is worked out, the boy is not brought in the public court. My heart is often pained when I see lads brought up in the court for things that seem to them trivial, and they are brought up in the same court with the drunkards and men who are almost outcasts. In the city where I live, although the magistrate is very kind, he is compelled to have these lads placed therein that way. The law provides that these boys should go before the tribunal, that it should not be a public court ; they should not be exhibited to the gaze of the people, and that the magistrate having observed what the trouble is with them, or what has led them out of the path of rectitude, should take care of them before handing them over to the probation officer, and associated with the officer is the Juvenile Court Committee composed of men and women who work without pay, who work because they are interested in the care of children, and who show by the counsel and advice which they give those children, and by the interest which they display in them, that they desire them to grow up to be good and useful citizens. I have seen cases where the children themselves, feeling for the first time the good influence exerted upon them, at once recognized the value of what is done for them, and fell in with the system as naturally as may be. There is no provision whatever, so far as I know, or at any rate, it is not an important feature of the system, that the child should be imprisoned. He is not imprisoned with other children. He is practically not imprisoned at all, but he is put under a form of observation. He is looked after, in other words, by the community when his parents have ceased to do their duty, or when no longer manifest their influence over the child, and it cannot be that the neglected or dependent child can do other than derive a great deal of benefit from such a system. I do not suppose it is impossible that every one in this world could be saved—speaking of material salvation—but I can imagine that a great many more children would grow up into a better manhood or womanhood if the opportunity were given them in their young life to feel that they were a part of the community itself, to feel that the whole machinery of civilization, so far as they are able to observe it, is not directed against them, but that they are recognized as part of it, and that the aim of society is to give them a good place in society itself. This Act places them under a care which will be beneficial to them, and it is not the mere question of how much money the state may save, how much better it may be off because it has had so many children in these schools of detention ; it is whether you succeed in giving some man or some woman his manhood, or womanhood, and giving it in such a way that they shall become good citizens of the state, and that in a sense they shall acknowledge to the community, either by labour or by the life they shall live, the good that has been done for them. I heartily concur in the Bill. As I understood, the hon. gentleman for Montarville rather objected to it on the ground that it was beyond the powers of the Dominion parliament to bring such an Act into force ; but it does not interfere in any way with the rights of the provinces. No province need adopt the law unless it chooses to do so, and while there is considerable difference of opinion as to who shall take care of the children, and how they shall be taken care of, there can be no doubt the best way is to take an interest in them, and to show them that they can live their lives without being constantly in the police court, and without receiving punishment and without condemnation. I could appeal to the hon. gentleman of the Senate, I am quite sure, as to their observation of mankind generally, that it is far better to take a pleasant view of life, and that it is far better to see that our lives go on happily. I know that when we pass a pleasant afternoon here, without the trouble that sometimes besets us, we go to our dinners with a much better appetite than when things are different. If you make a child feel he is a part of the community, and that he is well looked after, and show a desire to get him to do right, as far as it is possible for him, there is a chance that he will grow up into good citizenship, and will not carry any stain whatever by reason of the fact that he has been in a reformatory. He will not have it said that he got out of the reformatory because merely he was a good boy while confined there. But he will be able to show that because of the kindness shown him under the operation of this law his life has been better lived, and he will be better able to take his place in society than he would with the remembrance of punishments hanging over him. No doubt when the Bill goes to committee, it can be amended, if it is thought necessary; and, looking at the measure, as it departs somewhat from the present system, I hope next year the government will so improve upon it that we will be able to pass it without any debate.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I rise to say only one or two words, after the very appropriate remarks of the hon. Secretary of State in moving the second reading, and the very interesting addresses which have been delivered by several hon. members of this House, I concur entirely, and I am sure every other member concurs entirely, in the remarks which have been made by the hon. gentleman for St. John. I do not think anything can be made by prolonging this debate. It is proper, however, that some members of this House should express their opinion as to whether they approve or not of the principle of the Bill. For my part, I must say that I entirely approve of its principle. The hon. gentleman for St. John has referred us to some statistics, and has stated that he has a doubt as to whether the number of crimes has been increasing. I entirely agree with him. I think he has directed attention to the true cause of the large number of cases as being the result rather of the increase in the number of crimes under the Criminal Code ; but let us turn to the statistics regarding the penitentiaries. I have here the last report of the Minister of Justice for 1906, and I find the following statistics : From 1899 to the present time there was really a decrease instead of being an increase in persons in the penitentiary. In 1899 and 1900 it was 1,430 and in 1905 and 1906 it was 1,407. In 1901 and 1902 and 1903 it went down as low as 1,224 ; but we can see that within these seven or eight years there has been a decrease. So that this entirely agrees with the statement of the hon. gentleman for St. John. The hon. gentleman for Montarville referred to the law as it existed in the province of Quebec. This law is not intended to interfere with the industrial schools in the province of Quebec. It is exactly on the same line. So much so that under the law of the province of Quebec it is open to the managers to release a delinquent after he has been there eighteen months, and permit him to live with his father or some relation. Therefore, this Bill is absolutely on the same line. I cannot say I would approve of everything in the Bill. Perhaps it goes too far, for instance, when it assumes to deal with persons apparently under sixteen years of age who would be found with tobacco of any form in their pockets and brings them under the operation of this law. It may be going too far, but as far as the principle of the Bill is concerned, I think it is altogether in the right direction. As was stated very properly by the hon. gentleman who has spoken, it is intended to foster philanthrophy, it is intended to create interest in children and young people with a view of saving them in life, instead of letting them grow up criminals ; to redeem them in their early years, and make good citizens of them. I do not see that the administering of such a law would add any expense to the country. All that would be required would be to appoint juvenile courts, which can be done by order in council, and taken amongst courts of magistrates or the like, and then these industrial schools which exist in Quebec, or similar schools in other provinces could be taken advantage of and other institutions could be taken advantage of for the purpose of working out the principles of the Act. My own opinion is that before long the criminal law will be amended or will be applied not only for the purpose of saving the children and the young people, but also for the redemption of older men. The law perhaps has not the proper regard for persons who may have committed a crime,who may have been guilty of an act of weakness, but who might be redeemed if more precautions were taken to deal with that first offence, and I think there is a tendency in other countries to adopt the necessary precautions for the purpose of redeeming young people and men of middle age also. For these reasons I entirely approve of the principle of the Bill, and I hope early next session the Bill will be introduced and will become law in this country.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—At this stage I do not wish to unduly prolong the discussion, but, under the circumstances, I am entitled to say a few words on the matter. The better part of my life has been, I will not say devoted, but largely taken up with the administration of criminal justice in this country, so that I may be in a position to state views based on facts. In the first place, I must heartily congratulate the hon. Secretary of State for having undertaken to place legislation of this nature on our statute-books, whether he succeeds here, if the constitution will permit him, or whether he will force the provinces, if the constitution says they solely have the right to pass such laws. In either case his name will go down as a legislator who has attempted to do a serviceable act towards his country. It is not the first time that his name has been associated with legislation which has gone a long way to redeem social life in Canada, and to make the conditions of social life better than they might have been without his efforts.

His name is associated with the Scott Act which, although not a perfect success everywhere it has been tried, has within the past thirty years rendered noteworthy service to the community. His name will now be attached to this legislation. He tried to save the old when he was young ; now he is trying to save the young when he is old. This has been called a benevolent Bill. It is more than that. It is a paternal Bill, and in every line of it runs the feeling of the father instead of the harsh master in dealing with the boy who has committed a wrong. I have alluded to the fact—and I may touch that question first, that this legislation may not be within the jurisdiction of this parliament. I hope it will be found otherwise, because the more general the application of a law of this kind, the more effective it will be and the better the results obtained ; but we are not masters of the constitution ; the constitution is master of our Acts and must guide and direct them. The subject of this legislation is, therefore, to be looked at from the point of view dictated by the constitution and not by what we would like to have done. We must not put ourselves in a position where our legislation could on appeal be declared ultra vires. The hon. senator from Montarville (Hon. Mr. DeBoucherville) who is one of the oldest and most capable legislators in this country, who has been Prime Minister of his province on several occasions, and takes an active and deep interest in the building up of this country on constitutional lines, as laid down in the British North America Act, has told the House that he feared this legislation would be an invasion of provincial rights. The British North America Act deals directly with this matter. Section 92 provides:

'In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next herein after enumerated, that is to say:—

The administration of justice in the province including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts, both of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts.

At first sight, this proposed legislation, notwithstanding its innate goodness and the beneficial results to flow from it, appears not to be within our power, if the British North America Act is interpreted rigidly. Another subsection of the same section provides that the local legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to :

'The establishment, maintenance and management of public and reformatory prisons in and for the province.'

But I am told in answer to this, that the parliament of Canada does not undertake to build, maintain or manage reformatories, that our law will be of no avail unless the provinces undertake that work; consequently we would be passing legislation which we could not enforce without the consent of the provinces. We would be putting on the statute-book the best of laws, because the law that deals with the young is the best that can be enacted, yet notwithstanding the goodness of this law, it would be useless because we would have no machinery to enforce it. The constitution says we have no right to establish courts. That is within the exclusive jurisdiction and right of the provinces. I have tried to find a loop-hole, and, as O'Connell once said, there is scarcely a law that human ingenuity has devised that you could not drive a coach and four through. That holds good in relation to the British North America Act. Section 101 provides :

'The parliament of Canada may, notwithstanding anything in this Act, from time to time, provide for the constitution, maintenance, and organization of a General Court of Appeal for Canada, and for the establishment of any additional courts for the better administration of the laws of Canada.'

The last two lines in that section give power to the Dominion parliament, in clear contradiction to section 92 of the same Act, which declares that all these matters shall be under the control of the provinces. Under this section, if it came to a conflict between a province and the Dominion with regard to this matter, this clause would enable the Federal parliament to pass this law, and if the provinces did not provide the machinery and organize, maintain and constitute courts for the carrying out of its provisions, the Dominion parliament would have a right, under this section, to establish such courts for the proper administration of its own laws. The spirit and the practice under the Act has been against it, but under the wording of that section I do not say that it could not be done. Up to the present time, the older provinces through their legislatures have the right to establish and maintain courts and to see them properly constituted. The only right the Dominion government has had with regard to these courts was to name the judges. There ended the jurisdiction, power and control of the federal authorities. If there is going to be a conflict, it would be advisable, as the hon. Senator from Montarville pointed out, to have this question settled, if possible, before next session, so that we would not be discussing a measure which might be ultra vires. It is a question which could properly be submitted to the authorities as directed by our statutes. This matter has been endorsed from one end of the Dominion to the other by the press, the pulpit and the platform. It has been approved by all classes of people, and it would be a pity if, owing to any constitutional obstacle, it should be thwarted. I have no doubt that if the provinces were consulted they would consent to the federal government taking this matter over, because it will involve heavy expense and there is nothing in this Bill to say who shall bear the cost. We cannot say to the provinces, 'you shall do such and such a thing, and pay for it.' While on this question, I wish to point out an incongruity in the administration even of the criminal law. The constitution says that it shall be within the right of the federal government to establish and maintain penitentiaries. This results in inequalities in the administration of the law of criminal justice. Two men are arrested for the same crime, under the same circumstances, and are brought before the court. One is a man with a character that gives him a bad standing with the police, and they give him a bad name. He is sent to the penitentiary for three or five years, while his associate, arrested at the same time, and found equally guilty, but who happens not to have a bad record, is sentenced for 23 months, as is often done, so as not to send him to penitentiary, but to a common jail. What is the result? In one case the federal government supplies the funds to maintain the man in penitentiary, and it does not cost the municipality or the province a cent; but the other man who under the discretion of the judge, is sentenced for for 23 months is landed on the municipality or the province for the term of his imprisonment. There is something wrong in that. The cost of criminal justice, I hold —although the constitution does not provide for it,—should be borne by the federal power which passes the laws. Violations of those laws should not entail expense on the municipalities or the provinces. If my memory serves me right, it was a question which came up at the last provincial conference at Ottawa. Some of the provinces find it a tremendous expense to administer the federal laws and maintain the public peace. I am not aware that the premiers of these provinces succeeded in having their views accepted by the federal government, but I understand the matter was discussed. I am very sorry that they were not in a position to force their views on the federal power, because it is only reasonable and just that the laws which we make should be enforced at our expense and not at the expense of our neighbours. To come back to the point, I hold that if the provinces were consulted in regard to this matter, they would have no objection whatever to the federal power passing the law and then afterwards providing the machinery for its enforcement. It would relieve the provinces of a great deal of expense and worry. That is as far as the legal aspect of the Bill is concerned. I am not prepared to say that the Bill would be declared ultra vires, but it would be unfortunate, under the circumstances, when we have such a general consensus of opinion in its favour, to have any doubt exist as to the jurisdiction of this parliament, and I for one would like to see any such doubt removed. Allusion was made to the reformatories in this country, and especially those in the province of Quebec, and the hon. senator from Montarville took the objection that this legislation would be an invasion of the rights of the province in regard to this matter. True we have our reformatories and industrial schools, but the Bill goes a great deal further than our present law does. Our present law provides for the arrest of children who violate the law in any degree, whether by throwing a snowball on the street or stealing. When arrested, they are put in the common cells with the derelicts of humanity, and kept there for eight or ten days. Our Speaker, who was at one time acting in the capacity of a magistrate, some years ago, could speak from his own experience of the courts of this matter. It must have been his painful duty to send boys of ten, twelve, or fourteen years of age to the common jail to await trial, sometimes for weeks. It is during the first eight or ten days when they are herded with criminals of the lowest type that these children are corrupted, and that is what we must guard against. When I was in Montreal the other day, attending the court, I saw three little tots handcuffed to a big, grown up prisoner. I saw those children, little fellows about ten or twelve years of age, smaller than the pages on the floor of this House, taken out of the the black maria, the prison van. That is not a spectacle to make us proud of our civilization. The hon. senator opposite (Mr. Ellis) has told us of what occurs in St. John.

and I suppose the same thing applies to other cities. It is because the law provides no other way of dealing with these children. True, after they have been tried, it is within the jurisdiction of the judge to send them to a reformatory if they are under sixteen years of age, but they have been tried in open court after they have been in the company of criminals, and it is only then they are sent to the industrial schools. It has been intimated that in the province of Quebec we are not supplied with such institutions. We have them, and probably more of them to the square mile than in any other country in the world, kept up by voluntary contributions. I do not intend going into a discussion of the provisions of this Bill. As far as I can see, they are well adapted to the condition of things which is sought to be created by such legislation. I do not say that every word and line in it are perfect. As the hon. member from DeSalaberry said, the arrest of a young man of sixteen because tobacco is found on his person, would not be the proper thing to do in a vast number of cases. These are details which should be left to the discretion of the truant officer, or what is called here the probation officer. A great deal of paternal discretion should be exercised by the officers carrying out this law. They should be actuated by charity instead of trying to gain a salary. The younger the child the greater should be the discretion of these officers in dealing with him. From my point of view, this Bill fills a long felt want, fills a vacancy in our statutes and fills it, as the hon. gentleman from St. John said, from a benevolent and, as I say, from a paternal point of view. To some observations made by some of my hon. colleagues on this subject I cannot subscribe. A very learned and able effort was made by one of my colleagues to impress this House and country with the idea that crime can be inherited, that sin follows the blood.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—That is not so—I said the tendency to crime.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Some of the expressions were stronger. I am very glad the hon. senator does not go so far, but I claim that not even the tendency to crime can be transferred. There is as much possibility of either crime itself or the tendency to crime actually passing from parent to child as there is of rain passing from heaven to Hades. Every human being is composed of a body with which science can deal and can trace and develop its special features, but when it comes down to the spirit side of a human being science is incapable of fathoming the difference between the two, and that is the great mistake of many learned authors; Huxley, who has been quoted among others. They are materialists. They scarcely believe that man has a soul at all. There is not the slightest doubt that diseases of the body can be inherited; that physical features can be transmitted, but show me where the mind and soul of the baby has been polluted by the wrongful conduct of its parents if you can? Every man enters the world with a soul and mind of his own and neither soul or mind can be touched by any scientific process or scientific manipulation of the facts or figures. If a tendency to crime can be transmitted, why not assert that there is a tendency to virtue also? Nobody ever attempts to make that statement, but our philanthropists always teach that there is a tendency to transmit crime to the child. Now, that would be introducing the element of irresponsibility, because if you are going to convince society that those who do wrong are not responsible because of inherited tendencies, you will destroy the social fabric. Every man is responsible for his own conduct. Take the child of a drunkard, or a thief; place him where he will not have a bad example before him, where we has good surroundings, and he will become as good a citizen as the child born in the surroundings of health, virtue and cleanliness. How often have we seen the child of a drunkard or a criminal rise to the height of great fame in all walks of life, ecclesiastical, military, commercial and financial and in the fine arts while the sons of sainty mothers and good honest fathers have become the victims of their own passions. Tell me not that it is poor food and poverty that create crime. They do not; because if that were a sound argument we ought to say that good food and clothing ought to prevent crime; but it is the experience of life to-day in every civilized country that the most trained thief, the most obdurate profligate, the most crafty murderer is well educated is well bred, well fed and well groomed. These men have had good suroundings, good mothers prepared to sacrifice their lives for them, and who, from day to day, shed bitter tears because their children have gone wrong. If the argument is good one way it ought to be good the other way, so I hold the medical theory in this question is opposed to reason, fact and historical tradition. It is opposed to the traditions of Christianity. There was a curse placed upon man, upon his bones, his blood and his flesh, but not upon his soul. The soul is composed of two elements, spiritual and intellectual, and no matter how weak and debilitated the physical constitution may be the soul may shine more brightly probably within the poor frame than in the biggest and noblest creature so far as size and figure are concerned. So I hold that these theories should be set aside, that the object of this Bill should be carried out in its entirety, and that is to prevent children from mingling with common criminals whether they be of high or low degree; that children should be prevented from reading trashy and dangerous literature, which leads them on to deeds of what they think glory, but which are very often crimes. Take them when they commit an error in youthful life, such as a violation of municipal by-laws and care for them. Do not have them herded with criminals in our common jails. Do not place them under the influence of evil people. This Bill, if enacted, and properly carried out, will put our young population on a different footing, teach them to be self-respecting and independent, to be men instead of slaves of their own growing passions. On the whole, I hope this legislation will soon be placed on the statute books of our country, whether those of the Federal Parliament or of the provincial legislatures. I once more, in the name of the fathers and mothers of this country who have children going wrong, and who are unable to control them, thank the hon. Secretary of State for having given them an opportunity to express their views in regard to this matter and giving them the hope that their boys and girls will be looked after by the state when they are unable to do so themselves.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Middlesex)—My only excuse for troubling the House for a moment on this question, is the invitation of the hon. Secretary of State for an expression of opinion from members of this House on the Bill now before us. After 24 years experience in the legislature of Ontario, where this subject has been dealt with, and the history of which furnishes a sort of outline of the evolution of the treatment of juvenile offenders, I may be able to offer to the House the experience of our province on this question. I might say at the outset, however, that it is very gratifying—it is to me and it must be to the Secretary of State—to find such unanimity of opinion in regard to the provisions of this measure. While other matters are contentious and are debated with some degree of feeling, and sometimes of hostility, there seemed to be but one opinion in the House as to the importance of this Bill and the humane and benevolent purpose which it is proposed to serve. Referring to the history of the province of Ontario, I may say that we began to deal first with juvenile offenders early after confederation, and for that purpose there was established in the little town of Penetanguishene a reformatory for boys, a reformatory that was sometimes filled almost to overflowing, its capacity being between two and three hundred. The conditions of committal to that reformatory were indictable offences against the laws of the province, or offences against the general criminal law of the land. The objections that have been taken to the working of that reformatory after some years of experience were three-fold. Firstly it was found that boys committed to that prison were taken by the police or by the constable who arrested them, and locked up, sometimes in company with other criminals, prior to their trial. There was laid upon them at the very outset of their career a criminal brand. They were next tried at the police court in the full blaze of day, and their names would appear in the reports of the police-court in the public newspapers next day. That was a second intimation to the public that here there was a serious offence committed by boys, say under sixteen years of age. Pending their transmission to the reformatory they were locked up in the county jail, and there they associated, sometimes inadvertently it may be, or from the absence of proper classification, with criminals. So that at these three stages in their career they were associated sometimes with hardened criminals, and the effect upon a child at that stage was necessarily of a hardening character. When they were sent to the reformatory, of course they were not placed under lock and key as an ordinary prisoner in jail or penitentiary; they were committed for a period of years, but under strict supervision, a supervision which still further impressed upon the boy the fact that he was a criminal, and although great care was taken for his instruction in the ordinary course of public school study, and although there were chaplains to give him the necessary moral instruction, and although he was supposed to be taught there, or an effort made to teach him, still, during the term the boy felt he was a prisoner, that he had some at least of the characteristics of the criminal, or was so regarded, and when he returned to his companions he was earmarked in a similar way, so that he, to a certain extent, was ostracised, or felt he was ostracised, from the companionship of his former days. In all the stages from his first committal to jail or to the close of his career at the reformatory, there was more or less of the brand of the criminal upon him. Now, those who are interested in the reformation of boys came to the conclusion that that course, though punitive, was not reformative, and we found by experience, sad to say, that many boys who had served a course say for three years in the reformatory had merely entered upon a career, and some of them rounded up at the central prison. It became a conviction then upon the government of Ontario, and upon others interested in the reformation of youths, that that process was not an effective one. The next stage in the reformation or evolution of the treatment of juvenile delinquents was the passing of the Industrial Act of 1882, an Act which I may say was brought to the attention, or the principle of which was brought to the attention of the government or the legislature by the mayor of the city of Toronto of that time, Mr. W. H. Howland. By the Industrial Schools Act, provision was made, the reformatory still going on, that another class of juvenile offenders should be reached, and that a different mode of treatment be adopted in the case. Those who were not reached by the Act providing for the establishment of a reformatory were the classes which I am going to mention. The classes were as follows:

(a) Who is found persistently begging or receiving alms or being any street or public place for the purpose of begging or receiving alms; or who is without settled home.

(b) Who by reason of the neglect, drunkenness or other vices of the parents, is suffered to be growing up without salutory parental control and education, or in circumstances exposing him to lead an idle and dissolute life.

(c) Who has been found guilty of petty crime and who in the opinion of the judge or magistrate before whom he has been convicted, should be sent to an industrial school instead of to a jail.

(d) Who, being a child between ten and fourteen years of age, has been expelled from school for vicious and immoral conduct.

These are the four classes with which it was proposed to deal under the Industrial School Act. Those who are truants from the public school were somewhat numerous. Boys do not always like the restraints of a public school, and there were wandering around the streets of our larger cities, a number of lads, who by virtue of being absent from school were sometimes led into immoral habits, and were preparing themselves for being criminals under the Criminal Code. Now, the industrial school was a different institution entirely from the reformatory. In the industrial school, provision had been made by the government to provide the board of trustees with a large area of land where the boys could be employed in market gardening and farming in a light way. It was felt that outdoor recreation of that kind which was not altogether recreation but light labour, was more disciplinary in its effect, and boys were encouraged when they entered the school to engage in pursuits of that kind. Moreover, the school has none of the characteristics of the reformatory. The very name suggested its character. It was not a reformatory on the face of it, although it was one in fact. It was a school, and to guard against it being a place of restraint for boys, the school was practically under the control of the trustees, the one we established first, of the public schools of Toronto. The superintendent was appointed by the board of trustees. All the teachers and staff were appointed, so that it was removed from the category of being a school for delinquents such as the reformatory was. There was also provided training for the boys in calisthenics. The school was made attractive in that sense. They were encouraged to form themselves into little bands for their own amusement. There was private instruction for them in light trades, such as tailoring and type-setting, and altogether it was made as attractive and as easy as possible. It was visited by members of the board of trustees, members of parliament, clergymen and others, and the surroundings of the school were made as much like a home as it was possible to make them. It was found satisfactory in this respect at all events, that seldom did boys run away from school, although it was in an open field, and no restraint apparently upon them. The surroundings seemed to be so agreeable to them that very seldom did boys run away. If they ran away, of course, pains were taken to return them to the school, and uniformly with success. That industrial school was established by Act of parliament in 1882. The school I believe was opened in 1887, and it has now been running for twenty years, and perhaps about a thousand boys have passed through the institution. When it was found after a period of discipline, say of three months or six months, or longer depending upon the character of the boy, an effort was made by the officers of the school to find for such a boy a foster home, and the school was slowly depleted in that way, the boys going from the school to fosterhomes, and I am very happy to say that the report of the superintendent shows that the boys sent to fosterhomes turned out very well on the whole. Of course there would be a small percentage of offenders in such a class, as there would be I suppose if the boys were selected from a better class; but the success of the school has been most gratifying, and has encouraged the government to extend its influence in other quarters. In regard to the religious instruction of the school, both Protestants and Catholics were under the same roof, although they had separate chaplains. Latterly it was found desirable that they should separate, and through the offices of the Archbishop of Toronto a school was established on the opposite side of the city for the education of Roman Catholic children on similar lines precisely to those attending the other school, the Victoria or the Industrial School. The attendance at both schools is about 320, and the care and instruction in the schools were as satisfactory in one case as in the other. Now I have come to the industrial school side of the question, which dealt with larger children that were of school age. The next step we found necesary to take was to reach out for children even younger than those who were running the street, and who were unfit to send to an industrial schol, and in 1893 an Act was passed called 'An Act for the protection and reformation of neglected children.' It is generally known as the Neglected or Dependent Children's Act, or for short, as the Gibson Act, for it was in charge of the Hon. Mr. Gibson then. This Act was based largely upon an Act passed by Australia, not the Commonwealth, but one of the provinces of Australia, and this Act went a little further than the Act in regard to industrial schools, although when I read the conditions of the Act you will see that in many respects they were similar :

(2) Any constable appointed or any chief constable or inspector of police may apprehend without warrant and bring before the judge as neglected any child apparently under the age of fourteen years if a boy, or sixteen years if a girl, who comes within any of the following descriptions, namely:

(a) Who is found begging or receiving alms or thieving in any street, thoroughfare, tavern or place of public resort, or sleeping at night in the open air ;

(b) Who is found wandering about at late hours and not having any home or settled place of abode, or proper guardianship ;

(c) Who is found associating or dwelling with a thief, drunkard or vagrant, or who by reason of the neglect or drunkenness or other vices of its parent or guardians is suffered to be growing up without salutary parental control and education, or in circumstances exposing such child to an idle and dissolute life;

(d) Who is found in any house of ill-fame or in company with a reputed prostitute;

(e) Who is found destitute, being an orphan or deserted by its parents or having a surviving parent who is undergoing imprisonment for crime.

That Act was designed to reach down to small children and in some cases it was found necessary to take children from homes of drunken parents as early as six months or a year of age. Under this Act provision was made for the organization of childrens aid society and there stands a very flourishing branch in the city of Ottawa under the presidency of Mr. Scott who informs me that during a term of that society, they have already settled between 500 and 600 children. That is an extraordinary record, and shows the activity and philanthrophy of the members of that society; but one of the provisions of this Act, and a fundamental one was under the childrens aid society there should be what is called a children's shelter, that is, a home for children who are in this condition or who are reckless and uncared for to which they should be taken in the meantime and who should be nourished if they were too young to care for themselves until a foster-home could be provided for them. That was one of the fundamental principles of it, and another fundamental principle was the appointment of an officer, by the Ontario government, who should be superintendent of these homes, and who should seek to organize them in different cities and who should be a sort of foster parent. We were fortunately successful in getting an officer, Mr. Kelso, who seemed to be born for this work, and whose ability, as much as anything else, contributed to the success of this scheme. In his last report he says there have passed through his hands since his appointment about thirteen years ago over four thousand children. About 2,000 of these have gone into foster homes, so many from the city of Ottawa, so many from Peterborough, so many from Hamilton and so many from London and so on, so that we have with this philanthropic drag net, if I may call it so, rescued from the slums and streets and drunken associations in the last thirteen years about 4,000 children. Here is a remarkable effect of these homes. I referred to the Penetanguishene reformatory. That reformatory, when these homes were established, had a population of about 250. Year by year the attendance at that reformatory was being reduced, and about 1904, say three years ago, the attendance had lowered to something below one hundred. It was thought then that we could, if we used the machinery of the industrial schools, practically abolish the reformatory. It cost us from $30,000 to $40,000 a year, and under the advice of Mr. Kelso, the matter was considered by the government and he advised that he should be empowered to get a remission of sentence of those boys from the Minister of Justice, for the Minister of Justice only could commute the sentence, and that he be allowed to find foster homes for them. He went to work with great alacrity, and, consequently, two years ago or thereabout, we were able to close the reformatory. We reduced the supply to our industrial schools, of juvenile delinquents and we reduced the supply of neglected and dependent children and now there is no reformatory. Let me point out one or two advantages of the system. In the first place, children who are taken to a shelter, or boys who are sent to an industrial school, are taken charge of by the superintendent of neglected children. That is to say, when any officer or constable finds a boy is wandering the streets, that he has no home, he is taken charge of and sent to a shelter. That officer is bound to find him shelter until he can be brought before a judge. The trial is private. The witnesses are examined in private, and until he can be sent to an industrial school he is at one of those shelters and kept away from criminals altogether. That is one of the great features of the system, so that the boy himself and all who are concerned in his history or in his career feel that he has been treated as a neglected child, not as a criminal child and the effect of these two treatments on this child's mind and the public mind is in my opinion very great. And then as to the smaller children taken from various homes, these are taken care of and provided for in the shelter by the government of Ontario. We have bought premises for that purpose and have employed a matron, and these children are as carefully attended to as they can be in the ordinary homes of the country, and, as soon as they are of age, foster homes are found for them and this other curious circumstance exists that we are unable to find as many children as there are applications for by those who wish to take charge of young boys or girls, in order to bring them up as members of their families. There seems to be a demand for those children. In 1903 the Children's Aid Act was passed, but that was supplemented by very important legislation of the Dominion of Canada. In the province of Ontario we can only deal as a government in regard to offences committed against Ontario law. We had no authority to appoint an officer to deal with those indicted for indictable offences, or who were brought under the Criminal Code. So an Act was passed in 1904 by the Dominion parliament respecting the arrest, trial and imprisonment of youthful offenders. Supposing a boy under fourteen or a girl under sixteen years of age, is charged with some offence, the trial is to be without publicity. The Act says:

> Shall be kept in custody separate from older persons charged with criminal offences and separate from all persons undergoing sentences of imprisonment, and shall not be confined in the lock-up or police-station with older persons.

We could not deal with that by the provincial government. With regard to offences against the laws of the provinces, the police officer would naturally bring those guilty of petty larceny and crimes of that kind before a police magistrate. The Dominion government passed an Act providing that young offenders, of the age of fourteen for boys and sixteen for girls, should be kept separate from other criminals, and they did more. They provided for the trial of these juveniles before a judge in a private way, without publicity. The officer in charge of neglected and dependent children appointed by Ontario should be sent for. He should be present at the trial, and if, in his judgment, it appeared that that child was an offender that could be dealt with by him as the officer of the province of Ontario, he would take the child in charge, find for it a foster home, or if that was not convenient, the child would then go to an industrial schol. The whole policy of the legislation of Ontario has been to try and keep the child out of the ordinary ruts, out of the ordinary course of criminal offenders, and in that way to preserve him from being polluted and tainted by criminals of a harder character. Now we come to the next stage, towards where we could not advance without Dominion legislation and that was to secure probation officers who would take charge of young lads and girls who were committed for indictable offences under suspended sentence, and I have here from Mr. Scott a statement which shows in his experience the necessity for the legislation which is provided in this Bill. He says:

> The chief difficulties which the Ottawa Society has encountered in endeavouring to carry on this work under the Dominion Act of 1894 are as follows :
> 1. At present the child can only be allowed out on suspended sentence and if the child is not doing well or endeavouring to obey instructions it cannot be brought again before the court without laying a new charge.

Hon. gentlemen will understand that by the appointment of the probation officer the process would be this: the child is found guilty, but is discharged on suspended sentence, and goes to its own home. The probation officer goes to the home with the child. The parents are seen. The guardian is seen, and they are told: 'Well, now, if that child behaves himself—he is under your care, but I am an officer of the law appointed to look after him, and as long as he behaves himself, the sentence will not be enforced, but if he does not behave himself I will take him away from you and put him in an industrial school or find a foster home for him; and the probation officer, under this Bill, would have the right to visit the child from time to time, watch his conduct, and by that additional surveillance, the child would feel his liberty was worth something to him, and his parents would feel that the honour of the child was worth something, and between the three parties, the parent, the child and the probation officer, the country would be spared the expense of educating that child in an industrial school, and the child would be under such restraining influences as possibly would lead him to a reformed life. Then, Mr. Scott further says:

> 2. The probation officers have strictly speaking no legal standing in visiting the homes and no power to go there if unwelcome. In the great majority of cases their efforts are welcomed by parents and children alike but occasionally their good offices are rejected and in such a case under the Act of 1894 nothing more can be done. The present Bill gives them a standing and authorizes this part of the work.

The children's aid societies appoint what they call probation officers. They are volunteers, and if they are paid at all, they are paid by the society, but these officers have no legal standing. They cannot say: 'We will take the child away.' They have no power to do that. It is beyond their reach, but if that probation officer had a legal standing, then he could say to the child: 'If you don't behave yourself you will be taken away,' so that the probation officer who is proposed under this Bill is an officer having a legal standing, and in that way he can carry out the judgment of the court. That is the key, if I understand the Bill aright, to its whole operation. It uses the machinery of the province and in no sense contravenes the local jurisdiction, as I understand it. In fact, I think, the Bill distinctly says that the rights of the provinces are not to be interfered with. Clause 31 reads as follows :

Nothing in this Act contained shall be construed as having the effect of repealing or overriding any provision of any provincial statute relating to neglected or dependent children; and when a juvenile delinquent who has not been guilty of an act which is, under the provisions of the Criminal Code, an indictable offence, comes within the provisions of a provincial statute relating to neglected or dependent children, it may be dealt with either under the provincial Act or under this Act as may be deemed to be in the best interests of such child.

I think there is no danger of collision, and there need be no danger of collision between Dominion and provincial authorities in regard to this matter. Let me emphasize again the importance of this Bill in regard to that particular feature of it. The weakness of our case—and we cannot go any further under the provincial law—has been the want of the power to appoint a provincial officer, because a probation officer will take the supervision of such children at their homes under suspended sentence, and will reach them there, and if their conduct is not satisfactory will transfer them to a foster home or an industrial school. That this matter has been deemed very important is shown by the statement made in the last report of the prisons and reformatories of the province of Ontario. In this report, I find this statement :

The Prisoners' Aid Association of Toronto recently sent a delegation there, the members of which were courteously received by the hon. the Minister of Justice. They asked that a Bill be introduced at the present session of the Dominion parliament, authorizing the Lieutenant Governor in Council in each province of Canada: 1. To appoint one or more probation officers for each city having a population of over ten thousand inhabitants, and one probation officer for each county in the province. 2. The duties of these probation officers, to be defined and outlined in an Act passed by the provincial legislatures authorizing such probation officers, under the direction of a provincial inspector of prisons, to take charge of prisoners committed to their care by any county judge or police magistrate having jurisdiction in such province. 3. That a county judge or magistrate may, upon conviction of a prisoner, impose sentence and afterwards commit such prisoner to the care of a probation officer by ordering the execution of the sentence to be suspended for such time and such conditions as the court prescribes.

So that what is proposed in this Bill is practically the recommendation of the Prisoner's Aid Association of the city of Toronto, an association which has been exceedingly active in prison gate reform, and finding homes and work and employment for persons discharged from the central prison. This evolution with regard to juvenile offenders disposes of one or two things; in the first place, it disposes of the fallacy which existed in this country some years ago, and which, unfortunately, exists in some countries still, namely, that juvenile offenders should be treated as criminals. That is not the way to reform children. Secondly, it settles that industrial education is a means to the moral reformation of boys and girls. The old saying that Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do, is the crystallization of the idea that idleness begets delinquency, and in our industrial schools idleness does not prevail. Moreover, while there is a good deal of work, there is a good deal of recreation. Then it is based upon the fundamental principle that a home for a child is the best place in which to develop all his powers, moral and intellectual, and for that reason the efforts of the Ontario government have for years been directed to removing children to foster homes, believing that in the foster home even, the child is better than in an industrial school. Now in case of removal of the child to a foster home—that is the the home of a person who has only a sentimental or philanthrophical interest in his welfare—has a tendency to make the child's home life better, and the probation officer serves that double purpose. First his visits to the home of that child is a warning to the father and mother that that home be raised to a certain standard ; that viciousness cannot prevail there or the child, who may be dearly loved, must be removed. Consequently it involves this other fact, that the home of the boy's parents, if made as it ought to be, is better for him than any other home, and so it serves the double purpose of reforming the child and improving the home and building up that fundamental element in the prosperity of every advanced nation. I must not take up the time of the House further only to say that, so far as I am individually concerned, I am satisfied this Bill will serve a very useful purpose. I do not know that the hon. Secretary of State or this House could devote its time better than to study the whole question of juvenile offences. I do not believe we are far behind. The most advanced state of the neighbouring union that I know of is Massachusetts, and, perhaps, Illinois, and one or two other western states, but if this Bill is passed, as I hope it will be, next session at the latest, then Canada will be in as advanced a position as Massachusetts. I have met delegates from that state, and those concerned in the operation of the law regarding juvenile offenders, and I remember how they emphasized the matter of the probation officer, and, if I understand anything about the question at all, I believe that this is the key to the situation, and the early operation of the Bill in that regard will have a very beneficial effect.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is the hon. gentleman in a position to give the country the state of the children after they leave these homes as far as ability intellectual and moral is concerned ? Has he the statistics under his hand ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Middlesex)—I think they could be got, but this we do know that the children in the foster homes go to school with the other public school children. They are under indenture to remain until they are at least eighteen years of age. We know that many of these children have grown up in comfortable foster homes and have been married from them. We have followed them that far. I am not speaking of all cases, but in general the records of these foster homes and the characters of the children are most satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That proves there is no tendency to crime.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 11 a.m.

DRY DOCK AT ST. JOSEPH DE LEVIS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

Does the government know that the dry dock at St. Josepsh de Lévis is of dimensions too narrow to permit the entering therein, in case of need, of vessels such as the Empresses of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or of the new turbine vessels of the Allan Company ?

Is it the intention of the government to obviate the inconveniences for the necessities of navigation which may result from the existence of a dry dock which is too small and useless, by the enlargement of the existing dock, or by the construction of a new dock of such dimensions that the largest vessels may enter it?

If a new dock is built will it be built in the suburbs of Quebec or of Lévis, at a place which is accessible to the largest vessels, even to those whose draught of water does not permit them to ascend the river above Quebec ?

When does the government propose to commence these works ? Will it be this year ? Next year ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have been unable to obtain the answer in the form I wished to. The hon. gentleman will recognize that the government appreciates the necessity of doing something, because the answer given to me is that the whole question is now engaging the attention of the department. It is the only answer I am able to get from them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Perhaps the hon. gentleman could give me a further answer to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman's question may have stimulated the action of the department. That is the only interest I can gather from it ; so that he has accomplished his purpose by putting the inquiry on the paper. I have asked for a seriatim answer but cannot get it. They say the department are engaged in the matter and are giving it attention.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That would do as a general answer to any question I might put on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am sorry it is so.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman think we can obtain an answer before prorogation ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If I can get anything better I will be only too glad.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then we will let the question stand.

CORRESPONDENCE RE PETAWAWA CAMP.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved :

That an humble adress be presented to His Excellency the Govenor General; praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House a copy of all the documents and of all correspondence whatsoever relating to the choice of, and the taking possession of the lands now known under the name of the Petawawa Military Camp.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The correspondence is very long. I signed a return for the other Chamber, and I do not know whether they propose to print it. I will communicate with the Militia Department and see if they kept a copy of it, so that we can have it here. It contains a good many folios, and we may not be able to get it in time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I did not expect to have it this session, but if we could get a copy of it from the House of Commons it might be produced.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I fancy we can get a copy ; at all events, I will make inquiry.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It was moved for in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes; I think Mr. Fielding laid it on the table yesterday. I signed the memorandum, and possibly they may have a typewritten copy ; if so, I will bring it over.

The SPEAKER—Will the motion be granted ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, if it can be obtained ; at all events, the motion will be carried.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to ask the hon. Secretary of State if he has any information to give us with reference to those returns to which I called his attention yesterday, one with regard to foreigners who have been engaged in the military service—an order passed in the beginning of March ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have just received a letter from the deputy minister. It does not give the returns. He says, with reference to the order of the 19th February last for a return regarding the employment in the militia of persons from the British isles, that it was necessary to call for a return from all the permanent corps stations. He states that the work was put in hand last month, but it was quite evident it could not be completed before prorogation, and it was decided to finish it for next session. He says that it was necessary to use a wide carriage typewriter for this return, and it would interfere with the work of the department if they used the wide carriage machine in the office. He states that this is the only return that has been ordered this session that has not been brought down, and he hopes there is no objection to allowing it to stand till next session.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That return was ordered in February. I never knew they wanted a special machine to prepare it, but I observe by the record that they must use a special machine. What is the name of the machine?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He says : 'It is necessary to use a wide carriage typewriting machine for the return, and to use our machine for the return to the exclusion of other important work would interfere with the work of the department.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose they might increase the width of the machine at the beginning of next session.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I rise to a question of privilege. A very lengthy document has been placed in my hands in regard to the statement I found it necessary to make in answer to an argument used by the hon. gentleman from Lincoln during the discussion of the Labour Bill, known as the McMullen Bill throughout the country. A portion of the trades unions of the country has taken exception to my remark.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Is this a question of privilege ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes; I have to correct a statement I made on the floor of the House. It is a personal matter, and I do not want my words to remain on the records of this House if they are not correct. Is the hon. gentleman from Halifax ready to object to that? He will take first prize before the end of the session as an objector in regard to matters of this kind.

The SPEAKER—Will the hon. gentleman proceed to state his point as succinctly as possible?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am doing so, but not if the hon. gentleman is objecting. I have received the following communication:

Canadian Typographical Union, No. 1.
Ottawa, April 24, 1907.

Hon. Senator Cloran.

Dear Sir,—The attention of Canadian Typographical Union, No. 1, Ottawa, has been directed to your statement in the Senate, in an interruption in the speech of Hon. Mr. Gibson, while dealing with what is commonly designated the McMullen Bill, in which you are quoted (vide Senate 'Hansard') as saying:

'Is the hon. gentleman aware of the fact that that particular lodge is in local rebellion against unionism, and is not in good standing with the trades unions in Canada?

'Hon. Mr. Gibson. I am not, and I do not think it is, because it is called Typographical Union No. 1.'

'Hon. Mr. Cloran. It is in open rebellion against trades unionism in Canada.'

Our union takes strong exception to this statement, and believe it could only have been made by you after having been intentionally so informed by some of the many paid agents of American unionism with which this country abounds for the present; men whose chief interest in maintaining continued affiliation with Americans of Canadian trades unions is largely to be found in the money they draw, and the opportunity it affords for personal ends. In dealing with politicians their stock in trade argument, when speaking of Canadian trades union,—that is unions which refuse further to maintain a connection with a foreign body or bodies whose policy and interests are not only not identical with the best interests of Canadians but foreign to that spirit of national dignity and independence so aptly expressed and stoutly maintained by the political leaders and party to which you give your adherence and support—is that they are not recognized as within the pale of trades unionism at all.

I am instructed to say, hon. sir, that Canadian Typographical Union is not in open rebellion against trades unionism in Canada, nor even hostile to those of our fellow Canadians who have not seen fit to assert their independence, but we, in common with the National Trades and Labour Congress, with affiliated unions numbering some 12,000 members; the National Textile Workers, some 25,000; the Provincial Workmen's Association, some 18,000; and many locals scattered throughout Canada, with a large membership, maintain the right to take exception to or approve the representations made to our parliaments or public men as being the opinion of Canadian trades unionism, by men whose policy and opinion are often framed for them by some executive officer in some city in the United States. Yet such is a fact to-day in Canada. To say the least our expression of opinion should not be offset by such a bald statement as made by you.

In conclusion, hon. sir, let me say, that our union consists of members who have withdrawn from international unionism, all of whom are foremost in the cause of trades unionism, and the interest of Canadian labour, therefore it is obvious that our union is not 'in open rebellion against trades unionism in Canada.'

We hope and trust, hon. sir, you will take an early opportunity of removing the impression cast upon our union, in the Senate by the remarks referred to, which we do you the justice to believe that you were misinformed, and did not do us this injustice intentionally.

I am, honourable sir,
Your obedient servant,
CHAS. G. PEPPER,
President,
Canadian Typographical Union, No. 1.

I may state in reply, that this assumption is altogether without foundation. I was not so informed. I made the statement on the strength of the reports published in the public press. I am prepared to admit that I was partially wrong, but not wholly so, in saying that this special union, which separated only lately, in the past 12 or 16 months from the International Union, was in open rebellion against trades unionism in Canada. I should have said it was in open rebellion against international unionism. That statement I will stand by. I was wrong in stating that it was in open rebellion against trades unionism in Canada and I do not wish that statement to be perpetuated on the records. It is not according to the fact that is the only statement I have to make, and I hope it will not be objected to by the hon. member for Halifax.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is prompted by Pepper.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I objected to the hon. gentleman's statement, because I knew at the time he made that statement that it was inaccurate with respect to the Typographical Union of the city of Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am making the statement. I want to give the hon. gentleman credit for being manly enough to admit he was wrong.

The SPEAKER—There is nothing before the House.

THIRD READING.

Bill (113) An Act to amend the Post Office Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

THE DEPARTMENT OF MINES BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (139) An Act to create a Department of Mines.

He said: About the year 1854, United Canada created what was then called a Geological Survey branch. A very distinguished man in those days was put at the head of it, Sir Wm. Logan. It had a comparatively small staff, and the annual vote for its support was limited to $50,000 a year. Among other duties, the officials were required to engage in was that of ascertaining the mining capabilities of Canada. However, the class of men who have been from time to time appointed in the Geological Survey branch regarded the geological formations as being much more important than the mere discovery of mines, and as hon. gentlemen will recognize, and the whole country will admit, that so far as the discovery of mines in Canada is concerned, the Geological Survey Branch have not been a success. Our mines, as a rule, have been discovered by accident, by persons who were non-professionals, and not then engaged in looking after mines, but simply going along casually, kicking up the sod beneath the foot, or digging into the ground for some other purpose, they discovered minerals. I remember perfectly well that some time ago the Geological Branch stated that so far as what is known as western Ontario—that is the section of country between Lake Ontario and the Manitoba boundary—that gold could not be found, that it was not the proper stratum for gold, and that gold did not exist there. That theory was found to be fallacious; I merely mention it as an illustration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What part of the country does the hon. gentleman refer to?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am speaking of the country between the Lake Superior and the Manitoba boundary. For years and years I remember the Geological Survey officials announced that that section was not in the gold strata, and therefore that it was idle to look for gold. We have found that that statement was fallacious, because gold has been found in very many places lying between the Manitoba boundary and Lake Superior, and I might refer to other parts of Canada. I mention those facts simply to show that the study of geology overshadowed the more practical one of ascertaining whether mines were to be found in any part of Canada. Such study required, no doubt, a higher class of men and these men have given most valuable reports from year to year on the various geological formations which exist in Canada, and they have been recognized, not only in Canada but elsewhere, as worthy of the chief of the Survey, Sir Wm. Logan. It has been decided to separate the Mines Branch from the Geological Branch. That is the object of the Bill. It practically repeals the Geological Survey Act, and re-enacts the provisions in this Bill. Some of the clauses of the measure, which we can refer to in committee, are in reference to the establishment of a mining branch. The Geological Branch and the Mining Branch will be attached to the Inland Revenue Department at present, and the same minister will be at the head of all. It has been found that the Interior Department, particularly since the development of the Northwest, is entirely overloaded. It is an immense department, and it is almost impossible for one man to practically administer, and up to a comparatively recent period the Geological Survey Branch was attached to the Department of the Interior. The Department of Indian Affairs, which is a pretty important department also, has been attached to the Interior Department, and therefore it is considered in the interests of the several departments that a better division should be made, and so the Geological Survey Branch and the Mines Branch will be attached to the Department of Inland Revenue, and it is hoped therefore that the question of mines, where they exist, and the proper mode of developing, and the reports on mines, whether they are really paying, can be more successfully administered than they have been in the past, because I think my statement a few minutes ago, that we are not indebted to the Geological Department for any of the valuable discoveries in connection with mines, is quite correct. It has been rather looked upon as being the Department of Geology, and, therfore, it will be of value if we have scientific men who can report to the public whether mines that are from time to time discovered, and that are announced with large headlines in the public press day by day, are really mines worthy of consideration. There must be millions of money going into mines at the present moment. Take the Cobalt region and the region to the north of that, the public no doubt are investing in mines for which they will probably never get a dollar. It would be most valuable if we could have an official who would report upon such discoveries and whether the mines were worth developing. On the mere finding of silver, or of rocks that silver and gold are usually to be found with an excitement arises, and very glowing descriptions are published, and the public are invited to subscribe. The capital is placed at a million dollars and shares are sold at five or ten cents, and the gambling spirit of the age is developed by the temptation which one sees day by day. You read those advertisements and you are apt to be carried away and say: 'Well I will chip in fifty or a hundred dollars, which will not be much to lose,' and it is lost all the same, because with the large capitalization and the small returns that come in, hon. gentlemen must recognize that these investments as a rule have not been paying. We have all more or less been bitten by the glowing terms in which the advantages of the mines are described in the prospectuses which have been issued from time to time, and it is hoped by the organization of the Mining Branch that we may have a reliable mineralogist who may be called at any time to make a report that the public will have the benefit of, a disinterested report that every one could read, and be guided by. It would save the loss of many millions of dollars, particularly just now when the mining craze is on, and so much is invested. Money is tight; and why? Because it has been thrown away from more legitimate industries. The deposits from the banks are being rapidly reduced. The banks are charging one-half to one per cent more than they were a month ago, all due in my judgment—I may be wrong—but it seems to me it is due to the speculative craze that seems to have seized the people, tempted by the glowing and attractive advertisements that appear from time to time.

I say that, as a practical question, it will be of considerable value if we could have a branch in the public service at the head of which are men who from time to time can be called upon to make a report upon the particular section of country, it may be for copper, silver or gold, and that those reports will be free and open to the public.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose now gold, silver and whisky are all in the same department?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While I most heartily approve of the organization of a Department of Mines, I fancy the public will scarcely experience all the advantages from it that have been so graphically described by my hon. friend. If he for one moment conceives that it will have the effect of stopping stock gambling in mines, he certainly will lose a lot of that comfort which he seems to be enjoying in anticipation. My hon. friend has that happy temperament which enables him to extract sunbeams from cucumbers. So far as the public is concerned, I cannot see any particular advantage to be derived from this particular branch of the government service. The gentleman who will preside over this department will have very much the same experience as those who have presided over the Geological Department. Mineralogists as well as geologists have always been at war with nature, have always conceived that nature should have distributed its precious metals according to particular theories they have laid down, and we have always found that conflict existing, and it will probably continue to exist. I should like to know why this department is to be attached to the Department of Inland Revenue? Is it on account of the personality of the present minister, who represents what might be termed the mineral province of British Columbia, or will it be moved from time to time to other departments, as the personality of the minister may determine?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Under the Act, the Governor in Council can attach the Mines Department to any branch of the public service. Probably Mr. Templeman, coming from a province noted for its mines, may be more familiar with the subject than other ministers would be, but it is not necessarily attached to that department, and may or may not be attached to some other department in future years. The Geological Bureau and the Indian Department have been moved about, but for many years have been connected with the Interior Department.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose it is not attached to the person, but to the department ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If Mr. Templeman should go away, the Mining Branch will not follow him ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not necessarily.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When we go into committee on this Bill, there are some points as to the practical working of the measure to which I desire to call the attention of the hon. minister. The results which he expects to follow from this measure are, to my mind, couleur de rose in the light of practical experience of every one of us who has paid any attention to the reports of the Geological Department. In justice to the late Dr. Selwyn, I may point out that he made reports frequently of the character to which the hon. gentleman has called attention. I never knew, however, that he denied the existence of gold in Ontario. He reported that while gold existed he had grave doubts as to whether it existed in quantities to justify the expenditure of any large amount of money. In many parts of Ontario I know that his prediction has proved to be correct.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend the Secretary of State seemed to reflect somewhat upon the officers of the Geological Survey because, in the past, they had not been the happy discoverers of mineral wealth. It would seem from the observations the hon. gentleman has made that possibly he and the government think that the only orthodox way of making a mineral discovery is through some officer of the government. I do not suppose there is anything in the Bill as far as I have looked into it—to make it a penal offence for any other person to make a discovery. It has happened before; in fact it has been almost invariably the case that the great discoveries have been made by accident. The silver mines of Bolivia were discovered by a herdsman who was chasing his goats up a hill and who seized a branch of a small tree to assist in his ascent which was uprooted and the earth came with it, and disclosed a mass of silver beneath it. By accidents of that kind great mines have been discovered and will always be continued to be found notwithstanding anything which may be found in legislation of this character.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The coal fields in Nanaimo were discovered almost in the same way.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is rather unfortunate that this Bill is being pressed during the present session of parliament. The Geological Survey commands a very great deal of respect in Canada and deserves it on account of the magnificent work that has been done by the very eminent men who have been connected with that Survey for a long time. At present that department is without a head. Mr. Low is, unfortunately, ill, and the consequence is the department has not been consulted, as I think it should have been, with reference to this proposed change. I learn on very good authority that the officers of the department are not satisfied with this change and the manner in which it is being brought about. I have not heard their reasons for objecting—they have not communicated them to me—but I have means of knowing that the Bill meets with almost universal disfavour from the officers of the Survey. In the absence of the director of the Geological Survey, this measure has been initiated and is being carried forward. There was no immediate necessity for it under the circumstances. I am told it is claimed that Mr. Low's assent was obtained to it, but we know that Mr. Low has been in a feeble state of health for some time and in no condition to give the subject proper consideration. I regret that this measure has not been held over for another session. I notice that even the name of the Geological Survey is brushed to one side. The new department is to be called the Department of Mines, and it will contain two branches, the Mines Branch and the Geological Branch. There is, after all, something in a name, and it is a pity that we should be making the Geological Survey, even in the matter of name, so subsidiary, as it is being made, to the mining interest in connection with the establishment of a new department.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should regret very much if any observations I made could be tortured into a reflection in any way on the Geological Survey. I have the highest respect for the men who have been at the head of that branch in the past. I am prepared to bear testimony to the valuable services they have rendered Canada; but what I did indicate was that the scientific men who have been at the head of that department have regarded geology as a higher science than mere mining, and naturally have followed the bent of the higher inclination in developing the geological branch, to the exclusion, very largely, of the mines branch. I should be sorry indeed that the smallest reflection should be passed on the gentlemen who are at the head of the department today. I am quite aware of their ability. The observation made by the hon. senator from Marshfield is worthy of consideration; I see no reason why the department should not be called the Department of Geology and Mines, or something of that sort. I cannot speak positively, but I think if the attention of the minister were called to it—as it certainly shall be called—he would be disposed to accept the suggestion. I appreciate the force of the observation that it is rather tending to lower the geological element by putting mines so prominently. It ought to be the other way.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (136) An Act to amend the provisions of the Criminal Code respecting the preservation of the peace in the vicinity of public works.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As I explained on the second reading, this Bill provides for better administration, for more effectively carrying out what was intended when the original Act was put on the statute-book.

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON.

1. Section 2 of the Criminal Code, chapter 146 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is amended by striking out paragraph (17) thereof and substituting therefor the following paragraph :

(17) ' intoxicating liquor ' means and includes any alcoholic, spirituous, vinous, fermented or other intoxicating liquor, or any mixed liquor a part of which is spirituous or vinous, fermented or otherwise intoxicating, and any such liquor shall be presumed to be intoxicating if it contains more than two and one-half per cent of proof spirits.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Most patent medicines, we are told, contain more than two and one-half per cent of alcohol. Is it intended by this clause to exclude them?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I hope all patent medicines which contain a proportion of alcohol will be excluded, because we know that many of them are used entirely for the alcohol they contain.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Undoubtedly. Just to evade the law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Many men have died terrible deaths in consequence of using them.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 2,

2. Section 150 of the said Code is repealed and the following is substituted therefor :

150. Upon and after the day named in such proclamation, and during such period as the proclamation remains in force, no person shall at any place within the limits specified in the proclamation, sell, barter, or directly or indirectly, for any matter, thing, profit or reward, exchange, supply or dispose of, or shall give to any other person, any intoxicating liquor, or shall expose, keep or have in his possession any intoxicating liquor intended to be dealt with in any such way.

2. The provisions of this section shall not extend to any person selling intoxicating liquor by wholesale, and not retailing it, if the said person is a licensed distiller or brewer, nor shall they apply where liquor is supplied for bona fide medicinal purposes upon the prescription of a duly qualified medical practitioner.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—These provisions by the title of the Act, apply solely to the vicinity of public works.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, there is a mileage named on each side of the public works, but the Act can only be brought into operation by proclamation. I am very sorry that any medical man should prescribe alcohol. My experience of over fifty years is that there is no possible condition of the human body in which alcohol can be of any benefit.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Very eminent professional men take a different view.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And more eminent men agree with me.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The hon. gentleman's assertion is too sweeping.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The latter part of subsection 2 is a relaxation of the law as it stands. There is now no permission to sell alcohol on a medical certificate as the law now stands, and we are amending the Act to permit it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I must say I agree heartily with my hon. friend the Secretary of State, because while I am ready to bow with due deference to my hon. friend from Kingston, I think he will not disagree with me when I say that for every pang removed by the use of alcohol there are ten created.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hospital will be the most popular place in camp.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The hon. gentleman's remarks are a reflection on the medical profession. I am satisfied that no medical man will prescribe alcohol unless he thinks it is absolutely necessary.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Not later than the last couple of months, some of the most eminent medical men in England have pronounced strongly in favour of the use of alcohol in certain cases.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—The man who lived to the age of 117 drank brandy all his life, and the reason why he died was because his brandy gave out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That alcohol is injurious to the human system under all circumstancese is a statement to which I do not think any medical man would subscribe. Almost everything that a man eats contains more or less alcohol, and my own impression is that if the hon. Secretary of State were not so absteminous he would be a rugged man like myself.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. Secretary of State should drop this amendment. He does not believe in it himself, and I doubt if the House approves of it. All the medical men living in the vicinity of public works may not have had the advantage of being trained under the hon. senator from Kingston, and I am inclined to think that a great deal of abuse may arise under this amendment. It would be much better to drop it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If we could add this proviso—provided the liquor is pure and unadulterated—I would have no objection.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That might encourage greater consumption.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The consumption of alcoholic liquors would not be what it is if they were required to be pure.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why is the other exception allowed to remain, namely, that a licensed distiller or brewer may sell liquor wholesale in a proclaimed district?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is a puzzle to me.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then we should remedy it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall make inquiry. However, I do not think I can get information on the subject. I think it is a mistake in the framing of the law.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend bring down information as to the subsection of this clause? If liquor can be brought in wholesale by a licensed distiller or brewer, it seems a piece of folly to punish the retailer. We are perpetuating what seems to be an absurdity.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is a very inconsistent provision. It will simply encourage illicit selling, because there can be no legal retail sale, and yet you provide for a wholesale trade without a legal retail business.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If it is legal to sell liquor wholesale, it will be legal to consume it. Its sale being legal, its consumption is legal. People may not be able to retail it, but they may bring it on the works, and its consumption follows.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From my standpoint, I would rather strike out subsection 2.

Hon. Mr. DAVID, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (75) An Act to amend the Railway Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of the Bill. He said : The Bill consists of three clauses, one of which authorizes the employment of counsel before the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does that mean standing counsel or counsel to be retained for particular cases ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the Bill, as originally drafted, it was intended to employ permanent counsel ; but now provision is made for retaining counsel in special cases.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (146) An Act to amend the Statute Law in its application to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. — (Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (165) An Act to amend the Customs Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (172) An Act to repeal the Act of the present session intituled An Act respecting the Surveys of the Public Lands of the Dominion and Surveyors entitled to make surveys therein.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (174) An Act to amend the Act respecting the Manufacture of Binder Twine in Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (159) An Act to increase the borrowing powers of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the first time. He said : The object of this Bill is to authorize the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec to borrow $800,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that loan guaranteed by the government ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it would not be worth much if it was not.

Hon. Mr. DAVID.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the second reading, will the hon. gentleman furnish a statement of the amount of money which has been loaned to the Harbour Commissioners of the province of Quebec—how much has been spent?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—How much has been sunk ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not use that word, but I accept the amendment—and the amount of interest unpaid.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the first time.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (166) An Act to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the first time. He said : As hon. gentlemen know, large amounts of money are now being expended in enlarging the harbour of Montreal. Unlike Quebec, Montreal has regularly paid interest on its bonds. It is believed that the further advances that are now proposed will be paid with equal regularity. Hon. gentlemen who have been in Montreal lately will have noted that all along the front of the harbour there are improvements going on which will facilitate the landing of goods. The revenue of the harbour of Montreal is improving every year.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the first time.

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (173) An Act respecting bounties on iron and steel made in Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the first reading of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a great misfortune that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce is not here in order to put himself on record on this subject.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the first time.

The Senate adjourned until 3 p.m. to-day.

SECOND SITTING.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Routine proceedings.

DRY DOCK AT ST. JOSEPH DE LEVIS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

Does the government know that the dry dock at St. Joseph de Lévis is of dimensions too narrow to permit the entering therein, in the case of need, of vessels such as the Empresses of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or of the new turbine vessels of the Allan Company?

Is it the intention of the government to obviate the inconveniences for the necessities of navigation which may result from the existence of a dry dock which is too small and useless, by the enlargement of the existing dock, or by the construction of a new dock of such dimensions that the largest vessels may enter it ?

If a new dock is built will it be built in the suburbs of Quebec or of Lévis, at a place which is accessible to the largest vessels, even to those whose draught of water does not permit them to ascend the river above Quebec ?

When does the government propose to commence these works ? Will it be this year ? Next year ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In reference to the first, the answer is yes, and as to the other, the matter is now in consideration, which is an admission that the dock was either too short or too narrow.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think that could be admitted without any consideration at all.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is not under consideration. It is the latter part that is under consideration.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As to the other answers, when could we have them ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will send them to the hon. gentleman when they are ready.

COPIES OF NEW SENATE MANUAL.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved :

That the clerk be instructed to cause to be printed and bound 500 copies of the new Senate Manual, which is to include the Standing Orders and Rules of the Senate, the Forms of Proceeding of the Senate, the British North America Act, 1867, and its amendments, the Letters Patent constituting the office of Governor General, the Royal Instructions to the Governor General and the commission of the present occupant of that office, together with various tables of contents and an index.

He said : It was the duty of the clerk to see that the manual containing the rules, forms of proceedings and other matter was prepared for the use of senators and officers of the House. The work has been completed and it was hoped that we should be in a position to lay the complete work on the table of the House, but inasmuch as at this period the work at the Printing Bureau is very considerably conjested, the proofs of the last part of the work have not yet come to hand, and particularly a very full index to the rules, but hon. gentlemen can see from what is to be laid on the table what the manual will contain. It will contain, in the first place, the rules. The substantial difference between the rules as contained in the manual and the rules which have been distributed to the hon. members of the House is, that in the manual there will be found appended to each rule the page in May or Bourinot, or both, in which the subject-matter of the rule has been dealt with. It has been felt that that will be a great convenience to hon. members, and particularly to His Honour the Speaker and to the gentlemen who usually deal in questions of order. Then there has been prepared—and we expected to have it here by this time—a comprehensive index to the rules, which covers about 16 pages of foolscap, a very full index to so small a volume as our book of rules. The next feature is the forms of proceedings. Some corrections have been made in these, but no material change, and, if hon. gentlemen will look at the paper on the table, they will see that marginal notes have been added and references to May and Bourinot inserted at the bottom of each paragraph. The British North America Act has also been printed, the various amendments to the British North America Act and also an Act known as the Colonial Laws Validity Act, which it appeared desirable to have in this manual for the information of members. Then there are, as in the old manual, the letters patent constituting the office of Governor General of Canada. Some changes in the form of those have been made by the imperial authority. The Governor General is now called Commander in Chief, as well as Governor General. Then there are royal instructions to the Governor General and there is Earl Grey's commission. I may say there is a pretty full analytical table of contents of the British North America Act and the other imperial enactments at the end of the volume.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—A great deal of work has been done in connection with the subject that my hon. friend from Halifax has brought before the House, and it is only fair to say that he has undertaken that work cheerfully himself. I have no doubt it will be of great advantage to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the members of the Senate. The hon. senator deserves the thanks of this House for the time and patience and ability he has bestowed in bringing the rules into such a convenient form.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I concur fully in the praise bestowed on the hon. senator from Halifax. In the volume we had before this, as in this one, there were different parts; the rules and orders of the House, a manual of the forms of proceedings, and the British North America Act. These will appear in this volume too. I would suggest a little departure from the old titles. This was called Rules and Orders of the Senate, but we have now Rules, Orders and Forms of Proceedings of the Senate of Canada. Those forms of proceedings that we have now are the forms that are given in our rules. To that volume we add a manual of proceedings in addition to the forms of proceedings. This second part of the Manual of Proceedings is quite different from the first, as also to the forms of proceedings. I would call it a Manual of the Orders of the Forms of Proceedings and containing the British North America Act. There are three parts of the volume and the second part has the same title as the sub-title of the first one. I would like to distinguish that, so as to make certain that our rules and forms of proceedings are different from the Manual of Proceedings.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am happy to say that in this particular instance the clerk has anticipated the wishes of my hon. friend. The general title is Canada: Senate Manual. Then the title of the next division is Standing Orders and Rules of the Senate of Canada, the third one is Forms of Proceeding, and the next comes 'Imperial Enactments.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If possible, a copy of these rules might be sent to the members who compose the committee. Within a month they could be returned with any necessary corrections, and if not returned within that time the printing might go on.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The French translation might be submitted to a committee of hon. gentlemen who speak French, but as there is no change in the rules whatever and as the translations were carefully gone over by some gentlemen who speak the French language, there is no necessity for any further revision. There is no change in them, nor is there any change in the forms of proceeding.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I refer specially to the index.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is no reason why the French version of the index should not be dealt with in any way that is desired.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is it proposed to issue 500 copies of the English version?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I understand that 500 copies were printed the last time the rules were revised, and I do not know what the proportion was, probably it will be something over 300 English and the usual proportion of French.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The usual proportion will be followed.

Hno. Mr. POWER—Yes, that is the idea.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Like other hon. gentlemen, I have not had any opportunity of looking over the work which my hon. friend from Halifax has been engaged in for a considerable time, but I have not the slightest doubt, from what I know of his industry, his care and the very great knowledge he possesses of parliamentary practice, that he has put together a compendium that will be of very great value to this House. From the explanations which he has made, I learn that marginal notes with regard to each rule will refer to Bourinot or May, one or the other of these authorities, wherein there is anything to be found bearing upon the subject-matter of the rule, and, if I understood him aright, there will be notes also to the form of proceedings in the same manner. That cannot fail to be of value as a handy little book in the hands of the hon. members, and will save a great deal of trouble in referring to the larger volumes. On that account, I think the work he has done cannot fail to be of very great value to this House. I understood my hon. friend to say that the forms of proceedings do not differ very materially from those we have had before. In future, as in the past, they will not be standing orders, but they will still have the weight of my hon. friend's authority behind them. They will contain references and will be valuable lights for hon. gentlemen of this House. My hon. friend referred to an index that has been prepared, and which seems to me to be very copious. Do I understand him to say that there will be an index for the rules and the standing orders, and a separate index for the forms of proceeding ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It would be very unfortunate if they were both combined in one index.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman is quite right, but to prepare an index which would include the rules and the forms of proceedings and the various English statutes, would be a work of very great magnitude indeed. There are analytical tables of contents of the imperial statutes, and also of the form of proceedings which really constitute fairly good indexes, but there has been no minute and elaborate index except for the rules.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My point was that it would be very desirable that the index to the rules should be kept separate and distinct from any other indexing of other papers in the manual, because hon. gentlemen would take up the manual in a hurry and if there was any mixing or blending of the index it might take time to get at the point, which, to be valuable at all, would have to be got at at once.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I may say to the hon. gentleman that the index to the rules is immediately after the rules. It is separate from the other.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is as it should be.

The motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (139) An Act to create a Department of Mines.

(In the committee.)

On clause 1.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Attention was drawn to the fact that the Geological Survey is entirely ignored in this Bill and that the Department of Mines was brought prominently to the front. That was the point under discussion at the second reading, and I promised to give the matter some consideration. I think that the title might be changed to read 'An Act to create a Department of Mines and Geology.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Better reverse it and put geology first.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is difficult to do that, because in the body of the Bill it stated that the department means the Department of Mines, so that we could not make the change.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should prefer to see the mines first, because the public are interested in mines and not interested so much in geology.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Geology is supposed to go before the mines. The investigations of the geologists, and the Geological Department have been in existence since the union, and were in existence in old Canada before the union. I should not like to put the mines first. I think we had better put the old department first, and, if I may be allowed to make a suggestion with regard to the title, I should say that this Act may be cited as the Geology and Mnies Act. Why use the word 'department ?'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My observation has been that the geologist follows the miner, and the miner invariably precedes the geologist. The discovery of all our mines in Canada has demonstrated the fact that the geologist has almost invariably reported against mineral bearing rocks where the mineral bearing rocks of Canada have been found, and I think no credit whatever is due to the Geololgical Department no matter how efficient it may have been with reference to the great discovery of mineral deposits throughout the Dominion. I should be sorry to see prominence given to geology before mining in a Bill of this kind.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I can agree with my hon. friend in what he has said, because I certainly think the Geological Survey of the country comes before the mining problem. The Geological Survey is for the purpose of planning and laying out the maps of the country and tracing out the rocks, and the geological condition of the country, and the formation generally, and I think that the word geologist should certainly come first in this matter. Then again, my hon. friend says that the Geological Department never discovered any mines. I should like to read a short extract from a report of the Canadian Mining Institute. In an article written by Mr. Mortimer Land, of Montreal, Quebec, on the very question of a Federal Department of Mines, on page 97, he says:

> A report which was made by a Committee of the House of Commons which was appointed about 1882 contained an account by Dr. Dawson of the discovery and value of the Crow's Nest Coal area, probably one of the most important announcements of an economic character ever made by the Survey.

Its value as a coal area was, therefore, pointed out long before the mines were discovered. The principle city of the Yukon was named after Dr. Dawson, practically for the same reason, so that I think there is some truth in the statement that the Department of Geology has not only pointed out where they should look for minerals and find valuable mines, but they are ahead of the miners in indicating the mineral resources of the country.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was going to point out when the hon. gentleman from Vancouver rose, that in a map attached to Dr. Schultz's report, published in 1888, the Yukon region was marked as auriferous. That is nineteen years ago, and in all the parts of that country in which gold has since been found tha fact was indicated by geologists as far back as twenty years ago, so that I think my hon. friend from Calgary was scarcely right when he said that invariably the geologists had declared there was no mineral wealth in that section of the country which was afterwards demonstrated to be very valuable in that respect. I think the general fact of any particular territory indicating the presence of valuable minerals has been invariably discovered by geologists. The practical development has resulted afterwards by the prospectors, and sometimes accidentally.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I might say that the possibilities of the coal fields of Pennsylvania were pointed out by Hugh Miller, the geologist, and during the travels of Livingston in South Africa he sent home the descriptions of the discoveries he made, and Sir Roderick Murchison sent them back and marked the woods and valleys and minerals that were to be found by the description of the outlines of the country travelled over by Dr. Livingston.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It seems to me if there is going to be a new department created, it is much better to refer to it as the Department of Mines, than the Department of Geology. It would sound much better to be Minister of Mines than a Minister of Geology. There is no doubt something in what has been said by both sides. Take, for instance, the coal mines in the Crow's Nest Pass. I think the Crow's Nest Pass mines were discovered by a man named Fernie. He was not a geologist, he was a prospector.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you change the title as suggested it will necessitate a number of changes in the body of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We may change the title, and amend the interpretation to correspond, but I do not intend that the body of the Bill shall be disturbed, because, as my hon. friend says, it would derange the whole measure. I think we might pay the suggestive compliment to the Geological Survey in the title, and then in the interpretation clauses that this Act may be cited as the Act of Geology and Mines. What follows refers to the Department of Mines only.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is there not a statute with reference to the organization of the Geological Survey ? If so would you not have to amend that also to correspond with the amendment we propose to make in this Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Act organizing the Geological Branch is repealed by this Bill. Clause 7 describes the functions of the Geological Survey and clause 8 makes provision for maintaining a museum. I do not think the proposed changes in the title and in clause 1 will disturb the rest of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is one circumstance to which the attention of hon. gentlemen has not been directed. That is that in all the provinces except Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, the Dominion has nothing to do with mines, and we should have some regard, in the details of this new Bill to the rest of the country. The Geological Survey legislation is in operation throughout the whole country and I think it would be better to put geology first in the title. I would suggest that instead of treating it simply as a Bill to create a Department of Mines, we should treat it, as it really is, as an Act dealing with the Geological Survey and with mines. The better title would be the Geology and Mines Act. I move that the first clause be amended to read as follows: 'This Act may be cited as the Geology and Mines Act.'

The motion was agreed to.

On clause 2:

2. In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—
(a) 'department' means the Department of Mines;
(b) 'Minister' means the Minister of Mines.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not wedded to placing geology before mines, but if you amend the title it would be only consistent to amend the Act throughout.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then the Bill would have to be recast.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—We had better keep it the Department of Mines. It is always inconvenient to change a Bill which has been carefully considered elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think it is largely a matter of sentiment on the part of the Geological Branch, and if that sentiment is respected in the title it involves no inconsistency with the body of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It must be quite apparent that if this becomes the Department of Geology and Mines, and in the interpretation we say that 'Minister' means the 'Minister of Mines,' it leaves no minister for the Geological Survey.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 9 provides for that:

9. The Governor in Council may appoint a deputy minister, a director of the Mines Branch, a director of the Geological Survey, and such other officers and clerks as are required for the proper conduct of the business of the department, who shall be appointed and classified under schedule A of the Civil Service Act, and in accordance with and under the terms of section 6 of the said Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That provides for the appointment of a deputy minister, but who will be the Minister of Geology?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Minister of Mines.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 3:

3. There shall be a department of the civil service to be called 'The Department of Mines,' which shall be under the control and management of the head of one of the present departments of the government of Canada, who shall be named from time to time for that purpose by the Governor in Council, and who shall be called 'The Minister of Mines.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the head of the department who is to administer this branch is to be called Minister of Mines, does he lose his other designation?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Suppose it is transferred to the Secretary of State, what would he be termed? Minister of Mines and Secretary of State?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, Secretary of State. The Minister of the Interior is Minister of the Indian Department and of the Geological Survey at present.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that, but those branches were transferred by statute to the Department of the Interior. The fifth clause of this Bill provides:

5. The department shall consist of two branches, one of which shall be called the Mines Branch, and the other of which shall be called the Geological Survey.

Then in the ninth clause, the Governor in Council has power to appoint a deputy minister and a director of the Mines Branch, and a director of the Geological Branch and so on. If the hon. senator from Wellington were here I would suggest to add the words 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary.' I cannot very well see how, under this Bill as framed, the department is to be worked. My humble impression is that by next session it will be found to be a new department altogether, with a minister at the head. I fail also to see what advantage is to be gained by sending out officials to different parts of the country to ascertain where mines are located. As has been truly said, most of our mines have been discovered by accident. A prospector may discover mineral in any portion of the country, but it is impossible for any one to say whether that deposit is of sufficient value to justify the expenditure of money upon it until it has been developed. The report of the gentleman who visits it before it is developed is of no value. This is simply creating a department which can be of no practical benefit to the country, and will simply provide situations for a number of gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is it in contemplation to have a Minister of Geology ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, there will be the Minister of Mines, a deputy minister, a director of Geology, and a director of Mines.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I think the Department of Mines is the proper term to use. It brings it more in connection with the public.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 4 :

4. The department shall administer all laws enacted by the parliament of Canada relating to mines and mining, and shall also have the management and direction of all subjects assigned to it by the Governor in Council.

2. Whenever, under the provisions of this section, the management and direction of any subject is transferred from any other department to the Department of Mines, the Minister of Mines and the Deputy Minister of Mines shall be substituted for, and have all the powers and perform all the duties of, the minister and deputy minister, respectively, of such other department, as defined and provided by the Acts and regulations relating to such subject.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is a great deal of force in an observation made by the hon. senator from Halifax, that in every province, except the three prairie provinces the minerals belong to the local governments. Therefore I am inclined to think there will be a considerable amount of overlapping in the work to be done by the Mines branch of this new department. It will lead to a good deal of waste of public money unless there is harmony and concerted action between the local and the federal governments. Of course, if the province and the Dominion work together, the duty may be divided between them. The mineral wealth of the country is so great that there ought to be a central bureau to have an oversight over the whole work throughout the Dominion even in the provinces where the minerals belong to the provincial authorities.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is all in the way of disseminating valuable information to the people.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause (e) of clause 6 :

(e) To collect and prepare for exhibition in the museum specimens of the different ores and associated rocks and minerals of Canada and such other materials as are necessary to afford an accurate exhibit of the mining and metallurgical industries of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—There are three or four chemical laboratories now. I would suggest that there should be one good laboratory, with a properly qualified man in charge of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is not all the work that is called for here done now by the Geological Survey, and is not this simply duplicating the work ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The staff now employed in the Geological Survey will be removed to the Department of Mines, and there will be no overlapping. It is thought that a great deal more information may be disseminated in regard to our mines by establishing a separate branch, because hon. gentlemen will recognize that the Geological Survey has overshadowed the Mines Branch.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The last two lines of paragraph (e) do not accurately describe the contents of the museum. It says : 'An accurate exhibit of the mining and metallurgical industries of Canada.' I would suggest to add the words 'and resources.'

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is no doubt an overlapping of the work of the two departments, the duties of both being to collect for the museum. There may be two collections in mineralogy, one supplied by each branch, and a question might arise as to which of these collections would be entitled to a place in the museum.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Both departments are under the one head, so there will be no overlapping.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But it indicates how there might be a waste of money to have two parties of men doing the same work, and there might be three parties, because in some of the provinces you might find the provincial government with another set of men doing the same work.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause (c) :

(c) to map the forest areas of Canada, and to make and report upon investigations useful to the preservation of the forest.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is something which does not appear in the present Act, and I think it is a very desirable improvement. I am very glad to see the government are taking steps to procure reliable information with respect to our forestry.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We have forestry work going on now under the forestry officer. I think the position of chief of that branch is vacant now. There is a staff in connection with the Interior Department, but it is understood that that work will be passed over to whichever department will have charge of the geological work.

The subclause was adopted.

On clause 8:

8. The department shall maintain a museum of geology and natural history for the purpose of affording a complete and exact knowledge of the geology, mineralogy and mining resources of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—There is a museum called the Royal Victoria, and this clause speaks of another museum. It is a pity there should be two museums.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The specimens coming from the different branches would not be the same.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I beg pardon for contradicting the hon. gentleman, but they are precisely the same. Everything they have reference to here bears on the one subject of geology, or subjects akin to it, and if they have two museums in regard to the same subject, I say that is the worst feature of the whole Bill because there is no necessity for it. The present museum of geology has a very valuable collection, and I presume if they are going to have a proper space, it should be enlarged. These specimens of ore come under the subject of geology and they are all akin to each other. I cannot see anything requiring two museums.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—That was all I asked.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There are two references that are not in harmony. Clause 7 speaks in the fourth line of the Victoria Memorial Museum, and clause 8 provides that the department shall organize a museum of geology and natural history. Are there two museums?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Why are they known by different names?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a museum in the geological branch. It has to be moved as soon as the Victoria Museum is ready. That is the new building.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That may be all right, but why do we call it the Victoria Museum in clause 7 and why do we take authority in clause 8 to establish another museum, which is called a museum of geology and natural history?

The clause was adopted.

On clause 9:

The Governor in Council may appoint a deputy minister, a director of the Mines Branch a director of the Geological Survey, and such other officers and clerks as are required for the proper conduct of the business of the department, who shall be appointed and classified under schedule A of the Civil Service Act, and in accordance with and under the terms of section 6 of the said Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is this deputy minister to be the deputy minister of the entire department ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr LOUGHEED—Or simply the Deputy Minister of Mines?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The mining heads are called directors and there will be a deputy minister over both. There will be a minister and a deputy minister and director special to each one.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then the present director of the Geological Survey would lose his status, unless he is appointed a deputy minister of the department?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If he is a deputy minister he will continue in that position, so I understand.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand he occupies the position of deputy minister, without being designated as such?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I must say that I share the views of the hon. leader of the opposition in respect to this matter. This clause calls for two new directors, if the view taken by the hon. gentleman is correct. If the present director is made the deputy minister, then there will be two directors to be appointed, and they will be probably rather high salaried officials.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No doubt about that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—These will be highly salaried officials. Where a Director of Mines operates will be exclusively in the prairie provinces, and the amount of mineral wealth which has been discovered there, outside of the coal, I think, is very small, and a deputy minister and one director would be quite sufficient for that branch.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a director of geology now, under the present law. This provides for having an extra deputy head and director of mines in the department, which is to manage and control this department. So that if the duties to be performed under this Act are relegated to the Department of Inland Revenue there will be a deputy head of Inland Revenue and a deputy head of Mines, and a director of geology and director of mines.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Nearly as bad as the Militia Department.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know but what it will be a little worse.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Growing time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In the Post Office Department I notice that there is to be another deputy head—but we can discuss that when the Bill comes before us.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 11:

11. No person shall be appointed to the department under paragraph (b) of schedule A of the Civil Service Act, unless he is a science graduate of either a Canadian or a foreign university, or of the Mining School of London or the Ecole des Mines of Paris, or of some other recognized science school of standing equal to that of the said universities and schools, or a graduate of the Royal Military College.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I must say I fail to understand why a graduate of the Royal Military College should occupy the same status as a graduate of one of our universities. In military training, the examination incident to graduating in the Royal Military College is not equal to that of matriculation in a university, and why a graduate in this college should be placed in the same position as a graduate of the universities designated in the section, I am at a loss to understand. I certainly think that the latter part should be striken out. If literary training of the high order of a graduate is necessary, certainly it is lowering it very considerably to say that a graduate of the Royal Military College should occupy the same position.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would not follow that any graduate was eligible. It would be a graduate who has made some advance in the science to which the Bill referred.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The Law Society recognizes the Military College and puts it on the same plane as the university. That is a learned body and ought to know. It is true there is a special mathematical education in the Military College, but I contend—and I have a chance of observing it in the university, it is an institution of the government, and they arrange its curriculum, and have made it sufficient to qualify a man as an engineer. Take a civil engineer from the Military College; I am sure he would be just the same as a graduate of the university who has had a thorough training in mathematics. It is no use to argue on this point, but I think my hon. friend has an erroneous idea in regard to that, because I know very well that there is something in reason or these military schools would not grant a favour to members of that university. They are appointed at once as engineers and artillery officers to the British service.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend is in error. The law societies of the Dominion, as far as I am aware—and I have a knowledge in regard to some of them—admit graduates of the Royal Military College to the same status as they would a matriculant of the university.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I have not the exact information, but I am sure they were allowed the same shortening of their term, that was allowed to the university.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not see why we should not put our Military College on the same footing as the other institutions that are named. The hon. leader of the opposition says the final examination of the Military College might be regarded as equivalent to the matriculation of one of our universities. I do not wish to reflect on the hon. gentleman, but surely he has not been looking at the recent information as to the two kinds of examination. I think the passing out examination in the Royal Military College is much nearer to the graduating examination in the university.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend will look at the curriculum, he will not undertake to say that the same knowledge of the classics is required even in graduating in the Royal Military College that would be necessary to matriculate in one of our universities.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is a day of elective studies. I do not mean to say they require a very profound knowledge of classics, but they do require a good English education, and, in addition to that, a very considerable scientific training, and I know the entrance examination to the Royal Military College is quite as stiff as the matriculation examination at the ordinary universities throughout the country. The practical result of the thing is, that the graduates of the Royal Military College have gone to the United States, the old country and the different parts of Canada, and they have been recognized in a great many cases as particulalry successful mining engineers and civil engineers. They have made quite a record for themselves that way; and the country maintains this Military College at a very considerable expense. A comparatively small number of the graduates of that college enter the military service of this country; if we can get them into the civil service, then we can get some return for the money expended on the college, and I should be very sorry to see such an unpatriotic Act perpetrated by the Senate of Canada as to strike out the Military College graduate.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—When the Military College was first established, years ago, the doctrine was laid down that when graduates came out thoroughly educated they were fit for, and intended to occupy, any position in Canada that might be open to them. I do not think that any one would argue that a graduate of that college, fourth, fifth or sixth, almost a perfect mathematician, having gone through a certain elementary course in electricity and one thing and another, if he comes out of the institution with brains and education, should be barred from competing against somebody who comes from the university and perhaps has not any brains. There is the point; but without going into that matter I think it would be a fatal error to lay down the doctrine, not only in Canada but before the world, that the Royal Military College graduates are barred from the best positions in this country.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman misapprehends the position entirely. We are providing in clause 11 for a special qualification for a special science branch. It does not follow that because a man may be a Military College graduate, although he may be a hero and may have rendered the most patriotic service to his country, that, therefore, he is necessarily qualified for a special scientific branch of work. It casts no reflection upon him to say that he has no knowledge of metallurgy. He may be an excellent engineer. He may understand military tactics, or may lead a brigade, but may not have the least knowledge of metallurgy, and it is only with regard to that particular branch of learning or science that I say, if we require a special class of scholastic attainment on a certain subject that we should adhere to it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman misunderstands or I misunderstand. In the Military College students are taught metallurgy and mineralogy. If they get a smattering of that—and they are certainly coming out first-class mathematicians and all that—they are certainly equal to what is laid down as the standard of a geologist. The best men that Canada has produced to discover and develop mines were not the scientific men but the prospectors who could tell by the color of the trees and the shades of the foliage where metals existed. I think we go a long way out of our course to adopt the idea that the Military College is not good enough for every purpose in connection with this Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would direct attention to the fact that there are various universities in this country where one may graduate on the classic side and really have very little scientific, so that the argument does not hold good.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I would appeal to my hon. friend on another ground. If the effect of allowing the student to enter these professions, entirely apart from the question of fitness, would be to divert him from the study of the arts of warfare. I think we should permit it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In the interests of universal peace and the development of our mining resources, I shall withdraw any objection to the clause.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 12:

12. When the deputy minister reports, for reasons set forth in such report, that assistance of a technical or professional character is required in the department, the Governor in Council may, without reference to any examination, or to the age of the person, if the minister concurs in such report, temporarily employ such person at such remuneration as is deemed expedient.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Experience shows that very often capable men have passed the age of thirty-five, and we are constantly having to appoint men of that class. You cannot always get that class of men, who are in demand all over the world, and a scientific man of superior attainments over thirty-six or thirty-seven years of age, cannot come in under the Civil Service Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You can appoint a man for special reasons under the Civil Service Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are doing it by Act of parliament.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a provision in the Civil Service Act giving you the power to appoint gentlemen with exceptional qualifications at a higher salary than is provided in the Civil Service Act.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The feeling I have about this clause is that it is too unrestricted. I think there should be some testing of the qualifications of the candidate, at any rate, in the duties of the office which he has to fill. You would not suspect the present government of appointing any one for political reasons, but it may be that another government may come in who could not be trusted in that way, and then, of course, if the hon. leader of the opposition in this House should happen to be premier we might trust him, but we could not trust the leader somewhere else.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why does it not occur to the fertile imagination of my hon. friend to suggest that clauses 11 and 12 be stricken out to provide that the government may appoint any one. That would meet the requirement. That is to say, we fix the sandard in 11 and knock the standard down in 12.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have to trust governments sometimes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I must say that the provisions of the 12th section meet my view, and I think it is a power any government should be enabled to exercise. The provision is that this assistant must have a technical and professional training for the purpose of dealing with some question that an ordinary clerk in the office is not able to grapple with. It is a power that is given in the Civil Service Act, and I do not know particularly why this clause is required here, unless the Civil Service Act does not go sufficiently far. I know that in many departments men of superior qualifications for particular work were appointed, outside of the provisions of the Civil Service Act altogether, and the Act gives the government the power to do that.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 17 :

17. No person employed in or under the department shall, directly or indirectly :
(a) purchase any Dominion or provincial lands other than for personal residential purposes, except under authority of the Governor in Council ;
(b) locate military or bounty land warrants, or land scrip, or act as agent of any other person in that behalf ;
(c) disclose to any person, except his superior officer, any discovery made by him or by any other officer of the department, or any other information in his possession in relation to matters under the control of the department or to Dominion or provincial lands, until such discovery or information has been reported to the minister, and his permission for such disclosure has been obtained ;
(d) make investigations or reports relating to the value of the property of individuals, or hold any pecuniary interest, in any mine, mineral lands, mining works or timber limits in Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is it desirable to draw so invidious a distinction between this branch of the pubilc service and the other branches ? Many employees of other departments, and particularly the Department of the Interior, are not slow to take advantage of investment in the public lands of the Dominion ; why should this prohibition be so accentuated in 17 as to the employees of the Department of Mines and Geology ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was first adopted in 53 Victoria, chapter 11. It has been a long time on the statute ; it was re-enacted in 55 Victoria, chapter 16. I suppose there is a temptation. If the geologist discovered minerals of a valuable character, he would want to buy.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does the hon. gentleman think 53 Victoria is flaunted before the eyes of the officers of the Geological Department and thus exercises a terrorizing influence over them ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—This is certainly the practice, and it is the law as regards similar officers in England. Officers who inspect mines are strictly forbidden to deal in mining stocks.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not objecting to its presence in this Act, but I am objecting to its absence in other Acts of a similar character.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Supposing the hon. gentleman introduces a Bill or two dealing with the evils he speaks of. But perhaps he had better not make it too far retrospective.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It might be inconvenient in that regard.

On clause 18 :

18. The directors of the branches shall, as soon as may be after the close of each calendar year, make summary reports of the proceedings and work of their respective branches for the year, and shall also furnish final and detailed reports, to be issued from time to time in such manner and form as the minister directs ; and the minister shall cause the said reports to be laid before parliament, with such remarks, explanations and recommendations as he thinks proper.

Hon. Mr. POWER—One would suppose that there was some provision for a report by the deputy minister, but there does not appear to be.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—A question arises in respect of this. Of course the year fixed here would necessarily have no connection whatever with our fiscal year excepting in this way ; that sessions of parliament are now fixed with reference to a change in our fiscal year, and would it not therefore be better to arrange the year for the operation of a department like this, so that it would also end at a time when it would be most convenient to furnish parliament with the information. In order that my meaning may be understood, a report for the department at the end of the calendar year, 31st December—and parliament has probably met a month before that—would not be received by us until a year later ; whereas if the year was made to end at the first of July, it would then not only be possible but quite probable that we should have the report to lay before parliament. We should sit soon afterwards, and parliament would be seized of the information many months earlier than it will be if we make the calendar year the year for the report of the department.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman will remember that the real work is done between March and November. If we changed it to March it would be breaking up the year. We are liable to get the information earlier by having it put in the calendar year. Parliament will, as a rule, I suppose, sit through February and March every year under the new arrangement. We ought to be able to get it for that sitting of parliament under the present arrangement?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does the hon. gentleman think that would be possible ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—At any rate the reports of this department are never used for political purposes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, but we should be furnished with the information up to as late a date as possible.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 22 :

Chapter 65 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is repealed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I desire to say before the committee rises that owing to the amendment which has been made by adding geology to mines, my impression is —and I would submit it for the serious consideration of my hon. friend—that a corresponding amendment should be made in the body of the Act, particularly in clause two, where it says 'Minister' means 'Minister of Mines.' Having accentuated the difference between mines and geology, it is quite clear the minister must be the Minister of Mines and Geology.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (36) An Act to amend the provisions of the Criminal Code respecting the Preservation of the Peace in the vicinity of Public Works. —(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

(In the committee.)

On subsection 2 of clause 2 :

2. The provisions of this section shall not extend to any person selling intoxicating liquor by wholesale, and not retailing it, if the said person is a licensed distiller or brewer, nor shall they apply where liquor is supplied for bona fide medicinal purposes upon the prescription of a duly qualified medical practitioner.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I asked for information on this clause but have been unable to obtain it. I presume the object of this subsection is to restrict the persons who can sell liquor wholesale.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why should the distiller and the brewer be allowed to sell liquor wholesale in a proclaimed district? I think we should strike out the subsection. You give the brewer and the distiller a monopoly of the whole district.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Act prohibits the sale of liquor in the proclaimed district, except under doctor's orders.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 5.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The change in this clause is to enable the officer who seizes a person in possession of intoxicating liquor, to bring him forthwith before the commissioner or justice who issued the search warrant.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The object I suppose is to avoid delay. Under the law as it stands the person might be summoned.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The seizing officer need not have witnessed the offence, but so long as he knows a person to have controvened the Act he may arrest him. It seems a high-handed proceeding, and I doubt the propriety of passing legislation of this kind. The suspected person may be a very respectable man, and he is liable to arrest without knowing why he is arrested.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No respectable dealer would be selling liquor in a proclaimed district.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But a man may be arrested who has not sold liquor.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. COX, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

THE PRINTING OF THE INSURANCE COMMISSION REPORT.

MOTION.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment of the Hon. Mr. Ellis to the consideration of the third report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have seen a few of our friends with regard to the matter brought up in the discussion yesterday and we have decided to oppose the amendment. We do not need to have the evidence translated and printed in French. We will accept it in English. The translating and printing of four large volumes involves an expense which is not justified.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I must say that the argument of the hon. member from Stadacona has quite convinced me. I do not think the House would be justified in going to an expense of thousands of dollars for the translation and printing of four large volumes, when the people for whom it is supposed to be intended do not desire it.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Of course I feel prompted by what I understand to be the practice with regard to the reports of the Joint Committee on Printing. I am following the decision arrived at in the other House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Our half of the printing committee is independent of the other half, in a way. The joint committee made a report which was submitted to both Houses. One House has seen fit to amend it, but it does not follow that the other House must amend it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the Commons had adopted a resolution declaring that the documents be not translated into French and we decided to the contrary, in what position would we find ourselves ? The documents would not be printed in French. There is no good reason why this expense should be incurred, particularly as our French people seem to have the good fortune of not falling under the condemnation of the Insurance Commissioners. They seem to have been held immune from all wrong, and, under the circumstances, they feel that they are not further interested in the matter.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I quite agree that the translation of the evidence would serve no useful purpose. It would be a needless expense. I think the translation should be limited to the report of the commission. Those who may require to refer to the evidence are people who can read English and it would be unfair to put the country to such a large expense as the translation and printing of a French edition of four large volumes of evidence would involve.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is the motion in amendment simply to conform to what has been done in the other House ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The hon. gentleman behind me has moved the adoption of the report, and I have moved the amendment which was adopted in the House of Commons. I believe it is the rule—at all events we have followed it since I have been on the Printing Committee—that the Senate always waits until the other House has adopted a report of the Printing Committee before we adopt it here and we concur in what is done by the Commons. I feel bound therefore to press the amendment, but I am perfectly indifferent as to the result.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Whether we adopt the amendment or not, it is possible that the evidence may be printed in French. As I understand it, the practice of the Printing Committee has been to print all documents, in both languages, and I fail to understand why it should be necessary to move an amendment to the report that the evidence be printed in French. That would be simply reaffirming the practice, which, as I understand from the hon. senator from St. John, has always prevailed.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I think the hon. gentleman is right.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If I am right, we have simply to reject the amendment and it will leave the practice of the committee in force. If the House does not wish to have the evidence translated and printed in French it should affirm that by resolution.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As I understand the report of the Printing Committee, it is that the report of the commission be not printed, then all we have to do is to adopt that report.

The amendment was rejected.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The committee consider every document laid before parliament; some documents they decide to print, some not to print, and the decision is based upon the value of the document, and the fact whether it is printed already. If it be printed already, a marginal note is made 'printed already,' but that carries with it the idea that it has been printed in both languages. The question came up in the House of Commons that this report had been printed and distributed in one language. The gentlemen who desire to have it printed in both language complained of that, and the leader of the House for the time being, admitted the justice of the complaint. The difficulty was got over by directing that the document be printed.

The report was adopted.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Bill in its present form consists of three clauses. The first authorizes the Board of Railway Commissioners to call on the Minister of Justice to appoint a counsel to attend the board on the investigation of some particular inquiry. The cost of the counsel is to be paid out of such fund as the board may direct. It may be paid by either party, or by the Department of Finance, which party, in the opinion of the board, it ought to be. The next clause relates to the deposit of mortgages which, as hon. gentlemen know, are usually deposited with the Department of the Secretary of State. Evidently some of the companies are in trouble over the filing of those papers, because it makes provision here that the filing there should be sufficient unless in this special Act some authority or direction has been given for the filing elsewhere, and then there is a saving clause that wherever there is a suit at present pending on that subject, this Act shall not apply. Then the third clause provides that the purchaser should apply to the parliament of Canada at the next following session thereafter for the granting of such an order for an Act of incorporation or other legislative authority to hold, operate and run the railway. It appears that there is a railway down in New Brunswick which was purchased by a New York financier who died the other day. Under the Act he should have applied to parliament to incorporate a new company. The road has rather got into discredit. It has run down. I suppose it has not proved profitable, so the owner of the road is not taking an interest in it and this Bill is for the purpose of forcing him to do it and placing it under the control of the minister. If the owner does not do so, then, within a certain time, the minister may order the road to be closed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out an insuperable obstacle to the passing of clause 2. On first blush it would seem that this parliament would have no right or authority to pass clause 2 as against the registration laws of the different provinces. This purposes to take out of the authority of the province a mortgage upon real estate which, under the registration laws of the province, should be registered at the registry office of that province; and, furthermore, on account of public policy it would be extremely dangerous to say that such a mortgage should not be registered as provided according to the laws of the province in which the land lies. Those interested in searching the title of a particular piece of property would naturally investigate the records in the particular registry office where all documents are filed affecting the titles in that particular district; but if this clause be carried into effect, they would have no knowledge of a mortgage which may possibly wipe out all their interest. It would not only lead to confusion, but would be extremely dangerous that a title to land should not appear in its entirety in the records of the registry office in which the land lies. I hope my hon. friend will give some consideration to that particular phase of the difficulty. I should like to see the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on that question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In earlier years, I know where those bonds were issued under the authority of the federal parliament the mortgage was not registered in the particular distrct, but was registered only in the office of the Department of the Secretary of State. We can discuss the subject further at a later stage.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It might affect the bonds. Certainly land bonds would have to be registered in the registry office, but this deals with mortgages on real estate in the various provinces of the Dominion, and undertakes to say that such mortgages should not be registered.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The point raised by the leader of the opposition is an exceedingly important one. If a man is at liberty to make a mortgage on a guarantee of some undertaking with the Crown, and the deposit of that mortgage with the Crown makes it a first lien on the property covered by that mortgage, that should be known in some way for the protection of the public. Notice should be put on the records of the registry office to indicate that the property was already encumbered. Now, in the face of this Bill, any man might take a mortgage in good faith on a property that had under the provision of this Act, been already encumbered, and he might wake up two or three years afterwards to find that what he had looked upon as first-class security, a first mortgage on real estate, was after all useless owing to the fact that the parties had by bond and indenture conveyed their interest to the Crown subject to a certain redemption. I hope the hon. Secretary of State will see that some amendment is made to the Bill, to give the public notice that they will be protected so that they may not find that the securities they have taken on real estate of that kind are absolutely worthless.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I commend the patriotic spirit shown by the leader of the opposition, because I feel that if this clause goes into operation there will be a plentiful crop of law suits, and in opposing the clause the hon. gentleman is working against his own interest as a lawyer.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have always exercised a self-sacrificing spirit with reference to legislation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In nine-tenths of the cases, perhaps a larger proportion, the mortgage filed has reference only to a right of way and station grounds that the company possesses. I am quite aware that it affects some particular companies in the Northwest, where they have land grant mortgages. They are not of the same class at all with the mortgage under which an authority for the issue of bonds takes place, and which is required to be filed in the Department of State. No individual is affected by it, because the company are in possession. It is not land held for a sale but land in actual use, and, therefore, nobody is deceived by it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is possible that the clause might require to be amended; but I desire to call attention to this; the question raised by the leader of the opposition came before the Privy Council of England under the Insolvent Act. It was contended that under the provisions of the Insolvent Act dealing with the sale of real estate in the province of Quebec, declaring that such real estate might be sold by an assignee instead of by the sheriff, had the affect of a sheriff's sale, and would wipe out all mortgages and hypothecs and was ultra vires of this Dominion parliament.

The Privy Council held—and the same decision was given in a number of other cases dealing with like legislation outside of the Insolvency Act—that so far as the parliament of Canada was dealing with a subject on which it had jurisdiction, that this question of legislation was merely an accessory of the legislation, and that parliament had full jurisdiction to deal with the matter, although it affected real property. Under that decision the objection would not apply. I call attention to the fact that under the Railway Act there is a provision enabling railway companies to issue mortgages, and declaring that mortgages have to be deposited with the Secretary of State. It is the only provision which is to be found in the Railway Act. It has to be deposited with the Secretary of State, and this is deemed, and has been deemed by courts of justice, as being all that is required to give effect to the mortgage, and that under that provision it is not necessary to register the mortgage, which is a mortgage under the English form instead of under the old French law of mortgages hypothecs—that it is not necessary to register it in the registry office. I had occasion to consider that question a number of times, and in my own practice it came before the courts, and the courts have considered that it was not necessary to register it in the registry office. The only act of publicity that was required was to deposit it in the office of the Secretary of State. I take section 2, it being in the Railway Act, to refer only to such mortgages as are given by virtue of the Railway Act, and not applying to anything else. For my part I intend to scrutinize the clause more carefully. I have just glanced at it, and if it could have the effect of affecting in any shape or form the vendor's lien or the person who sells the right of way to the railway, I would object to the provision and would ask to have the wording changed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The case referred to by my hon. friend of the sheriff's sale determined by the Privy Council would not be a parallel case at all. That was simply a question of procedure, as to the sale having been carried out under the Insolvency Act.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Mortgages, hypothecs.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is not a parallel case, in my judgment. I may say to the hon. Secretary of State that all through the Dominion, particularly in the three western provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and where large grants have been made to the railway companies it would be utterly impossible to ascertain the condition of title if the railways did not observe the practice which they at present observe, of registering in the registery office where the lands lie, of any incumbrance against such lands.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I quite agree with that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Even all the land grant bonds of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were registered in the Northwest Territories. Any persons having dealings with the lands, on looking at the registry office were able to ascertain the condition of the title, and as the law then stood it was considered necessary they should so register their land grant bonds, and there will appear to-day on the books of the office, not only the registration of the land grant bonds, but also the discharges which have been given from time to time.

Hon. Mr. KERR—If the law provides a definite place for the registration of a bond upon a railway property, anybody interested in any of the lands, or who is desirous of knowing what the position is, there is provided by the statute a convenient place where that information can be obtained, just as much as if it were left to the general law to say that it should be registered in every registry division. If lands are mortgaged by a railway company, under the provisions of the Railway Act, or under the provisions of the special Act—because in many cases we are dealing with cases where there were special Acts providing for it—then the statute is an intimation to any person interested in that title where to look and see whether there is a mortgage and ascertain what the terms of it are so as to satisfy himself about it. It is just as effective a notice to the public, when the statute names a particular place to cover all the lands along the line of the road, as it is if it is stated it was to be registered in each particular county, and it saves a multiplicity of registering, in so many hundreds of registry offices. You have only to register in one place. The Act simply says that where a place had been designated—the Secretary of State's office for instance—for that purpose it shall not be necessary to register in the local registry office. The statute is, therefore, intimation to all persons interested in the title where to go to ascertain the terms and the extent of that incumbrance. It will be borne in mind that under the Railway Act, power with reference to mortgaging is given by section 138 as to the bonds and debentures which the company can issue. The section reads as follows :

138. The company may secure such securities by a mortgage deed creating such mortgages, charges and encumbrances upon the whole of such property, assets, rents and revenues of the company, present or future, or both, as are described therein; provided that such property, assets, rents and revenues shall be subject, in the first instance, to the payment of any penalty then or thereafter imposed upon the company for non-compliance with the requirements of this Act, and next, to the payment of the working expenditure of the railway.

Section 140 of the Act reads :

140. Every such mortgage deed, and every assignment thereof, or other instrument in any way affecting such mortgage or security, shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State of Canada, and notice of such deposit shall forthwith be given in the 'Canada Gazette.'

2. Such mortgage deed or other instrument need not be registered under the provisions of any law respecting registration of instruments affecting real or personal property.

So that the Railway Act has affirmed the principle which is embodied in this, and which is intended only to apply to the cases which were not covered by the General Railway Act, because of their being contained in special provisions in reference to it. The same rule is applied to all railway companies. At present under our Railway Act, railways making a mortgage have only to deposit it at the place it is received and our law has declared that that shall be sufficient without registration. It will be seen that this section is merely carrying that principle out and applying it to cases which have not been compromised in the general law, because of these being special Acts which conferred this right and might leave in doubt the question whether those mortgages should not be registered in a different way from which mortgages are given under the Railway Act as it stands. It seems to me a most convenient way of assimilating the law.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But the present Railway Act does not negative the registration in the provinces ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—The section reads :

2. Such mortgage deed or other instrument need not be registered under the provisions of any law respecting registration of instruments affecting real or personal property.

That is the Consolidated Railway Act. So that you see our law has recognized the very principle that it has been suggested this law would follow, and it is only assimilating the law with respect to isolated cases which are distinctly covered by the General Railway Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think this parliament has no right to pass such legislation, and it is a question whether it does not mean that so far as the Dominion government and railway companies are concerned, it is not necessary to register it, but I do not think it goes so far as to negative the registration laws of the provinces.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It provides where the registration should take place, and it is a very convenient way, instead of having a hundred mortgages registered all over the length and breadth of the land. The proposition which is contained in the Bill was advanced and established so far as this parliament was concerned under the General Railway Act, I think it is most inconvenient that railway companies incorporated under the provisions of the parliament of Canada should be in a different situation in the case of one company from the situation in the case of another company, and, therefore, it is desirable to assimilate the law in the way I have pointed out. That is the provision contained in the present Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the contention of the hon. gentleman is right, the only thing to do is to pass a law now saying that we will not comply with the enactment imposed by the provincial law.

Hon. Mr. KERR—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Because we have a provision in the British North America Act which says that the provinces have the power to deal with property and civil rights. All mortgages on property, by our laws, are to be registered so that everybody in the community will know what the mortgages are, and that protection is taken away by a general Act of this parliament. That is the only conclusion we can come to, if the argument of my hon. friend is correct.

Hon. Mr. KERR—What I pointed out is that by the Railway Act there is express provision to that effect. Now it is contended, and it has been decided, as fas as I understand, in the cases referred to by my hon. friend from De Salaberry, that under the law which we have respecting railways, that is quite sufficient to justify any provision such as is contained there. This is merely placing all the railways on the same footing. That is practically all it does, and the same language is used in this Bill that is used in the Act. We will all agree that it is right that all the railways should be in the same position, and there is nothing in the Act to determine the matter. If the provinces have the right, and insist upon it, that right can be asserted, and the courts will have to determine; in the meantime, this parliament has determined the principle, and has settled that mortgages given under the authority of this parliament only require one kind of registration.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (159) An Act to increase the bonding powers of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners. He said: I was asked when the Bill came down for first reading to obtain some information with regard to the financial condition of Quebec so far as the harbour commissioners are concerned. I find that many years ago they borrowed the sum of four million dollars, which, with the interest, amounts to one million and a half or two million more—practically six million, that was twenty-five or twenty-six years ago. Three years ago the harbour commissioners were organized and put on a different basis, and since that time they have not only been paying current expenses of the organization but have also paid the interest on the loan they were then authorized to make of $200,000. They ask now permission to borrow to the extent of $800,000. We do not endorse their bonds. We give them no guarantee. We simply give them the authority to borrow, but we do provide that this bond issue will stand prior to the debt of Quebec. That is the only way in which we are affected. I presume the debt is not now collectable, and, therefore, we do not lose anything, practically, by giving them the right to issue bonds on their own responsibility.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why are they not collectable?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are not assets to that amount. It is not a liability of the city but of the harbour commissioners, and they only own the docks and frontage of the city.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think it was explained in the remarks the hon. gentleman made when I asked him a question. The advances heretofore made to them have been sunk.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill read a second time.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1:

1. In addition to the amount of two hundred thousand dollars which the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, hereinafter called 'the Corporation,' may borrow under the provisions of section 35 of chapter 34 of the Acts of 1899, the corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to borrow, for the purposes, in the manner, and subject to the conditions in the said section provided, an amount not exceeding in the whole eight hundred thousand dollars.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Have the commissioners exceeded the bonding power of $200,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that has been used up.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my hon. friend say whether this borrowing power is given priority over the claims of the government of Canada?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, without that it would not be of any use to them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does it give priority to the bonds covering the $200,000?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they cannot borrow unless that was put aside. It is like the Grand Trunk debt to Canada. We allow them to issue bonds. They re-organized under that statute of 1899.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does it affect the $200,000?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It says they may borrow $800,000 in addition to the $200,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. It stands second to that.

Hon. Mr. COX—It seems to me that any other bonds they may have issued should rank equally with these bonds. Otherwise it would be an injustice to the bond-holders.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They were all issued to the government of Canada and we are allowing our claim to stand aside and they are borrowing on their own account.

Hon. Mr. COX—You are not prejudicing any outside creditor ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentlemaan will read the second clause, he will see the $200,000 and the $800,000 stand on an equality.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, quite right.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The Secretary of State tells us that a very large amount has been already loaned to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, and that we are now giving the power to borrow an additional $800,000 which, virtually, will be a million that will stand ahead of the Dominion debt against that commission. Is there any provision in this or any previous Act that that money will be prudently and properly applied? Is there any control over the commissioners in regard to it ? Is it not spent under the auspices of the Department of Marine and Fisheries ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Is there any provision at all to see that the money is properly applied ? From what I have heard of the Harbour Commissioners in the past twenty years, I think there has been money misapplied. If privilege was granted to mortgage ahead what the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec now have, there should be some additional provision to insure that this money will be properly applied.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 2 :

Any sum so borrowed, together with interest thereon, shall be payable by the corporation out of all its property, assets, tolls, rates, dues, penalties and other sources of revenue and income whatsoever, and shall rank as a charge thereon equally with, and have the same precedence in regard to payment as, any amount heretofore borrowed or authorized to be borrowed under the said section 35.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understood first that the $200,000 formerly borrowed took precedence, as I think it ought to have done. However, it is their own affair.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Have the holders of the $200,000 bonds given their consent to the borrowing on the same property of $800,000 ? Because it places the original bond-holders in this position : The owners of the harbours and the dues that will be collected will have to be sufficient to pay the interest on a million instead of $200,000. Hence it would affect the first holders of the $200,000 bonds to that extent. Has the consent of the bond-holders of the first $200,000 which have been issued given their consent to be placed in this position ? In all legislation, in the past, the practice has been to ascertain whether the consent of those interested in former obligations have been obtained.

Hon. Mr. COX—The hon. gentleman stated that there were no other bonds outstanding except those belonging to the government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does the hon. gentleman know anything about that ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I shall postpone the third reading until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—By chapter 47 of the statutes of 1898, power was given to borrow $350,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They only borrowed $200,000.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And, in the following year, authority was given to borrow $200,000. Have they exercised authority under the two Acts and have they borrowed to the extent of $550,000 ? If that be the case, if they are permitted to borrow the further sum of $800,000 and place that $800,000 on the same parity as the two preceding loans, it seems to me it must necessarily decrease the value of the preceding securities to a very considerable extent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will have to get information on that point.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will it not be better for the committee to rise and ask leave to sit again.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The last paragraph, line 9, says :

> And subject to the conditions in the said section provided, an amount not exceeding in the whole $800,000.

Evidently from that it is quite clear they have already borrowed the amount of $200,000, because it says, "In addition to the $200,000 which the Quebec Harbour Commissioners," etc.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In the preceding year they obtained authority to borrow $250,000.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—But the question was asked of the Secretary of State if they availed themselves of that power. However, the last paragraph limits it to $800,000. At line fifteen the Bill says :

> And other sources of revenue and income whatsoever and shall rank as a charge thereon equally with, and have the same precedence with regard to payment as any amount heretofore borrowed or authorized to be borrowed under the said section 35.

It is quite evident whatever money they borrow in the future would rank pari passu with the amount they have already borrowed. They will all rank in the same category. I cannot see any reason for postponing the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No one denies the interpretation put upon this Bill. The question I asked was whether the commissioners had the consent of those who have loaned their money and purchased the bonds for $200,000 and if they had not, will they be affected by the borrowing of $800,000 upon the same securities which they held for the bonds for $200,000 ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think we had better wait until the Secretary of State has obtained detailed information which ought to have been sent up to us, but which has not been.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro), from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (165) An Act to amend the Customs Act. He said : The object of the change is to remove friction in respect of petty cash discounts, and to levy duty according to the usual nature of a transaction between the exporter and the importer. If the transaction is on credit, the entry to be made accordingly ; if on a cash basis, the entry to be made on this basis, limiting the cash discount to two and a half per cent, so as to check material variation between the cash and credit value for duty purposes. Petty fluctuations and small cash discounts cause considerable friction which will be mininized by this provision. The principle change, I am advised, is to make it clear that goods should not be entered less than at invoice value, except in case of decrease in price after the purchase. It is fair to assume that the Canadian purchaser does not pay more than the fair market value for the goods he buys.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A number of questions arise in connection with these changes which are important. I intimated to the hon. Secretary of State before the House opened, that I would reserve any remarks I might have to make in reference to them until we are in committee, where we can discuss the details more freely.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read a second time.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (166) "An Act to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal." He said : As hon. gentlemen know, improvements to a very great extent are being made along the river front of the city of Montreal, and an application has been made for an advance not exceeding three million dollars to the harbour commissioners for the purpose of completing the works now in progress. This Bill authorizes the Governor in Council to advance the money from time to time as required, the harbour commissioners depositing bonds of the city bearing three per cent interest. The harbour commissioners are not in arrear in any way ; they have regularly paid the interest on their debentures. So far the country has not sustained any financial loss by the advances.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why fix the rate at three per cent ? The government cannot borrow money at three per cent ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was the rate fixed when we were borrowing.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is equivalent to a loss of one per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think it is one per cent, because the value of money is changing.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I venture to say that the government cannot borrow money in the Europe markets at less than four per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Canada three and a half per cent are at a slight premium. Even if there was a loss, it is a very small contribution for the people of this country to pay, when they get the benefit of it in the decreased cost of importing.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When the government of Canada undertake to raise two hundred millions for the Grand Trunk Railway, and rent the National Transcontinental Railway at three per cent, and advance this money to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal at three per cent, and other large sums to other friends of the government, the loss in interest will amount to a substantial sum.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is not a loan to friends of the government. The late government of Canada loaned money to them freely. The Harbour Commissioners and the city of Montreal make no profit from this expenditure. It means quicker transportation and cheaper cost of freight for the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—On that principle, you may as well give them the money.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The charge is on the goods imported into this country.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It would be interesting to have information with regard to the present state of our transactions with the Harbour of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The commissioners have never been in arrears.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I presume the hon. gentelman means in the matter of interest ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I know we have been making loans to them time and again. Is there a sinking fund provided for the redemption of that debt ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is information we ought to have. I would take no narrow view with regard to the harbour of Montreal. It is our national harbour, and of the greatest possible importance to Canada and should be dealt with liberally. At the same time, we ought to know, when we are passing legislation of this kind, how many loans there are outstanding. My hon. friend says no interest is in arrear ; I think that is very creditable ; but we ought to know what amount has been loaned to the commissioners and whether any fund is being created for the redemption of the debt. There is certainly a great deal of force in what the hon. gentleman from Calgary has said with regard to the financing of the present government. An enormous amount will have to be borrowed in the very near future for the purpose of building the National Transcontinental Railway, and whatever the money may cost, or whenever the day may come when the interest will be paid on the cost of the eastern section—and I think it will be a long time—it will be only three per cent. It is now almost a certainty that we will be borrowing money for the purpose of building that railway at more than four per cent. That may have been a very bad bargain—I think it was—but I would not apply the same objection to the harbour of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It is a matter of great national importance to Canada that Montreal harbour should be improved for the benefit of the entire people of the country, and if we do lend them money, even at a lower rate than it costs us, if it is well and judiciously spent, I think it is in the interest of the country that we should do so. Montreal is virtually to this country what Liverpool is to England, the great inland port of the country. I hope that it may continue to improve, but I have my doubts as to whether the St. Lawrence will maintain its present depth and before many years it is possible that very large amounts of money may have to be spent to deepen the channel. We know that the state of New York is constructing a ship canal virtually from Buffalo to Albany that will carry off a great deal of water. A similar diversion is being made at Chicago, where another large ship canal is contemplated to connect Lake Michigan with the Mississippi. These great canals will divert so much water from their natural channel that the volume of water in the St. Lawrence will no doubt be reduced. When that happens the deepening of the channel of the St. Lawrence will be necessary. In the meantime we are bound to do all we can to keep up the efficiency of the port of Montreal. I had an opportunity last year of inspecting the harbour, and was pleased to see the extensive improvements that were going on and to note the increasing commercial importance of the city. The trade of this country and of the west will grow quicker than the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal and Quebec will be able to handle it, so that we should be inclined to encourage the development of those harbours and increasing the depth of water. The harbour of Montreal does not belong to Montreal alone, but to this entire Dominion from east to west. It belongs to the Dominion and it is the great port of the Dominion, and as such we want to see it kept in a condition to handle the trade of this country. But we want to see the money carefully spent, and I hope the government will see that it goes into the hands of men who will take care that it is properly spent.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my hon. friend say whether the three milion dollars provided for in 1903, under chapter 36, was advanced to the harbour commissioners? This, I understand, will make a loan of practically six million dollars.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There were a great many loans, I could not tell you the amount. The aggregate must amount to eight or ten millions.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Let me point out to my hon. friend the prodigality, if I may so term it, of the government making this loan at least one per cent less than it can be borrowed by Canada in the markets of Europe. A loan of three million at three per cent, providing we have to pay four per cent for twenty-five years, means a gift of $750,000 to the Harbour Commissioners of the city of Montreal. In other words, we are making to them a gift of twenty-five per cent, practically, of the loan. Under the loan provided for in 1903, three millions at three per cent for twenty-five years and three millions under the Bill now before us for twenty-five years, would represent one million and a half. One million and a half dollars' loss upon a six million dollar loan is, to my mind, not an evidence of businesslike ability on the part of the government. It is not by way of philanthrophy or of public spirit that the government of Canada is making this loan to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal; they are making it on a straight business basis. They are providing that the debentures of the harbour commissioners shall be lodged with the Minister of Finance and receiver general for the amount of the advances by the Canadian government. Is there any reason why, in a transaction of this kind, presumably upon a business basis, the government of Canada should lose a million and a half by reason of not exacting the rate of interest which they have to pay in the markets of the world for money?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend seems to lose sight of the fact of the development of Canada. How much have we on deposit at three per cent? Some six or seven hundred millions.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Oh! oh! oh!

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Six or seven hundred thousand, whatever you like.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We have not a tenth of the amount the hon. gentleman named.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Should we not make a debit and credit account of the whole interest in Canada of the money that we pay interest on, and what we put out? If we are borrowing all this money through the savings banks at three per cent, and we have to pay a little more on the other side of the account, average them all up, and contract that with the benefit this loan is going to do to Canada. Is that not a fair argument? You must make an average of the benefits to be derived from the whole thing. If you want to develop the port at Montreal—and I call attention at the same time to the port of St. John, N.B. —we want money there——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec also.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Quebec is all right, and so is Calgary? This difference beween 3½ per cent and 4 per cent interest is not to be compared with the very great benefit that will accrue to the country in the port of Montreal and elsewhere by the development of that port.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. leader of the opposition is criticising this loan I apprehend, because he is not aware of the object of it. This loan is intended, and it is required to be spent exclusively for the purpose of building sheds in order that the goods intended for the west, instead of being kept for eight, ten or fifteen days before being shipped to the west, may be shipped immediately. That is one of the objects. Over one milion is required for that purpose, and the balance of the loan is required for building facilities for the railways, so that the railways will be enabled to reach those sheds. The three million dollars are required for these two purposes, —not at all for the purpose of extending the harbour of Montreal, but for the exclusive purpose of providing facilities for the shipping of goods for the country generally, and especially the western portion of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is nothing for the deepening of the channel.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No, it is not intended to be used for that purpose at all, therefore it seems to me it is in the interests of the country that this loan is made, and it is a fair rate of interest. Even if the government were to lose some part of the interest, they would be merely helping the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal to solve the tranportation question.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot permit the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry to place me in the false position of saying that I am opposed to the improvements which are being made by the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, or opposed to the government making the advances for carrying out any such public enterprise as is in view. The position I take is that this is a straight business transaction. The harbour commissioners approach the Dominion government and say: 'You can raise money more cheaply and readily than we can. We will give you our debentures in exchange for the advance or in other words you cash our debentures.' Now, the government undertakes to advance or cash these debentures for twenty-five years on a basis of three per cent. My argument is that in view of its being a straight business transaction, without philanthropy or assistance entering into the question at all, the government is practically making a gratuity or giving on those two loans of over $1,500,000 to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal by reason of their want of business ability in not exacting from the commissioners the rate of interest they would have to pay in the markets of the world for money The Minister of Finance, at the close of parliament, will have to go to England for the purpose of negotiating new loans representing thirty or forty millions of dollars. The revenue of the country, in round figures, according to his estimate, will be ninety millions for the present year. The present Supply Bill represents an expenditure of over $120,000,000. That will mean altogether, with the loans falling in, that he will borrow money to the extent of over thirty million. It is conceded by the Minister of Finance himself, I understand, that the loan will not be negotiated for anything less than four per cent at the present time. Then is there any reason why, on straight business grounds, the government of Canada should advance money to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal particularly for 25 years, at one per cent less than they could borrow that same money in the market ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend's argument is absolutely fallacious, and absolutely without any kind of foundation. The money is advanced to the consumers of Canada. Supposing you charge one and a half millions who are going to pay it ? The consumer must pay it. It adds so much to the transportation of the goods. You will be adding that much to the cost of the transportation which will be charged by the wholesale man to the retailer, and the retailer will charge an increased percentage, because we know in every charge, even for transportation, there is an additional charge made and the consumer pays so much more. The taxpayer would have to pay that money with a considerable increase.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why do you not put in the Bill a clause that you are giving them a gratuity ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The harbour commissioners make nothing out of it. It does not affect the city of Montreal.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, nonsense.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It stands to facilitate the transport of the goods from the ship to the railway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think we might just as well meet this case fairly and squarely, and admit what the result will be, and justify it if it would be justifiable. This is simply a transaction, not as fallacious as the hon. gentleman indicated that the position taken by the leader of the oposition was ; it is a loan to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal of three millions at three per cent. That is all there is about it, and we might just as well acknowledge the fact at once, that in loaning it at three per cent the country must expect to lose a half or three-quarters or one per cent upon the transaction. I do not pretend to say that we should not do so, but there is no use trying to blind it over. It is just as plain as the nose on your face, and it is simply making a gratuity, to the commission, no matter for what purposes it has to be used. The hon. gentleman from Wellington pronounces this a national harbour ; that belongs to the country, and not to Montreal. It is no more a national harbour than is the harbour in Ottawa or Quebec or any other portion of the world. It may be the beginning of the principle of nationalizing the harbour of Montreal and a number of other harbours in the Dominion. When that question arises, we can deal with it fairly and squarely on its merits. I am not prepared to say that Montreal might not be made wholly and solely a Dominion harbour, and relieve Montreal, as a city, altogether of any responsibility or the expenditure connected with it. That may be the beginning of a system which may prevail, and probably will prevail in the future. When the late government came into power, in 1878, there was a large amount of indebtedness incurred in the city of Montreal for deepening of the St. Lawrence some distance below the city, which formed a part ; as argued at that time or a continuation of the canal system, and the government of that day relieved the city of Montreal of the amount, for which they were responsible, that had been expended in the deepening of the channel, because those who have looked at the question at all know that the harbour of Montreal at that time extended a long way below the city. I am not prepared to say just now just how far it was. Perhaps my hon. friend can tell, but since that time it had been restricted—that is the extent eastward down the St. Lawrence had been narrowed—so that really the harbour does not extend so far as it formerly did. That was the beginning of a system or the inauguration of a system for relieving Montreal of a portion of the indebtedness for the harbour, which it had incurred in the general interest of navigation in the St. Lawrence to enable vessels of a deeper draught to reach the city, and then take advantage of the canal system. I have expressed my opinion over and over again as an individual, and as a member of the government, I thought that the policy pursued then was a correct one.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That the time must come, and I think the time will come I hope at least that it will come —when the government of this country will be magnanimous enough to deepen the St. Lawrence away below Quebec where it is necessary to narrow it in order to make the channel safe for the largest class of vessels that sail upon the ocean to reach our inland ports. I am fully in accord with the principle, but when my hon. friend says this loan is not for the benefit of Montreal, I tell him it is just as much for the benefit of the merchants of Montreal as it is for Toronto.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When the vessels arrive they unload more rapidly. The goods are safe when they are put into the warehouses and the Montreal merchant receives his goods 24 or 48 hours sooner than he could possibly get them under the old system. So that it is not confined to the whole of the western portion of the country. It is not correct to say that this money is expended exclusively to facilitate the western trade. It is for the purpose of assisting every importer who imports a ton or five hundred tons of goods into the city of Montreal, whether it be for consumption in that city or whether it be for the ports of Hamilton, Toronto and the far west to Winnipeg. I am not prepared to say anything against this, but I would rather justify the expenditure of the money for that purpose, and you might as well acknowledge the fact that we are granting a gratuity for the benefit of the harbour of Montreal to the extent of the difference between three and one-half per cent and the rate we have to pay in going into the money markets to borrow it. That is really the fact of the case, and there is no denying it, and we might just as well say so fairly and squarely and justify it. I am prepared to record my vote in favour of the gratuity. I think it is much more honest to go to the people and say: 'We are expending this extra amount of money for the purpose of facilitating trade at the inland seaport of the Dominion,' and I question very much if there is a man who has studied the trade of this country, who desires to see his country grow and prosper, who will begrudge the amount of $740,000, if it costs that, in addition to the interest which the commission will pay. But that does not change the fact, and does not affect the argument of the leader of the opposition. He has presented a plain, business proposition which is incontrovertible and it is not fair for the Secretary of State, neither is it courteous to say that it is a fallacious argument when it is impossible for him to controvert it until he can establish the fact that he can get all the money at three per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I agree with my hon. friend, but the statement is fallacious. The money is spent in the interest of the people of this country. I quite admit that the government are paying more, but if you charge the commission with $750,000 it is tacked on to the goods the people of the country consume.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is no argument.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The inference to be drawn from the observations of hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House is this : It creates the impression that it is a bonus or gift to the city of Montreal. I do not understand that it is anything of the kind.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say to the city of Montreal. I said to the harbour.

Hon. Mr. KERR—But the hon. leader of the opposition said so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I did not. I spoke of the harbour commission.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I am very glad to hear the hon. gentleman did not say so. I am very glad he put it on broader ground. It is an advantage which is given for the relief of trade, and is to the general advantage of the trade of the country. If Montreal gains an advantage by reason of the accidental situation of the city, so much the better for Montreal and for trade there, but no one is jealous. On the contrary, I think the whole country is proud of the port of Montreal, and anything that will tend to make it a large and prosperous port for the promotion of commerce through Montreal into Canada and from Montreal out of Canada, I think will meet with the support of the country generally. The money spent by the city of Montreal for the deepening of the St. Lawrence was a local expenditure. It is true they may have thought it was an advantage to build up the port. It is just as much money spent for the advantage of the country at large as in building of the canals on the upper St. Lawrence and on the river. It seems to me, therefore, that it is a wise expenditure and is a fair way of contributing to the relief of the commerce of the country generally, so far as importations are concerned.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then the government should say so.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—With respect to the remarks of the hon. leader of the opposition, I think this calculation was somewhat premature, because he assumes the government is going into the market now to borrow money for twenty-five years. I would give the government of Canada and the Finance Minister credit for more judgment than to borrow money now at four per cent for twenty-five years. We are quite aware that money is high ; but there is no time in the history of Canada when its credit was higher than it is now, and there is no necessity to borrow the money for five years until the stringency is over, and perhaps in that time the government of Canada may be able to borrow at two and a half and in that case they would be gainer. But let that be as it may, how many cities in the different provinces of the Dominion are subsidized by wharfs and other things for the benefit of the trade of the locality ? I consider the benefit that accrues to the harbour of Montreal is of national and far more reaching character than the expenditure at any other port in the whole Dominion. Whatever may be given in the way of assisting the Harbour Commissioners of the city of Montreal to increase their facilities for handling freight and shipping, to increase their storage accommodation, to bring their railway trains down on the wharfs and into the warehouses means the quick transportation of goods, and a reduction in the transportation charges which everybody in the west, even Calgary where my hon. friend resides, will receive a benefit from as well as the people of Montreal. With respect to what was done before, did not the government which my hon. friend supported for many years lend the same commissioners of the city of Montreal money when it could not be borrowed by Canada at the present low rate of interest, and yet nothing was said about it. I consider what the hon. gentleman from Rothesay said is correct, that the people of this country deposit their money by the millions in the hands of the government through the Post Office Savings Bank, and the government only pay three per cent for this money and they can well afford to lend a large national harbour like Montreal money on easy terms. I am not afraid that the government in its wisdom will ever borrow money at the present rate for twenty-five years. My hon. friend might have gone further and said they would lend this money for fifty years.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Bill says twenty-five years.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—But when the market is favourable, they will get it for less than that. It is only the other day the Grand Trunk Pacific floated five millions at par at four per cent. Surely if the National Transcontinental Railway people, through the paternity of the Grand Trunk Pacific and through their board can borrow money to the extent of five millions at the present moment, it is the greatest compliment that can be paid to the securities of Canada when such a corporation can borrow money at this rate when other people have to pay 5 and 6 per cent. I consider that is one of the advantages we have in being recognized as a part of the empire, that the credit of the Dominion is in such high favour in the British market that when the time comes for the placing of this loan we shall be able to secure the money at a reasonable rate of interest.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have nothing to say against the Bill, but I have noticed that more than one hon. gentleman seemed to think that it was, in a sense, the duty of Canada to spend an unlimited amount of money at the Port of Montreal not merely as a loan, but as a gift. That is a proposition as to which there may be some questions. Providence made Quebec the port of the St. Lawrence, and through the enterprise of the city of Montreal that port has become in a greater degree than Quebec the port of the St. Lawrence ; still Quebec has already a good harbour, and a comparatively small expenditure there would fit it for the transaction of the commerce of the Dominion. I do not think it is altogether the duty of the parliament of Canada to interfere in a matter of that sort. If Quebec is a good and satisfactory port, so made by Providence, why should Canada spend a great many millions to move the port a little further up the river ? It seems rather the business of the people of Montreal. If they wish to continue to have an advantage over Quebec, it seems to me that it is their business to pay for it and not the business of the whole country.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Why did the government of the country incur over one hundred millions of expenditure for the purpose of building canals, if it was not for the purpose of carrying the trade inland as much as possible ?

Hon. Mr. OWENS—I regret that the hon. senator from Halifax should take the narrow view of drawing a comparison between the harbours of Montreal and Quebec. A great deal of the expense of improving the harbour of Montreal was forced upon them. The deepening of the channel of the St. Lawrence was done, not altogether at the request of the harbour commissioners. It was directed by the government, and a great deal of the expenditure was beyond their control. But, as has been said to-day, they have paid interest on all the loans. It might be considered as unfair to make them pay interest on expenditures they did not control. Now, when it comes to a matter whether the rate of interest should be three or four per cent it should not be a consideration when we are all interested in making the port of Montreal, which is really our national port, as convenient and attractive as possible. What the commissioners of Montreal have to pay in the way of interest on their bonds they must obtain from the vessels that enter the port, and we should make the charges as low as possible. The action of the government in lending the money at what we consider a reasonable rate of interest is commendable, and the House should support the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

DOMINION LAND SURVEYS ACT REPEAL BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (172) An Act to repeal the Act of the present session intituled an Act respecting the surveys of the public Lands of the Dominion and the surveyors entitled to make such surveys. He said : At the time the Bill which it is intended to repeal came up to the House, I announced that it was intended to separate the survey branch from what is called the Dominion Lands branch proper. Hon. gentlemen will recollect there was at that time a Bill called the Dominion Lands Act before the other Chamber. That Bill has been withdrawn, and, consequently, the Act to which I have referred passed this session has to be repealed, because it took the surveyor's branch out of the Dominion Lands Act. Now the Dominion Land Act has not been repealed, and consequently this other Act has to be withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This Bill does not go far enough. It just says that the Act which we passed is repealed. Unless I am mistaken, the Act which we passed repealed certain portions of the Dominion Lands Act. If the Act which we passed in the early part of this session repealed any sections of the Dominion Lands Act, then merely repealing the Act passed this session would leave those sections still repealed, and it might be awkward to get along without them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those clauses are existing now in the Lands Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill read a second time.

MANUFACTURING OF BINDER TWINE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (174) An Act to amend the Act respecting the Manufacture of Binder Twine in Canada. He said : The principle of this measure, I think, was admitted some years ago, and I do not know why it has not been continued. In order to prevent the Canadian manufacturer embarking in the manufacture of binder twine, the government of Washington put an export duty on the manilla fibre coming from the Philippine islands. The only way we could meet the advantage that gave to the United States manufacturer was to give to the Canadian manufacturer a bounty equal to the export duty enacted by congress, practically, against the Canadian manufacturer.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (171) An Act to amend the Exchequer Court Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (175) An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

THE RESOURCES OF NORTHERN CANADA.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. POWER (in the absence of Hon. Mr. Davis) moved :

That the sum of one hundred dollars be paid to Mr. E. J. Chambers out of the appropriation of $1,000 made to the Select Committee appointed by this House to inquire and report from time to time as to the value of that part of the Dominion lying north of the Saskatchewan watershed, east of the Rocky mountains, west and east of the Hudson's bay, comprising the north parts of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and the Mackenzie Territory, its extent of navigable waters, rivers, lakes and sae coast, and Ungava and Keewatin territories, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time, for his services in revising and editing the evidence taken before said committee.

He said : This resolution is to the effect that the sum of a hundred dollars, out of the sum of a thousand dollars, which was practically placed at the disposal of the committee appointed to inquire and report as to the value of the outlying regions of the Dominion, be paid to Mr. Chambers. I may say in the first place that the committee were very economical, which is——

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Unusual.

Hon. Mr. POWER—A thing to be commended at this time. There was a great deal of evidence taken, and this evidence was in a more or less unreadable form, and Mr. Chambers was requested by the committee to edit the evidence, and he did so in a very reasonable way, and although Mr. Chambers made no claim whatever for any consideration for the work he had done, the committee felt that it would be exceedingly unfair that such good work should go for nothing, and they recommend the payment of the sum of one hundred dollars, which I think is a very reasonable sum to be paid.

The motion was agreed to.

THE RATE OF INTEREST ON SAVINGS DEPOSITS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. POWER inquired :

Is it the intention of the government to increase the rate of interest now allowed to depositors in the government savings banks, and if not why not ?

He said : It is a matter for some surprise that the government should be paying only three per cent to depositors when money is worth more than that. At the present time, money cannot be got for three per cent. I understand the statement was made by the Minister of Finance in another place, that the government were paying four per cent for money borrowed from lenders. It seems to me that our own people deserve as much consideration as outsiders do. One of the effects of such a low rate of interest in the savings banks is that the money which otherwise would be placed in the care of the government, and which would be, to a certain extent, available for public purposes, is now invested with private banks and sometimes in speculations not of the safest character. I think this view must appeal to the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, that giving the depositors in the savings banks a reasonable rate of interest, would tend to encourage thrift amongst people whom we desire to see thrifty.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Of course this is a matter which has been very frequently discussed. It is in the highest degree inexpedient and impolitic that the rate of interest paid by the government on deposits in savings banks should be changed from time to time, unless for very good reasons indeed. Were they to change it, they might disturb the whole commercial fabric of this country. If they raise the rate of interest, the banks must raise theirs, and the whole commercial community may be put to very serious inconvenience. But wholly and entirely apart from that, I am utterly at variance with the hon. gentleman in his idea that the government are paying too little for money at call. At this moment, although it is true that money is tight, the rate which can be obtained on permanent investments of a high class in Canada ranges from three and a half to four per cent, and stocks of banks of the highest standing can hardly be purchased to yield more than four per cent. Municipal debentures of a high class cannot be purchased to pay more than from three to three and three-quarters per cent, if as much, and as the government could easily obtain loans for fifty years at a rate of three and a half per cent, or thereabouts, though they may find it convenient to pay a little more for temporary accommodation in the shape of treasury bonds, there is no ground whatever for saying that the rate of three per cent which is allowed on money at call, that may be withdrawn at a moment's notice, is less than the fair value of money. Circumstances may possibly arise in which it may be necessary for the banks and the government to raise the rate of interest, but at present I do not think there is any need for doing it, nor can I hold out any hope to the hon. gentleman that the rate of interest will be raised.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I fully endorse the statement the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has made.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I rise to a question of order. I asked a question, and there can be no discussion on that. If the hon. gentleman is going to discuss it it is open to every member of the House to do so.

The SPEAKER—The point is well taken.

FRENCH TRANSLATION OF CAMP INSTRUCTIONS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

Is it the intention of the military authorities to cause to be translated into French, and to distribute in opportune time before the next annual training, for the use of volunteers of French origin, the two pamphlets which are given every year in English to the volunteers of the country, and which embrace, one of them, the syllabus of the daily routine of the troops in camp (Camp instructions), and, the other, the programme of military exercises varying every day, but settled in advance, through which those who take the training of the Canadian militia must pass ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have only seen the question at this moment, and I am not in a position to give an answer.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose the second question will be in the same position?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. I have just this moment received the order paper.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think we should not have any more morning sittings.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We will not have after the end of next week.

The inquiry was allowed to stand.

KING'S REGULATIONS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY called the attention of the acting Minister of the Militia to the following facts :

I.

On the 24th day of April, 1906, one year ago, Hon. Mr. Landry rose to direct the attention of the government to the following clause of the Militia Act :—

74. The Army Act for the time being in force in the United Kingdom, the King's Regulations, and all other laws applicable to His Majesty's troops in Canada and not inconsistent with this Act or the regulations made thereunder, shall have force and effect as if they had been enacted by the parliament of Canada for the government of the militia, and every officer and man of the militia shall be subjected thereto from the time being called out for active service, and also during the period of annual drill or training under the provisions of this Act, and also at any other time while upon military duty or in the uniform of his corps upon or within any rifle range or any armoury, or other place where arms, guns, ammunition or other military stores are kept, or any drill shed or other building or place used for militia purposes, or during any drill or parade of his corps at which he is present in the ranks, when going to or from the place of drill or parade, and also whether in uniform or not at any drill or parade of his corps at which he is present as a spectator.

2. Officers and men of the permanent force and members of the permanent staff of the militia shall at all times be subject to military law.

97. The regulations for the composition of courts of inquiry and courts-martial and the modes of procedure and powers thereof, shall be the same as the regulations which are at the time in force for the composition, modes of procedure and powers of courts of inquiry and courts-martial for His Majesty's regular army, and which are not inconsistent with this Act, or the regulations made thereunder.

And inquired of the government—

As the Army Act and the King's Regulations of the United Kingdom become, by these legislative enactments, laws and regulations having force and effect in Canada, does the government intend, in the interest of the militia and for its better government, to provide each commanding officer of a division, of a brigade, of a regiment, of a battery, of a company, or of any corps whatsoever, with a copy, in the English version or in the French version, as the case may be, of these imperial laws and regulations ?

If such is the intention of the government, can the distribution of these books, which are indispensable since they are made imperative, be made before the date of the next training of the volunteer forces ?

Can the French translation of these books be begun at once so that the officers of French origin may have the benefit of these laws and of these regulations at the same time as their English comrades ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT. The matter is receiving the consideration of the department.

II.

The Militia Act contains the following enactments :—

'126. The Governor in Council may make regulations for carrying this Act into effect for the organization, discipline, efficiency and good government generally of the militia, and for anything requiring to be done in connection with the military defence of Canada.

'127. Such regulations shall be published in 'The Canada Gazette,' and, upon being so published, they shall have the same force in law as if they formed part of this Act.'

III.

Chapter 2 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, which were in force from 1886 to 1907, enacts as follows :—

'9. The Acts of the parliament of Canada shall be printed in two separate volumes, the first of which shall contain such of the said Acts and such orders in council and proclamations or other documents, and such Acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom, as the Governor in Council deems to be of a public and general nature or interest in Canada, and directs to be inserted in the said volume, and the second volume shall contain the remaining Acts of the session, and shall be printed after the first volume; and copies of the said volumes shall be printed in the English and French languages, respectively, by the Queen's Printer.'

And that he will inquire—

Has ever the Governor in Council deemed it to be of a public and general nature and in the interest of Canada to have inserted in the volume containing our own laws that Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom known as the Army Act, and which by our own Militia Act is declared to have force and effect in Canada ?

If so, when was such an order in council passed, and in what volume of our statutes is the Army Act to be found ?

Has ever the King's Regulations in force in the United Kingdom been published in 'The Canada Gazette,' as the obligation is imposed upon us for our own Canadian King's Regulations prior to their having any force in law ?

If so, when did such publication take place, and in what number of 'The Canada Gazette' is it to be found ?

Is the government now prepared after one whole year of consideration, to take the proper steps to have the Army Act and the King's Regulations in force in the United Kingdom, published in our country either in the statutes or in 'The Canada Gazette,' as the case may be, and to have them distributed to the officers commanding the different units of the Canadian militia, and will such a distribution be made before the date of the next training of the volunteer forces ?

I contend that the Militia Act enacts that the Army Act and the Queen's Regulations form part of our own law. But this disposition of the Militia Act takes force provided that in the publication of those English laws you follow the course that is followed by the publication of our own laws. We see by the enactments that I have brought forward, that any regulations passed by the Military Council or by the Governor in Council respecting the militia, to have force of law, to be incorporated in our laws, must first be published in the 'Canada Gazette,' must be brought to the cognizance of the public by printing them in the 'Canada Gazette,' and it is only when that publishing of the regulations is done in the 'Canada Gazette,' that they become law. For our own laws, the Canada laws, the statute provides that they must be published in two volumes, one containing the public Acts and the other the private Acts; but in so far as the public Acts are concerned there is an enactment which declares that the Governor in Council must include in the volume containing them every imperial law which he considers as having any effect or to be of any interest to the Dominion. If our Militia Act enacts that the Imperial King's Regulations and the Army Act shall apply to this country, it follows, as a consequence, that those Acts must be published in our statutes, just in the part of our statutes in which are published all the imperial laws affecting any of the interests of Canada.

This has not been done, as far as I understand, and what is the consequence ? The consequence is that the Army Act and the Imperial King's Regulations are not yet in force in Canada ; which means that the courts-martial, established under their provisions, have no legal status in this country.

Established as they are in virtue of the laws of England, I say that if those courts-martial are to have any value, the laws of England which create them must be made our laws by their publication in the statutes or in the 'Canada Gazette.' If not incorporated in the statutes nor published in the 'Canada Gazette,' as our own laws and as our own regulations are abliged to be published, what happens ? They are by no means regulaly constituted. At the beginning of this session I brought to the notice of this House the fact that early in November last a militia man of the permanent force was taken into custody one day because of a certain breach of the military law of England. He was court-martialled. He was condemned to thirty days' imprisonment at hard labour, because he was not dressed in military clothes on a certain occasion. Although he had a permit or furlough, he was arrested, tried and condemned to thirty days at hard labour in the prison.

But the matter is now in court, with the plea that those regulations of the British army and the Army Act itself, not having been published in this country, or incorporated in our statutes—the King's Regulations have never been published in the 'Canada Gazette,' as is obligatory for our own regulations—they are not in force. We can, therefore, see the consequences of such neglect on the part of the Militia Department if that plea is maintained. This is not a new matter. I brought it up last year and the year before. The Militia Department was duly notified but no action has been taken. I went further; I pointed out last year to the hon. Secretary of State, who was not then the Acting Minister of Militia, the obligation imposed by section 128 of the Militia Act to lay before parliament within the first fifteen days of the session each year, all the regulations made by the Military Council and to deposit them on the Table of this House. Has anything of the kind been done this session? Nothing, although it is obligatory, according to the terms of the Militia Act. This naturally raises the question of the translation of those regulations, because if they are published in the 'Canada Gazette,' they must be translated, and if they are to be included in the statutes of this country, by the same authority they must be translated, so that every officer in the militia can have the advantage of them in the language with which he is most familiar. Last year, on the 30th May, after some discussion had taken place in this House, I wrote the following letter to the premier :

(Translation.)

To the Right Honourable Sir Wilfrid Laurier,
Prime Minister of Canada,

Sir,—Will you allow me to draw your attention to the following sections of the Militia Act (4 Ed. VII., ch. 23) :

'126. The Governor in Council may make regulations for carrying this Act into effect, for the organization, discipline, efficiency and good government generally of the militia, and for anything requiring to be done in connection with the military defence of Canada.

'127. Such regulations shall be published in the 'Canada Gazette;' and upon being so published, they shall have the same force in law as if they formed part of this Act.'

In virtue of these two sections of the Militia Act, the obligation falls on the military authorities, to publish in the 'Canada Gazette' the rules, regulations or orders which they think necessary to enact.

In conformity with this obligation, the 'Canada Gazette,' in the number of the 29th October, 1904, contains in a supplement, under the title of Regulations and Orders for Militia of Canada, 1904, the orders and regulations adopted on the 28th October, 1904, by the Governor General in Council, in virtue of section 126 aforesaid.

On the 25th September, 1905, that is to say, after a delay of nearly eleven months, the 'Canada Gazette' published the French translation of these regulations and orders.

The translation into French of the Acts of parliament and of every parliamentary document is an obligation imposed by our constitutional Act, the British North America Act, section 133, and by chapter 2 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1886, section 9.

On the 5th May, 1906, the 'Canada Gazette' published, in English only, in its supplement, under the title of Regulations Respecting Pay and Allowances, revised regulations concerning the pay of the militia.

I asked on the 17th of May :

'Whether it is the intention of the government to order the immediate publication in French in the 'Canada Gazette' of the revised Rules and Regulations concerning the pay and allowances of the Canadian militia, which Rules and Regulations have been lately published in English in the 'Canada Gazette,' on the 5th day of May last ?'

Speaking in the name of the government, the hon. the Secretary of State informed me that the Department of Militia and Defence had just sent him the answer: 'No'; and in the course of the debate which ensued I received the additional information that this answer bore the signature of the Deputy Minister of Militia, Colonel Pinault.

I must cause it to be observed that my question was addressed to the government, and not at all to the Department of Militia and Defence, to which I deny the right of deciding whether, contrary to the law and to the constitution, a document may be withdrawn from the obligation there is to publish it in French.

You are the head of the government. I address myself to you in order that, without delay, our compatriots of the province of Quebec may obtain justice, and I demand of you your intervention to that effect.

It would be unfortunate that it should be believed in certain quarters that there is question here of a favour when we are doing nothing but claiming our right?

I dare to hope, Mr. Premier, that a word from you will bring everything back to order, and that our French militiamen will have, in time for the next training, the translation into their language, not only of these regulations but also of the syllabus specially prepared for the daily routine of the camps.

I send you No. 81 of the Orders for the Militia which contains the syllabus in question. You will see how small is the work of translation which is asked for, and you will feel that the men who refuse to give, at such small cost, this satisfaction to the militiamen of the province of Quebec, deserve, assuredly, that your intervention shall bring them back to an idea of their duties.

Believe me to be, Mr. Premier,
Your most humble servant,
(Signed). P. LANDRY.

The hon. minister just acknowledged receipt in the following words:—

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of yesterday, which I will immediately transmit to the Department of Militia.

Truly yours,
WILFRID LAURIER.

On the same day, he wrote to the Deputy Minister of Militia, Col. Pinault, this letter:

My Dear Pinault:

I address you the letter which I have just received from Senator Landry, and my answer. Will you give me further details on the subject.

Truly yours,
WILFRID LAURIER.

I regret to say that instead of discussing the matter on its merits, Col. Pinault forgot to give the details asked for but indulged in the tu quoque argument saying that they were merely doing what Conservative governments had done in former years. I shall not translate his letter, but that is the substance of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—All I can say to the hon. gentleman is that I am not sufficiently conversant with the militia affairs of this country to answer the questions he has asked. I regret very much that the department has not treated the hon. gentleman with the courtesy which I think he is entitled to. No reflection can be made on him for introducing a subject of the kind even at this period of the session. I should be glad if the hon. gentleman would furnish me with a copy of the correspondence, and his remarks, and I will send them to the department with my own comments on the course that has been pursued in the past. The regulations or orders in council affecting the matter should be published in both languages. Not taking any interest in military matters myself, I am utterly ignorant of the subject. I take no interest whatever in it. I hate military matters. It means death and destruction. Nations will come to their senses, perhaps, in another half-century; but at present they are blinded by association with the past, and, therefore, I must be pardoned if I do not know anything about the subject, and do not hope to know anything about it in the future. Any information I can procure for the hon. gentleman I shall be glad to give him.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend, for two sessions, has asked this concession from the government, and it seems but reasonable that it should be granted. I would remind my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, and also the government, of the story of a certain unjust judge who was importuned by a certain woman for justice, and by reason of her importunities her request was acceeded to.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That comparison is not fair to my hon. friend from Stadacona. You are not going to compare him with an old woman.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Why not have these regulations printed in both languages?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It would be a matter of great convenience to those who require to use them. Another year has gone by without this being done, and an effort should be made to put all officers, English and French, in possession of these regulations.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose the last part of the question will stand?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. It has been absolutely impossible for me, with two sittings a day, and the House sitting here pretty late at night, to get information of that kind. I do not profess to be equal to it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Would it not be well towards the close of the session to have deputy ministers in attendance, so as to assist in clearing up the order paper ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will not delay the House by waiting for an answer.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Perhaps it might produce a more practical result if a motion were made, because I think every member on both sides is in sympathy with the position taken by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. As the hon. Secretary of State says, he ought to be treated with the courtesy which his official position, as head of his regiment, deserves. If the Senate, by resolution, demanded this thing as a right, it would be effective. There should be no unfair treatment to one class of citizens as compared with others.

An hon. MEMBER—Hear, hear.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (75) An Act to amend the Railway Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would direct the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the extraordinary fact that this Bill as it came to us from the House of Commons contained but three clauses; but in the reprinted form several other clauses have been added, and it is absolutely a new Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a mistake of the Printing Bureau which I will explain. When several hon. gentlemen spoke to me yesterday about a long amendment to be introduced in the Bill—it had been submitted I understood to the Department of Justice and the railway authorities—I said it ought to be printed; otherwise it would be impossible for the House to understand it. It embraced what are now clauses 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8, a good deal longer than the Bill itself. I sent the amendments to the Bureau to be printed, but they had no instructions to tack them on to the Bill at all. By mistake they put them in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What is the Bill that originally came from the Commons?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The original Bill was the first three clauses of this reprinted Bill, so we will ignore the other clauses altogether until they are moved.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is impossible to go on with this Bill in its present form. I remember something of the kind occurred two or three years ago. A Bill came from the Railway Committee with numerous changes, purporting to have been made by the committee, but which had not been made. The consequence was that they were withdrawn at once, and notice was given that the amendments would be moved at the third reading of the Bill. That is the only way we can possibly consider these amendments. We have before us a Bill purporting to come from the House of Commons, which is not the Bill at all. If legislation of this kind is to be permitted, where will we find ourselves? We may have the most obnoxious and objectionable clauses added by somebody without the slightest authority. If the hon. gentleman insists upon going into this, I shall raise a point of order, and ask the Speaker to decide as to whether this Bill should be considered in its present form.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The Bill which came from the House of Commons is on file, Bill No. 75. The other document was distributed through a mistake that was made, and there is no reason why we should not proceed with the Bill now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend informs the House that the Bill now in the chairman's hands is the Bill which was originally presented to parliament, and not the one to which the Secretary of State refers. Then the next objection would be that we cannot well consider these amendments, unless certain notice has been given of them. I noticed yesterday that a number of typewritten copies of this amendment had been circulated amongst a few members of this House. What they contained no others knew, but there were two or three favoured ones who had them in their possession, I asked them what they meant and I was told they were certain amendments which were proposed to be added to the Bill, and here we find them printed and laid before parliament.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is this Bill which we have on our file that we are dealing with, entirely independently of the other document.

The SPEAKER—The document to which reference has been made contains a reference to proposed amendments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This course is not only irregular but highly improper.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I quite admit that. The fault lay at the Printing Bureau. I sent the amendments to the Bureau to be printed for the convenience of members, and there was no authority whatever to insert them in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We will simply ignore them altogether.

On clause 1 :

1. The Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada may, in any application, proceeding or matter of special importance pending before it, if in the opinion of the board the public interest so requires, apply to the Minister of Justice to instruct counsel to conduct or argue the case or any particular question arising in the application, proceeding or matter as to any public interest which is or may be affected thereby or by any order or decision which may be made therein; and, upon such application to him by the board, or of his own motion, the Minister of Justice may instruct counsel accordingly; and the board may direct that the costs of such counsel shall be paid by any party to the application, proceeding or matter, or by the Minister of Finance out of any unappropriated moneys.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am afraid that this is a very serious departure. One of the conditions that was pointed out when we established the railway board was, that the board would arrive at its conclusions without the interference of lawyers. Now we have a provision which permits, to an unlimited extent, the employment of counsel, and there is the fullest power to the board with reference to costs and the payment of counsel. Under this clause the minister can, of his own motion, without any application from the commission, appoint counsel to appear before the board. I can understand that there might be some occasion in which a great public question was involved, in which the public interest might demand the employment of counsel, but, if I am able to understand this section, it opens the door absolutely. I think this ought to be very well understood before we proceed further with it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It has been the uniform practice since the board was appointed, that all parties interested are represented by counsel, and sometimes it is of considerable importance to the government of Canada that the government should be represented on applications before that board.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Do I understand counsel is to argue on behalf of the Crown as well as of the individual ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In the public interest —that is the word used.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Supposing a private individual goes before that Railway Commission with a very important case, and is not perhaps able to procure good counsel, can he call upon this counsel appointed by government to act for him ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—If the question is of such a character that it may be of public interest ; I think it would be at the discretion of the board.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is in matters of special importance to the public, and at the instance of the board commissioners, and they, naturally, in fixing the payment of the costs, impose them on the party who is the most culpable. Now, to give an illustration : Pressure is being brought to bear to have the question of the Bell telephone brought before the board. Is it in the public interest or not, when that question comes up, that Canada should be represented by the most able counsel that can be obtained ? We know very well that unless some one works up a case, unless they go into details and give a history of it, that the board of commissioners cannot appreciate the full facts. You must have counsel. If it were not for the legal counsel before the Insurance Commission, do you mean to say one-tenth of the evidence which was adduced would have been obtained ? In an important case it is absolutely necessary that all the facts connected with it should be exposed before the public. The board then are in a much better position to decide.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me, so far as I can recall the discussion which took place upon the introduction of the Railway Bill by the government, it was pointed out in regard to the appointment of the chairman of the board that he must be a gentleman eminent in the law, so as to dispense with the necessity of counsel appearing before the commission, to represent the public interests. I recall that at that time it was pointed out that Mr. Blair was a very able lawyer, eminent in railway law, and it was for that reason he was appointed chairman of the board. It was similarly pointed out when the present Chief Justice Killam was taken from the Supreme Court, that he was so eminently qualified in law that it would obviate the necessity of the public interest being represented by counsel. I remember those arguments were used in support of appointing a lawyer to the chairmanship of the Railway Commisison. Hon. gentlemen will recall the discussion that took place as to why a lawyer should be appointed chairman of the board, and this was the answer given. It would look very much as if the design of this Bill was to place further patronage in the Department of Justice. The board is not to have any decision as to the counsel they should employ, but they must make application to the Minister of Justice. He may have no familiarity or knowledge as to the class of counsel required, but it is left with him to say what counsel shall appear to represent the public interest before the Board of Railway Commissioners. If this were to be intelligently done, it strikes me it could be much more satisfactorily done by the Board of Railway Commissioners having the authority to appoint counsel, and it would dispense, to a very large extent, with the suspicion that it is a Bill passed with the intention of giving some particular or favoured counsel work at the hands of the Department of Justice.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—My hon. friend must suggest that the Board of Railway Commissioners are inclined in the first instance to find jobs for some counsel who is favourable to the government, because the application must originate with the Board of Railway Commissioners in the first instance.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, the minister, of his own volition.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It should read something like this :

Whereas Mr. Shepley, K.C., of Toronto, eminent King's counsel, is at this time out of a job, therefore it is enacted, &c.——

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I think it is most unfair to mention the name of a gentleman who is not here and is not able to defend himself, and for the hon. gentleman to take advantage of his position in this Chamber to make such a statement in relation to a gentleman of Mr. Shepley's standing at the bar, is unjust. I think if the hon. gentleman was as well acquainted with Mr. Shepley as he is with other matters, he would not have made such a remark. There is no more honourable man than Mr. Shepley at the bar, and I do not think my hon. friend should make such a suggestion. The whole contention is that somebody else should have the privilege of naming counsel to act before the Railway Commission. I suppose it is only when a case of supreme importance is before them that they will ask that counsel be employed on behalf of the Crown. Surely it is a reasonable request. There is not a department of the government service today which has not legal advisers, and, beyond that, when a question arises, it is sent to the Department of Justice for their opinion. The Railway Commission must have power given to them to ask for counsel.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I deny the right of the hon. gentleman from Beamsville to read me a lecture across the floor of the House as to the decorum or etiquette of any remarks I may address to this House. My remarks have been strictly in order. They are remarks which I have a perfect right to make.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I decline to accept my hon. friend as an authority on this or on any matter of the kind. I think I know my rights and privileges in this House as well as the hon. gentleman does. Mr. Shepley has been intimately connected with this government in the matter of commissions and employments, I see that he was despatched to do another piece of work not long ago, and perhaps I was wrong in saying he was out of a job. There does not appear to be much danger of his being left out of employment by the Minister of Justice. That is a matter that is notorious. If this clause was drafted in this way, that the Board of Railway Commissioners should, when they saw the public interest was involved, be given power to require the employment of counsel, I should have no objection to it. From what I know of Judge Killam, and from all I have been able to learn about him, he is a very eminent and able man, and I have not the slightest doubt if it were left to him nothing would be done but what should be done in the public interests; but when you find the door open that the board may make application to the Minister of Justice—and you go further and provide that the Minister of Justice on his own motion can proceed to do this, although the board may not have asked for it, is going too far. I do not think application should be made to the Minister of Justice at all, and I certainly think the Minister of Justice should have no power to move on his own account. It should be removed from the domain of government patronage, and the employment should be done directly by the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think no doubt the hon. gentleman from Marshfield was within his right in referring by name to the eminent counsel in Ontario, but considering the long experience of the hon. gentleman in public life, and the important and dignified position which he holds in the Senate, it would naturally surprise the younger members of the House at any rate that he should set an example which, if followed extensively, would have a bad effect upon the debates and proceedings of this Chamber. As one of the seniors of this Chamber, I feel a regret that he should have taken that line. I think he is just one of the hon. gentlemen who should give to the younger members of this House an example of impersonal discussion, and that he should keep himself above the level of party feeling and personal politics. An hon. gentleman says that he cannot. We do not expect him to do it if he cannot, but I think he might make an effort. With respect to the clause before the committee, if we read this clause carefully, it does not seem to me to be open to all the objections which have been made to it. In the first place, it is not stated that the Board of Railway Commissioners shall make an appointment. The clause says the Board of Railway Commissioners may in any application or matter of special importance pending before it, if, in the opinion of the board, the public interest so requires, apply to the Minister of Justice to instruct counsel to conduct or argue the case on any particular question arising in the application, proceeding or matter, as to any public interest which is or may be affected thereby, or by any order or decision which may be made therein. The criticism made by the hon. gentlemen in the opposition upon this is that the commissioners should not ask the Minister of Justice to appoint a counsel, but that they should appoint him themselves. The commission occupy a judicial position. The chairman was a very eminent judge before he became chairman. Now do hon. gentlemen think that when matters in which the public interests are concerned come up in any of the superior courts of the country, whether it be the judge on the bench, or if it be a full court, that the judge makes the appointment, as a rule?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, it is frequently done.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Excuse me, not as a rule in the Supreme Court. If a criminal matter comes up, he may appoint a counsel, but, as a rule, the political legal authority makes the appointment, and I think it is not a desirable thing to put the patronage in the hands of the commission. At any rate, the almost uniform rule is, that were the public interests are affected, the government who are responsible to the public make the appointment, and I fail really to see any reason for suspecting that there would be anything improper in this case, and if the government never make any appointment more to be criticised than the appointment of Mr. Shepley, then there will be no ground for finding fault.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not surprised that the hon. gentleman for Halifax, in a rather indirect way, rebuked the hon. gentleman from St. Catharines, and admitted that I was quite within my right in making the reference which I did. I may just say, in passing, that I feel that probably I have not performed my duty in this House in allowing the session to close without calling the attention of hon. gentlemen in the most emphatic way I can to what I consider to be the gross abuse of his position by Mr. Shepley as counsel for the Insurance Commission. I have no right to take all the responsibility upon myself, but I think the matter should be mentioned, if it were only to point out the manner in which Mr. Shepley, as counsel for the Insurance Commission, went far afield on a fishing expedition, to try if he could not possibly in some way or another connect the name of Mr. R. L. Borden with some land transactions. Nothing could show more the object and motive of the man, and I have no hesitation in saying that in that respect, as indeed——

Hon. Mr. KERR—I rise to a point of order, and I ask the chairman whether it is in order on this Bill to discuss the Insurance Commission ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am replying to what the hon. gentleman from Beamsville has said. However, I have said all I desire to say in regard to it, and it is quite apropos in discussing the Bill, to point out what abuses may arise under it, and in doing so we are quite within our right in showing what abuses have occurred in the past, and pointing out how they may occur in the future.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am glad the hon. gentleman from Halifax was able to put me right, because the hon. gentleman from Marshfield had failed to do so, and he has gone further afield than he should have done. It is not for the emoluments attached to his work that Mr. Shepley is employed by the government. He does not require the emoluments that come to him from the government. He is a man who occupies such a position at the Bar that it is a compliment to the government when he is employed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Did the hon. gentleman ever see lawyers who did not want emoluments ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think a little lecturing now and again will do us good. We are apt to go beyond the bounds of parliamentary etiquette ; therefore when it is administered to me I take it very kindly. The hon. gentleman from Halifax gave me a rap a little while a go. An hon. gentleman informed me of it. I was not aware of it at the time, and my simple reply was, that it served me right ; I had no business doing what I did. But I desire to ask the government, has the board at the present moment not a legal adviser ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was under the impression they had a gentleman connected with the board who was a law clerk, or something of that kind.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—They have a law clerk, I may say to my hon. friend.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A position in which he is expected to give advice. That was my impression.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have a law clerk, and I fancy this clause is only intended to apply in matters of public importance.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Hon. gentlemen opposite are hardly orthodox in suggesting that the appointment be made by a board which is not responsible to the people. It is rather against the doctrine of responsible parliamentary government. Matters involving the expenditure of money should be dealt with by the government so that they can be amenable to parliament if they abuse the powers given them. If the power were vested with the Board of Railway Commissioners in the way suggested, it might tend to criticism of the Railway Board; nevertheless, the abuse could not be remedied, because the power being given to them they could exercise it during their term of office, and parliament would have no power over them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman quite forgets what we are doing ourselves. Who appoints the clerks of this House, and are we not directly responsible to the people?

The clause was adopted.

On clause 2,

2. Wherever by any Act of the parliament of Canada, heretofore or hereafter passed, provision was or is made for the deposit in the office of the Secretary of State of Canada of any mortgage given to secure the payment of bonds or other securities issued by any company, and the provisions with regard to such deposit have been duly complied with, it is hereby declared and enacted that it was and is unnecessary for any purpose that such mortgage, or any assignment thereof, or any other instrument in any way affecting it, should have been or should be otherwise deposited, registered or filed under the provisions of any law respecting the deposit, registration or filing of instruments affecting real or personal property: Provided that, if such Act expressly required or requires some additional or other deposit, registration or filing, nothing herein contained shall be taken or held to dispense therewith or to waive any non-compliance with such requirement; and provided further, that nothing herein contained shall affect any matter in litigation, in, or finally decided by, any court of justice at the time this Act comes into force.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From the first institution of our railway system, it has been found necessary that money for railways should be raised on the security of the road by the issue of bonds, and a mortgage in the name of a trustee who held the railway property as a security for the bonds. That has been continued from time to time, and enlarged as it exists now in the Railway Act. Section 138 provides that the company may secure such bonds by mortgage upon the whole of the railway property, assets and revenue, provided that such property, assets and revenue, shall be subject, in the first instance, to any penalty imposed on the company for non-compliance with the requirements of the Act and any payment of working expenses of the railway. Clause 140 provides that every such mortgage and every assignment thereof or instrument affecting it shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, and notice given in the 'Canada Gazette', and that such mortgage need not be registered. However, in cases where there are land grants, it has been the practice always to register that particular mortgage, which would be a lien on the land referred to; but as far as the general mortgage of the whole line, including its stations and right of way, the ground which is actually in use, it has, from the first institution of the railway system of Canada, been filed in the office of the Secretary of State, and parties apply there from time to time for particulars of that mortgage. There is a proviso to this second clause in the Bill, that 'if such Act expressly required or requires some additional or other deposit registered or filed, nothing herein contained shall be taken or held to dispense therewith or to waive any non-compliance with such requirement.' This would apply to cases incidentally mentioned in a former debate, where lands outside of the railway property proper are affected. It is essential, certainly, that in those cases the mortgage should be filed in the registry office in the district where the lands lie. It is further provided in this clause that nothing contained in it shall affect any matter of litigation or finally decided by any court of justice at the time this Act comes into force. There may be some litigation existing. I am not advised that there is any, but that saving clause is introduced for the purpose of protecting possible rights. I do not see that any amendment is necessary. So far as my own recollection and experience go, in all cases of lands outside of these in actual use and occupation by the railway, the statute authorizing the lien on those lands requires that the mortgage shall be filed according to the laws of the particular provinces in which they lie. That ought to be so if it is not so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend's explanation is entirely too restricted, and does not indicate the scope of the legislation now before us, or of the railway law. I took the ground yesterday, and still adhere to it, that the parliament of Canada cannot interfere with the registration laws of a province as taking out of those registration laws any property which may be affected thereby. I can very well conceive of a mortgage upon the right of way or station grounds of a railway not being registered, or, in fact, upon all property of the company, provided there have not been dealings by that railway with the property bringing it within the provincial law; but the moment there have been dealings with the property in question—it may be a hotel property—it is different. This Bill does not refer merely to the right of way and stations of the road, but to all property of the railway company, and I say if there have been dealings by the railway company with any of their properties under the registration laws of the province, the parliament of Canada surely cannot say that they shall be exempt from the consequences which may necessarily arise by reason of their failing to comply with those laws. Then, as to the latter part of the clause, protecting vested rights, my opinion is that it is not as wide as it should be. It does not protect any acquired rights which may not have been placed in litigation.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The hon. gentleman will see that there is an answer to the observations he has made. This does not give priority over any already existing mortgage upon the properties of the railway. It simply provides for the manner of filing and giving notice to the public of any mortgage which is authorized. It does not give them priority over anything which is ahead of it, and, therefore, the mortgagee can only take such security as the company is able to register at the time. The clause simply provides that where provision has been or is made for the depositing at the office of the Secretary of State, of the mortgage, as the means of giving public notice that such an encumbrance has been created, that it is unnecessary for that purpose that such mortgage should be registered or otherwise deposited elsewhere; but it does not increase the value of the mortgage as against any prior existing encumbrance. It is simply following out what is provided for in section 140 of the Railway Act; but the Railway Act does not cover the case where special Acts make provision that the mortgage is to be deposited in that way.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My recollection of a particular instance is that the mortgage which would require to be filed in the different districts or counties is entirely separate from the mortgage here referred to. Take, for instance, the Canadian Pacific Railway. They issued their mortgage on their land grant of 25,000,000 acres. It was called a land grant mortgage. Take another instance relating to the plan laid upon our table, of the property at Winnipeg which is being dealt with by three companies, that is entirely outside of the mortgaged property of these companies. I do not know of any particular case that would be prejudicially affected by this clause. In all those cases of land grants to companies, the lands are under a special mortgage, and as the land is sold from time to time the portions which are sold are released. I know it is the case with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, because I have personal cognizance of the fact.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The very condition of affairs which the hon. gentleman has pointed out is practically wiped out by this legislation which we are now considering. My hon. friend from Toronto may possibly have some case before him with which he is familiar for which this legislation is designed. If so, he has an advantage over myself in discussing it; but we can only deal with this Bill as it is before us. In the first part of this clause, it provides that if there is an Act of parliament requiring the mortgage to be filed with the Secretary of State, then it becomes unnecessary hereafter that the company shall have complied with the registration laws of any province.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no; I daresay my hon. friend has had some experience in connection with lands sold by the Canadian Pacific Railway in his own locality, and he must know that they have been released from time to time as sold. They were not bound by the mortgage proper.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That simply discharges the railway company from its obligation to register the lands in the municipalities in which they lie. Clause 2 provides that if the duty has been placed on a railway company to register a mortgage in the Department of the Secretary of State, then it shall be unnecessary for any purpose, that such mortgage or assignment thereof, or any instrument affecting it, should be otherwise deposited, registered or filed under any law relating to real or personal property. The government recognizing the fact that this is an invasion of provincial rights, have placed in the latter part of the clause a provision indemnifying those who have rights in litigation against loss or damage by reason of this legislation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It does more than that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It goes further and provides that their rights shall be guaranteed, but it does not safeguard rights acquired which may not be in litigation. What has given rise to this Bill ? When legislation affecting vested interests that may be of a very important character comes before us, there must be some cause leading to the adoption of such legislation. It is not by accident that the government have introduced this clause. Can my hon. friend say what circumstances have lead up to its adoption ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—In reply to a remark made by the hon. member from Calgary, I may say I have no special information at all. I take the Bill as it is, and looking at section 140 of the Railway Act, I find that it provides exactly the same thing with reference to a mortgage made pursuant to the General Railway Act. Passing on from that, I take up this Bill and see that it applies to companies which had previously to that obtained legislation authorizing them to mortgage and to deposit the mortgage with the Secretary of State, and probably that legislation did not sufficiently guard against the necessity for registering elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It did not exempt them from registering elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It may expressly exempt them. In such cases, therefore, it is provided that the registration at the Secretary of State's office shall be a sufficient registration. That is all it says ; it does not interfere with any existing right. No one knows better than my hon. friend, that a prior mortgage registered on any part of the property would be protected by the law as it is. This only declares that the filing of the mortgage with the Secretary of State shall be a good registration.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It says that it is unnecessary to have done anything else.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am sorry that the hon. leader of the opposition has changed his view within the last few days. The hon. gentleman thought it was the duty of the government to introduce beneficial legislation without any special cause, but simply through a strong feeling of patriotism and their duty to the country. That was when we were considering the Juvenile Delinquents Bill. Now the hon. gentleman thinks there must be, to use a popular expression, a coloured man in the wood pile, when we come to deal with this Railway Bill. That is uncharitable, and I am sorry to see a spirit of suspicion developing itself in the leader of the opposition. The disease may be infectious. I know the hon. gentleman from Marshfield has a good deal of that spirit, and I hope it has not been caught by any other hon. gentleman near him. I was, at first, very much opposed to this measure, but when I came to look at the existing law I failed to see that this Bill changes it for the worse. Subsection 2 of section 140 of the Railway Act says that :

> Such mortgage deed or other instrument need not be registered under the provisions of any law respecting the registration of instruments affecting real or personal property.

That is about as broad and comprehensive language as can be used. The clause before us is, in fact, a little less expansive, because the proviso limits the operation of that enactment to a certain extent :

> Provided that if such Act expressly required or requires some additional or other deposit, and registration or filing, nothing herein contained shall be taken or held to dispense therewith or to waive any non-compliance with such requirements.

That is a very beneficial enactment, and I regret that the hon. leader of the opposition seemed to overlook it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I did not overlook it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In that case, the Railway Act will not interfere with it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If it is already provided for, why is this Bill required?

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the principal change—putting in that proviso. It looks as if it were intended to prevent railway companies from escaping from the provisions of their private Acts. Take a company like the Canadian Northern, with lines now in every province of the Dominion, except New Brunswick, and they propose to build a line there; the existing and proposed lines in a province like Ontario run through half the counties in the province. If we were to require the registration of these mortgages in every county through which the road passes, capitalists thinking of lending money to the company, seeing that it would involve a search of title in half the counties of Ontario, would hesitate to make the loan. Inasmuch as the other practice has prevailed from the beginning, and the law has been that way always, there is no reason why we should now make a disturbance about it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was asked particularly why this Act should have to be repeated, because one looking at the law as it is in the Railway Act would naturally say this is simply a repetition of the existing law. The explanation given me is this: The government of Canada has guaranteed the bonds of the Canadian Northern. That mortgage was given somewhere about July or August. The Railway Act passed the session of parliament in 1903, but did not come into operation till the following January, and in that interval this mortgage was filed, and a question arises as to whether the security that the government held is sufficiently protected under the statutes, and it was to confirm that security that this provision was introduced in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The railway property is composed of different pieces of land, which, when they are acquired, are distinct property, but they are made one property, and if that property extends over several provinces, one can easily understand that it must be treated as a whole, and, treated as a whole, that it falls exclusively under the jurisdiction of this parliament, and that, as a governing power, this parliament has a right to make provision for the registration of mortgages on that property. For that reason, there can be no question that parliament has jurisdiction to deal with the registration of mortgages on a railway property. But I am in accord with the suggestion which is made that this right does not extend to dealing with mortgages on property such as the Canadian Pacific Hotel, the Chateau Frontenac, or on any specific property which may be held by the railway company, but which may be independent property from that of its own railway.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As a distinct property?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—As a distinct property. And to my mind, and in fact I have no doubt at all in my own mind, that the provision of section 140 of the present Railway Act, as contained in the Revised Statutes, is much too broad. That assumes to deal even with cases such as the one that I have mentioned, the mortgaging of a property such as the Chateau Frontenac or the Place Viger Hotel, and the Dominion parliament has exceeded its jurisdiction in passing legislation of that kind. This present Bill does not, to my mind, go any further than that: but it is as bad as the other, because it goes too far. The first portion of the clause is a repetition of section 140 of the Revised Statutes, but I agree also that the proviso is not properly worded, that the law is made retroactive, and we should guard against giving retroactive effect to the law without saving ordinary rights which may be acquired. There may be no rights; but in case there should be such rights, they should be better safeguarded than they are.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 3:

3. Subsection 5 of section 299 of the Railway Act is repealed, and the following is substitued therefor:

5. The purchaser shall apply to the parliament of Canada at the next following session thereof after the granting of such order by the minister for an Act of incorporation, or other legislative authority, to hold, operate and run the railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is intended to apply where the bonds of a road are in default, and the railway is sold under the power contained in the mortgage bonds. In the particular case that required this special clause, the purchaser has declined to pay any more money out, and is running the road without any authority whatever. It is to force the purchaser to incorporate as a company and bring the road under the Railway Act, or the Minister of Railways will interfere and close up the road.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have an amendment to suggest, and I understand other hon. gentlemen propose to offer amendments. Under the Railway Act in connection with bonds, mortgages and borrowing powers, subsection 2 has this provision :

Such security should be signed by the president or other presiding officer, and countersigned by the secretary, and such countersignature and the signature of the coupons attached to such securities may be engraved.

Under a rule now in the New York Stock Exchange, they will not allow an engraved signature. The bonds, coupons and all must be signed with an original signature. The immediate necessity for this at the present moment is that the Canada Southern is issuing a very large amount of securities, and they are required to be signed by the Secretary of State. It is absolutely impossible that he can sign them all, and this is the provision that I now submit :

Subsection 2 of section 136 of the Railway Act is hereby amended by adding after the word 'secretary' in the second line the words following : 'Or any assistant secretary.'

Where some fifty or a hundred thousand documents have to be signed, it is absolutely impossible for one man to do the work within a reasonable time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Would it not be better to say 'assistant secretary.' A good many swindles and defalcations have arisen in connection with transactions of this kind, and I think it would be better not to say 'any assistant secretary.' There should be some restriction. The language used in the proposed amendment really leaves it open to have it signed by any one.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It might be made to read 'or an assistant secretary.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Strike out the 'y' in the word 'any.' We will not quarrel about it.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I have some amendments to propose.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the committee rise and report progress now.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I think we might finish with the Bill before rising.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not seen these amendments, and we must not railroad legislation through at this stage.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I resent that observation of the Hon. Secretary of State, so far as I am concerned, most strongly. I am not suggesting that any legislation should be railroaded through.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not referring to the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentlemen on the other side have opposed amendments of which they did not know the purpose, and they were quite right. We could not put this through in five minutes.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The clauses are here.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I may point out the unreasonableness of asking us to pass five clauses, all retroactive, dealing with many important interests, for all we know practically wiping them out. I think that point would appeal to my hon. friend's own observation. I should be glad to facilitate the passing of legislation which will remedy any defects in the law, but I cannot say how far-reaching these clauses may be.

Hon. Mr. WATSON, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (177) An Act to amend the Judges Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (178) An Act to authorize the granting of certain subsidies in aid of the railways therein mentioned.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

INCREASED SUBSIDIES FOR THE PROVINCES.

The SPEAKER—I have received the following message from the House of Commons:

House of Commons,

Thursday, 25th April, 1907.

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate, informing their Honours that this House has passed an address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, humbly representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called 'The British North America Act, 1867,' or by or under any terms or conditions upon which any other provinces were admitted to the Union, by Canada to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their governments and legislatures, and praying that His Majesty will be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the imperial parliament at its present session, to repeal the provisions of the above section of the British North America Act, 1867, aforesaid; and requesting their Honours to unite with this House in the said address, by filling up the blank therein with the words 'Senate and.'

Ordered, That the Clerk of the House do carry the said message to the Senate.

Attest,

THOMAS B. FLINT,
Clerk of the Commons.

The said address to His Majesty the King was then read by His Honour the Speaker, as follows:—

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty for the purpose of representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, or by or under any terms or conditions upon which any other provinces were admitted to the Union, to be made by Canada to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their governments and legislatures by providing that—

A. Instead of the amounts now payable, the sums hereafter payable yearly by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their governments and legislatures, be according to population, and as follows:—

(a) Where the population of the province is under 150,000.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. $100,000
(b) Where the population of the province is 150,000, but does not exceed 200,000.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 150,000
(c) Where the population of the province is 200,000, but does not exceed 400,000.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 180,000
(d) Where the population of the province is 400,000, but does not exceed 800,000.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 190,000

(f) Where the population of the province exceeds 1,500,000.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 240,000

B. Instead of an annual grant per head of population now allowed, the annual payment hereafter be at the same rate of eighty cents per head, but on the population of each province, as ascertained from time to time by the last decennial census; (or, in the case of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, respectively, by the last quinquennial census or statutory estimate), until such population exceeds 2,500,000, and at the rate of sixty cents per head for so much of said population as may exceed 2,500,000.

C. An additional allowance to the extent of one hundred thousand dollars annually be paid for ten years to the province of British Columbia.

D. Nothing herein contained shall in any way supersede or affect the terms special to any particular province upon which such province became part of the Dominion of Canada or the right of any province to payment of any special grant heretofore made by the parliament of Canada to any province for any special purpose in such grant expressd.

We pray that Your Majesty may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the imperial parliament at its present session, repealing the provisions of section 118 of the British North America Act, 1867, aforesaid, and substituting therefor the scale of payments above set forth, which shall be a final and unalterable settlement of the amounts to be paid yearly to the several provinces of the Dominion for their local purposes and the support of their governments and legislatures.

Such grants shall be paid half-yearly in advance, to each province; but the government of Canada shall deduct from such grants, as against any province, all sums chargeable as interest on the public debt of that province in excess of the several amounts stipulated in the said Act.

All of which we humbly pray Your Majesty to take into your favourable and gracious consideration.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This matter has been before the Senate on two or three occasions, and I gave my assurance that it would not be forced through the Chamber until every hon. gentleman had a full opportunity of discussing it. I propose to keep that promise, and therefore it will be taken up whenever it suits my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island particularly, because he was given a personal assurance. He told me he meant to speak upon it, and, therefore, I am in his hands.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am ready to proceed at the earliest possible moment the hon. gentleman can bring it up.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—To-morrow?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—To-day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then it will be taken up this evening.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before this motion is concurred in, I will call attention to rule 70, which reads as follows :

The Senate will not proceed with a Bill appropriating public money, that should not, within the knowledge of the Senate, have been recommended by the King's representative.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand from Mr. Fielding that he was to make an announcement that it had His Excellency's approval, in the House of Commons. I have not had the opportunity of looking up the matter to see if the statement has been made, but I think it was.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It should be made in this House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That has not been the usual course in this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It must be within the knowledge of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Senate accepts the statement of the minister, just as the House of Commons does. After the warning I received here I asked the minister to make the announcement, and he said he certainly would.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I may be pardoned if I take the objection, but we must be sharp when we are taking points of order.

The SPEAKER—I may inform the hon. gentleman that the point may be taken at any time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps the hon. Secretary of State can bring the authority when he comes this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is only verbal. My hon. friend must not introduce a new precedent. In thirty-four years it has never been the practice in this Chamber. During the eighteen years I was in the opposition, the hon. gentleman never once mentioned the subject.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. gentleman is quite right, but if you have been sinning eighteen years, we had better begin to repent in the nineteenth year.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The proper authorities show that the message was given to the House that originates the measure, and that the message should accompany the Bill, or address, or whatever it is, to the other House.

The SPEAKER—When it is written, but when it is verbal it can only be conveyed through the channel of the minister in the Chamber.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not think we have a right to go searching the journals of the House of Commons, but we have the right to take the word of a responsible minister. If he says it has received the assent of the Crown, that is quite enough.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That has been the practice in the Commons for years—a simple announcement on the part of the minister of the Crown that he had the authority of His Excellency, has always been considered sufficient.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMUTATION OF SENTENCE OF CAZES.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the House adjourns, I ask if the hon. Secretary of State has any knowledge of the liberation of a man named Cazes who was condemned five or six years ago for having killed his wife in Quebec ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is wholly unfamiliar to me.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is a rumour that he has been liberated. He was sent to penitentiary for life.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Probably we can obtain the information before three o'clock.

The Senate adjourned till three p.m.

SECOND SITTING.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three p.m.

Routine proceedings.

THE RESIGNATION OF MR. HYMAN.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the leader of the House whether the hon. the Minister of Public Works has resigned his portfolio, or otherwise ? We have been told that he has resigned his seat in the House of Commons but, as far as I am aware—at all events I know, this House has not yet been informed whether he has resigned the portfolio of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Any resignation would of course come to the premier. I have not heard of any resignation.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Can my hon. friend tell us how long this state of things is to continue ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot tell. The premier is out of the country and it is impossible to discuss it with him.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed, in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (75) An Act to amend the Railway Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. KERR moved that the following be added as clause 4 :

4. Any such mortgage heretofore given as to which there has been hitherto no Act providing for such deposit, or any assignment of such mortgage or other instrument in any way affecting it, or a sworn copy thereof may be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State of Canada within ninety days after the passing of this Act.

2. Notice of such deposit shall forthwith thereafter be given in the 'Canada Gazette.'

3. No objection shall be taken on the part of any creditor of such company or any purchaser or mortgagee, becoming such creditor or purchaser or mortgagee, subsequent to the passing of this Act, to any such mortgage or other instrument in respect of which such deposit has been made and such notice given, on the ground that the same has not been otherwise deposited, registered or filed under the provisions of any law respecting the deposit, registration or filing of instruments affecting real or personal property.

He said : Clause 2 provides for the case where provision has been made for the deposit in the office of the Secretary of State of a mortgage made by a railway for the purpose of securing bonds, etc. This provides for a case in which there has not been hitherto any Act providing for the deposit. It provides that the mortgage may be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, within 90 days of the passing of the Act, and the remaining provision is that notice is to be given in the 'Canada Gazette,' and it is to stand in the same position, not requiring any other registration than that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What does my hon. friend the Secretary of State say to these clauses ? Have they been considered by the government ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think they were referred to the Minister of Justice. I understood the Minister of Justice approved of them.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I am in a position to state that the other proposed amendments to the Bill were submitted to the Minister of Justice some time ago and approved of by him, and were to have been incorporated in another Bill which has not been introduced. They were overlooked until after this Bill had been passed in the House of Commons. Under these circumstances, I was asked whether I would introduce those amendments here, and I consented to do so; but before consenting I ascertained that the Minister of Justice had approved of them. When they were sent to the Department of Justice to be initialed before I introduced them, they thought that the clause which I have moved as clause 4 should also go in gefore the other amendments.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As I pointed out this morning, the only objection I see to the clauses is to the latter part of them, which have a retroactive effect and they really make no provision for the protection of any rights in litigation. If the government will accept the responsibility of passing these clauses, there should be a clause protecting all rights that have been acquired in the meantime. If that be done, there can be no serious objection to the amendments.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Subsection three of clause 4, which I am asking the House to adopt, is not ex-post facto or retroactive legislation in any sense. It only protects existing rights.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What protection is there to the assignee of a purchaser before the passing of the Act ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—It saves all rights.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Provision is made for a notice, and this notice must be intended for some purpose. The Act is not to have effect before the notice is given.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the object of this clause? Is it to validate something which has been done for which no provision has been made?

Hon. Mr. KERR—No, that is not the object.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I suggest that we substitute the words 'giving such notice' for the words 'passing of this Act.'

Hon. Mr. KERR—Yes, that will cover it.

The clause, as amended, was adopted.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I beg to move that the following be added as clause 5:

5. Any contract evidencing the lease, conditional sale or bailment of rolling stock to a company shall be in writing, duly executed by the parties thereto, and the same or a copy thereof may be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State of Canada, within twenty-one days from the execution thereof, and no contract so deposited need be otherwise deposited, registered or filed under the provisions of any law respecting the deposit, registration or filing of instruments affecting real or personal property, and upon the due execution and deposit of any such lease, conditional sale or bailment of rolling stock as aforesaid, the same shall be valid as against all subsequent purchasers or mortgagees.

2. Notice of such deposit shall forthwith thereafter be given in the 'Canada Gazette.'

This is intended to provide for the ordinary case of rolling stock companies, and applies solely to the rolling stock on the railway, on which bonds are issued as an investment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—This is a valuable addition to the Railway Act, in my opinion. This provides machinery which will enable companies to procure rolling stock.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I ask that clauses 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 should follow clause 2 in the Bill and that clauses 3 and 4 should be numbered 8 and 9

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then the latter part of clause 2, which gives protection to all parties having any litigation rights should be a substantive clause and apply to the whole Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I think we had better leave it as it is.

Hon. Mr. WATSON, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments which were concurred in.

STATUTE LAW IN SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (146) An Act to amend the statute law in its application to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 5,

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am very sorry to see that the government have not made more generous provision for the payment of district judges. It will be impossible—anyway improbable that efficient men can be secured for $2,500 per annum in those two provinces, where living and other expenses are very high. I notice that after three years the salary is to be increased to $3,000 per annum, but either sum is entirely inadequate to ensure getting efficient judges.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the observations made by the hon. senator. It is possible that in another year a change will be made.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—These district judges, in their duties, correspond to the county court judges in Ontario and the maritime provinces.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my hon. friend say when it is probable those judges will be appointed? Will it be immediately after the session?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should hope so. The sooner the administration of justice in Alberta and Saskatchewan is put on a proper basis the better it will be for all parties.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—At present the administration of justice is carried on by the judges and courts established for the territories.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (165) An Act to amend the Customs Act.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2 :

2. Section 38 of the Customs Act, chapter 48 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor :

38. Vessels entering the gut of Annapolis shall be reported and entered at such place as the minister, from time to time, directs.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—At present they are obliged to report at Digby or Annapolis, and this gives the minister a little more latitude if he so directs.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I find this is the same wording that is used in the law we are repealing, but it seems to me our Nova Scotia friends can give a better explanation than we can why it should be called the gut of Annapolis. I think the word basin would be better.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is a matter of indifference to me which you call it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is a matter of internal economy.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The are only two inlets in the world known by that name, the gut of Canso and the gut of Annapolis, and I think it is time that word was dropped.

The clause was agreed to.

On clause 3 :

3. Section 41 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor :

41. Such market value shall be the fair market value of such goods, in the usual and ordinary commercial acceptation of the term, and as sold in the ordinary course of trade : Provided that a discount for cash, for duty purposes, shall not exceed two and one-half per cent and shall not be allowed unless it has been actually allowed and deducted by the exporter on the invoice to the importer.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—This change is made to avoid the friction which has heretofore risen in the case of very small and petty discounts. It allows a limit of two and one-half per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. gentleman is labouring under a misapprehension as to the law on this point, which is very clear. It provides positively and distinctly that there should be nothing allowed for cash discounts, and that has been the law of the land ever since confederation. It is the law which governs the Customs Act of the United States and of every and any other country that I have had an opportunity of studying or seeing. The change made is, to my mind, a dangerous one, small though it may appear, and a moment's reflection will suggest to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce that it is in aid of, and for the benefit of, men who have money and can pay cash for the goods that they purchase in a foreign country, to the disadvantage of the men who have to buy on credit. If my hon. friend will read section 41 of the Customs Act——

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I have it before me.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It makes the provision that the duty to be levied upon the goods purchased shall be the ordinary value of the goods when sold for home consumption. It makes a special provision that no deduction shall be made for cash payments or for royalty which may be paid, or for any other purpose; but that the value for duty must be that at which the goods are sold in the home market. I know that it has been contended for years, because I had it brought under my notice a great many times, that if you purchase for cash and have an invoice to that effect you should be charged duty only upon the amount that you paid for the goods when imported into the country. The presumption of the law, and to my mind the equity of the law, is that every importer shall be placed upon an equal footing. If a man has the money to pay cash and can get a discount of five or ten per cent on the amount of his purchase, he should not be placed in a better position as an importer than the man who has to buy on credit. This Bill proposes to give him an advantage of two and one-half per cent. It is giving the wealthier man an advantage over the poorer man.. The country has nothing whatever to do with the transaction between the seller and the purchaser ; it has to deal simply with the duty imposed upon the goods imported into the country and it makes no difference what discount has been allowed, the same principle should apply to all importations. If it is fair to allow two and one-half per cent discount, why not allow five per cent if that is the discount allowed in the transaction? This is an arbitrary rule which is laid down, and it draws an inequitable distinction between the man who can purchase for cash and the man who has to purchase on credit. One can always illustrate best from his own experience. I purchased in New York a press, and, as I paid cash, got fifteen per cent discount. If this principle had been recognized then, why should the customs authorities allow only two and one-half per cent when the press cost me less ? If any allowance should be made, it should be the full fifteen per cent. This new regulation will produce a great deal of trouble. I have heard it intimated that the policy of the present government has been to allow five per cent. If that principle has been adopted, there is no warrant or power given to the government to make any such allowance. The information given me may not have been correct. I am not sure whether the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has considered this amendment from the standpoint I have put it, or has taken it from the abstract idea that has been advanced over and over again ever since confederation, that the value of goods for duty should be the amount paid for them in the market where they were purchased. My experience is that the granting of any such concession is inequitable and unfair to those who have to purchase on credit.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is a matter on which there could be a great deal of argument, no doubt. My own idea has been that it is rather an advantage to us to be allowed to pay duty on the actual cost of the goods purchased, and, that if we get our goods a little cheaper thereby, small harm arises to the community. However, it is alleged by the customs authorities that this amendment will avoid a very considerable amount of friction in the dealings between importers and the customs authorities. My hon. friend had better let them take the responsibility. If they mal-administer the department—I know the hon. gentleman administered his very well—you can haul them over the coals for it afterwards.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I simply wished to express my views, formed after a good many years' experience. Where friction can arise in this matter under the existing law I cannot understand ; I can understand friction arising by placing this amendment on the statute-book. All you have to say to an importer under the existing law is that the duty shall be imposed on the fair market value of the article in the country from which it was exported. If there is any reduction in price from the market value, then you increase the face of the invoice. The present government have recognized that to a much greater extent than ever the late government did, because in order to protect home industries they have adopted what is known as the 'dumping clause' which adds 15 per cent additional to the invoice price of an article if it has been reduced a certain amount. Under this clause, a man who purchases an article worth $100 and gets a discount for cash, is allowed a valuation of $97.50, while the man who buys it on credit must pay duty on $100. This gives an advantage to that extent to the rich man over his less wealthy competitor. The presumption in the past has been that the government would draw no distinction between the rich importer and the poor importer. My hon. friend says, leave it to the department ; I shall be obliged to leave it to the government. If I thought I could succeed in striking it out of the Bill I would move an amendment to that effect, but looking at the complexion of the House to-day I must be content to express my opinion and let it go.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Whatever the complexion of the Senate may be, it is our duty, when we meet a clause of this kind, to at least understand it for ourselves, before we pass it. I find on reference to section 41 of the existing law, that we are making a very serious change. As the hon. senator from Belleville, who has had a very long experience in administration of the customs, has said, duty is at present collected on the fair market value of the imported goods in the country where they were purchased. And it provides that the fair market value of such goods in the usual and commercial acceptation of the term is at the usual and ordinary credit and not cash value of the goods, except in cases where the articles imported is universally known to be a cash article.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is one article that has always been considered a cash article, and that is sugar. It is the only one.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Now, we propose by this Bill that the duty shall be levied on the fair market value of such goods in the usual and ordinary commercial acceptation of the term, and as sold in the ordinary course of trade. The difference is that in the law as it stands now, the basis is said to be the ordinary credit basis ; but in this Bill it is the usual and ordinary commercial acceptation of the term market value, and it provides there shall be a discount of 2½ per cent for cash. It seems, therefore, in all cases where cash is the basis of the purchase there will be a reduction of 2½ per cent in the valuation. It looks to me as if it will certainly give a very considerable advantage to the merchant who has large capital over the man who is endeavouring to work his way along in the commercial world with less means. I think that the possession of money has a great many advantages without giving the possessor of it an undue advantage, which I fear this is really giving to the men who are able to pay spot cash for what they buy.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have endeavoured to gather from the speech delivered by the hon. gentleman from Hastings, whose views on questions of this kind I respect very much, and I have endeavoured to gather from the hon. gentleman from Marshfield his ideas with regard to this clause. I cannot see that it is any injustice whatever to make the basis for the collection of duty the actual water level, if we might so speak, of the value of the goods. What is the value ? Take the case the hon. gentleman from Hastings has been citing. There a man buys a hundred dollars' worth of goods and he pays cash and gets off for ninety-seven and a half. That is the actual cash value of these goods. Why is the hundred dollars named at all ? The hundred-dollar item is named in view of a sale on credit extending over some months. Why is the two and a half per cent discount allowed ? Because the man, at the moment of purchase, pays for his goods. Is he not entitled to the discount? I think it would be a most absurd thing to say to him : 'Well, you pay cash for your goods, you have the means, and in order to place you on a level with the man that does not pay cash, we insist upon you paying the duty on the hundred dollars in place of ninety-seven and a half.' I think it would be a most absurd and unfair thing. A man has a right to the use and advantages of his own money. My hon. friend says it will give him an advantage over the man who buys on credit Who is responsible for that ? Is the country ? Certainly not. The man that has the money and is prepared to invest is entitled to the advantages that his money gives him. Why should he be deprived of that advantage ? My hon. friend says some other man who has come into competition with him has to pay the one hundred dollars. If he has, he has, like other men, to labour under the disadvantage of not having capital. It may not be his own fault, but because it is not, are you going to deprive the man of a legitimate advantage when he has the money to pay for the goods ? I think it would be the most ridiculous thing, an exceedingly unfair thing. In that case there would be no object in a man of means going into business. A man who is poor but can buy goods on credit has an advantage the same as the man who has means and is prepared to invest and risk his money in business. I think he is right to have all the advantages that his money will give him. He is entitled to that. Commercial life throughout England, and in every country that we know of, recognizes the value of cash, and gives a discount for cash. If you hold to the view expressed by my hon. friend you would actually say that it was dishonest to do that. The hon. gentleman contends that in giving the rich man a discount for cash, you are embarrassing the poor man who cannot pay cash. But you are not. It is the poorer man's disadvantage that he has not the money. The country is not responsible for that, nor is the law responsible. I think that where a man is prepared to pay cash for his goods, he is entitled to the percentage that is ordinarily given, and the government in levying duty on what he imports has no right to impose a duty beyond what he is legitimately and properly called to pay on the actual cash value of the goods that he buys.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend seems to miss the real point. In the law, as it at present stands, the market value is held to be the ordinary credit value; but we are repealing that and providing that the market value shall be the fair market value of such goods in the usual and ordinary commercial acceptation of the term—not the credit price at all. It opens the door for what is usual and ordinary market value, which must be supposed to mean cash or its equivalent, and it opens the door for a reduction of two and one-half per cent on that value.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Is that not the value?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think it is not, because if you are dealing with the credit value, then I understand why you should have two and a half per cent discount for cash; but you are not starting with that. If my hon. friend will read the section he will find the market value shall be the fair value of the goods in the usual and ordinary acceptation of the term. It is repealing the Act we formerly had, which says it shall be the usual and ordinary commercial acceptation of the term at the usual and ordinary credit value. This is allowing a discount of two and a half per cent below the fair market value, which must be cash or its equivalent, and therefore a man who is not getting the discount or is paying interest is put at a disadvantage.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. gentleman does not see the point at all. The ordinary market value of what is nominally a hundred dollars of goods is ninety-seven and one-half. Why is that the ordinary value? The ordinary market business value? Because a man who pays cash for it gets two and a half per cent off. That is the water-level of those goods. The value is not the price that is put on without the discount. If you go to buy the goods you make your arrangements, and the seller says: Our ordinary price is one hundred dollars, but we give two and a half per cent discount for cash. Is not ninety-seven and one-half the actual intrinsic value of that quantity of goods? Why, certainly it is. You cannot call it anything else.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me the hon. gentleman is confounding the question of the equity of imposing a duty, and the price at which a man can buy an article in a foreign country. No one objected to the rich man or the poor man getting his goods with a discount off. I meant to draw the distinction between the man who purchased for cash and another who purchased for credit in a foreign country. My hon. friend argues that because you go into the markets of the world and buy an article for cash and get it cheaper than the man who buys on credit, that he should only be charged duty upon the cost to him of the article. Let me put a case. Suppose he goes to the United States and buys a horse, and the owner is hard up and he must have money, and will sell the horse to him for $75, but he says: If you buy this horse on credit I want a hundred dollars for it,' the ordinary credit value of an article. The man who buys the horse at a hundred dollars gets three months' credit, and he goes to the customs house and is charged twenty per cent duty upon the price of the horse. The gentleman who has the money to pay for it, pays the duty upon the $75, while the man who has bought on credit pays duty on $100. Is that a policy that should be recognized by the government? It is not equitable to the man who is not able to pay spot cash; but in the case of a rich man like my hon. friend, who can go and buy the horse at a lower rate than the other, the government steps in and assists him to the extent of two and a half per cent, while a poor man would have to pay the duty on $100.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I should like to get a hundred dollar horse for $75—it is generally the other way.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The word 'credit' is left out, and it is only opening the door for trouble and annoyance for the Customs Department. The word 'credit' was put in the law for the purpose of enabling the collector and the Minister of Customs to adjudicate upon questions of this kind, upon what is understood to be the fair market value, and the world 'credit' was put in in order to define what the fair market value is in the market, for the reason that 99 per cent of the purchases in the markets of the world are upon credit, 2, 4 or 6 months.

On clause 4:

4. Section 43 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

5. Duty shall not be assessed on less than the invoice value of goods in any case, except on account of reduction in the fair market value of such goods between the time of their purchase by the Canadian importer and their exportation to Canada.

6. The appraiser, or collector acting as appraiser, in estimating the values for duty may disregard trifling fluctuations in market values occurring after the purchase of the goods by the Canadian importer, and may allow a bona fide discount for cash not exceeding two and one-half per cent, when allowed and deducted by the exporter on his invoice.

This is for the purpose of making the clauses so that they will not contradict each other.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It seems to me it may work an injustice if it is left as it is. Supposing you take the case of a standing agreement, which extends over a period of years and a contract has been made under which goods are purchased and imported into this country, and the price has no relation to the question of the selling price, but is based upon the fixed standard, as is often the case, with so much per cent added. It seems to me that in such a case as that the duty ought to be levied upon the actual cost so determined, whether that price is higher or lower than the market selling price in the states, because it is fixed with regard to a condition of things under which the parties are absolutely bound by an agreement from which they cannot escape. It appears to me that in cases of that kind which are not infrequent, extending over a term of years, there should be an exception made, and I suggest that there should be a clause added that would enable the customs authorities to deal with the case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That has more to do with the importation when the market fluctuates.

Hon. Mr. KERR—One time the market may be up and another time it may be down. When it is up, they assess the duty at a high price, and when it is down they are obliged to pay duty on a fixed price which they have got.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No. Before the consolidation of the Act, the law was that in case you order goods, as is very often done, particularly in the iron markets, three or four months in advance. You go to the English markets, and you want fifty tons of rolled iron; you have very often three, four and six months' orders ahead. The law formerly imposed a duty upon the price charged at the time you entered into the agreement; but if the value of the goods raised before they were exported to Canada, then the duty was imposed upon the value of the goods when brought into Canada.

Hon. Mr. KERR—That is not going to be so now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am trying to inform the hon. gentleman what the law was, and how it was changed, but if the value of the goods dropped twenty or fifty per cent from the time of the agreement for purchase and the time for exportation, the duty was still levied upon the price agreed upon at the time the bargain was entered into. A duty was imposed on the higher value when it was raised, and when I had the honour of occupying a position in the Customs Department, I had that law changed so as to place the value for duty upon the article at the time of exportation whether it raised or fell. So that if you made a bargain at $20 a ton for the iron, and if it raised to twenty-five a ton when it was exported, you paid the duty upon twenty-five, and if it fell to fifteen, then you paid the duty upon fifteen. Let me meet the other point of the bargain extending over years. I will give an instance that comes to my mind so that the hon. gentleman will understand it. In the importation of oilcloth rolls, you go to the United States and the merchant will say to you: 'If you take five hundred rolls during the year, order it as you please, you shall have a certain discount. If you take only three hundred rolls, you shall have so much discount, and if your purchases do not come up to the full number, then you have to pay so much more.' A merchant of Montreal raised a great row because we insisted upon his paying upon the ordinary market price, if he bought only ten rolls. When the deputation came up, I pointed out the difficulties. For every merchant in Montreal, and every wholesaler in every part of the world, who was sending oil cloth into Canada, we would have to open a special account and see how much he purchased during the whole year. As soon as the difficulties were pointed out, Mr. Cleghorn, a large importer, said to me: 'Is that the fact?' And I said 'Yes, that is the fact.' And he said 'If I had known that, I would never have come here.' No man, except one who has been administering the customs for a number of years, can possibly comprehend the many intricate questions that are constantly arising in carrying out the law, and this change is going to multiply these difficulties tenfold.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Take the hon. gentleman's illustration: suppose that an establishment buys all its oilcloth from one manufacturer and is bound to do so, and cannot buy from another, under an agreement. Supposing his contract is: 'I am to buy and you are to sell to me at cost of manufacture plus twenty per cent advance.' Under the first clause of this Bill, if the selling price in the country went up the man would have to pay not merely upon the price plus twenty per cent of the cost of manufacture, but he would have to pay on the selling price on the market. If it went down below what twenty per cent advance on cost would be, and below the cost of manufacture, for the sake of argument, he would not get the benefit of that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, he would.

Hon. Mr. KERR—No, because he is obliged to pay the higher price and is obliged to invoice according to the price he pays.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The customs pays no respect to the bargains made with the manufacturer. It is the duty of the appraiser to ascertain the market value of the goods in the country from which the article is exported.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I think that is unfair.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman had the administration of the law, he would not think so. The German manufacturers, in order to evade the Customs Act, have agents in Canada and export goods from Germany to Montreal invoiced at the actual cost of the manufacture with 10 per cent added. Ought that to be the value at which the duty should be imposed? Certainly not, because if the hon. gentleman were to buy the goods in Germany he would have to pay probably 20 or 30 per cent over their cost. You have then simply to ask the question: What was the value of these goods at the time of the exportation?

The clause was allowed to stand.

On clause 8:

8. Section 99 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

5. Every person who desires to export any article manufactured in Canada which is subject to a bounty from the government of Canada when for home consumption and not for exportation, including steel blooms and steel billets made in Canada, shall file his written application with the collector at the nearest custom house, for permission to export the said article. Such application shall be accompanied by the affidavit of a person having a knowledge of the facts, setting forth and describing the articles proposed to be exported, and establishing to the satisfaction of the collector that bounty has not been paid and will not be claimed on or in respect of the said described articles, or if bounty has been paid thereon, or in respect therof, that it has been refunded to the government; whereupon the collector may grant his permission for the exportation of the said described articles. If any such articles are laden in any railway carriage or other vehicle or vessel, for the purpose of being exported, without the permission of the collector as aforesaid they shall be seized and forfeited.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The object of that is, that where bounties are granted in the case of articles for home consumption, and not intended for exportation, the manufacturers shall not be allowed to claim the bounties when they export the goods.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There can be no justice in this clause unless it be for the purpose of preventing the exportation of articles which have been manufactured for home consumption, and on which a drawback has already been paid, to the manufacturer upon material entering into the article manufactured. Is it not intended to meet the case of a manufacturer who imports an article upon which he has received a drawback, on the presumption that it was going into home consumption, and has also received a drawback upon some article which had been used in the manufacture of an article for exportation? Otherwise it would be worse than absurd to say that a manufacturer should not be permitted to export an article simply because it had been manufactured for home consumption and on which he had received a drawback.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Received a bounty.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What I understand to be intended by this clause is to meet this case; we will suppose that a party was undertaking to export several thousand tons of iron to England, on which he had received a bounty. We do not want to give to the English merchants or anybody else the benefit of cheap iron to enable them to compete with iron subsidized out of our treasury for our own trade. The bounties are given to encourage the production of that article for our own domestic market, and if parties who have received the bounty undertake to export the bounty fed iron, they must return the bounty.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is not that diametrically opposed to the law as it has been and it still is? If an article be imported for the purpose of being used in the manufacture of a product for export, then you may say that the purchaser in the foreign market has the advantage of that drawback. The same principle would apply. What difference does it make? If by the granting of a bounty for the production of an article in this country, you give employment to the artisans and labourers of Canada and the market in the country is overstocked with that article, is it not carrying out the principle that has been adopted, by giving the drawback on articles manufactured for export. I am very sorry that my hon. friend from Toronto, who is connected with the Massey-Harris Company, is not here. In discussing this question with me a few days ago he said, after adopting the principle of granting a drawback of 99 per cent of the duty paid on articles used in the manufacture of machines exported, the manufacturers in this country were enabled to export to the extent, since that practice has been in existence, of $40,000,000.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That is reasonable enough.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He said if it had not been for this drawback they would never have been able to enter foreign markets and compete with United States manufacturers. Now you grant a bounty providing the article is used for home consumption. Why not give that bounty on manufactured articles exported? If it enabled the manufacturer to export a million dollars' worth of goods, that would mean giving so much more employment to our own people.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I have very small belief in either bounties or protective measures. I believe in neither one nor the other, but it is not advisable to supply foreign markets with bounty fed iron.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has answered the question which I had intended to ask him when the Bill concerning bounties on steel and iron came up.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Allow me to mention a case which, perhaps, will bring out the point touched by this clause better than anything else. At the present time the United States imposes an export duty upon manila. This will apply in the same way.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Now in order to place our manufacturers of binder twine upon a basis that they can manufacture and place their produce in the hands of the Canadian farmer as cheap as it is in the hands of the United States farmer, the government grant a certain allowance on the importation of manila. It comes in here and is manufactured into twine. Now would it be justice to the Canadian who contributes to the paying of that bounty that that twine should be exported to the United States for sale there and give them the advantage of it, while we allow the importer a bounty upon it? I do not think it would.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 4,

The CHAIRMAN—This is the clause which was allowed to stand over. I am informed by the hon. senator from Toronto that he wishes to withdraw his proposed amendment.

The amendment was withdrawn and the clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BAKER, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time, and passed on a division.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (166) An Act to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2:

2. No such advances shall be made unless the plans, specifications and estimates for the works to be performed by the corporation and on which the money so to be advanced is to be expended have first been submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the committee is entitled to some further explanation of this Bill than they have had, and understand that the Speaker is in a position to make an explanation.

The SPEAKER—A question was asked as to the amount of the commission's liabilities to the government. The debt of the Harbour Commission of Montreal so far is $7,010,000, which has been advanced out of loans to the amount of $8,000,000 at their disposal, leaving a balance of $999,000, besides the $3,000,000 appropriated under this Bill, at their disposal to enable them to finish the terminal facilities at Montreal for the increasing trade of the port.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—What is the nature of the improvements?

The SPEAKER—Large steel sheds are being built, and it is hoped that by the end of this season the work will be nearly completed.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Who audits the accounts?

The SPEAKER—Money is advanced on reports made and statements filed by the Harbour Commissioners with the Finance Minister. The sheds are double decked, and it is hoped that the tracks will be raised in order to free the wharfs of all railway tracks and utilize the ground floor mainly for the local traffic.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Do the Harbour Commissioners render an account of the expenditure to the government?

The SPEAKER—They publish annual statements and they also account to the Department of Marine. Of course, the expenditure is controlled by the Auditor General.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Do they produce vouchers for all expenditures?

The SPEAKER—Yes, all vouchers must be filed.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Here we are voting away millions of money with scarcely a quorum. Having said that, I want to congratulate the probable successor of the Secretary of State for the lucid explanations he has given of this Bill. We are under deep obligation to him for the information he has supplied.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was read the third time and passed.

SURVEYS OF DOMINION LANDS ACT REPEAL BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (172) An Act to repeal the Act of the present session intituled : An Act respecting the Surveys of the Public Lands of the Dominion and the Surveyors entitled to make such surveys.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This I presume is the result of too rapid legislation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. senator from Halifax raised the point that the curt way in which the repeal was expressed did not revive the portions of the Dominion Lands Act that would have been repealed had the Act gone through, and now to remove any doubt on the subject it is proposed to add these words :

And such portions of the Dominion Lands Act as may have been repealed or altered by the Act had not been passed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I looked through the Act which had been passed very carefully, and did not find a single line about repeal in it. This makes it more certain.

The amendment was adopted.

The clause, as amended, was adopted.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER, from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

IRON AND STEEL BOUNTIES BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved the second reading of Bill (173) An Act respecting the bounties on iron and steel made in Canada.

He said : I might explain to hon. gentlemen opposite, that the object of this Bill is two fold. In the first place, the bounties which would have expired in 1908 are extended on a reduced scale up to 1910. In the second place, provision is made for granting bounties on any iron which may be manufactured by the use of electricity under the new processes, as to which several experiments are being made.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my right hon. friend says what the subclause of section E means ? It is manifestly a mistake. It reads :

2. No bounty shall be paid under the foregoing provisions in respect of iron or steel made in Canada by electric process after the thirty-first day of December, one thousand nine hundred and eight.

And immediately preceding, that provision is made to extend these bounties until 1910. However, we can rectify that in committee.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am not quite sure whether that requires to be rectified. I am rather inclined to think that it refers to iron and steel which is manufactured under clause 1 by that process. After December 31, 1908, this would come under the provisions of clause 2.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But the table immediately preceding that section graduates the payments of bounties from 1907 to 1910.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That is quite true. We will see about that when we go into committee.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We can amend it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We May as well accept it holus bolus. My hon. friend will permit me to congratulate him, whether it is sudden conversion or not. We read of the sudden conversion of St. Paul, but I am inclined to think that that was an honest conversion. I have very grave doubts as to the honesty of the conversion of my hon. friend opposite when he takes charge of a Bill like this, the principle of which he had denounced most vigorously. We all know that he has a marvellous power to use adjectives in connection with the granting of bounties of this character, and as the system was inaugurated by the government in which I had a certain amount of responsibility, whether his conversion be a case of necessity or whether it be honest or not I am not prepared to say, but I am desirous of congratulating him on the fact that he has renounced the opinions in regard to reform which he has held in the past, or if he has not reformed, he has accepted the policy of the opposition. I have heard about political exigencies, and I am rather inclined to think that my hon. friend has been converted under such conditions.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—While I give my hon. friend credit for im-puting the best motives, still he is a little mistaken on one point. I always thought that, of the two, though I liked neither of them, bounties were better than protection, for the reason that you knew the extent of the robberies under the bounty system, whereas you did not know their extent under protection.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think I have a tolerably good memory on these matters. The denunciation of the bounty system by the hon. gentleman was because money was taken out of the pockets of those who did not use the article, for the benefit of the men who manufactured it; while we contended that under the customs protective duty, that only the man who used the article paid the duty, and that he had the advantage of it. I am rather inclined to think that my hon. friend has forgotten the arguments he used.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No, I recollect perfectly.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I move that the Bill be read at the table.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In reference to the address in regard to the subsidies, objection was taken in the Commons, and I think the objection was sustained by the Speaker, that the address which was formerly passed by that House did not go through the regular process of the four stages, first and second readings, committee and third reading. Is there any rule by which we can dispense with the necessity for going into committee? I do not use it as an objection, but I think we had better——

The SPEAKER—The practice has not been the same in the Senate as in the House of Commons. It has been the practice here to dispense with the committee stage in dealing with money Bills.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that, but have we any authority for doing it under the rules? I suggest that we suspend the rule and go into committee.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I move the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—With regard to subsection 2 of clause 1, I think that the intention is to stop paying bounty under the first clause in regard to iron manufactured by electricity. At the present time there is a great deal being done in the way of electrical smelting. Probably before the end of this year, there may be some electrical smelting done in this country, and the idea is that the ore electrically smelted cannot receive the bounty under the first clause or under the second clause. I should like to know from the minister whether, if the ore is electrically smelted before the 31st December, 1908, the company so smelting it would be able to claim under the first clause. They certainly cannot claim that on the second clause.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I can only give my hon. friend my opinion, and my opinion is that they would be able to claim it, but of course that is a point on which I might have to take the opinion of the Minister of Justice. As I read it, there is no restriction in clause 1 as to how the pig iron is to be manufactured from the ore. It may be manufactured, I take it, by any conceivable process, and would be entitled up to the date of the 31st of December, 1908, to equal bounties. After that it comes under clause 2, the difference being that pig iron manufactured by electrical process in 1909, as the House will observe, gets a much higher bounty under clause 2 than it would if it continued under clause 1. For example, in the case of iron manufactured from foreign ore, there is only a bounty of 70 cents per ton, in 1909, in the ordinary case, and in the cases of pig iron manufactured from foreign ore, there is a bounty of $1.65. I think the bounties in the first case he mentioned would be paid under the 1st clause.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

BINDER TWINE BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee on the Whole on Bill (174) An Act respecting the manufacture of binder twine in Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I observe that the words binder twine are not mentioned in the first clause from the beginning to the end. It refers exclusively to cordage. I think a difficulty might arise as to whether binder twine could be called cordage, or cordage binder twine. I was looking at one or two dictionaries after reading this Bill, to see whether the word cordage could be twisted into binder twine, or binder twine into cordage. It would not delay the Bill at all, and it would avoid difficulty, if the title were made to read 'Cordage or binder twine in Canada,' because this gives power to pay the drawback upon all cordage manufactured from manila fibre. If you would add the words in the title 'cordage or binder twine' and then add the words 'or binder twine' after the word 'cordage' in the seventh line, and 'binder twine' after the word 'cordage' in the thirteenth line, and also in the last line, it would place it beyond any doubt or any carping hereafter.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Then I move that it be amended by inserting the words suggested by the hon. gentleman from Hastings.

The CHAIRMAN—The word 'cordage' applies to rope as well as twine.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that.

The amendment was adopted.

On clause 1:

1. The Act respecting the manufacture of binder twine in Canada, chapter 5 of the statutes of 1903, is amended by inserting the following section immediately after section 1:

1A. The Governor in Council may authorize the payment to any corporation, firm, or person, manufacturing cordage in Canada from manila fibre, of a bounty equal to the amount paid as export duty in the Philippine Islands on manila fibre produced on those islands and used in the manufacture of cordage in Canada, —the said bounty to be payable only in respect of manila cordage manufactured in Canada on and after the first day of January, one thousand nine hundred and seven: Provided, however, that the bounty shall not exceed three-eights of one per cent per pound on the manila fibre so used in the manufacture of cordage.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—In the latter part of this clause the expression should be 'three-eighths of one cent per pound' not one per cent. So that that will be corrected.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was in error in the suggestion I made in regard to the title. In looking at the statute I find that chapter 5 is intituled 'An Act respecting the manufacture of binder twine in Canada,' and the Bill which is before us at the present moment is extending it to the manufacture of cordage. So that the Bill as it came before us is quite correct.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am not quite sure that my hon. friend was not right in the first suggestion. Probably he was quite correct. In chapter 5, the words are 'manufacture of binder twine.' The Bill which has been sent from the Commons is for the purpose of manufacturing cordage. They intend to extend the privilege, I judge, to cordage. It would not do to strike out cordage and it possibly may not do to leave in binder twine.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend will see that section 5 is not repealed. The proposition now is to extend the bounty to cordage. The bounty on binder twine is provided for by the Act on the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not undertake to say who is right or who is wrong, but I do not think this House has a right to undertake to amend a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I understand from the Minister of Customs that they intend to extend the bounty to cordage. The Act in relation to binder twine is not touched at all. There is no doubt the error should be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN—It is clearly a clerical error and should be corrected.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If we make the amendment, we can send back the Bill as amended to the House of Commons, and if it is really a clerical error, they can accept the amendment.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—But have we the right to amend the Bill?

The SPEAKER—It is a clerical error, and unless it increases the charge we can make the amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not see why we should not send it back as the hon. member from Halifax suggested, and let the Commons deal with it as they please. On one occasion we struck out a clause in the money Bill referring to the revenue and expenditure of the country. His Honour the Speaker, at that time, took a very active part in it, and the Commons accepted the amendment.

The SPEAKER—The precedent cited was in the nature of reducing the charge on the people.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON, from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment, which was concurred in on a division.

The Bill was then read a third time, and passed.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (171) An Act to amend the Exchequer Court Act. He said : The object of this Bill is to give the registrar, Mr. Audet, of the Exchequer Court, a better standing. It is said that the judge of the court occasionally refers subjects to him for judicial decision and that, therefore, he ought to be on a higher footing. The Bill fixed the maximum salary at $3,000.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill passed through its final stages under suspension of the rules.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (175) An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act. He said : This is a Bill of one clause, the object being to take out of the operations of the Canadian Shipping Act, pleasure yachts and boats owned by private individuals that are not run for hire.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill passed through all its stages under a suspension of the rules.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS' BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (159) An Act to increase the borrowing powers of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—An inquiry was made when we were in committee before as to the debt of the harbour commissioners, and a telegram was sent asking for the particulars. We have not yet received a reply. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that in the Bill there is a reference to some $200,000 which was the balance of a larger sum that was authorized under the Act passed in 1899. The sum advanced before the $200,000 was $150,000, so that would amount to $350,000. To that it is proposed to add in this Bill $800,000.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There ought to be some further explanation with reference to these larger sums which are being granted to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners. As to Montreal, we were told that the interest was paid regularly. I should like to know whether the interest on the Quebec Harbour Commissioners' loan is paid ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those bonds of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners are sold on the market. Canada does not grant the money or guarantee the bonds. We stand aside and allow these bonds to be a lien on whatever property the commissioners have, but we do not guarantee it in any way.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My recollection is that interest was paid just as long as the capital lasted, and then it ceased.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There are large sums advanced for which I understand Canada is liable.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no liability here. They are not our bonds and we do not guarantee them.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I understood the hon. Secretary of State to say that a large sum of money had been advanced by the government of Canada, on which no interest had been paid, and by this Bill they simply set aside the claim of the government for the money advanced ; and this money that is being legislated for is to be procured by the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec from the sale of their bonds.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not think the hon. Secretary of State went so far as to state that.

The SPEAKER—Until the government is ready to make Quebec a national port, we must confide to the commissioners the making of the necessary expenditures and improvements at that port.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I understand it, a very considerable debt has already been incurred to the government of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is correct.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I understand further, the legislation which is now before us to postpone the claim of Canada on the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec by this new loan which is hoped to be made by somebody else. There is this circumstance that, as far as I can make out, for all the great expenditure which has taken place at the port of Quebec there is very little to show. The commerce of the port is not increasing very much, and I notice from another motion which came before us that the graving dock at Quebec, on which large sums of public money has been spent, is found to be unsuited for the purpose. I must say this with respect to the graving dock, that unless large ships make a practice of trying to go into the graving dock of Quebec, there does not seem to be any substantial reason for spending a large amount of money on it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill does not set aside the debt owing to Canada. That was set aside many years ago—ten or fifteen years ago. A reorganization took place, and they obtained authority from the parliament of Canada to issue their own bonds. Canada agreeing that the debt from Quebec should come in subsequent to the limited issue that was then authorized. This is part of that limited issue. They first got $150,000, then $200,000 and now $800,000, a total of $1,150,000. We assume no responsibility in regard to this issue. Quebec gets the best value it can for the bonds in the open market. Nobody is taken in by it. The financial position of Quebec is well understood; there is no deception to anybody.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the additional power given under this Bill place the bondholders of the first $200,000 in a worse position than if the additional debt had not been incurred? As I understand, the bondholders under this Bill are to be in the same position as the bondholders representing the first $200,000. The $200,000 might be a fair and safe investment—the earnings of the harbour might be sufficient to pay interest on the bonds; but the issuing of $800,000 more might reduce the interest paying power of the commissioners, and the holders of the first $200,000 bonds might be put at a disadvantage. Have the holders of the $200,000 bonds agreed to this or do they know anything about it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is just the question we asked the harbour commissioners by wire to-day, but we have not had an answer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it advisable, under the circumstances, to proceed with this Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know about that, because we are taking away the rights of the parties holding the $200,000 bonds; we are doing an injustice, unless it is done with their consent.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I cannot see how this Bill interferes with the standing of those holding the bonds for which we granted a privilege before. By this Bill the government of Canada is taking a second place on an additional issue of $800,000, but the Bill does not touch the issue that has already been made under previous legislation. The debt of the harbour of Quebec will stand in this way: the legislation under which the $350,000 was previously granted, will virtually stand as a first lien and this $800,000 will come next. We are not interfering with the previous legislation. We are only legislating now to put the $800,000 ahead of what is due the government.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

JUDGES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (177) An Act to amend the Judges Act. He said: This is simply putting the judges of Manitoba on a par with the judges of other provinces in regard to salaries.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill passed through all its stages under a suspension of the rules.

At six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Before the Orders of the day are called, I desire to correct a mistake which my hon. friend from Calgary made with reference to one of the most important institutions in this country the Royal Military College. He referred to it as an educational institution that was not capable of supplying gentlemen to enter the position of mining engineers, because graduates from it were not qualified as the graduates of universities were, and that a graduate of the Military College would be only on a par with a matriculant of our universities. There could be no greater mistake than that. This Royal Military College is one of the finest institutions for qualifying a student to be an educated gentleman, that there is on this continent. I think it is a great boon to the people of Canada to have an institution of this kind to which they can send their sons. It is not snobbish in any way, the graduates are qualified to act in a gentlemanly manner, and all this talk to the contrary is absurd. If my statement is doubted I have here the calendar of the McGill University Montreal, and I have here also the pamphlet, a poor affair, which is sent out to people who wish to have their children enter the Military College. When the college was started, the course was for four years, now it is three; buf in those three years the following subjects are taught:—The first year commences with the instructions for the classes in mathematics and mechanics, geometrical drawings, military engineering, military topography, military drill, artillery drill, gymnastics, revolver practice and the workshop. This is the first year course, so that you can see the variety of subjects taught. There is no Greek taught in the school and little Latin, but there is a first-class French course.

The course for the second year includes mathematics and mechanics, geometrical drawing, military engineering, &c. In this there are physics, chemistry and reconnaissance, civil surveying, civil engineering, English and French. The last course includes infantry, artillery and signaling, equitation gymnastics, fencing and bayonet drill, swimming, rifle practice, revolver practice, work in carpenter shops. The tendency in this school is not so much towards classics or literature as it is towards technical work. Some of the graduates have gone into the study of law and some of them into medicine, and I will mention a few familiar names of graduates who have carried world-wide reputations. Sir Percy Girouard was one, and the son of Sir Henri Joli is another, who worked up to high positions in the imperial service. Then there is Major Nanton, who has a position in India as an engineer, Dobell and many others. There are several of the Military College graduates holding responsible positions on our railways at home and abroad, and I never knew of any of the graduates who were in any way defective. Hon. gentlemen might go away with the impression that this school was deficient in its teachings and in the subjects taught. Not only is a man given a perfect education, so far as the scholastic part of it is concerned, but morally and physically he is looked after in every respect, and a graduate from that college having done his duty faithfully in it is a gentleman in every respect. He can swim well, write well, handle himself well in boxing and other gymnastics, and has all the mental and physical attributes of a first-class man. To show how far from the truth the assertion of my hon. friend is, the Benchers of the Law Society of Ontario, in convocation assembled, enacted as follows in 1901:

1. The cadet of the Royal Military College of Canada who has received his diploma of graduation shall be entitled to be admitted on the books of the Law Society as a student at law or articled clerk on and subject to the same terms and conditions as a graduate in the Faculty of Arts is or shall be for the time being entitled to admission thereon.

Then the Dominion Lands Act, 49 Vic., cap. 54, section 111, provides as follows:

Every graduate in surveying of the Royal Military College of Canada, and every person who has followed a regular course of study in all the branches of education required by this Act for admission as a Dominion Land Surveyor, through the regular sessions for at least two years in any college or university where a complete course of theoretical and practical instruction in surveying is organized, and who has thereupon received from such college or university a diploma as civil engineer, shall be exempt from serving three years as aforesaid, and shall be entitled to exemption after one year's service under articles with a Dominion land surveyor (at least six months of which service has been in the field,) on producing the affidavit required by the next preceding clause as to such service ; but it shall rest with the board to decide whether the course of instruction in such college or university is that required by this clause. (Revised statutes of Canada, 1886. Volume I.)

This proves as hon. gentlemen will see, that the graduates of no university in Canada or a brand, has any superior privileges or advantages granted to them than the graduates of the military college at Kingston.

INCREASED SUBSIDIES TO THE PROVINCES.

MOTION.

The Order of the Day being called.

Consideration of the message from the House of Commons, informing the Senate that they have passed an address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, humbly representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, to be made by Canada to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their governments and legislatures ; and requesting the Senate to unite with the House of Commons in the said address, by filling up the blank therein with the words 'Senate and.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—For the past twenty years, hon. gentlemen will remember that there has been an agitation in the provinces for increased subsidies. A meeting of the premiers and members of the governments of the different provinces met in Quebec in 1897. Since then they have had another meeting six or eight weeks ago in Ottawa. That meeting embraced the representatives of all the provinces. It was thought and believed that one of the provinces at least would not have taken part in this conference, because it did not need an additional subsidy. I allude to the province of Ontario. That province is probably one of the richest in the world. Its revenue for the past year has been a little over seven million dollars. It is occupied by a people among whom wealth is pretty evenly distributed. An illustration of that may be given by a circumstance which occurred recently. Mr. Matheson, the provincial treasurer, a little over a year ago undertook to float a loan in England. The loan was, I think based on three and one-half per cent. He did not succeed. He came back and within the last six or eight weeks a loan of $1,000,000 was placed on the Canadian market at three per cent was taken up by the people of Ontario, to the great surprise of the capitalists of Wall Street and London. No stronger evidence can be offered of the fact that Ontario is an exceptionally rich country. It has vast areas of timber left that are yet under the control of the Crown. It has, as hon. gentlemen know, mines of very great value and immense water-powers. All those are sources of great wealth, wholly apart from the fact that the province is rich so far as horticulture and agriculture are concerned. The fruits of Ontario are of excellent quality, and from year to year the amount that is being produced is increasing. The quantity is limited only by the opportunities of sending it abroad. I saw a statement last year of the enormous quantity of fruit that had simply to be abandoned because it could not be gathered and transported to market. The hogs were turned in and the finest fruit in the world was simply used to make pork. Unfortunately, it is not the same with all the provinces. They all have resources which are equivalent to those of Ontario, but they have been sadly mismanaged.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Oh, no, not all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend says not all of them; Nova Scotia may be an exception. It is probably more carefully managed than the other provinces. The province of Quebec, fifty years ago, possessed a great natural wealth in its forest, and had the forestry laws of Quebec been administered on anything like a fair basis that province would not be in debt to the extent of twenty of twenty-two million dollars to-day. Very many fortunes were made out of the forests of Quebec and many of those who obtained their wealth in that way went to reside in London. New Brunswick was also extremely wealthy in timber, but it simply wasted its forests which had they been preserved till to-day, would be worth more than the mines of California ever turned out. They thought their forests were inexhaustible, and they disposed of their timber on the very foolish basis of putting up their limits to auction every year. The purchasers of those limits, not being sure of the tenure of their limits for more than one year, took the cream of everything and left the inflammable portions in the woods and fires swept more than half of the forest wealth of New Brunswick. I can remember well when I was a boy hearing of the great fires on the Miramichi, the smoke from which was carried up the St. Lawrence as far as Prescott. Up to the time of confederation it was supposed that a basis of settlement was made finally with the provinces. That turned out to be a fallacy. Nova Scotia had not been long in the union until better terms were demanded and granted. On several occasions increases have been made in the provincial allowances. Nova Scotia got for ten years after confederation a subsidy of $82,698 and New Brunswick, $63,700. Many other increases were granted not only to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, but to British Columbia and Prince Edward Island. By chapter 8 of 51 Victoria, a sum of $20,000 per annum, payable half yearly in advance, was given to Prince Edward Island and a further advance in 1901 of $30,000 a year which was to be in full of all claims for non-fulfilment of the terms of union in respect to maintaining steam communication between the island and the mainland. My hon. friend from Marshfield smiles, but, certainly we had a representative of Prince Edward Island then at the board. Sir Louis Davies was the representative of Prince Edward Island at the time and the argument that Prince Edward Island was not represented is not correct.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does my hon. friend speak of that as a final settlement ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The provincial government never looked upon it as final.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is the statute which says it is. There was no repudiation of that; they took the money and gave a receipt in full settlement of all claims on account of non-fulfilment of the terms of union as respects steam communication. Probably it would be more interesting if I come down to recent events. I need not go into the historical parts of it. Hon. gentlemen are as familiar with them as I am myself. At the recent conference, where all the provinces were represented, they finally all agreed except one province, British Columbia. It was represented that the cost of governing the Pacific province was considerably in excess of the cost of governing any other province, arguing that the territory was large and broken, and the cost of administration seemed to be higher for many reasons which I need not now detail. A sum of $100,000 a year extra was agreed to by the members of the conference, and offered to British Columbia for a period of ten years; but British Columbia declined to accept it and protested against the conclusions reached by the conference. The legislature authorized Mr. McBride to go to London and lay the case of British Columbia before the imperial government in the hope that his proposition might be entertained, which was to refer the claims of British Columbia to arbitration. It was recognized that no fairer tribunal could have been found than the premiers of all the provinces who were then present, and who discussed the questions and thoroughly understood the pros and cons, and were, therefore, in a position to pass on whether the demand of British Columbia were reasonable or not. Therefore it was held that so far as the conference was concerned that offer was final. I am not now going to discuss British Columbia; I have done so before. That province is one of the richest parts of the world. It has as fine forests of timber as are to be found on the face of the globe and possesses untold wealth in the bowels of the earth. It has in many parts of it magnificent opportunities for growing as fine fruit as can be produced in California. The fact that it is a very rich country has made it extravagant—I do not hesitate to say so. If you compare the sums paid for all services in British Columbia you will find them higher, I think, than in any other part of the world. As a very recent illustration of that, the papers announce that a workingman in a mine can make $5 to $7 a day. I ask where common labour can rank anywhere within 50 per cent of that. The men who are new to it get $2.50 to $3 a day and so on according to the standard of labour engaged in the mines. A daughter of mine living in British Columbia told me that she had to pay her servant girl $25 a month. Wages have reached a very high level, away above what is reasonable, and it will come down. I quite admit that they pay more per head to the customs and inland revenue of the country than the population of the older provinces do, because they are a consuming population. They have the money to spend and they spend it, but it does not follow that if they placed a proper value on money they could not live within their revenue. I am under the impression that municipal institutions do not exist in British Columbia to the extent they do here; that as a rule in school districts, the people do not pay rates for the schools; that the government contribute to the maintenance of the schools. I would ask my hon. friend from Victoria if I am right in that? The people themselves contribute yearly certain rates for what are called local improvements for schools.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD, (B. C.)—Yes, in the towns.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The school teacher in the rural parts is paid by the government.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—They are partly paid—a small share by the province and a larger share by the cities and municipalities.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Take Victoria and Vancouver?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD, (B. C.)—Formerly the provincial governments paid the whole, but now they do not do it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am right in the main, that they have not the local assessment that we have in the other parts of the Dominion; that the government, from its resources, contributes more largely to what we call the municipal arrangement in the other provinces. They have not the municipal organizations to the extent that we have here, and, therefore, I think that British Columbia ought to set itself in order, live on the same plane as other parts of the Dominion. The very fact that copper coin is not current on the coast is an illustration that it is on a high financial basis. You can buy nothing less than five cents.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD, (B. C.)—You never see a copper coin out there.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is one of the illustrations. What other country is there in the world where you cannot buy something for a penny. There are portions in the world where a man can buy a farthing's worth.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The tenth of a farthing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, but I am not speaking of China. We know what a penny will do in Great Britain, and the eastern provinces of Canada, and therefore it is simply a confirmation of the argument I have used, that British Columbia from its very wealth has become extravagant, because it has more wealth, man for man than any other part of the world that I know of, and it has, in addition to that a new source of wealth that is now coming in, and in the next twenty-five years will have a marked influence on the development of the industries of the province. I refer to electricity. There is nothing that will develop electricity so cheaply as the mountain streams with which British Columbia abounds. You cannot name a source of wealth natural to a country that British Columbia does not possess. However, that is beside the mark. They have chosen to protest against the subsidy decided on and Mr. McBride was here a day or two ago for that purpose. I gave him a letter recommending him to the consideration of the authorities in England and he will immediately have to call on the colonial office and have his case properly presented. The basis of the appeal is on the lines that I have indicated, that the expenses of living are greater, and that British Columbia contributes more per capita to the revenues of this country than any other part of the Dominion. I am quite prepared to concede that. Coming back to the practical part, let us see what the conference really agreed to. The basis laid down in the address we have under consideration as follows :

|---|---|
| (a) Where the population of the province is under 150,000 | $ 100,000 |
| (b) Where the population of the province is 150,000, but does not exceed 200,000 | 150,000 |
| (c) Where the population of the province is 200,000, but does not exceed 400,000 | 180,000 |
| (d) Where the population of the province is 400,000, but does not exceed 800,000 | 190,000 |
| (e) Where the population of the province is 800,000, but does not exceed 1,500,000 | 220,000 |
| (f) Where the population of the province exceeds 1,500,000 | 240,000 |

B. Instead of an annual grant per head of population now allowed, the annual payment hereafter be at the same rate of eighty cents per head, but on the population of each province, as ascertained from time to time by the last decennial census ; (or, in the case of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, respectively, by the last quinquennial census or statutory estimate), until such population exceeds 2,500,000, and at the rate of sixty cents per head for so much of said population as may exceed 2,500,000.

Those words are taken from the constitution of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. As the population was increasing more rapidly in those areas, parliament thought fit they should have a quinquennial census, and then, if the population came up to a certain figure, they might also have a count between the quinquennial, taking an estimate, not an actual census, at every two years and one-half. The eighty cents per head will go to each province until the population exceeds 2,500,000, and then at the rate of 60 cents per head for so much of the population as will exceed two and a half million.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—That will make a great difference to Ontario and Quebec.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of course it will. I have a statement here of what the allowances will be at the present time. Ontario is drawing $1,996,000. Under the new terms Ontario will draw $2,784,000, the increase being $789,000, something over three quarters of a million. In Quebec the increase will be from $959,000 to $1,558,000, being an increase of practically $600,000. In the case of Nova Scotia there will be an increase of $177,000. In New Brunswick an increase of $130,000. Prince Edward Island, an increase of $70,000. In the last three years Prince Edward Island had an increase of $100,000.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Did the hon. gentleman say for the last three years ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes in the last three or four years, the increases added together make $100,000. I have no desire to take from Prince Edward Island anything we can fairly give to them. I quite recognize the hon. gentleman's position, but I think they could not be in a better position than they are. Let me ask my hon. friend could the Island keep up the railway ? That railway was built specially for the Island. It costs about $1 a head of the population to operate the railway, apart from any other expense.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What does the hon. gentleman mean by that ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I mean the cost is about $90,000 a year for keeping up the railway.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—A deficit ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was the amount the last time I looked at the figures.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is the expense.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, the cost. It is not paying the interest. The last time I looked at it, a year and a half ago, it was $84,000.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And is that in addition to the interest Canada pays ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman is wrong. Canada does not pay one cent of interest on the original cost of the Prince Edward Island Railway. Prince Edward Island is charged with every dollar of it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Oh.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I expected the hon. gentleman to say that, because he does not know any better.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think my hon. friend is joking ; he is not serious in that statement. Manitoba receives an increase of $130,000. Saskatchewan an increase of $130,000 ; Alberta, $100,000 ; British Columbia, $265,000, an increase from $177,000 to $392,000.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—On what basis is the increase to Alberta and Saskatchewan given? Because those provinces were liberally dealt with and got more than they were entitled to two years ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This advance is on the same basis, but I admit that it is very liberal, because we granted them their constitution only two years ago and in that constitution I think our terms were extremely liberal.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Yes, extremely liberal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We found the expenses were heavy there. They had no revenue. They may find gas, coal or some other resources, but apparently they had no sources of revenue. They had not land and timber wealth and therefore we were probably more liberal to them. We recognized also that population was flowing in very rapidly, and that was a consideration. The distances in those provinces were very great and settlers had to build bridges and make expensive roads. Now the total cost, which is the important matter for us to consider in the increases, will be $2,342,008. That is what it amounts to. The object of granting this aid, wholly through an imperial statute by an amendment to the British North America Act, was in the hope that it might be a finality. Whether subsequent years prove we are right in our hopes and anticipations, of course I am not in a position to foreshadow. But, certainly, it is on a better basis than any of the settlements that were made before. We made, in the way of special grants to all the provinces from time to time, additions to the allowances. We did it of our own free motion, and by Acts of parliament passed in the Canadian parliament. It was thought by adopting a different method, and having the British North America Act amended in the particulars I have described here, that it would be recognized more as a finality, that in future parliament would hesitate about touching the arrangement, that the premiers themselves admitted was a final arrangement. They were satisfied with it. It was on the basis they asked nearly twenty years ago at a conference held in Quebec and repeated once or twice in that time, so that it is surrounded by circumstances that would justify one in coming to the conclusion that it should be regarded as a finality, and, if it can be so regarded, I think it is a fortunate circumstance that we shall have aided the provinces and at the same time have shown them that in future they must depend upon their own resources.

There is one province which ought to receive our sympathy. That is the province of Quebec where the debt account is very much more in proportion to its population than that in any other province, but I am happy to say that, in the last few years, Quebec has been improving its condition. No doubt the forests of pulp wood which it possesses, and its fine water-powers and the mineral resources that will be developed in the next few years, will bring Quebec up to a better financial position. We all hope it is so, because, at the present moment, Quebec is labouring under a very heavy debt which requires a large sum in the way of increase to carry on the affairs of that province.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is a matter of satisfaction to me that this matter has gone this far, for it will be in the recollection of the hon. Secretary of State and other hon. gentlemen here, that for three or four years I systematically put forth what the provinces were doing, what they were paying to the Dominion, and what they were getting back in return. I showed them that the people of British Columbia paid three times per head as much as the province of Quebec or Ontario, about four times as much as Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and at that time the hon. Secretary of State will remember that he was strongly against me. He said the provinces were extravagant, and they would only waste money, and that it was much better that it should be handled by the Dominion government. I am glad that my hon. friend has put his case so strongly, as if he had his whole heart in it and things will go on smoothly. I cannot see any reason for applying to the imperial government for an amendment to the British North America Act. The only good it will do, as we have been told just now, is that it will be a finality, that the provinces will hesitate, and they will be told we cannot go to the imperial government again. You have this concession and you must be satisfied with it, otherwise we know that periodically there have been additions to the provincial subsidies in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, without consulting the imperial government at all and there will be no further occasion now to go to the imperial government. Supposing the Dominion parliament voted ten times what they now proposed to vote to the provinces, would Great Britain find fault or say a word? She would say nothing. It would not be her concern. She would not be required to pay any of the cost, therefore, she is indifferent in the matter. With regard to British Columbia the hon. Secretary of State has spoken very well of the province and it is not necessary for me to say anything further, but as far as the extravagance is concerned, the govment of that province is not extravagant. The people are, as evidenced by the revenue they pay—which is over $20 per head of the population—more or less extravagant, but the government is not extravagant. They have a difficult country to govern. They have roads to open and a large staff of officials all over, in the mines in different parts of the country, and the government requires all the money that they can get. So that, at the present time, there is a plethora of revenue in British Columbia arising chiefly from the timber. People from other parts of Canada and and the states are rushing into the country and picking up all the timber areas of the province and that has given a large revenue last year and this year. With regard to the action of the Premier of British Columbia in refusing what the other provinces offered to concede and what the Dominion government would agree to give, it would not do for me to say anything about that gentleman as he is not here to defend himself, but I disagree entirely with the course he took. I may say that he has gone to England to the Colonial office without having a single vestige of a legal claim. Whatever the province is entitled to legally, it received from the Dominion of Canada and whatever the Dominion is giving us is a concession or a conciliation apart from legal rights, and on these grounds I differ entirely with the premier of my own province. He will not receive one single farthing. The government of England cannot do anything more than to suggest to Canada that it might do a little better, and it will be left entirely to the good wishes and graces of the Dominion of Canada. I think all members in this House will agree that this address be presented to the imperial government. I for one do, because it is a question that I have agitated for the last three or four years that the provinces should get more fair play, and at that time I showed how much better the Australian provinces were treated than the provinces of Canada. In Australia a stipulation was made when they went into confederation that they should receive all the revenue back collected on their own estates, excepting their proportion for a federal parliament. So that the provinces of Australia got back last year $35,000,000 without asking for it. It was theirs by right and the hon. Secretary of State will remember that the provinces here have been pressing for concessions year after year begging for it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before proceeding to discuss this address in a general way, I want to deal with one or two statements made by my hon friend the leader of the House; and I wish to say in the first instance that if it were not for the high position he occupies, and for the very great courtesy he always shows to the opposition in the House, and for his years, I would be inclined to find rather a harsh word for the very extreme lack of information which he showed when he referred to the case of Prince Edward Island this evening. I thought the hon. gentleman was going on to repeat a statement which I heard him make on a previous occasion, and in order to make it clear what he meant I asked him if the Dominion government paid interest on the original cost of the Prince Edward Island Railway, and he said they certainly did, and a number of gentlemen around him seemed to express a good deal of satisfaction when that statement was made. Let me tell my hon. friend and the hon. gentlemen around him, that he is entirely wrong. The extreme sectionalism of these gentlemen is at once apparent when they look beyond their own province. When the island went into confederation, every dollar of the cost of the railway was charged up against the province. There was a difference between the debts of Prince Edward Island and Canada, and we would have been entitled to $3,200,000 in cold cash were it not that the cost of the railway, being an actual debt of the Island, had to be deducted from the assumed debt, and we have been ever since bearing the first cost of the Prince Edward Island Railway. I think it is deplorable that my hon. friend, representing the government in this House, should make such an assertion. I know that he did not do it intentionally to deceive, but the effect is the same. At the time of confederation, every dollar of the cost of the railway was charged against the province, and it has been borne by the province ever since. In the last few years there have been some branches built in the province that are charged against the Dominion of Canada, but that is all.

Another statement my hon. friend made was, that in 1901 the provincial government were paid $30,000 in lieu of, the claims of the province against the federal government in consequence of the non-fulfilment of the terms of confederation regarding winter communication. I think my hon. friend read from the statute. I heard a good deal about that in Prince Edward Island. Mr. Farquharson, who was the premier of the province at the time, when confronted in Prince Edward Island on the platform about making any such bargain as that, said, "they put it in the statute; but we passed an order in council saying we would not accept the money on any such condition." However, the money was paid. The hon. gentleman could pass a statute with reference to it, but that is the statement which the late Mr. Farquharson made. He insisted that he did not commit himself in any way to Canada further than to accept that money after an order in council was passed such as he described. At any rate the settlement only extended to 1901. I did not intend to deal with this matter, but the hon. gentleman introduced it, and rendered it necessary for me to reply.

I am entirely opposed to this address. I think we should not invoke the power of the British parliament to legislate upon this matter until the parliament of Canada is possessed of full information in regard to it. It is said that the subject has been engaging public attention for a great many years. So it has, but in what way? A conference was summoned in Quebec in 1887, which was well understood at that time to be a political movement against the government of Sir John Macdonald by the late Mr. Mercier. It was looked upon at all events as having that object in view. I was a member of the government of Prince Edward Island at that time. We looked upon it in that way, and we were not represented at that conference. We did not take any notice of it. Resolutions were passed and claims were made for a raid on the treasury of the Dominion. It was well known that the treasury of the Dominion could stand no such strain at that time. Extraordinarily great obligations rested on the federal government; the Canadian Pacific Railway was only just completed, and there were a great many other things on its hands. The great development which has occurred within the last number of years had not set in, and it was impossible for the government of Canada to entertain any such proposition as that in 1887. It was not considered very serious except by the Hon. Mr. Mercier himself, and perhaps a few of his friends. Another conference was held in 1902, I think, at Quebec also. I have looked over the list of the gentlemen who attended these various conferences, and I find that there were only three men in the conference of 1887 who took part in the conference of 1902. Another conference was held last November.

There was not one single man in the last conference who took part in the conference of 1887. The fact was, that whatever work was done and whatever conclusions were arrived at, were practically lost sight of. There was a record of them, that is all. Another set of men came together without the knowledge obtained by the first set of men, and still another set of men came and they put together a lot of resolutions and brought enough influence to bear on the government of Canada to take them up seriously. It will require but little examination of the resolutions passed to see how carelessly the work was done. The address that we are now considering, indicates what Mr. Mercier and his friends had in their minds in 1887. It appears from remarks made by him at last November's conference, that Sir Wilfrid Laurier insisted that the Mercier plan of 1887 should be adhered to, notwithstanding the lapse of twenty years and the inevitable change of circumstances.

It will be found if the matter is carefully looked into, that a far-reaching rearrangement of the subsidies to the provinces is to be found in the address now before us. We have within the last few weeks been eye witnesses and ear witnesses to a good deal of confusion and bungling with regard to this address, showing that ordinary care has not been used in bringing it before this parliament, and hon. gentlemen can very well reason from the known to the unknown, and conclude that there has been a great lack of care with regard to the construction of the original resolutions. When confederation was inaugurated, in 1867, it was really a treaty between what were autonomous provinces. The delegates representing all the provinces that are now in the confederation in eastern Canada—the west was then unoccupied—and delegates from Newfoundland came together and formed the frame work of confederation. One of the most difficult questions they had to settle was the maintenance of the provincial governments. The fixing of the amount that was to be handed over to them by the federal government in lieu of their surrendering their customs and excise revenues. It was a question on which the conference, at one stage of its deliberations, was almost broken up in despair. I will read from Hon. J. H. Gray's book on confederation, a very short, but an absolutely accurate account of what took place in connection with the framing of No. 62 of the Quebec resolutions, which was the basis of section 118 of the British North America Act:

> It was absurd, therefore, to suppose that the delegates from those provinces could consent to any propositions for union that did not make adequate provisions for meeting the existing wants and contributions to which their people had been accustomed. It was equally hard to make the representatives of the people of Upper Canada understand that that was right. In vain was argument used. It amounted to nothing. Unless some compromise could be effected the discussion about union might as well cease. Subsidies were proposed, the expenses of each local government in calculation, reduced to the smallest figure—the general governnment assumed the burden of every expense that could possibly be considered of a general character—but still as the distribution was to be by population the provinces of Upper Canada would receive what it did not want, while the others did not get what they did want. Agreement seemed hopeless, and on or about the tenth morning after the convention met, the conviction was general that it must break up without coming to any conclusion. The terms of mutual concession and demand had been drawn to their extremest tension and silence was all around. At last a proposition was made that the convention should adjourn for the day, and that in the meantime the Finance Ministers of the several provinces should meet, discuss the matter among themselves, and see if they could not agree upon something. Accordingly, Messrs. Brown and Galt on behalf of Canada, Dr. Tupper and Mr. Archibald of Nova Scotia, Mr. Tilley of New Brunswick, Mr. Pope of Prince Edward Island, and Mr. Shea of Newfoundland, withdrew for that purpose.
> On the following morning they reported the conclusions at which they had arrived. These with some modifications, after some discussion, were ultimately adopted by the convention, reduced to resolutions, and the 'financial crisis' passed away.

I read this so that hon. gentlemen may clearly appreciate the great difficulty which stood before the fathers of confederation with regard to this financial basis which we are so thoughtlessly setting aside to-day, in order to substitute for it an entirely different basis. The difference between the upper and lower provinces—for that is what it amounted to—between the larger and smaller provinces, was this, that it took a great deal more money per head to maintain the machinery of government in a small province than in a large one, and a subsidy based strictly on population would give a large province like Ontario more revenue than it needed, and would not give enough to small provinces like Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland, without resorting to direct taxation. I remember George Brown saying that it was felt all around that there could not be a union unless assurance was given to the small provinces that the provincial governments could be maintained without recourse to direct taxation. Here is what George Brown said after quoting what another gentleman had said:

> This testimony is conclusive. Lower Canada would not have entered confederation if, as a consequence, she had been obliged to resort to direct taxation to levy the revenues necessary to carry on her domestic affairs. What was true of Lower Canada was equally true of the maritime provinces. Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, would not have agreed to enter confederation if, as a consequence, direct taxation had to be resorted to.

Now what was the basis arrived at? You will find it in section 118 of the British North America Act, and in order that we may clearly understand our position, I shall read the whole section. There were two methods by which the provincial governments were to receive subsidies from the Dominion government with which to carry on their administrations:

The following sums shall be paid yearly by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their governments, and legislatures : Ontario, $80,000 ; Quebec, $70,000 ; Nova Scotia, $60,000 ; New Brunswick, $50,000.

And an annual grant in aid of each province shall be made, equal to 80 cents per head of population as ascertained by the census of 1861, and in the case of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick by each subsequent decennial census until the population of each of those two provinces amounts to 400,000 souls, at which rate such grant shall thereafter remain. Such grant shall be in full settlement of all future demands on Canada and shall be paid half yearly in advance to each province ; but the government of Canada shall deduct from such grants, as against any province, all sums chargeable as interest on the public debt of that province in excess of the several amounts stipulated in this Act.

Therefore, hon. gentlemen will observe that in fixing both these sources of provincial revenue, population was not adhered to, and, as I read from Hon. J. H. Gray's book, it was impossible to have confederation if they had not done that. The larger provinces were to receive their per capita allowance on the population of 1861, and it was not to be increased. The smaller provinces were to receive theirs on each succeeding decennial census until they reached a population of 400,000. Let me refer for a moment to what took place in the conference of 1902, held in Quebec —that is one of the three conferences that have been held of the provincial premiers and governments. My hon. friend from Middlesex was premier of Ontario at that time. He was not able to attend that conference, but on behalf of his government he sent a memorial which amply and fully recognized the basic principle on which the federal subsidies were fixed in 1867. In that memorial, he proposed that the population of all the provinces at each decennial census should govern in reference to the per capita allowance, but that the smaller provinces should be compensated by more liberal grants for government and legislation. I shall read from the hon. gentleman's memorial, on page 21 of the report of the conference of 1902. After giving his views on the per capita subject which I have already stated he said:

(2) That in the case of provinces with a population less than one million, an annual allowance of $200,000 should be made in addition to the subsidy in the preceding paragraph mentioned, for the maintenance of civil government and legislation, and, in the case of provinces with a population of one million or over, an annual allowance of $300,000 for similar purposes.

Had that proposition which my hon. friend made on behalf of the great province of Ontario been put in the resolutions of 1902, or the resolutions of 1906, there would not be one word of complaint from Prince Edward Island. My hon. friend, with a spirit of fairness which did him credit, speaking for the great province of Ontario, suggested that that was what should have been done. Let me refer to how differently this is being worked out in the plan before us. I have a table here prepared with reference to this subject. I am now dealing with the per capita allowance to all the provinces :

ALLOWANCE PER CAPITA.

| — | Now Allowed. | Proposed Allowance. | Increase. |
|---|---|---|---|
| | $ | $ | $ |
| Ontario | 1,116,872 80 | 1,746,359 60 | 629,484 80 |
| Quebec | 889,252 80 | 1,319,118 40 | 429,865 60 |
| Nova Scotia | 320,000 00 | 367,659 20 | 47,659 20 |
| New Brunswick | 264,896 00 | 264,896 00 | |
| Manitoba | 292,550 40 | 292,550 00 | |
| British Columbia | 142,925 60 | 142,925 00 | |
| Prince Edward Island | 87,262 40 | 87,262 40 | |
| Alberta | 200,000 00 | 200,000 00 | |
| Saskatchewan | 200,000 00 | 206,210 40 | 6,210 40 |

The Prairie provinces having already had their per capita allowance placed on a most liberal basis could not look for further advantage in this readjustment.

Under this head, you alter the financial basis of confederation. You give Ontario an increase of $629,000, Quebec an increase of $429,000, and you do not give a cent to Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick. I am now speaking of the per capita allowance. What does that mean? It means that by capitalizing these amounts at three per cent, you give Ontario $20,982,206.66 and Quebec $14,328,820, and not one cent to Prince Edward Island, and this too without taking into consideration the immense advantages to the large provinces certain to arise from the provision that the per capita for the future is to be based on each recurring decennial census. Do hon. gentlemen wonder that, speaking on behalf of the province of Prince Edward Island, I am not pleased or satisfied with this address?

I now come to the allowance for government and legislation. There is a clumsy attempt made in this address to base that subsidy on population:

ALLOWANCES FOR GOVERNMENT AND LEGISLATION.

| | Now Allowed. | Proposed Allowance. | Increase. |
|---|---|---|---|
| | $ | $ | $ |
| Ontario | 80,000 00 | 240,000 00 | 160,000 00 |
| Quebec | 70,000 00 | 240,000 00 | 170,000 00 |
| Nova Scotia | 60,000 00 | 190,000 00 | 130,000 00 |
| New Brunswick | 50,000 00 | 180,000 00 | 130,000 00 |
| Manitoba | 50,000 00 | 180,000 00 | 130,000 00 |
| British Columbia | 35,000 00 | 150,000 00 | 115,000 00 |
| Prince Edward Island | 30,000 00 | 100,000 00 | 70,000 00 |
| Alberta | 50,000 00 | 150,000 00 | 100,000 00 |
| Saskatchewan | 50,000 00 | 180,000 00 | 130,000 00 |

A glance at these figures reveals the fact that no compensation is made to the smaller Provinces, except to some extent in the case of British Columbia, for the enormous concessions in favour of the larger provinces in the matter of the per capita allowance. The increasees in the grants for government and legislation are as follows, namely: Ontario, 200 per cent; Quebec, 243 per cent; Nova Scotia, 216 per cent; New Brunswick, 260 per cent; British Columbia, 320 per cent; Prince Edward Island, 233 per cent; Manitoba, 260 per cent: average for the 7 provinces, 247 per cent. The status quo is fairly preserved as far the grants for government and legislation are concerned, but there is absolutely no quid pro quo for the enormous gains, to Ontario and Quebec caused by the change in computing the per capita allowance.

In the per capita matter, Prince Edward Island stands looking on while the large province of Ontario receives what is equal to a capital of over twenty million dollars, with a prospective advantage in the matter of increased population as future censuses occur, which is probably worth as much more. Quebec likewise gains very much, and the west gains prospectively enormously; but owing to the fact of Prince Edward Island being a small island thickly peopled, all its lands occupied, having no resources beyond its agriculture and fisheries, it is impossible that it can keep pace with the other provinces, in population. Relatively the other provinces stand near to one another, as far as the per capita is concerned, with the exception of Prince Edward Island, which stands to gain not one cent under this head either now or probably at any time to come.

I am bound to say it is not the fault of the province of Ontario that Prince Edward Island has not got justice, for my hon. friend from Middlesex, as I have already said, made a suggestion in 1902 which, had it been adopted, would have fairly met the case of Prince Edward Island. But another set of men appear to have prevailed, who did not look at the subject in the fair and statesmanlike way that my hon. friend viewed it, and, apparently, the representatives of our provincial government paid so little attention to the interest of Prince Edward Island, that it is not much wonder that we did not receive justice. I have gone over the proposed change, and I cannot see how hon. gentlemen can fail to agree with me, that the province of Prince Edward Island has been sadly overreached. I lay the blame at the door of our own government, who were represented at these conferences, and I say, that they will have something to answer for when they go before the people of Prince Edward Island, on account of the part they took at this conference and in agreeing to these resolutions. I earnestly hope my hon. friend and his colleagues will consider the matter very fully before they proceed any further with this subject.

I have this consolation, that I think there is not much danger of any amendment to the British North America Act passing until there will be an opportunity for sober second thought on the whole matter. The protest of British Columbia must effect a pause. I do not think Sir Wilfrid Laurier would advise the British ministry to submit a Bill to the imperial parliament on this subject, when one of the provinces has absolutely refused to acquiesce, and another has given its concurrence in such a way that it is well known that such assent does not represent the views of the people. I ask my hon. friend to consider whether it is right to go on under the circumstances. My hon. friend may say: Oh, Prince Edward Island has given its consent constitutionally. If the address passes the legislature of the province, the constitutional assent of the province will be obtained. There can be no doubt about that, but the people have not been consulted. We heard a good deal about the manner in which Nova Scotia entered confederation. The legislature of Nova Scotia took action at that time without an appeal to the people, but we hear the echo of the grumbling and complaint to this day, that Nova Scotia was dealt with at that time without the consent of her people, and it would be equally culpable to change the British North America Act now without fuller consideration.

At any rate, if the protest of British Columbia is insisted upon, the matter, I submit, will have to remain open. At the time of confederation the union was regarded as a treaty. The British government would not listen for a moment to a proposal to put any province into the confederation, unless its legislature had given its consent. Is it right, then, to change the financial basis that was adopted as a treaty at confederation, without the consent of one; of the provinces? If it could be done without the consent of one province, it could be done without the consent of three provinces, or with five approving and four dissenting. My contention is, that it is not right to do it until there is a general assent to the proposition.

My hon. friend remarked a few minutes ago that many of the provincial governments were extravagant, and that the resources of the provinces had been wasted, at all events, money had been expended on subjects which the provincial governments might well have avoided undertaking. I know that is true of some provincial governments that have launched out into railway expenditures which they might well have left alone, as the federal government is covering that field by subsidies all over Canada. But I want to say this, that no such charge can be laid against any provincial administraion in Prince Edward Island since confederation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not include Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I know my hon. friend did not. Although my political opponents are in power in Prince Edward Island, I have this to say for them, that they are economical, even to meanness, except in the absolutely useless expense which they have incurred in delegations to Ottawa and London and much mismanagement of Public works. The members of the administration are themselves paid only $1,200 a year, and that is the largest salary paid in the province to any official, and, so far as I know, there are only five men in the province paid out of the treasury even to the extent of $1,200 a year. When I mention that, I am able to exonerate the provincial administrations of either party from the charge of serious extravagance. Of course there are some branches of the expenditure which have gone on increasing. I have here on that subject some figures which I will submit to the House :

Increase since 1872.

|---|---|
| Administration of justice.. .. | 237 p.c. |
| Education.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 91 p.c. |
| Public works.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 27 p.c. |
| Paupers and lunatics.. .. .. .. | 100 p.c. |

Direct taxation in Prince Edward Island for Provincial purposes.

|---|---|
| In 1872.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $14,085 |
| In 1905.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 75,762 |
| Increase of direct taxation.. .. | 400 p.c. |

It is true the cost of administration of justice has increased, but, on the other hand, there has been a reduction in the expense of legislation of from about $18,000 to $8,000 per annum, so that the necessary expenditures on such branches as administration of justice, education and public works which are almost uncontrollable, have gone on increasing, while other expenditure have been cut down to the very point of meanness.

I wish now to point to some things which have been said elsewhere by two prominent gentlemen with regard to the question of direct taxation. The first quotation is from the remarks made by the hon. Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on the 25th of March last. He said :

The principle of avoiding direct taxation, of raising money not only for the purposes of the Dominion but for the purpose of the provinces as well by indirect taxation was recognized by the provinces from the beginning, had to be reorganized from the beginning, one is justified in saying ; otherwise, the provinces would not have come together. Had the provinces been told at that time, that though they were not to be obliged at once to enter upon a system of direct taxation, they must expect to look forward to it at an early date, I think most of the provinces would have objected. Although for the moment they consented to a limitation upon the subsidy they were to receive, it is only reasonable to suppose they imagined that with the growth of the country their other revenues would be so increased that they would have been able to carry on their public affairs without resorting to direct taxation. It is not reasonable to suppose—as has been suggested in the discussion to-day—that the provinces entered confederation with the expectation that they should be called upon to resort to direct taxation in a general form, for the purpose of maintaining their provincial governments and provincial legislatures.

I am quoting from the words of Mr. Fielding, spoken within the last month. I shall now read the utterances of the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, premier of Canada on the same occasion :

Ever since the British provinces of North America have been granted representative government, the only mode, so far as my information goes, by which they carry on their domestic affairs, their municipal government and their legislatures, has been by means of customs excise duties. Therefore it is not to be wondered at that when the provinces represented at that conference agreed to surrender to the central government the exclusive power of taxation by way of customs and excise, they should at the same time have stipulated as a condition precedent that a certain portion of the revenue thus collected should be returned to them, and a portion sufficient to permit them, without having recourse to direct taxation, to carry on their provincial affairs. This is the reason of the enactment which we have before us in the 64th resolution of the Quebec conference to which I have just called the attention of the House ; it was one of the many compromises which had to be made in order to render confederation possible, and without which probably confederation would have remained but a dream.

Confederation would have remained a dream, had the small provinces not received the assurance in 1867 that they would be enabled to carry on their affairs without direct taxation. Mr. Fielding and Sir Wilfrid Laurier now take the same ground, that we must make that assurance good to-day and must increase the subsidies to the provinces, in order that they will not be obliged to resort to direct taxation.

With strange inconsistency, however, they are now pressing for a readjustment of the Provincial subsidies, which will crush the smallest member of the confederation under a burden of direct taxation.

Let me point out the position of Prince Edward Island in that matter, at the present moment. Our direct taxation for provincial purposes has increased over 400 per cent since confederation. We are now collecting by means of direct taxation nearly thirty per cent of our revenues, including the amounts we receive from the government at Ottawa. I think when hon. gentlemen hear that statement, they will feel that our position is not a very satisfactory one, and notwithstanding all that, there is not one of these taxes that could be taken off, if this address goes through. On the contrary, there would be a deficit perhaps within five years. There will be a deficit notwithstanding the passage of this address, and within five years there will have to be an increase of taxes. We have a poll tax for provincial purposes. We have an income tax for provincial purposes. We have a tax on all the real estate of the province. The land is all covered by taxation. We have taxation which reaches banks and commercial travellers, insurance companies, incorporated companies of all kinds. We have also succession taxes and still that is the financial condition of the province.

Why should it be so ? Let hon. gentlemen reflect for one moment. There was one thing in the basis of confederation which made an equal partnership for the future almost impossible, and that was the matter of territorial resources. Prince Edward Island had absolutely none. It held about one-third of the province, which it bought from absentee proprietors at its own expense, and was selling out to the tenants or occupiers at a loss. It may not be within the knowledge of every hon. gentleman within the range of my voice that in 1769 the whole province of Prince Edward Island was divided into lots and given away to adventurers who had some fancied claim on the British government. These people settled the country with immigrants whom they brought from the old country, who were accustomed to pay high rents at home, and who were told that they would get their land for 25 cents an acre in Prince Edward Island. They little knew that they were coming to a land studded from one shore to another with forest. The proprietor's agent promised them that they were to get the land for 25 cents an acre, but they found a different situation from what had been promised, and any hon. gentleman who knows anything about the early history of the country will understand why it did become a real grievance.

In other provinces the land was given a free gift to the people, but in Prince Edward Island the people came as bondsmen to the proprietors. The situation was a grievous one, and there was a long and fierce agitation in the province, so that troops had at one time to be brought there. The Hon. Geo. Coles, the Liberal leader in the province, inaugurated a plan by which the proprietors' interests were to be bought out. A good many of the estates were bought before confederation, and every dollar of debt Prince Edward Island had at the time of confederation was incurred in buying back the land from the men to whom it had been given by the British government. My hon. predecessor, the late Senator Haythorne, was a very active public man, a highly useful and able man. When Canada knocked at our doors again and again asking that Prince Edward Island should come into confederation, and offered to give a grant, to recompense us for our lack of land and to enable us to buy out the proprietors, Senator Haythorne, who was leader of the government in the province, refused and said: 'No, we do not want the money from Canada. The British government owes that money to us, and it is their duty to make good our territorial revenues. If we take it from Canada, it will be held up against us that we owe that amount to Canada, and it will be given as a reason why we should not get other things which would justly be coming to us.' That was the position taken. But when all endeavours to make the British government come to terms failed, and it was strongly urged that Prince Edward Island should come into confederation, it was finally settled that $800,000 should be given to Prince Edward Island, to enable her to buy out the balance of the land. I mention that to show our position in the past, and how it has led up to our present position of difficulty We have no territorial revenues.

The great province of Ontario has the most magnificent sources of revenue, agricultural lands and timber, and minerals. These resources will carry the province forward in affluence for all time to come. Nova Scotia is exceedingly wealthy in these respects with sea fisheries added but no more wealthy in fisheries than we are in proportion to the extent of our coasts. Nova Scotia has mineral wealth that is not equalled by any province in Canada, in my opinion. It is drawing about half a million dollars of revenue annually, speaking roughly, at the present time, in royalties of twelve cents a ton on coal, which is bound to increase and it will become an endless source of profit to the province. But beyond agriculture and fisheries, Prince Edward Island has no resources to fill its provincial coffers, no lands, and it has an isolated position in addition to all that.

We would not complain if fair play had been given to the province. If, as was suggested by the hon. gentleman from Middlesex, in consideration of the per capita allowance being based on each decennial census, the allowance for government and legislation had been increased to a small province like Prince Edward Island that had no territorial revenues, and had not any chance of an increase of its population, there would not be the ground of complaint there is to-day. But justice has not been given to Prince Edward Island.

I may tell the hon. gentleman that at one time I was in my province in a very small minority in favour of confederation. I was one of those who fought the battle for years when it was as hopeless as any battle could appear to be; but I can tell hon. gentlemen that the man in Prince Edward Island who would stand up for this address would be in a smaller minority than I was in 1864-5 and 6, in regard to the subject of confederation. I believe when the matter is thoroughly understood there will be practically but one opinion in regard to it. I am sorry the acting premier is not here to listen to the statement I am making, but I hope he will do me the honour of reading my remarks and I hope hon. gentlemen will pause, and ask their colleagues to pause, and not proceed with this address until the position of Prince Edward Island is inquired into.

The premier of British Columbia is taking active steps on behalf of his province. I do not know anything about his case; I do not profess to understand it. It may be as strong as ours from his point of view. It is not like ours. They are as different as cases could be, but his case may be strong, owing to the exceptional position of British Columbia. I submit, however, that our case is a strong one, and should not be ignored, and if it is ignored, it is impossible for Prince Edward Island to live in confederation. My hon. friend said when addressing the House: How can Prince Edward Island run its Railway and make it pay? I believe there were years when the deficit on that road ran up to $90,000, but it ran as low as $30,000 in other years. I think the average deficit would be less than $50,000. I say it, but I hardly like to utter the word, that if Prince Edward Island was out of confederation, and had a duty of ten or twelve per cent on her imports, as she had before confederation, the carrying of the deficit of the railway would be a mere bagatelle, and she could provide for all her own wants as freely as any people in the world. The enormous burdens of which we are bearing our share in connection with the Canals and the Grand Trunk Pacific far more than compensate Canada for the paltry loss in the working of the Island Railway." I would not utter the mord secession, and I hope I will never be called on to utter it in this connection, because I love this Dominion, and I want that my province shall belong to it. I did my part to bring it in, and I will never do anything willingly to take it out; but I do submit that Prince Edward Island should receive justice, and that justice she is not receiving in this address.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is the hon. gentleman not mistaken? He says the representatives of Prince Edward Island have been repudiated by the people there. It is curious that five years ago the representatives of Prince Edward Island, the Hon. Arthur Peters and John F. Weir, concurred in those resolutions and agreed to them. I have now before me the resolution of 1902. It is very odd that Mr. Peters should be re-elected time and again, and that the people should disapprove of such important action as concurring in the resolution that they repudiated.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend is right, but the matter was not taken seriously and it is a question that Mr. Peters will have to settle with the people of Prince Edward Island. The people never looked upon this matter as serious. They looked upon it as more of junketting trips for Mr. Peters and his colleagues to Ottawa than as likely to lead to practical results, but they look upon it in a different light now, and this is what Mr. Peters will have to answer for in Prince Edward Island, and I think hon. gentlemen who are listening to my voice know the answer that will be given. On page 21 of the report of the conference of 1902, Mr. Ross, premier of Ontario proposed that :

In the case of provinces with a population less than one million an annual allowance of $200,000 should be made in addition to the subsidy in the preceding paragraph.

Here was the proposition that Prince Edward Island should receive $200,000 in the place of $100,000, as provided in this address. At the same meeting, recorded on the same page, the following resolution was carried :

It is then resolved that a committee composed of the Hon. Mr. Parent, chairman, and the Hon. Messrs. Archambault, Pugsley, Longley and Peters, be appointed to prepare a resolution concerning the readjustment of the federal subsidy to the provinces, and the cost of administration of justice in criminal matters.

And then the committee submitted a resolution, which shows the work was all cut and dried before hand. Mr. Peters evidently did not know what was doing. The committee then reported a resolution in which is contained this scale of provision, wherein Mr. Peters actually recommended, as a member of that resolution committee, that the per capita allowance to Prince Edward Island should be cut down from $87,862.40 to $82,607.20. Here is an extract from the resolution which Mr. Peters assisted to prepare :

| Provinces. | Pop. Census 1861. | Actual Subsidy. | Pop. Census 1901. | Subsidy. | Increase. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Ontario | 1,396,091 | 1,116,872 80 | 2,182,947 | 1,746,357 60 | 629,484 80 |
| Quebec | 1,111,566 | 889,252 80 | 1,648,898 | 1,319,118 40 | 429,865 60 |
| Nova Scotia | | 320,000 00 | 459,574 | 367,659 20 | 47,659 20 |
| New Brunswick | | 257,010 40 | 331,120 | 264,896 60 | 7,885 60 |
| Manitoba | | 122,004 80 | 254,947 | 203,957 60 | 81,952 80 |
| British Columbia | | 78,538 40 | 175,657 | 140,525 60 | 61,987 20 |
| Prince Edward Island | | 87,262 40 | 103,259 | 82,607 20 | |
| Total | | | | | 1,258,835 20 |

Mr. Peters apparently was so overreached by gentlemen in that conference that he actually agreed to that scale. From that time forward, the intention of the framers of the resolution was that in the case of Prince Edward Island the decennial census should govern. The resolutions, as introduced in the House of Commons, but which proved abortive, contained that provision. I may explain, that on the 22nd of March last, three or four days before the subject came up for the first time in the House of Commons, Mr. Lefurgey, one of the members from the island, gave notice of a resolution which would conserve to Prince Edward Island her maximum per capita allowance. Let me explain to hon. gentlemen who may not have followed the matter as closely as I have, that in 1891 we were shown to have a population slightly larger than in 1881. By the last census we fell back, I think, about seven thousand in our population and it was held for a time, by the federal government that our per capita subsidy would diminish in consequence of the loss of population. It was only a small matter ; but fortunately for us the terms of union protected us. Because it was provided that it should be increased from time to time, but there was no provision for any decrease, so that if the population of the island should fall below any future maximum census, or the census of 1891, we would not be subjet to a diminution of our per capita allowance. But the address, as it was introduced in the House of Commons, would have deprived us of that advantage. But when Mr. Lefurgey, put a notice on the order paper to bring a resolution before the House that would protect Prince Edward Island in that matter, the government brought down an amendment which prevented the original terms of union with Prince Edward Island from being interfered with in that respect. I do not wish to say more than is necessary with regard to the premier of the province, but I shall have something to say to him in the presence of the people of Prince Edward Island and in his own presence. I have only been led into making these remarks in consequence of the point raised by the hon. Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The figures as read to the Houes by my hon. friend do not agree with the figures I gave. The figures I gave were prepared for me by the clerk of the conference.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman's figures are all right and mine are all right. My hon. friend has put the per capita tax and the subsidy together and I have read them separately.

Hon. Mr. POWER—They get the money anyway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the island was getting no increase.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Unfortunately, the hon. gentleman was not listening to my remarks. The difference between us is that his figures placed the per capita and the allowance for legislation together. I gave them separately, and I showed how Prince Edward Island stands on the per capita allowance, and how it stands on the allowance for government and legislation, and I made the statement that if there was compensation given for the change in favour of the large provinces in the per capita grant, we would not have so much to complain of, but as there was no compensation for the immense change brought about in the per capita allowance it was on that ground that I made the complaint.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Did the hon. gentleman not make the statement more than once that, under the new arrangement, Prince Edward Island did not get one cent of an advance ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I said that in the per capita allowance, Prince Edward Island did not get one cent of advance. When I tell my hon. friend the leader of the House that I dealt with both branches of the subsidy fully and completely, and read every figure to the House, I think it should be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think I understood the hon. gentleman to say that taking both items together Prince Edward Island stood about $70,000 better than she has been standing.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think that is just about the way it would work out, but if they had only been dealing with the one branch, that is with the matter of the allowance for government and legislation, and the per capita grant had been allowed to remain unchanged, or if Prince Edward Island had been compensated, it would be all right; but the solemn treaty made at confederation with regard to the per capita allowance is now proposed to be swept away, and you propose to establish a new basis under which Prince Edward Island cannot live.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understood my hon. friend to say that they were paying the interest on the railway—that Prince Edward Island was being charged with the interest on the railway debt.

Hon. Mr. FERGSON—Yes, every dollar of the cost of the main line.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have been advancing for the last three years on an average half a million dollars, charged to capital account. You do not mean to say that Prince Edward Island is paying interest on that ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not understand what the hon. gentleman is referring to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have just gone back three years, and find we have advanced about half a million dollars a year. 'Expenses chargeable to capital account Prince Edward Island Railway $496,124, another year $698,000, another year $591,000. You do not mean to say that we are charging you the interest on that ?'

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If my hon. friend had listened to me instead of attending to the disorderly conversations of the gentlemen around him, he would not be making these inquiries. I dealt with the railway under two headings. I said that in regard to the main line of railway, extending from one end of the island to the other, which was under construction at the time of confederation, we were charged with every single dollar of its cost. I explained further that the government of Canada had built some railways in the province within the last seven or eight years, which are charged to the government of Canada, and my hon. friend is now referring to these.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am sure we have all listened with a great deal of interest to the statement the hon. gentleman from Marshfield has made from what he considers to be the point of view of the people of Prince Edward Island. I would fancy, from the course he has adopted on this occasion, that he intended to adopt the same course in 1887. He was then a member of this Chamber and he resigned his seat for the purpose of running as a representative of Prince Edward Island in the Dominion House. He could not get a constituency. The constituency he appealed to could not elect him, and he was forced to come back and seek a new commission and a renewal of his seat in the Senate. Now, is my hon. friend going to attempt a game of that kind again ? From his speech to-night you would fancy he intends to assail the premier of his province. The address he has made is evidently for political purposes. The premier of Prince Edward Island was here along with the other premiers. After due and careful consideration, he decided to accept the terms that were offered, and he is responsible directly to the people of Prince Edward Island for what he has consented to. Would my hon. friend find fault with the government for negotiating a settlement of this important question with the recognized and honoured representative of the people of Prince Edward Island ? Or would he expect that they should take their directions in this matter from a man who appealed on several occasions to Prince Edward Island to get a seat and did not get one ? And who appealed while he was a member of this House and resigned for the purpose of seeing if he could get a seat in the other Chamber, and they rejected him ? He had to come back here. Is he going to renew that experience ? I would certainly advise him, from the strong statement he has made, not to make another attempt. I would advise him, when the election comes off, to back up his statement by tendering his resignation manfully of his seat in this Senate and go back to Prince Edward Island and ask the people there to elect him to the other Chamber. I think that would be manly on his part. I am afraid he will not accept my advice. The same men are not in power now who were in power when he resigned before. He would be afraid that he would not get a renewal of the commission, if he failed to get elected, and I am confident that he will not run the risk of losing his present seat. The statement the hon. gentleman has made in many ways can be easily challenged. He talks about having direct taxation in Prince Edward Island. They have no municipal organization, I understand, in Prince Edward Island. The local government does all work on roads and bridges and every improvement of that kind. In the province of Ontario, our municipal organizations attend to all that expenditure, and every farmer, every householder, has to pay a direct tax to cover all that expenditure. There is not a dollar of it paid out of the provincial treasury. It is all paid out of the municipal treasury, the funds of which are gathered from the people themselves by direct taxation. If Prince Edward Island adopted a system of that kind, they would not have so much perhaps to complain of. They would not be compelled to say that they were subjected to direct provincial taxation. Now, if I dared to offer the government advice, my advice would be that they should, in the face of the speech that my hon. friend has made, abandon this proposition altogether, throw the responsibility upon my esteemed friend for having made such a slashing attack on the government for the settlement of this important question, and abandon it. Then what will Prince Edward Island say ? There will be sixty or seventy thousand dollars of a deficit in the annual revenue that they need not have, had this measure gone through. Nova Scotia will lose a large sum, and so will the other provinces, that they might have got. Will the party that my hon. friend supports appreciate a course of that kind ? Will they think it was good politics on his part to challenge the course that the government is taking, and contribute so forcibly to the defeat of a measure which would increase the revenues of the provinces under this rearrangement? I think he would have a pretty hard time of it if he went to some of those provinces and had to assume the responsibility personally of the defeat of this measure. I would question very much if he got a warm reception in his own riding.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The reception might be too warm.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It might be considerably more than warm. I have not the slightest doubt they will feel that he had deprived them of money which, had he said nothing, the island would have got. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman's object in the course he is taking is to cross swords with the government of Prince Edward Island, but I question very much if he will succeed in his object. I have no doubt that the people of that province feel that they have trusted and faithful servants in the persons of their premier and his colleagues, who took part in the negotiations for the settlement of this question, and that they did their duty, everything considered, and will sustain them in what they have done. The hon. gentleman said in his speech that Prince Edward Island had been charged with every dollar that had been expended on railways. If he turns that statement the other way and says that the Dominion is charged with every dollar expended on railways in the island it would have been nearer the truth. I question very much if the Prince Edward Island Railway could have been sold for 50 cents on the dollar of what it cost. When they entered confederation, they had spent some $7,000,000 on railways, and they turned those railways over to the Dominion government at every dollar they had cost the province. The Dominion government accepted them at that valuation. There is no other organization, corporation or association on the face of the globe which would have accepted the railways of the island at their cost price; but the Dominion government acepted them at their cost and have held and maintained them ever since. I challenge my hon. friend to name one year since confederation that the Prince Edward Island Railway has paid running expenses. Last year it ran behind some thirty-nine or forty thousand dollars. My hon. friend himself admits that it has run behind on an average about fifty thousand dollars a year. The hon. Secretary of State has shown that in addition to all that, to keep it in efficient order and give the people of Prince Edward Island railway accommodation, they have been forced to spend about half a million a year in addition to the annual loss on running the railway. My hon. friend has not one word of commendation for the government for all they have done, and for the manner in which they have maintained the accommodation for the people of the island; but he contends, on the contrary, that Prince Edward Island has been badly used. If no other province in the Dominion has greater cause of complaint than Prince Edward Island in this matter, they should all be thankful to the Dominion government for the generous manner in which they have dealt with this whole question. When my hon. friend seriously considers his criticisms, and comes to realize the mistake he has made, he will regret once more that he has attempted the task of criticising the government as he has done. It is not in the interest of his own province or of the Dominion. I can only view it from the standpoint of a political fight that he purposes getting up in Prince Edward Island. If he does so, and should take the course he took before, I am afraid we shall lose his pleasant countenance from this Chamber. We like him very much and he discharges his duty well and faithfully. We admit he is quite an acquisition to this Chamber, but I am afraid if he should decide to cross swords with the premier of his province we will not have him here again. I question if he will run that risk. My hon. friend occupied the position of minister, I think Minister of Lands, in his province some years ago. He had, of course, an extended career as well as other men who have occupied positions of that kind. Losses, I presume were made then as they are made now. I did hear—I do not know how correct it is—that in the department over which my hon. friend presided there was a mysterious loss—I say mysterious because it never was found out——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I rise to a point of order. The hon. member is uttering a slanderous statement.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I learned nothing to charge my hon. friend with.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. member says that in the department that I presided over in Prince Edward Island there was a mysterious loss of money which has never been explained to the present time. I move that his words be taken down.

The SPEAKER—I was following the hon. gentleman closely and he did not finish his statement.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—His statement contained the base insinuation that I had been guilty of something wrong.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I made no charge.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. member is not man enough to make it on his own responsibility.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I say that unexplained losses have occurred there as they occur at other places. To hear the hon. gentleman speak one would think that he was so very pure and upright that everything he had ever done would bear all criticism, and that he had a most honoured, dignified and distinguished record. I am not saying that he had not.

The SPEAKER—I would draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that this is aside from the question which is before the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I wish to call attention to this fact; the hon. gentleman from Marshfield asked that the words of the hon. member from Wellington be taken down. Is that demand to be disregarded? The language used by the hon. member from Wellington could be understood in only one possible way. The statemen, as I understood it, was that there was a period in the history of Prince Edward Island when the hon. senator from Marshfield was in office and presided over some department—he did not know, but thought it was the Department of Lands, and some mysterious loss took place at that time, and that that loss had never been accounted for. What inference could be drawn from that, except that the hon. gentleman from Marshfield had been guilty of some malfeasance in office? I do not know whether the hon. gentleman meant that or not, but that is the only conclusion to be drawn from his language, and the least he could do is to disavow such intention, unless he is prepared to prove his statement.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Withdraw.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I want it distinctly understood that I make no reflection——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I insist on the point of order. The hon member made a distinct reflection on me, and I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER—It is clear to me that part of the phrase used by the hon. gentleman from Wellington contained an insinuation which, undoubtedly, remains an insinuation in its present form; but the expression was unfinished, and I should like the hon. gentleman to give full expression to his thought. He was stopped by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield and by myself, I confess, because, as a matter of fact, the discussion was drifting far away from the question before the House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Spoke, spoke.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I want to say a word with regard to the point of order.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The Speaker has made a ruling.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am speaking on the point of order; my hon. friend can speak on the point of order after I am through.

The SPEAKER—The decision I have rendered is that there is undoubtedly an insinuation which needs to be cleared, and I ask the hon. gentleman from Wellington to clear the insinuation.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman said there was a mysterious loss of money in the department over which I presided and which had not been accounted for to this day. That is not an insinuation; it is a charge.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The proper course to follow is to ask the reporter what was really said ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG — Nobody questions what was said, but one draws one inference from the statement, and others draw another inference.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If I have cast any insinuation on the hon. gentleman, I now withdraw it. Will that satisfy the hon. gentleman ? I had no idea of casting a reflection on him. I had a right to make reference to public rumours, but if that reference reflected on him, I withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—In dealing with public questions the hon. gentleman from Wellington has more than once made personal allusions, and he should be careful not to do it again.

The SPEAKER—Is the House ready for the question ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before proceeding——

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The hon. gentleman has already spoken, and I object.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman has spoken ; he has no right to speak again.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER—It is moved by Mr. Baker, seconded by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, that the Senate do now adjourn.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not called upon in this House or anywhere else to reply to the personal part of the hon. gentleman's speech, but there is scarcely one word he said from the commencement of his speech to the end of it that was accurate.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have had some experience in parliamentary life——

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I rise to a point of order. No gentleman has a right to say that an hon. member speaking here for about an hour was so inaccurate that there was not a statement he made that was true.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I did not say that. I have been thirty years in parliament, and I have never made a statement that I had to withdraw. I am perfectly right and perfectly in order in saying that the remarks I heard from the hon. member from Wellington were inaccurate. A stronger word might be used, but I have not used it.

The SPEAKER—I decide that the word inaccurate is a parliamentary expression.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON——As proof of the hon. gentleman's inaccuracy, I will refer to one statement he made, and which he repeated, I think, half a dozen times, that I had resigned from this House and ran for the House of Commons, and having been defeated, came back to this House again. That statement is inaccurate ; a much stronger word could be used, but I content myself with saying it is inaccurate. I mention that in order to show the House how the hon. gentleman can talk and how he talked to-night. Let me add that I shall take very great care that his speech and the speech of the hon. Secretary of State on this subject shall be circulated throughout the province of Prince Edward Island, in order that the people of that province may know what they have said and how the province and its representatives have been treated here. I shall take care that they know that these gentlemen have said that the Dominion is paying interest upon every dollar of the first cost of the Prince Edward Island Railway. I shall take great pleasure in circulating the speech of the hon. member from Wellington and also the speech of the hon. Secretary of State ; against the latter, however, I may add, I have not a word to say. He has not been discourteous—it is not in his nature to be discourteous.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—With the leave of the House, I ask permission to withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was withdrawn.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not intend to discuss the merits or demerits of the proposition now before the Senate. I merely rise to say that I am opposed to all these raids on the Dominion treasury. The hon. gentleman from Wellington, in speaking of the resignation of the hon. senator from Marshfield, made the mistake of confounding him with the late Mr. Howlan, who was afterwards Governor of Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I acknowledge the error.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have a pretty good memory of events, but for the life of me I could not remember any such incident in the career of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, and, on reflection, came to the conclusion that the hon. member from Wellington had made a mistake. When the first better terms measure was introduced in the House of Commons, a great many years ago, I voted against it, as I voted against all raids upon the Dominion treasury on the part of the provinces. These raids arise from the extravagance of the different provinces. If there was a vote taken to-night, I should do as I did before—vote against this increase. There is one important fact, however, connected with the financial position of each province to-day. There is but one province in the Dominion in which the government has not been able to declare with pride that there is a surplus over all expenditure for the past year. In the past, when attempts were made to secure better terms from the Dominion, it was for political purposes, and that has been the motive for the last ten or fifteen years. It has taken the present premier of this country all that time to fulfil the promise he made in a telegram to Mr. Mercier twelve or fourteen years ago. He is fulfilling it now, when every province, even Quebec itself, in its budget speech announces a surplus, which indicates that there is no necessity for making another raid on the Dominion. There is a paragraph in the address before us declaring that this will be the last call. There was a similar paragraph in the original resolution, but it never meant anything. Just as soon as another raid can be made with any prospect of success through political influence to secure another increase of subsidy, we will have it all over again. I may not live to see it, but many of the younger men here will. The whole thing is wrong in principle, and if it were possible to prevent such an address being passed I should vote against any demand of the kind either now or in the future.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are we allowed to make any amendment to this address ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am afraid I cannot accept any unless the House insists upon it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Do the government consider this address as something similar to a money Bill, which we have no right to amend ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It could not be accepted, whether the House has the power to amend it or not. The House, of course, might insist upon it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The government, without knowing what amendment I wish to offer, have decided not to accept it. Is that what we are to understand, or does the hon. gentleman mean that it would not be in order to move an amendment ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are presenting the result of a conference. We are not adding to or detracting from the decision of the conference. We are simply doing what the conference asked us to do.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—So, as a matter of policy, we have to accept what the conference has asked us to do. I want to know, because I have an amendment that I should like to move.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The amendment cannot be accepted.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is it out of order ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is for the Speaker to say if it is out of order.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Any member can move an amendment, but the House will not accept it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The leader of the House has decided not to accept it, though he does not know what it is, and I should like to know on what ground he refuses. At all events, I shall move the amendment and see what will come of it. The address winds up with a prayer which reads as follows :

We pray that Your Majesty may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the imperial parliament at its present session, repealing the provisions of section 118 of the British North America Act, 1867, aforesaid.

I move that the following words be inserted after 'aforesaid':

And any similar provisions contained in any terms or conditions upon which any of the provinces were admitted to the union.

The SPEAKER—I should like the hon. gentleman to explain the basis of his resolution, whether it is to correct a clerical error or whether it would have the effect of increasing or diminishing the public revenue.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This amendment is rendered necessary by an amendment made to the address in the House of Commons and I think if hon. gentlemen will look carefully into it they will find it is absolutely necessary if the matter is to be operative. The first paragraph of the address reads in this way:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty for the purpose of representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, or by or under any terms or conditions upon which any other provinces were admitted to the union.

Those meetings were held in the House of Commons. It was contended in the Commons that the address, as it stood, might have this effect: That it would repeal section 15 of the British North America Act, and it would take away the allowances for legislation and government granted to the four original provinces; but that there was no provision calling for the taking away of the allowances for government and legislation made to the five other provinces, $30,000 for Prince Edward Island, $35,000 for British Columbia and $30,000 to each of the three other provinces. And while the address, as drafted, would certainly take away the allowances now given to those provinces and substitute those mentioned in the Act. That ti would not have the same effect with regard to the other five provinces, but they would have a right to retain both the old allowances and the new, and this amendment was accepted. But while that amendment was accepted in the first paragraph, the prayer of the address was not amended to correspond with it, and the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona is simply to make the prayer of the address correspond with the first clause, in other words it makes the prayer correspond with the address itself.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It would go, I am afraid, to the foundation of paragraph D. Paragraph D is intended to protect the special provisions which were granted to Prince Edward Island and Manitoba, to Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, and not to supercede those special provisions or conditions that were granted to them, and the amendment would have the effect of wiping out those conditions so that it would go much further than the first clause mentioned.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman will look at line six of the petition, commencing 'We your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects,' he will find that the words 'terms or conditions upon which any other provinces were admitted to the union' have been inserted by the House of Commons, and the prayer which winds up the petition is just a repetition of those words. The prayer is the conclusion of the petition and it is because those words have been added that they have been repeated in the prayer.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The words were added to the first paragraph because the first paragraph referred only to section 118 of the British North America Act, which excluded, or did not comprise all the provinces that were subsequently admitted to confederation. I understand that they will appreciate that there was a reason to add the words that were added in the House of Commons: 'By and under any terms or conditions upon which any other provinces were admitted to the union.' But this was merely the preamble, and after this comes the section of the address, and if the amendment such as suggested by the hon. gentleman was added in the prayer, then it would override the whole thing, and it would be asking the imperial parliament to repeal this, and all the conditions that were granted to these provinces, so that it would go much beyond the addition which was made in the first paragraph. In the House of Commons there was a motion made by one of the members to that effect, but it was not deemed necessary by the Minister of Justice. It was an amendment which did not go as far as the one that is now before this honourable House.

The amendment was lost.

The main motion was carried.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have an amendment to propose.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The address is carried.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The motion was to fill up the blank with the word 'Senate' and was carried.

The SPEAKER—The motion was that the Senate do agree to the address by adding the words 'Senate and.' That is the motion that I originally put, and it was carried.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I understood it was the amendment.

The SPEAKER—The amendment was declared lost.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But this was put as an amendment to the address.

The SPEAKER—No; it was the original motion of the Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. Speaker hold that when this address is completed by the insertion of 'Senate and' that nobody can move an amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The address is carried.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood the motion to fill up the blank which would make the Senate a party. Then after that the question would be as to the adoption of the address.

The SPEAKER—The motion I put to the House was as follows:

Moved by the Hon. Mr. Scott, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Power, that the Senate do agree with the House of Commons by filling up the blank with the words 'the Senate and' in said address.

That motion was carried.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is an amendment to the address.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have agreed with this address and adopted those words. I suppose now we will adopt it.

The SPEAKER—I take it for granted the Senate has adopted the address.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that his Honour the Speaker do sign the address on behalf of this House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I move as an amendment to the amendment——

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is not an amendment.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—To the motion now being put, I move that the following words be inserted after the word 'population,' in the third line, section A:

As ascertained by the last decennial census, or in the case of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, respectively, by the last decennial census, quinquennial census or statutory estimate, as the case may be.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is not an amendment to be put to the motion before the House, and it is contradicting our former action.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I suppose the motion would be that the motion to adopt the address be not agreed to, and that the House amend the address as follows.

The SPEAKER—My opinion is that the hon. gentleman is out of order. He could only amend the address by asking the Senate to go back upon its last decision; it would be a reconsideration.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is there no amendment possible to the motion of the hon. Secretary of State?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Unless you move to sign some other name to that address.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—You could move that it be not signed immediately, but that something else be added to it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It has passed, and is an order of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. gentleman not propose an amendment to the motion which has been put, that the Speaker do not now sign the address, but that something else be done?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That would be in order.

The SPEAKER—There is no question before the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that a humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General in the following words:

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Sir Albert Henry George, Earl Grey, Viscount Howick, Baron Grey of Howick, in the County of Northumberland, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, and a Baronet; Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, &c., &c., Governor General of Canada.

May it Please Your Excllency:

We, His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada, in parliament assembled, beg leave to approach Your Excellency with our respectful request that Your Excellency will be pleased to transmit our joint address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, humbly representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, to be made by Canada to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their governments and legislatures; and praying that His Majesty may be gaciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the imperial parliament at its present session, repealing the provisions of section 118 of the British North America Act, 1867, aforesaid, and substituting therefor the scale of payments set forth in our said joint address, under the terms therein provided—in such manner as to Your Excellency may seem fit, in order that the same may be laid at the foot of the Throne.

The question of concurrence being put thereon, the same was resolved in the affirmative.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move, seconded by the hon. Mr. Power, that the said address be engrossed and that His Honour the Speaker do sign the same on behalf of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that second address not to be sent to the Commons also?

The SPEAKER—Yes.

The motion was agreed to.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY BILL.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (LL) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Railway Company, with some amendments.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG moved concurrence in the amendments. He said: The first clause was a bonding clause empowering the company to issue additional bonds on their line.

The House of Commons amendment provides that the funds raised from these bonds should be applied to the equipment and betterment of the line. The next clause relates to the Winnipeg terminal, in which the Canadian Northern Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific are making joint terminals. And this amendment is making it clear that all parties are united. The present Canadian Northern Railway terminals extend from Water Street south to the Assiniboine river. Then the next amendment is to strike out all the other clauses of the Bill which contain provisions for extensions of lines, new lines, and also for the renewal of other charters, which had been granted previously. The Bill is very much less than it was when it left the Commons.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It seems rather singular that all the branches asked for, or nearly all, by the Canadian Northern Railway have been refused and struck out in the other House. If my memory serves me, I think we granted a great many charters to other companies in the Northwest during this session of parliament; that the Grand Trunk obtained a great many charters there and, if I mistake not, also the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I understood that elsewhere complaint had been made against the Canadian Northern Railway that the lines they had constructed are very badly equipped and the principle was adopted of refusing to give them any more branches until they would better equip those they already have. That might be a fair enough policy if it were applied all round, but how do we know if the Grand Trunk Railway were operating in the Northwest in the present congested state of traffic that the same thing would not have happened? They have the advantage of not having roads out there; they cannot sin. Even the Canadian Pacific effectiveness in building branches and equipping existing lines was hard pressed in furnishing equipment. It seems to me the Canadian Northern Railway is dealt with harshly. But there may be something in the Bill as passed that will be of use to them.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—In answer to the hon. gentleman, I may say that those branch lines were struck out in the House of Commons for the reason given in section two, where they asked for increased bonding powers. They added a clause in the Commons that the proceeds of those increased bonds should be applied to the betterment of the roads, and the reason why they were struck out, I think the hon. gentleman will see by reports coming from the west, that the Railway Commission have been asked to investigate and the boards of trade are complaining very bitterly about the service on the Canadian Northern Railway.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is no question about that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman says they are harshly treated. The unfortunate condition with regard to the Canadian Northern Railway is that they have a practically new route, and they have not been able to keep up the rolling stock in proportion to the number of miles they have built, and the members of the Commons representing Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan joined unanimously in saying that the company should improve their roads rather than extend them further. Clause 6, which is struck out, includes the extension of time on some eleven lines. I think on eleven lines they have really three years yet. This Act was amended two years ago. They had two years to start and five years to complete. Practically all those lines in section 7 are commenced. They are all right, as far as the charter is concerned, for the next three years, but there are some fourteen different branch lines they ask for, which have all been struck out. They say they should not construct any more branch lines until they have fully equipped their rolling stock, and that they have ample power in the eleven different charters which are still existing.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Marshfield that the railway company has been rather harshly treated, both in the criticism which has been made respecting the road and also as to the manner in which the road has been dealt with, but we cannot very well amend that here. It is within the memory of hon. gentlemen here that only a few years ago, in the province of Ontario, both the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway were frequently blocked completely on parts of their lines for weeks. It is within my own memory when one branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Toronto and Owen Sound was closed for over six weeks in consequence of a snow blockade, and only two years ago it was blocked for, I think, some nineteen days, so that the trouble, in the present instance, is that the people are not willing to be patient, and I dare say they have a hard time, which makes them ready to complain.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I wish to do justice, without discussing the equipment or anything else, to the management of the Canadian Northern in Manitoba and the Northwest. Their general manager is as able a railway man as there is in Canada.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—And he has certain officials and men under him who do their best to make the road serviceable. I scarcely think they deserve the criticisms which have been levelled at them, and I wish to do justice to them by making that statement.

The motion was agreed to.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL.

NOTICE OF AMENDMENT.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A telegram has been received from the Harbour Commission of Quebec in which they intimate that the new issue of $800,000 should be subordinate to the previous issue of $200,000 and $150,000, so that to-morrow I will ask to have the alteration made. The only other Bill I know of is the Railway Subsidies Bill. There are no new subsidies, and it is simply continuing the subsidies to the railways already voted, and for which the time is expiring.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Except one new subsidy.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was not aware there was one.

The SPEAKER—This is a public Bill and no notice is required.

COMMUTATION OF SENTENCE OF CAZES.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has the hon. Secretary of State any news in regard to the liberation of the prisoner Cazes, convicted of the murder of his wife at Quebec ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, Mr. Aylesworth could not place him.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He was convicted of murder at Quebec, and the sentence was commuted, and he was sent to St. Vincent de Paul. It has been said he was let out on parole.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Senate adjourn.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to say one word on the motion to adjourn. It is not my custom to make reprisals for personal attacks; I have never done it in parliament in my life, and I will not do it now, and I have no explanation to offer to the hon. member for Wellington. But an hon. friend has suggested to me after the episode of this evening, that I should make one word of personal explanation to the House. A reference was made to a defalcation in Prince Edward Island in the Department of Public Lands during the time I was commissioner. It was just on the eve of an election when a defalcation of some $3,000 was discovered, and my political opponents tried to make all the use they could of it without however insinuating that I was guilty of personal wrong doing. However, immediately afterward, I ran an election and was elected and a commission was appointed to inquire into the matter, and they traced every dollar of that money to an official of the department, a considerable part of which was paid back by the friends of the defaulter, and the commission found unanimously that I was entirely blameless, not only blameless of doing anything wrong myself, but blameless in regard to any negligence of mine having contributed to the defalcations. After what has occurred to-night, as we may never meet again—while I have no explanation to make to the hon. gentleman who brought this matter before the House—it is due to my coleagues on both sides with whom I have so pleasantly laboured in the past, that I should make this statement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did the hon. Secretary of State say that there were no new subsidies to be taken up to-morrow ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No new subsidies, only a renewing of the subsidies that were expiring.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We will take them up to-morrow morning.

The Senate adjourned until 11 a.m. to-morrow.

SENATE.

OTTAWA, Saturday, April 27, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock a.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Mr. Speaker and hon. gentlemen, before proceeding with the business of the morning, might I be permitted to say a word regarding the occurrence of last night. I am bound to accept in the most friendly and frank spirit the remarks of my esteemed friend from Marshfield regarding the incident to which I referred that was supposed to have occurred in the finances of the province from which he comes. I was induced to refer to that matter, and thought that my authority was fairly good. I regret that I should have done so without satisfying myself fully upon the question, and I accept frankly the statement he made and the spirit in which it was made. We are about to part. I desire to part with every man in the Chamber on the most friendly spirit, and I admired the manner in which my hon. friend gave expression to that view last night. I reiterate the statement that he made, and for my part I hope that we shall meet again, but I desire to part in the friendly spirit in which we should part now, when the session is about closed. With regard to the other matter to which I referred, of the resignation of an hon. senator from P.E.I., and his having been defeated and then returned to this House, I also acknowledge that it was not my hon. friend from Marshfield but I believe it was the Hon. Mr. Howlan, who did that. I think it is due to myself and to the House, and to my hon. friend from Marshfield that I should frankly make this statement, owing to the manner in which he made his explanation last night.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am willing to accept the explanation of the hon. gentleman, but in that connection I wish to refer to the manner in which the report of the incident appears in the summary furnished to the press. I find that the personal detraction involved in the statement of the hon. gentleman from Wellington is set forth almost verbatim in the morning 'Citizen,' while the statement that I made on the motion to adjourn does not appear. That is not the fault of the newspapers. It is possible that the reporter was not in the House at the time I spoke. It was near the end of the sitting. I have great faith in the fairness and impartiality of our press reporter; though I have no explanation from him, I would fain hope that the cause of the omission is what I have indicated. Hon. gentlemen will agree with me that if in debate a personal reference is made which involves a personal detraction it should not go to the press without the reply or explanation of the person attacked. If it was thought right to give the personal detraction prominence in the report, my explanation made on the motion to adjourn should also have appeared. As it has not appeared, I desire now to repeat what I said last night in order that it may reach the public. The allusion which the hon. gentleman from Wellington made was to something which occurred in Prince Edward Island eighteen years ago.

The SPEAKER—As the hon. gentleman has had his remarks on this incident fully reported, is it necessary that he should repeat them?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon senator from Wellington simply states that he accepts my explanation, but the detraction has gone abroad to the country without any explanation.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have it from the reporter that he did take down the remarks of the hon. senator from Marshfield and furnish them to the papers. So far as ignoring entirely incidents of that kind, it would be better to come to an understanding and give the reporter instructions to that effect, because the reporter stands between two fires, so to speak. If he exercises his judgment, there are complaints made that he did not properly report the proceedings; if he does not exercise his judgment, there are complaints made that he should have done so. In the present instance, the hon. senator from Marshfield said that he would see that the remarks made by the hon. senator from Wellington would be distributed freely in Prince Edward Island. Under the circumstances, the reporter would hardly be justified in suppressing those remarks in his report. I am sorry that an incident of that kind should occur in this House. Hon. members should arrange so that no remarks of that character should be made against one another.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am rather surprised at the view taken by the hon. member from De Salaberry in regard to this matter, that because I said I would take care that the speeches of the Secretary of State and the hon. gentleman from Wellington should be circulated in Prince Edward Island that I should be indifferent to the circulation all over the Dominion and beyond Canada of the personal detraction referred to. It was my intention to have these speeches well circulated in Prince Edward Island, where I am known, not only for that incident, but for other statements which they contained, but I certainly did not think, and do not think yet, that the personal detraction, affecting one's private as well as his public character, should be given to the press without my explanation made on the motion to adjourn at a later stage. My hon. friend from De Salaberry has not stated what the reporter's explanation is with regard to that.

The SPEAKER—The first remarks of the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry were—and I have it from the reporter—that he did put at the end of his report the remarks made by the hon. gentleman. He is sorry not to find those remarks in the 'Citizen,' but hopes they will be in some other paper.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Surely the hon. gentleman does not expect the reporter who makes the summary report and sends it to the newspapers, to control the action of the papers? That is the fact in this case. The reporter says that he furnished a satisfactory report, including the closing observations of the hon. gentleman, to the 'Citizen' and I do not see anything to gain from continuing the discussion.

The SPEAKER—The point raised by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield is that the report sent to Mr. Soutter does not contain a reference to the incident. The reporter tells me he had two reports sent up to Mr. Soutter. Perhaps the hon. gentleman only saw the first part.

FRENCH TRANSLATION OF CAMP INSTRUCTIONS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

Is it the intention of the military authorities to cause to be translated into French, and to distribute in opportune time before the next annual training, for the use of volunteers of French origin, the two pamphlets which are given every year in English to the volunteers of the country, and which embrace, one of them, the syllabus of the daily routine of the troops in camp (Camp Instructions), and, the other, the programme of military exercises varying every day, but settled in advance, through which those who take the training of the Canadian militia must pass ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers are as follows :—

The memorandum for camps of instruction has been translated into French and is now in the hands of the printer.

Extracts from infantry trainings, 1905 and appendix to training manuals, 1905, are now being translated into French, but it is very doubtful if the work will be completed in time to be issued before training commences this year.

INSTRUCTIONS OF VOLUNTEER FORCE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. What number of qualified instructors can the different corps of the permanent force furnish at present to the volunteer militia ?

2. Out of this number how many instructors are there qualified to give the required instructions to volunteers enrolled :

(a) In the cavalry and mounted infantry.
(b) In the garrison artillery.
(c) In the horse and field artillery.
(d) In the infantry.
(e) In the school of musketry.
(f) In the engineers.
(g) In the army service corps.
(h) In the corps of guides and the corps of signallers.
(i) In the army medical corps ?

3. Amongst all these qualified instructors, how many are there :

(a) Of French origin.

(b) Of other origin, but capable of giving military instructions in the French language?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will be impossible to give the information called for in the inquiry above, without obtaining returns from all stations of the permanent force. This cannot be done before parliament prorogues.

KING'S REGULATIONS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY called :

The attention of the acting Minister of Militia of the following fact :

I.

On April 24, 1906, one year ago, Hon. Mr. Landry rose to direct the attention of the government to the following clause of the Militia Act :

74. The Army Act for the time being in force in the United Kingdom, the King's Regulations, and all other laws applicable to His Majesty's troops in Canada and not inconsistent with this Act or the regulations made thereunder, shall have force and effect as if they had been enacted by the parliament of Canada for the government of the militia, and every officer and man of the militia shall be subjected thereto from the time of being called out for active service, and also during the period of annual drill or training under the provisions of this Act, and also at any other time while upon military duty or in the uniform of his corps upon or within any rifle range or any armoury, or other place where arms, guns, ammunition or other military stores are kept, or any drill shed or other building or place used for militia purposes, or during any drill or parade of his corps at which he is present in the ranks, when going to or from the place of drill or parade, and also whether in uniform or not at any drill or parade of his corps at which he is present as a spectator.

2. Officers and men of the permanent force and members of the permanent staff of the militia shall at all times be subject to military law.

97. The regulations for the composition of courts of inquiry and courts martial, and the modes of procedure and powers thereof, shall be the same as the regulations which are at the time in force for the composition, modes of procedure and powers of courts of inquiry and courts martial for His Majesty's regular army, and which are not inconsistent with this Act, or the regulations made thereunder.

And inquired of the government :

As the Army Act and the King's Regulations of the United Kingdom become, by these legislative enactments, laws and regulations having force and effect in Canada, does the government intend, in the interest of the militia and for its better government, to provide each commanding officer of a division, of a brigade, of a regiment, of a squadron, of a battery, of a company, or of any corps whatsoever, with a copy, in the English version or in the French version, as the case may be, of these imperial laws and regulations ?

If such is the intention of the government, can the distribution of these books, which are indispensable since they are made imperative, be made before the date of the next training of the volunteer forces ?

Can the French translation of these books be begun at once so that the officers of French origin may have the benefit of these laws and of these regulations at the same time as English comrades ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The matter is receiving the consideration of the department.

II.

The Militia Act contains the following enactments :

126. The Governor in Council may make regulations for carrying this Act into effect for the organization, discipline, efficiency and good government generally of the militia, and for anything requiring to be done in connection with the military defence of Canada.

127. Such regulations shall be published in the 'Canada Gazette,' and, upon being so published, they shall have the same force in law as if they formed part of this Act.

III.

Chapter 2 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, which were in force from 1886 to 1907, enacts as follows :

9. The Acts of the parliament of Canada shall be printed in two separate volumes, the first of which shall contain such of the said Acts and such orders in council and proclamations or other documents, and such Acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom, as the Governor in Council deems to be of a public and general nature or interest in Canada, and directs to be inserted in the said volume, and the second volume shall contain the remaining Acts of the session, and shall be printed after the first volume ; and copies of the said volumes shall be printed in the English and French languages respectively, by the Queen's printer.

And that he will inquire :

Has ever the Governor in Council deemed it to be of a public and general nature and in the interest of Canada to have inserted in the volume containing our own laws that Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom known as the Army Act, and which by our own Militia Act is declared to have force and effet in Canada ?

If so, when was such an order in council passed, and in what volume of our statutes is the Army Act to be found ?

Has ever the King's Regulations in force in the United Kingdom been published in the 'Canada Gazette,' as the obligation is imposed upon us for our own Canadian King's Regulations prior to their having any force in law ?

If so, when did such publication take place, and in what number of the 'Canada Gazette' is it to be found ?

Is the government now prepared after one whole year of consideration, to take the proper steps to have the Army Act and King's Regulations in force in the United Kingdom, published in our country either in the statutes or in the 'Canada Gazette,' as the case may be, and to have them distributed to the officers commanding the different units of the Canadian militia, and will such a distribution be made before the date of the next training of the volunteer forces ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers are as follows :

A Bill to amend the Militia Act which deals with some of the points referred to by the Hon. Mr. Landry, was prepared with a view to being brought down to parliament this session, but, owing to the desire of the government to bring the session to a close to enable the right hon. the Premier and the Minister of Militia and Defence to attend the colonial conference, it was decided to hold the draft Bill over until the next session of parliament.

As regards part 3 of the Hon. Mr. Landry's inquiry, it has not been deemed, so far as the Department of Militia and Defence is concerned, to be of a public and general nature, and in the interests of Canada, to have inserted in the volumes containing our own laws that Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom known as 'The Army Act.'

The King's Regulations and Orders in force in the United Kingdom have not been published in the 'Canada Gazette,' and it is not understood that it is necessary to so publish them. Copies are kept in the Department of Militia and Defence for distribution, free, to officers entitled to them, or for issue on repayment to officers who belong to the militia, but are not, by virtue of the appointment or rank they hold, entitled to free copies.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Would the hon. minister be kind enough to press the matter as to the translation? I think we could get it if it were rushed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will take a note of it and see what can be done.

PETAWAWA CAMP.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has the hon. Secretary of State any fresh information in relation to the Petawawa Camp ? The hon. gentleman was kind enough to say he would try to get a copy of the correspondence for this House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I may say I sent word to the department this morning asking if they had another typewritten copy, and they informed me they had. So I requested them to forward it at once to the Senate, and I expect we will have it in a short time.

COMMUTATION OF SENTENCE ON PRISONER CAZES.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I received communication from my hon. friend in regard to the Cazes case. It is a telegram dated Ottawa, notifying the sheriff that the Governor General has been pleased to commute to life imprisonment the death sentence passed on Cazes, who is now confined to the jail in Quebec. I understand this is the only paper issued and nothing has occurred since?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I sent to the Department of Justice, particularly to Mr. Power, who has to do with the commutation of sentences, and he informed me that is a true statement of the case as it stands at present.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I desire to know if there was any further action in regard to it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am inclined to think there was not.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called:

Third reading of Bill (159) An Act to increase the borrowing powers of the Quebec Harbour Commission.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—While this Bill was in progress, a very pertinent and proper question was put to the minister as to whether the first lien stood prior to the $800,000 that is now being authorized. In order to get proper information, a telegram was sent to the Harbour Board, and they answered that the bonds issued under Acts of 1898 and 1899 were privileged and would rank ahead of the new loan unless the contrary was provided in the Bill. I therefore move the House in Committee of the Whole on this Bill in order to have the amendment made.

The House resolved itself into a Committe of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I should like to know if, under the previous Act, the full amount of bonds were issued or only a part?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The first year there was $150,000 issued and the $200,000 also, so that at the present time there is $350,000 of new issue since the statute was passed, placing the liens of the government of Canada behind.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Was $350,000 the full amount they were authorized to issue by that Act, because, if not, we require to insert the words 'that are now issued.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a general authority. They have to define particularly when they are going to issue them. The government of Canada gave the corporation the right to issue their own bonds, agreeing to stand behind them, and they arranged them in 1898 and then again in 1899 in order to meet the new liabilities they were incurring.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Could they issue any more bonds under the authority granted?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they would have to come here for any new issue, just as they had to come for the $800,000.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. WOOD, from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

The Bill was then read the third time, and passed.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (178) An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of certain lines of railway therein mentioned. He said: As I am advised, and as the understanding was when the matter came up before the Privy Council, it was agreed that a Bill should be introduced authorizing the granting of subsidies that had been previously voted, but of which the time was lapsing. If I am correctly advised, this Bill contains no more than revotes of subsidies already authorized. There are none of them for very considerable amounts, and they all appear to be short lines.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the total amount to be voted?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not make it up. Under the law you cannot very well form an opinion, for the reason it depends on whether the line costs more than $15,000 per mile. As hon. gentlemen know, after $15,000 per mile cost, the subsidy is graded according to the report of the engineer.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Has my hon. friend anything before him to indicate how much of last session's subsidies has been paid out ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no information, but I do not think very much has been paid. The difficulty of obtaining labour has been one of the obstacles to earning it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend feels fully assured that no new subsidies are contained in this Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was the understanding in Council.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would ask the hon. gentleman if the subsidies in clause 22 are revotes ?

22. To the Klondike Mines Railway Company, for the following lines of railway, namely :
(a) for a line of railway from Dawson to a point at or near Sulphur Spring, not exceeding 31 miles ;
(b) for a line of railway from a point at or near Sulphur Spring to a point at or near the divide between Dominion and Flat creeks, not exceeding 45 miles ; and
(c) for a line of railway from a point at or near the said divide to or towards the Stewart river, not exceeding 8 miles ; the whole in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 46.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, and I understand that considerable portions of the lines have been built by an English company.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman says they are revotes, but that is not stated in the resolutions submitted in the House of Commons. Those that are revotes are so mentioned, but this appears as a subsidy to new lines.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the case of the Stewart river line, that may be an extension. The line is being extended, but it is part of the same road and the vote is general. I understand the work is going on.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It would have been very easy to give us the information asked for by the leader of the opposition, by stating the maximum and minimum amounts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is absolutely impossible to tell that until the work is going on.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman could give us the length in miles, and if he cannot make the calculation himself we will do it for him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I can run over it and mention the mileage.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We can all do that. I am asking for information which the hon. gentleman should be able to furnish before calling on us to vote these subsidies. We should have a statement of the mileage covering these subsidies and the probable amount they may cost.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I can assure my hon. friend I have not had many idle hours this last week and I did not anticipate questions of that kind. Whether the mileage is 400 or 500 miles I do not think is a matter of much consequence. As hon. gentlemen know, many of these subsidies lapse in the end and are never earned. Those that have a prospective value are carried out, but many of the lines are never built. We cannot speculate on what is likely to occur.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We should know the amount we are asked to vote.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is impossible to give that, because the subsidies vary from $3,200 to $6,400 per mile, depending upon the cost, which can only be ascertained when the line is being built. As to the gross mileage, making a guess at it, I think it would amount to 400 or 500 miles altogether. Some of those lines are very short. I fancy an estimate of 350 miles would be about correct.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose by next session we will have that information.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the House will sit until Monday I will get the information.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How many of these roads have been commenced?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. The only one that was discussed as having been in operation was the line in the Klondike. I doubt whether any of the others have been commenced yet.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—There are three in New Brunswick that have never been touched.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is a fair illustration of the manner in which the government have been granting these subsidies to promoters of proposed railways. It verifies the statement made by several gentlemen when discussing these questions in the different committees, that in too many cases the promoters simply took a map and drew a line running from one point to another and asked for a subsidy for the purpose of constructing a railway on the line indicated, but really for the purpose of selling a charter. Here are votes to the extent of over $3,000,000 for short lines running all the way from fifty miles down to one mile in length. Now is it possible that there is a railway company which requires a subsidy of $3,200 to construct a mile of road to connect with navigation? That is what is asked for in the following:

7. For a line of railway from a point on the Dominion Atlantic Railway to the government pier or wharf at Canning, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 25; not exceeding 1 mile.

The object originally in granting subsidies to railways was to aid in furnishing communication to settlers and opening up unsettled portions of the country. That was the original intention and when the late John Sandfield Macdonald, as premier of Ontario, inaugurated the system in that province he refused to grant a subsidy to any corporation or body of men until they could satisfy him that they had surveyed the line and had the means to commence construction. I think the hon. Secretary of State was in the Ontario legislature at that time. That furnished some protection to the revenue, and not only that, but an assurance to the country that the money granted by the province would be properly used. We have in the Bill before us subsidies that were granted three or four years ago and for what purpose are we asked to renew them? Simply because speculators and promoters have not had an opportunity of selling their charters, and we are going on from year to year perpetuating this encouragement to men who have not the slightest interest in these roads beyond selling their charters. The granting of subsidies in aid of railways is being fearfully abused, and so long as the abuse is continued we will have a lot of bogus charters granted to promoters for no other purpose than to give them an opportunity to make money by selling them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There may be something in the hon. gentleman's observations, but it is too sweeping to apply to all these lines. On analysing these different grants I find that they are extensions of subsidies granted in 1899. Take, for instance, the very first one:

1. To the Central Ontario Railway, for an extension of its railway from a point at or near Bancroft to a point on the Canada Atlantic Railway at or near Whitney, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 4; not exceeding 40 miles.

I find on reference to the Act of 18[illegible] that the first grant is for an extension from Coe's Hill, or Rathbun's station on the company's railway to a point at or near Bancroft, and this is in lieu of a subsidy granted in 1892. So my hon. friend must have had something to do with that subsidy himself, since it originated as far back as 1892. I suppose they built a certain distance from time to time and have been getting the subsidy as they have extended their line. Now that is a fair illustration. It is all encouraging the construction of railways, so we cannot be too critical in dealing with them. I find that the same observation would apply to a number of these items, they are revotes of subsidies granted fifteen or twenty years ago. It is very hard to discriminate. They make a commencement and build a few miles and say they want to extend to a town thirty or forty miles further on, and so they ask for another subsidy. If they do not build we do not lose anything; they do not get the subsidy. Even if the charter is owned by speculators, if the line is built the country gets the benefit of it. I do not know that any promoters have ever got rich by holding charters. They are generally pretty well squeezed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman could give as good an explanation for each paragraph as he has given for the first one there could be no objection to it. A portion of the line to which he has called special attention was built a great many years ago from Picton to Trenton and thence north to the iron mines in North Hastings, and so onward. That is an enterprise which comes within the class I mentioned a while ago: it opens up a portion of the country that is partially settled only, and will make the connections between the frontier line of the Grand Trunk Railway at the town of Trenton back to the Canada Atlantic branch of the Grand Trunk Railway, opening up that whole section of country. That is quite justifiable, and if the same explanation could be given of every one of these (which I am sure could not be done) it would be quite satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Some change should be made in this system of renewing from time to time subsidies to railways. Where no progress has been made for two or three years and the promoters come back asking for a renewal of the subsidy, it should be regarded as evidence that they are speculating and not seriously thinking of building the railway. We know that some sales of charters have taken place; for instance that road running southwest from Edmonton, which was sold to the Canadian Northern. The Canadian Northern had agreed to pay a certain amount of cash, which they did pay, and there was a covenant to allow a certain percentage of the debentures for the construction of the balance of the road, all clearly showing that that charter was got for speculative purposes with no intention whatever on the part of the promoters of building the line. It would be better to draw a line and not encourage such people getting charters and securing subsidies and having them renewed from year to year. There should be a change in some way so that we can get rid of those who are peddling around charters instead of attempting to do actual construction work. In the case of lines on which real progress has been made and the companies are carrying on their enterprises in good faith, it would undoubtedly be unfair to close the door and refuse to grant any more subsidies except for the portions of the road already built.

The Crown should certainly keep faith with them, and if they do ultimately carry out their undertaking, they should be entitled to receive the subsidy first granted. But no inducement should be held out to the others. I have carefully added up the number of miles. My hon. friend from Hastings asked about the number of miles included in these railways that are in this list. I observe that the subsidy will apply to 995 miles of road, and if you would count the entire length, say at the rate of $3,200 per mile, and a few of them in addition for the whole amount, which I thought would be a fair estimate, the subsidies would amount to $4,825,000. That would be the subsidy on the present vote. I hope that a fair warning will be given to those that are included in these subsidies, that if they come back again, asking for a renewal, unless they can show that progress has been made and part of the line constructed, that the subsidy should not be renewed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As the hon. gentleman said he would not be prepared to give us the information asked for till Monday or Tuesday, I took the pains to make a simple addition, while he was speaking, so that we would not be obliged to remain here for an answer till Monday or Tuesday, and could go away this afternoon. The 1,094 miles, in round number 1,100 miles for which a revote is asked at $3,200 per mile, would amount to $3,500,000 odd, and if the maximum of $6,400 per mile is obtained, it would mean about, in round numbers, seven millions. We must be prepared to expend at the minimum $3,500,000, and at the maximum figure seven million, according to the disposition of the contractors, who might claim for the full payment, or for the reduced payment, depending on the work they would perform. That is what we are asked to do, and I suppose having given the information to this House, without having put the hon. minister to the task of making the additions, and multiplications, he will feel sure we are helping him in the discharge of his duties, and that if a change takes place as far as the Secretary of State is concerned, it will not be Mr. Devlin that will take his position, but he will probably give one of the senators of this House a chance.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the suspension of the rules.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose it is considered a money Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Very much a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it is really a money Bill we have no right to amend it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We amended a money Bill yesterday.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—These votes will appear again. The hon. gentleman will have lots of opportunity to discuss it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is no use going into committee, because we cannot amend it, but we amended the address yesterday, and that was a money Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The Bill was then read the third time, and passed.

QUEBEC BRIDGE AND RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (169) An Act to authorize a loan to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company.

He said: As hon. gentlemen are aware, when it was proposed to build the Quebec bridge, the government was asked to guarantee the bonds. Authority was given for that purpose, I think, up to about eight million. The bridge company made an arrangement with the Bank of Montreal, I believe, for advances on those bonds. On those advances the bonds were deposited with the bank. The bridge is now nearing completion. The steel I believe is already on the way towards being put in place. It now becomes necessary to avoid the sacrifice of debentures, because as a matter of fact experience has shown that even bonds guaranteed by the government do not command anything like the price that securities issued by the government themselves command. There would be a very considerable loss if the bonds were sacrificed at the present time, and in view of the construction of the Transcontinental, the proposal is that a bridge company should be formed of all the railways that will use it. There are, I believe, about six or seven railways that are likely to use the Quebec bridge, but there was no time during the present session to mature a scheme that would be acceptable to all parties; therefore the government decided that they would themselves take up those bonds, and advance up to next session whatever might be necessary to continue the construction, and it is thought this bridge company should be formed by the railway companies that propose to use the bridge, and take it over. This Bill therefore provides that the Governor in Council may from time to time advance by way of loan to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company a sum not exceeding $6,678,200, for the purpose of the undertaking of the company, as set forth in chapter 54 of the statutes of 1903 bearing interest at 3 per cent per annum payable half-yearly. That money has been advanced on the security of the government guarantee. It is proposed to take up those bonds rather than to have them sacrificed, and to advance the necessary money that may be required between now and next session, when it is hoped the bridge company will be formed, consisting, as I said before, of the five or six railways, perhaps more, that are now contemplating using the bridge.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What will be the cost of the bridge?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think about eight millions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have not the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a short Bill. The money has been spent. The hon. gentleman is from Quebec, and is familiar with the situation, and it is fairly well known to gentlemen who take an interest in Quebec affairs. I have given the House a resumé of the facts as they occurred, and the reason for this action. The monetary institution that holds those bonds wants additional security.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—When do the bonds in question mature?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. They will be twenty or twenty-four year bonds. If the hon. gentleman from Stadacona takes fright at a Bill for six million dollars of money, what will he say about $116,000,000?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will be amazed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no analogy between the presenting of a Bill for an advance of six million for the building of a bridge, what might be termed a private enterprise, and the subsidy Bill. Surely there is a distinction between the two, and is this measure not the forerunner of the intention of the government to assume the whole responsibility for that bridge? The hon. minister shakes his head, but any one who has paid any attention to and knows anything of the history of the construction of this bridge would come to a different conclusion. It commenced with a small capital, and then it was aided by the government, and if the accounts were properly audited and the public could see them, it would show that a number of private individuals took up a large amount of the money advanced or guaranteed by the government. The proposition is to take the bonds and advance the money upon them. What guarantee has the government that the interest on these bonds will ever be paid? I venture the prediction that they will never get a cent until the capital has become exhausted. They may possibly pay some interest on the bonds as long as they have capital upon which to pay it; but beyond that it will be a surprise to most people if this country ever realizes ten cents. Or perhaps the government intend to get the matter in such a position as to compel the companies to purchase the bridge, as companies have been compelled under certain circumstances to take over roads which were not very profitable to them. The whole thing will present itself to the mind of those who have paid any attention to it, as a gigantic speculation on the part of a certain number of people in the city of Quebec, by which they have lined their own pockets pretty well.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion to adjourn the debate was agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE RE PETAWAWA CAMP.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have succeeded in getting a copy of the correspondence involved in the proposal to take possession of the Petawawa ground for a military camp.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I observe that in an interview at Toronto, the provincial premier emphatically denies the statement made by the Finance Minister that there has been any sharp dealing on the part of the Ontario government or any non-fulfilment of their promises.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a case where as between gentlemen a misunderstanding might fairly arise. Four years ago, when Sir Frederick Borden was looking for a camp ground, he made application to the province of Quebec, and they offered and practically granted ground in the neighbourhood of Kazuabazua, up the Gatineau river, probably eighty miles. Attention was called to the fact that there was good ground at Petawawa and it was more accessible by railway and more convenient for those who are likely to use the camp ground, and so before the change of government in Toronto, Sir Frederick Borden had a correspondence with the department there, and they saw no objection to making an offer of the ground for a nominal price. Relying on that, the department commenced the expenditure of money. They put up buildings to the value of a hundred thousand dollars. However, those buildings are put on grounds that belonged to parties who held patents. I may say that the territory is under timber license, but there are a number of settlers on it who acquired homesteads and paid for the lands, and the buildings that the government have placed on the property are on lots that have been acquired from the settlers, so that there is no lease there. Things went on in that way, the department supposing everything was settled. After the change of government, the correspondence with Toronto was renewed, and an equally favourable answer was given by Mr. Cochrane, Minister of Crown Lands. Some time after that, the question of the timber licenses came to the front. It had been overlooked. Neither party seemed to have any notion of it. The owners of the timber license did not wish to be transferred. They preferred to hold their licenses from the Ontario government. Naturally that was the position. It was then suggested by the Ontario government that the Dominion government should buy out the licensees. The price was about a hundred thousand dollars, or a little more on the value of the timber, which was thought to be a price far beyond the value, and in that way the controversy developed. Then it was suggested that the Dominion government should give some property held by the Crown in the neighbourhood of Niagara, and the answer was that that could not be done, as the land in question had been set apart for other purposes. That is the whole story. The licenses held by the parties who had the right to them are renewable year by year. I do not know what the value of the timber may be. I rather think the limits have been pretty well cut over. I know they have been cut on for the last sixteen or seventeen years. It was a convenient place for lumbering operations and the timber cannot be of very much value. When it came to that crisis, the government at Toronto said: 'You must deal with the timber limits; we will not deal with you unless you pay us the price we put on the value of the timber. Then on the advice of the Minister of Justice an order in council was passed, authorizing the expropriation of the land. Under the British North America Act there is a clause which authorizes the central government to expropriate provincial lands if required for fortification or defence. That is the question at present.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do they propose to erect fortifications at Petawawa?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think it will be used as a practice ground for infantry, artillery and cavalry. It is incidentally for the purpose of training men who will be employed in the defence of Canada. Whether the courts would hold that that comes fairly within the meaning of the words in the British North America Act, I do not think I should be called upon to say. I have a very decided opinion on it, but I do not propose to give it. The question is whether the practising at long range and so on could be considered as being required for fortifications. Certainly not. Could it be required for the defence of the country, because it is simply used as a ground for training? That is the whole story and that is the way the matter stands at present.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I am to judge from reading the debates in the other House, and the utterances of the Premier of Ontario, the hon. gentleman has not told the whole story. I have not observed that the late government of Ontario or the present government threw any obstacle in the way of the department acquiring the lands about Petawawa for the purpose indicated by the hon. gentleman, but I notice that in the letter and declaration made by the Minister of Militia he refuses pointedly to recognize the rights of the parties who hold the timber licenses. Well, I need scarcely say to the hon. gentleman, that he very well knows what the policy of the Ontario and all other governments has been in reference to the licenses of timber limits. While it is true that the licenses are renewable every year, it is not only an acknowledged fact, but a practice and precedent that has existed ever since the government have granted licenses, that they should be renewed every year, subject to any additional stumpage or any other condition imposed by the legislature. I notice that Mr. Whitney says that while they were not prepared to accept the dictum of the Minister of Militia, had the policy been pursued as indicated by the present Minister of Finance in discussing this question in the House of Commons a short time ago, been followed, there would have been no difficulty. The Finance Minister then stated that whatever right the licensees had for these lands should be recognized. An individual would never think of taking possession of the lands, as the government have taken possession of these lands beyond the Petawawa river, without recognizing the rights of the licensees, or those who had patents, and those who had settled, and had not yet received their patents; and it would be an act of gross injustice—I think my hon. friend himself would admit that—to take possession of a quantity of land in any province and deny what fairly might be assumed to be vested rights in that land. I am quite sure that no government in Canada would object to allotting at a very small rental, and would recognize the right of the Dominion government to acquire unoccupied lands in any of the provinces for the purpose for which these were acquired.

I would recognize the right of the Dominion government to acquire unoccupied lands in any of the provinces for their purposes, and from what little I have seen of the position taken by the late government of Ontario they displayed the same desire to meet the wishes of the Department of Militia, but not at the expense of individuals who have vested rights in that locality. If the licensees of timber limits are asking exorbitant prices, there is a way to reach that without refusing to deal with them at all. That could be done by arbitration, if not by voluntary arbitration a law could be passed to compel them to submit to arbitration if the land is required for the purpose the hon. gentleman has indicated. I should rather draw the conclusion from the remarks of the anti-warrior, the hon. Secretary of State, who has expressed such abhorrence of anything like war, but who is at present the head of the Militia Department—that he agrees with the leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, that the taking of these lands could not well be considered necessary for military or for naval purposes, although they are on a river. They are no doubt suitable for the purposes for which they are acquired, but whether that comes within the meaning of the British North America Act is very doubtful, and I should like to see it tested in the courts and if necessary by an appeal to the law lords of the Privy Council in England.

Hon. Mr. KERR—From what I have read on the subject I understand that the government have no intention of interfering with the rights of the timber licensees, and that what they are willing to do is to let the license holders still have their timber and all the rights they enjoy under their licenses whatever they may be. Not only that, but the Ontario government shall have all the dues coming from the licenses, so that whilst they are taking the property and desire really to put themselves in the same position that the former Ontario government had intended them to occupy, they were not going to do any injury to the licensees of the timber limits or to the local government in respect to the dues payable to them. But it is another matter when they say they will determine the way in which the Dominion government shall deal with the licensees and that they shall compensate the license-holders at some exorbitant rate. That is what the government of Ontario proposed and what the Dominion government declined to do.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not fair. What they said is: 'You shall pay a fair price to the license-holders.' They never said: 'You shall pay an exorbitant price.'

Hon. Mr. KERR—A price to be fixed by the Ontario government or by arbitrators appointed by them, I do not care which way it is put. It is one thing to say that you must pay by any kind of system to be devised by us, and another thing to say you can take the property, but you must not interfere with existing rights.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If a policy had been pursued such as the hon. gentleman indicated, there would be no trouble. I should judge from the remarks of the Minister of Finance in the other House not long ago that he is prepared to take that course now. He did say in addition, however, that they had nothing to do with the licensees, that they could look after themselves—I think those were the words he used. I venture the assertion that if it were not a Conservative government that is in power in Ontario to-day, they would be treated very differently by this government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think if the matter is approached in a friendly spirit and with a desire to settle it, the situation described by the hon. senator from Toronto is the true one. An element of it that ought not to be lost sight of is this: The troops would only occupy the ground during the months of June, July, August, and possibly part of September, and at that time of the year the licensee would not be cutting timber. My notion of a settlement is that the licensees should continue under the Crown as represented at Toronto, and if any damage or inconvenience arose from the occupation of the limit by the troops, the Crown at Ottawa should pay for that damage, but there would be no damage.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—A simple glance at the papers brought down shows the intention of the government. Here is the last telegram sent by the Premier of Ontario to the Minister of Militia :

Toronto, Ont., March 26, 1907.

Sir Frederick Borden,
Minister of Militia, Ottawa.

I do not understand the action taken by you regarding Petawawa as shown by your despatch to the Lieutenant Governor of the 22nd of March having regard to the negotiations heretofore had between the government and yourself. I would be glad to understand clearly the reasons and necessity for this action.

(Sgd.) J. P. WHITNEY.

The answer is dated the following day, March 27, and is as follows :

TELEGRAM.

Ottawa, March 27, 1907.

Hon. J. P. Whitney,
Premier, Toronto.

Your telegram re Petawawa lands. Late provincial government having promised lease of Crown lands within Petawawa camp site for ninety-nine years at nominal rent, and Hon. Mr. Cochrane having definitely since the interview I had with you refused to carry out promise without consent of timber licensees, and timber licensees having demanded compensation for surrender their licenses, amounting to the exorbitant sum of $112,000, Department of Justice was consulted. On the advice of the Minister of Justice that the lands could be taken for defence purposes under British North America Act, steps were taken accordingly.

(Sgd.) F. W. BORDEN.

There is no offer to discuss the question with the licensees at all. Perhaps other documents may throw more light on the subject, but the last two telegrams indicate the spirit in which the matter is being dealt with.

QUEBEC BRIDGE COMPANY—BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY resumed the debate on Bill (169) An Act to authorize a loan to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company. He said : This Bill is to provide money for the construction of the Quebec Bridge. We are told that the bonds guaranteed by the government by the legislation of 1903 cannot be sold at par value, and that a great deal of loss will occur if the exchange of those bonds is left in private hands, notwithstanding the guarantee of the government. I would ask my hon. friend the Secretary of State at the outset, if there has been any attempt to float these bonds on the part of the company ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not advised. I think they were simply deposited with the bank and advances made on them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If my information is correct, no attempt whatever has been made to float the bonds. Has any correspondence taken place between the government and the company on that subject ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think so. Any thing that would have transpired would have been verbal and informal.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It was a verbal and informal demand made on the government by the present chairman of the National Transcontinental Railway Commission. That is the interest that was taken in those bonds. There was nothing at all on which that gentleman could base his demand—no attempt had been made to float the bonds, but because of the great interest the government is taking in that enterprise—a private enterprise—all those things are being done. I do not think it is done in the interest of the public. The Quebec Bridge company was organized in 1884, and legislation was enacted in 1887, in 1891, in 1897, in 1900, in 1901 and in 1903. In 1901, when the question came before parliament, the Premier of the Dominion made a speech and gave out all the figures of the cost of the bridge. At that time he found that $4,000,000 would meet the requirements of the case, but that amount was found insufficient. In 1903 the company came back to parliament and asked for an authorization to float bonds to the amount of $6,678,200. That permission was granted and a contract was made between the company and the government under which the government took power to acquire the undertaking at any time they chose to do so. There is something very peculiar in that contract. Part of that subsidy had been granted by the Dominion parliament, the provincial legislature and the municipal corporation of the city of Quebec. Bonds had been issued and the company tried to float them to to the amount of $472,000. That amount of bonds was put into the hands of the contractor. He negotiated those bonds and obtained for them $283,279. When the contract was made with the government, the government took that feature of the undertaking into consideration, and imposed upon the company an obligation to subscribe $200,000 in additional stock. Out of the $200,000, a sum of $188,271 was to be set aside to be used in the payment of the loss which occurred in the floating of the debentures. Clause 4 says :

The company will procure subscriptions for additional amounts to the amount of $200,000, such new stock to be issued at a price not below par, and to be immediately paid up in full, the proceeds to be applied in the first place to the payment of the discount, for which the bonds of the company were issued, as aforesaid to wit, $188,721.

So the new stock that has been issued, in place of being expended on capital work was put aside and served to repay the loss that has been suffered by the company in the payment of the discount on its bonds. Those who furnished that money, as the original shareholders of the Company, were, by the contract, allowed certain advantages of which this House should be made aware. The company, for the purpose of its undertaking, had subscribed the amount of $65,000, and the amount of the new stock, $200,000, gave a total sum of subscriptions of $265,585.70. Clause 18, reads as follows :

The company agrees that the government may exercise and the government hereby reserves the right to take over the whole of the undertaking, assets, property and franchises of the company, at any time, on paying the shareholders the amount of their stock at the par value thereof, not exceeding the amount of $265,585.70, with simply interest at five per centum per annum upon such amount as from the date or dates of the payment or payments upon the original or any substituted stock ; such interest, however, to be charged with and reduced by the amount of the dividends (if any) which shall have accrued and been paid to the said shareholders respectively, so that no more interest than five per centum per annum after deducting all dividends shall in any case be paid to the said shareholders. The government, in addition to interest ascertained in manner aforesaid shall pay to the shareholders a premium of ten per centum upon the par value of the fully paid shares. Such right to take over the undertaking may be exercised at any time by the government upon giving one month's notice to the company.

We see by that clause, that the persons who furnish the money in the undertaking are sure to be recouped beyond the amount they have paid by five per cent interest since the moment they made the payment, and an additional 10 per cent on their subcriptions as a premium when the government choose to take possession of the bridge themselves. The Hon. Mr. Parent, who was Prime Minister of Quebec, and mayor of the City of Quebec, was at the time the president of the company. He is now the president of National Transcontinental Railway Commission. The persons forming the company paid up $65,000. In that $65,000 are placed 75 shares, $7,500 to Mr. Parent, outside of his ordinary shares. Those are shares for which he never paid a single cent. They were given to him, and each director of the company managed to get ten, twelve, fifteen or twenty shares of the stock without disbursing a single dollar, and the proof of this is in a report that was furnished to the House under document number 148 of the session of 1903. Having said so much, I will now come to the fact that another company, germane to this company was created in 1901 by chapter 81 of First Edward VII, 'An Act to incorporate the Quebec Terminal Railway Company.' That Company created in that year was composed of the following gentlemen :

The Honourable John Sharples, Charles Edmond Taschereau, Gaspard Lemoine and Roger Larue, all of the city of Quebec, and D'Arcy Scott, of the city of Ottawa, together with such persons as became shareholders in the company, are incorporated under the name of The Quebec Terminal and Railway Company hereinafter called 'the company.'

Clause 8 of the Act reads as follows :

The company may lay out, construct and operate by steam, electricity, or other power, a railway of the gauge of four feet eight and one-half inches from a point at or near the northern terminus of the Quebec bridge in the parish of Ste. Foye to the city of Quebec, and from the southern terminus of the Quebec bridge to a point at or near the point of intersection of the Grand Trunk Railway with the Intercolonial Railway at Chaudière curve, in the county of Levis or at any point on the Grand Trunk Railway to the east thereof; but the company shall not exercise the powers conferred by this section unless and until the Quebec Bridge Company (which is hereby authorized and empowered so to do) has signified in writing its assent to the exercise by the company of such powers of construction and operation.

That new company, created by an Act of parliament in 1901, never went to work, but in 1903 by chapter 177 of Third Edward 7th, it was moulded into the Quebec Bridge Company. Chapter 177 is entitled An Act respecting the Quebec Bridge Company and to change its name to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company, and this company is empowered by clause 4 to lay out, construct and operate the following lines of railway, namely commencing at or near the northern terminus of the bridge of the company now under construction at a point in the parish of Ste. Foye, in the county of Quebec, thence easterly following the general line of the St. Lawrence river to the city of Quebec. That enactment of 1903 is verbatim the repetition of the enactment of the Act of 1901. Virtualy it is the same thing. It recites word for word the powers given to the terminal company, and in addition it is given by clause 5 subsection E, power to build and operate a tramway from the bridge on the north side of the River St. Lawrence to the Champlain market wharf in the city of Quebec and following the general line of the St. Lawrence river and charge tolls or rates for passengers or freight carried thereon. This company to-day wants to construct the bridge, and to assume the power to bring all these railways into Quebec and build a central terminal or union station. I claim the company has not the right to do so, that the company must limit its railways to the limits of Quebec. Its power to construct a railway ends where the city begins. It cannot penetrate into the city, unless it is for the construction of a tramway, which power is expressly given by the Act I have just quoted. The Bill before us asks us to allow the government to furnish the money. I should say, before furnishing the money, that we should have more information. We know nothing of the work that has been done. Where is the report of the engineers that the government is obliged to send from time to time to the works in order to inspect them and to make report? I am told to-day that the officer named by the government for such instruction is one of the brothers of the president of the National Transcontinental Railway, president of the bridge company, a man living in Beauport, and having none of the qualifications which are required for such duties. The government should remember also that in lending the money to this company, charging them 3 per cent, they are increasing the profits of the company in a way which I think should be condemned by this House, and I wish to dissent from the vote of approval which is now asked from us. I do not wish to adopt this measure without a division, and it must be understood that it is carried on division. I do not want to take the responsibility of all the doings in the vicinity of Quebec under the name of the Quebec Bridge Company. There are things done, which no one can approve, and there are moneys voted and squandered without any control whatsoever. I desire to enter my protest against the measure the government is introducing this year, because in my opinion they do not take the proper course to make sure that all is done that the law requires in the construction of that bridge.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (142) An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the period of nine months ending March 31, 1907, and the financial year ending March 31, 1908.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the first time.

The Bill was then read the second time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to call attention to one feature of this Bill. A few of our colleagues died during this session. They were sick for a portion of the time and a certain amount of their sessional indemnity was paid to them. I do not see why in this Bill we should be asked for a special vote for $2,500 in the case of a member who, after having put in an appearance, died during the session. I should think we would simply have to ask for the balance of the indemnity.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No money would be drawn in that case. No amount is drawn in excess of the full amount. There could be no authority for drawing more than the regular sum.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And what about the case of the hon. gentleman from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville) ? He came from the old country, and, on his arrival in Montreal, met with an accident. I do not see why he should not be paid for the days he was in the hospital in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—His case is a very regrettable one. Unfortunately, when he met with that sad accident in Montreal, instead of coming to Ottawa, he went back to London, which made it very embarrassing. He deliberately left Canada while parliament was sitting, which caused very serious trouble. He had important business on the other side in London, and felt that it was of more importance than his attendance here. I was most anxious personally to find some way of meeting his case, but it seems to be against the law.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the fact that something is against the law is not necessarily a reason why the hon. gentleman should oppose it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman would like us to make a new law in such a case.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Insert the words 'Notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary.'

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until 2.30 p.m.

An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railways therein mentioned.
An Act to authorize a loan to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company.
An Act to amend the Post Office Act.

To these Bills the Royal Assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words :—

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these Bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General, as follows:—

May it please Your Excellency :

The Commons of Canada have voted the supplies required to enable the government to defray the expenses of the public service.
In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill :
An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the period of nine months ending the 31st March, 1907, and the financial year ending the 31st March, 1908, to which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Clerk of the Senate, by His Excellency's command, did thereupon say :—

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Third Session of the Tenth Parliament of the Dominion with the following

SPEECH :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :
Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In bringing to a close the third session of the tenth parliament of Canada, I desire to express to you my thanks for the care and assiduity you have shown in the discharge of your important duties, the results of which are apparent in many important Acts which must prove of great benefit to the country.

I am glad to observe that the fiscal period terminating on the last day of March was, in proportion to its length, the most prosperous in the history of the Dominion, and that the present indications are that the expansion of the country's trade and revenue will continue during the year that we are now entering upon; a fact that is particularly gratifying in view of the important undertakings to which Canada is committed.

The stream of immigrants entering the Dominion continues yearly to expand, and it is very satisfactory to note that a larger number is coming from the British Isles than in former years.

The recent revision of the tariff will, it is believed, meet with the general approval of the trade, removing as it does many inequalities heretofore existing.

One of the most important of the subjects which have engaged your attention is that of the subsidies and allowances to be paid out of the Dominion treasury to the several provinces. I trust that the proposed changes in the imperial legislation respecting which you have adopted an address to His Majesty will, if enacted, go far towards removing the grievances of which the provincial governments have complained as to the insufficiency of their revenues.

The substantial aid now offered towards the establishment of cold storage should stimulate the erection of those necessary adjuncts for the preservation of perishable foods.

I have observed with gratification the passage of an Act having for its object the maintenance of industrial peace in all public utilities. This legislation has already been applied with success. It is confidently expected that when the provisions of the Act for the settlement of industrial disputes are fully understood, both employee and employers will be ready to refer their differences to boards of investigation and conciliation and thus avoid the evils following strikes and lockouts.

The arrangements lately made between the imperial and Canadian postal departments, providing for a substantial reduction on newspapers and periodicals coming from the United Kingdom, have, I am glad to know, been received with much satisfaction as a measure likely to promote a freer communication between the mother country and Canada.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I thank you in His Majesty's name for the liberal supplies you have granted for the public service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In now relieving you from your duties let me express the fervent hope that when we meet again at the next session, an equally prosperous condition will prevail throughout Canada, and in the meantime let us not forget to express gratitude to a kind Providence for the many blessings conferred upon our country.

The Speaker of the Senate then said :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure, that this parliament be prorogued until Saturday, the first day of June next, to be here holden, and this parliament is accordingly prorogued until the first day of June next.
